18. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: Wherever you find the words of R. Yose the Galilean in Aggadah, make your ear like a funnel.[3] [Thus R. Yose said: The verse] "It was not because you were greater than any people that the Lord set His love upon you and chose you, but because you were the humblest of all peoples" (Deut. 7:7) means that the Holy One said to Israel: I love you because even when I shower greatness upon you, you humble yourselves before Me. I bestowed greatness upon Abraham, yet he said to Me, "I am but dust and ashes" (Gen. 18:27); upon Moses and Aaron, yet they said, "And we are nothing" (Exod. 16:8); upon David, yet he said, "But I am a worm and no man" (Ps. 22:7). But the nations of the world do not act thus. When I bestowed greatness upon Nimrod, he said, "Come, let us build us a city," etc. (Gen. 11:4); upon Pharaoh, he said, "Who is the Lord?" (Exod. 5:2); upon Sennacherib, he said, "Who are they among all the gods of the countries?" etc. (2 Kings 18:35); upon Nebuchadnezzar, he said, "I will ascend above the heights of the clouds" (Isa. 14:14); upon Hiram king of Tyre, he said, "I sit in the seat of God, in the heart of the seas" (Ezek. 28:2).[4]

19. "God seeketh that which is pursued" (Eccles. 3:15). R. Judah son of R. Simon said in the name of R. Yose son of R. Nehorai: The Holy One always demands satisfaction from pursuers for the blood of the pursued. You can see that this is so, for Abel was pursued by Cain, and the Holy One chose Abel, as may be inferred from "The Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering" (Gen. 4:4). Noah was pursued by his generation, and the Holy One chose none but Noah, as He Himself said, "For thee have I seen righteous before Me in this generation" (Gen. 7:1). Abraham was pursued by Nimrod, and the Holy One chose Abraham, as Scripture says, "Thou art the Lord, the God who didst choose Abram" (Neh. 9:7). Isaac was pursued by the Philistines, and the Holy One chose Isaac, as inferred from the Philistines' saying, "We saw plainly that the Lord was with thee" (Gen. 26:28). Jacob was pursued by Esau, and the Holy One chose Jacob, as Scripture says, "For the Lord hath chosen Jacob unto Himself" (Ps. 135:4). Joseph was pursued by his brothers, and the Holy One chose Joseph, as inferred from "He appointed it in Joseph[5] for a testimony" (Ps. 81:6). Moses was pursued by Pharaoh, and the Holy One chose Moses, as the verse indicates: "Had not Moses His chosen stood before Him" (Ps. 106:23). Saul was pursued by the Philistines, and the Holy One chose Saul, as is said, "See ye him whom the Lord hath chosen?" (1 Sam. 10:24). David was pursued by Saul, and the Holy One chose David, as the verse indicates: "He chose David also His servant" (Ps. 78:70). Israel are pursued by the nations, and the Lord has chosen Israel, as Scripture says, "And the Lord hath chosen thee to be His own treasure" (Deut. 14:2).[6]

20. "And they gave him the name Esav [Esau]" (Gen. 25:25)—["fully developed,"[7] the firstborn. But] God said of him: Look here at "a mere nothing," he shav, that I created in My world! Moreover, added R. Isaac, God says: You people have given a name to your sow[-like issue Edom–Rome]. I too am giving a name to My firstborn son. [Not "Esow" is to be My firstborn, but Jacob (Gen. 25:26) to whom I give the name Israel]. "Thus saith the Lord: 'My firstborn son is Israel' " (Exod. 4:22).[8]

---

1. Sif Deut., §355.
2. B. Betz 25b; Exod. R. 42:9.
3. To receive his teaching, even as a funnel or hopper at the top of the mill receives the grain.
4. B. Hul 89a.
5. In the Hebrew, the exceptional spelling "Yehoseph" is taken to mean that God inserted the letter he, one of the letters of His Name, to show that He had chosen Joseph [Yosef].
6. Lev. R. 27:5.
7. Taking Esav to be derived from asoh ("fully developed"); hence, the firstborn.
8. Not Yaakov, ("holding on to Esau's heel [akev]," but Israel ("capable of confronting both God and men"). Gen. R. 63:8.

21. "Are ye not as the children of the Cushites unto Me?" (Amos 9:7). But were they named children of Cushites? Was not their name "children of Israel"? However, what is meant by calling the children of Israel Cushites is that even as a Cushite is different in the color of his skin, so in their deeds Israel are different from every nation and tongue.[1]

22. R. Levi said: All Israel's activities are different from the corresponding activities of the peoples of the earth—in their plowing, in their sowing, in their harvesting, in their gathering the sheaves, in their threshing, [in furnishing liberally from] their threshing floors and their winepresses, in the cutting of their hair, in their counting and reckoning of time. In their plowing: "Thou shalt not plow with an ox and an ass together" (Deut. 22:10). In their sowing: "Thou shalt not sow thy vineyard with two kinds of seed" (Deut. 22:9). In their harvesting: "Neither shalt thou gather the gleaning of thy harvest" (Lev. 19:9). In their gathering the sheaves: "When thou reapest . . . in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go back to fetch it" (Deut. 24:19). In their threshing: "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn" (Deut. 25:4). In [furnishing liberally from] their threshing floors and their winepresses: "Thou shalt furnish [the Hebrew servant] liberally . . . out of thy threshing floor, and out of thy winepress" (Deut. 15:14). In the cutting of their hair, as is said, "Ye shall not round off the side growth on your head, nor destroy the side growth of your beard" (Lev. 19:27). And finally in their counting and reckoning of time, for the nations of the earth count years by the sun, but Israel count by the moon, as is said, "This, [the determination of time by the] moon, is to be yours" (Exod. 12:2).[2]

23. R. Levi said in the name of R. Yose son of R. Ilai: It is but natural that the large should count by the large, and the small by the small. Esau (Rome), who is large, counts by the sun, which is large; Jacob, who is small, counts by the moon, which is small. And indeed, as R. Nahman said, "This difference is a happy augury: Esau counts by the sun—just as the sun rules by day but does not rule by night, so [wicked] Esau has a portion in this world but no portion in the world-to-come; Jacob counts by the moon—just as the moon rules by day[3] and by night, so Jacob has a portion in both this world and in the world-to-come.

R. Nahman made another observation: As long as the light of the larger luminary shines in the world, the light of the lesser one is not noticed; but when the light of the larger one declines, the light of the lesser one becomes conspicuous. Even so, as long as the light of Esau shines brightly in the world, the light of Jacob is not noticed; but when the light of Esau declines, the light of Jacob becomes conspicuous.[4]

24. R. Meir said: R. Dostai of Kokaba asked me: What is meant by "The belly of the wicked shall want" (Prov. 13:25)? I replied: In our city there was a heathen who prepared a banquet for all the elders of the city, and he invited me along with them. He had [his servants] set before him all that the Holy One created in His world during the six days of creation, and indeed his table lacked nothing at all except soft-shelled nuts. [When the heathen saw that they were wanting], what did he do? He took away the tabletop—worth something like six talents of silver—from before us and smashed it. I asked him, "Why did you do this?" He replied, "You say this world is ours and the world-to-come is yours. So if we cannot eat every kind of food we want now, when shall we eat it?" To him I applied the verse "The belly of the wicked shall want."[5]

25. [When] Israel eat and drink, they begin with discussions on Torah and with words in praise of God. When the peoples of the world eat and drink, all they begin with is words of frivolity.[6]

26. Rava made the following exposition: What [are the allusions] in the verse "Come, my Beloved, let us go forth into the field," etc. (Song 7:12)? "Come, my Beloved," said the congregation of Israel to the Holy One: O Master of the universe, do not judge me as You judge inhabitants of [heathen] cities who are guilty of robbery, unchastity, and taking vain and false oaths. Rather, "let us go forth into the field" (ibid.)—Come, and I will show You disciples of the wise who [live in rural areas and] study Torah in poverty. "Let us lodge in the villages" (ibid.)—read not ba-kefarim, "in the villages," but ba-koferim, "among the unbelievers"—come, and I will show You the descendants of Esau, upon whom You have showered much bounty, yet they refuse to believe in You. "Let us get up early to the vineyards" (Song 7:13), meaning to synagogues and houses of study. "Let us see whether the vine hath budded" (ibid.), budded with students of Scripture; "whether the vine blossoms be opened" (ibid.), opened to students of Mishnah; "and the pomegranates be in flower" (ibid.), flowered with students of Gemara; "there will I give Thee my love"—I will show You the honor and greatness that are mine, the glory of my sons and my daughters.[7]

27. Isaac left two legacies to his two sons: to Jacob he left the voice—"The voice is the voice of Jacob" (Gen. 27:22); while to Esau he left the hands—"But the hands are the hands of Esau" (ibid.). Esau took pride in his legacy, as Scripture says, "Edom said unto him: 'Thou shalt not pass through me, lest I come out with the sword against thee' " (Num. 20:18). Jacob also took pride in his legacy, for Scripture says, "And we cried unto the Lord, the God of our fathers, and the Lord heard our voice" (Deut. 26:7). In the time-to-come, both will receive their

---

1. B. MK 16b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. PR 15:5 (YJS 1:312); Num. R. 10:1.
3. During part of its cycle, the moon is visible by day.
4. Gen. R. 6:3; PR 15:2 (YJS 1:334–35); Yalkut, Bereshit, §8.
5. PR 16:6 (YJS 1:351); Num. R. 21:20; Midrash Prov., ed. Buber, p. 74.
6. B. Meg 12b.
7. B. Er 21b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

rewards. Esau will receive his, as Scripture says, "For My sword hath drunk its fill in heaven; behold, it shall come down upon Edom" (Isa. 34:5). Jacob will receive his reward, for Scripture says, "Yet again shall be heard in this place . . . the voice of mirth and the voice of gladness" (Jer. 33:10–11).[1]

28. "The voice is the voice of Jacob" (Gen. 27:22)—no prayer avails unless the seed of Jacob shares in voicing it. "The hands are the hands of Esau" (ibid.)—no war is won unless the seed of Esau has a part in it.[2]

29. "Behold, hen,[3] a people that dwells apart" (Num. 23:9). What is implied by the word hen? Israel's uniqueness, which is intimated by the numerical values of the letters in hn—the epithet given to Israel in this verse. When you examine all the letters in the alphabet, you will find that each of them has a mate [with which the number 10 or 100 may be formed; the exceptions are the letters he and nun in hn, the epithet for Israel—these two letters have no such mates]. Thus the letter alef (1) together with tet (9) adds up to 10. The letter bet (2) together with het (8) also adds up to 10. And just as alef (1) + tet (9) and bet (2) + het (8) add up to 10, so gimmel (3) + zayin (7) and dalet (4) + vav (6) add up to 10. But the he (5) cannot be mated in this way [since it has no mate except itself to make 10]. Nor has the nun (50) a mate [except itself to make 100]. Likewise, in another series of combinations, the letters yod (10) + tzade (90) and kaf (20) + pe (80) and lamed (30) + ayin (70) and mem (40) + samekh (60)—each adds up to 100. But the nun (50) cannot be mated in this way.[4]

The Holy One said: Even as the letters he and nun cannot be mated with other letters except themselves to form either ten or one hundred, so Israel cannot be joined with other peoples, but must stand apart. Even if a king decrees that they violate the Sabbath, abolish circumcision, or worship idols, they let themselves be put to death rather than commingle with the nations.[5]

30. A Gentile asked R. Avina: Your Scripture says, "Who is like Thy people, like Israel, a nation unique in the earth?" (2 Sam. 7:23). But wherein lies your greatness? You, too, are reckoned as one of us in the verse "All the nations are nothing before Him" (Isa. 40:17). R. Avina replied: [Balaam], one of your own, has already testified about us: "Israel is not to be reckoned among the nations" (Num. 23:9).[6]

31. "The notable ones whose names derive from the first of the nations" (Amos 6:1)[7]—Israel, who derive their name [Semites] from Shem and [Hebrews] from Eber.[8]

[Or the verse may be read: "Like the nations who name their notables as gods], Israel, coming into their midst, [do likewise]." When the nations dwell in peace, they eat and drink, get drunk and engage in idle chatter. What do they say [by way of glorifying themselves? They say], "Who is as wise as Balaam, as mighty as Goliath, as rich as Haman?" And in imitation of them, Israel come and say to the nations, "Was not Ahithophel wise? Was not Solomon wise? Was not Samson mighty? Was not David mighty? Was not Korah rich? Was not Solomon rich?"[9]

32. R. Isaac said: It happened once that a provincial lady had an Ethiopian maidservant who went down with her friend to draw water from the spring. The maidservant said to her, "My friend, soon my master is going to divorce his wife and marry me." When the friend asked, "Why?" the Ethiopian maidservant replied, "Because he saw her hands covered with soot." The friend: "You are the most foolish woman in the world! Let your ears hear what your mouth is saying: a wife greatly loved by your master—you say he is about to divorce her because just once he saw her hands covered with soot. Then all the less will he want you, whose entire body is covered with soot, and who have been black all your days from your mother's womb!" [As the maidservant was mistaken], so, too, are the nations of the world who taunt Israel, saying, "[God will give up] this nation, which has bartered its glory [for a golden calf, and He will take us]." Israel reply, "If we, who have done such a thing only once, are punished this way, how much more and more will you be punished!"[10]

33. Straw, stubble, and chaff were contending with each other. One claimed, "It was for my sake that the field was sown," while another claimed, "No, for my sake." But the wheat said, "Wait till threshing time comes—then we shall know for whose sake the field was sown." When threshing time came and the owner went out to winnow the crop, the chaff was scattered in the wind; he threw the straw on the ground; he burned the stubble. But he took the wheat and stacked it in a heap—and whoever passed by kissed it. So it is with the peoples of the world. Some of them say, "We are essential; it was for our sake that the world was created." Others say, "No, for our sake." But Israel said, "Wait till God's day comes—then we shall know for whose sake the world was created." Thus it is written, "Behold, the day cometh, it burneth as a furnace" (Mal. 3:19), the day when "Thou shalt winnow them and the wind shall carry them off; the whirlwind shall scatter them" (Isa. 41:16). But Israel is told, "Thou shalt rejoice in the Lord, thou shalt glory in the Holy One of Israel" (ibid.).[11]

34. R. Hanina bar Papa—some say R. Simlai—commented: In the time-to-come, the Holy One will bring out a Torah scroll, hold it to His bosom, and say, "Whosoever

---

1. Exod. R. 21:1.
2. B. Git 57b.
3. The form hen is a demonstrative adverb less widely used than hinneh.
4. Thus the concluding part of Num. 23:9 is read not, "Shall not be reckoned among the nations," but, "The letters in its name will not be combined in the way letters in the names of other nations may be combined."
5. Exod. R. 15:7.
6. B. Sanh 39a.
7. JV: "The notable men of the first of the nations."
8. See Gen. 10:21.
9. Lev. R. 5:3; Num. R. 10:3.
10. Song R. 1:6, §3.
11. Gen. R. 83:5; Song R. 7:3, §3.

has occupied himself with a scroll such as this—let him come and get his reward." Immediately all the peoples of the world will gather together in an indiscriminate crowd, as is said, "All the nations gathered together indiscriminately," etc. (Isa. 43:9). Then the Holy One will say, "Come not before Me indiscriminately, but let each and every people come by itself with its own scribes." The empire of Rome will come before Him first. The Holy One will ask, "How have you occupied yourselves?" They will reply, "We set up many forums, built many baths, accumulated much silver and gold—and all this we did only for the sake of Israel, so that they might have the leisure to occupy themselves with Torah." The Holy One will reply, "More than anyone else in the world, you are given to deluding yourselves. In fact, whatever you did, you did only to serve your own needs. You set up forums to station harlots in, baths to pamper yourselves in. As for the silver and gold, it is Mine—'Mine is the silver, and Mine is the gold, saith the Lord of hosts' [Hag. 2:8]. Is there anyone among you who has been voicing 'This'? 'Who among them has ever voiced This?' [Isa. 43:9]. 'This' means nothing other than Torah, as indicated in the verse 'This is the Torah which Moses set before the children of Israel' " (Deut. 4:44).

Immediately those of Rome will leave, utterly thwarted.

After the empire of Rome leaves, the kingdom of Persia will step forward. The Holy One will ask, "How have you occupied yourselves?" They will reply, "Master of the universe, we built many bridges, conquered many capital cities, waged many wars, all of which we did only for the sake of Israel, so that they might have the leisure to occupy themselves with Torah." The Holy One will reply, "Whatever you did, you did only to serve your own needs. You built bridges to collect tolls on them; you took cities to impose forced labor upon them. As for wars, it is I who wage them—'The Lord is Master of war' [Exod. 15:3]. But is there anyone among you who voiced 'This'?"

Immediately they will leave, utterly thwarted. And the same will happen to each and every nation.

Then the peoples will speak up before Him, "Master of the universe, did you ever suspend a mountain over us like the vault You had to suspend over Israel,[1] and we then refused to accept 'This'?" The Holy One will answer them, " 'Let the first [Noachide] commandments tell us' [Isa. 43:9]: the seven commandments[2] you did accept—in what way did you bestir yourselves to keep them?" The peoples of the world will reply, "Master of the universe, in what way did Israel, who did accept the whole Torah, bestir themselves to keep it?" The Holy One will then say, "I bear witness concerning Israel, that they kept the Torah, all of it." The peoples will respond, "Master of the universe, may a father—You being the one who said, 'Israel is My son, My firstborn' [Exod. 4:22]—bear witness concerning his own son?" The Holy One: "Let heaven and earth testify concerning them, that they kept the Torah, all of it." The peoples: "Master of the universe, heaven and earth as witnesses have a selfish stake in Israel's continuance, for it is said, 'If not for My covenant, [Torah, which is to be studied day and night], I would not sustain the fixed ways of heaven and earth' " (Jer. 33:25). Then the Holy One will say, "Let individuals out of your midst come forward and testify in behalf of Israel that they kept the Torah, all of it. Let Nimrod come and testify in behalf of Abraham, that he refused to worship an idol. Let Laban come and testify in behalf of Jacob, that he could not be suspected of theft [Gen. 31:37]. Let Potiphar's wife come and testify in behalf of Joseph, that he could not be charged with unchastity. Let Nebuchadnezzar come and testify in behalf of Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, that they refused to prostrate themselves before an image. Let Darius come and testify in behalf of Daniel, that he did not neglect the daily prayers.[3] Let Bildad the Shuhite, Zophar the Naamathite, Eliphaz the Temanite, and Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite come and testify in behalf of Israel, that they kept the Torah, all of it,[4] as is said, 'Let the peoples bring their own witnesses, that Israel may be justified' " (Isa. 43:9).

The peoples will then say, "Master of the universe, offer us the Torah anew, and we shall practice it." The Holy One will reply, "You are the biggest fools in the world! He who took the trouble to prepare on the eve of the Sabbath can eat on the Sabbath; but he who has not troubled himself on the eve of the Sabbath—where will he get food to eat on the Sabbath? Nevertheless, I have an easy commandment called [the commandment of the] sukkah—go and carry it out."

Each one of them will pick himself up and go to build his sukkah on his rooftop. But then the Holy One will cause the sun to blaze down on them as at the summer solstice,[5] and each one of them will kick his sukkah down and leave it, saying, "Let us break their bonds asunder, and cast away their cords from us" (Ps. 2:3).

Then the Holy One will sit and laugh at them, as is said, "He that sitteth in heaven laugheth" (Ps. 2:4).[6]

The Character of Israel

35. This people are said to be like dust[7] and said to be like stars.[8] When they go down, they go down to the very dust. When they reach up, they reach up to the stars.[9]

---

1. See above, part 1, chap. 4, §32.
2. To refrain from (1) idolatry, (2) blasphemy, (3) shedding blood, (4) unchastity, (5) seizing what belongs to another, (6) eating flesh cut from a living animal; and (7) to institute civil courts. In rabbinic thought, these are regarded as binding upon all mankind.
3. "His windows were open in his upper chamber toward Jerusalem and he kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed" (Dan. 6:11).
4. These four heard Job, a pious Gentile, blaspheme, thus proving that he was not equal to the test, as Jews are.
5. Literally, "the cycle of Tammuz," which lasts from June 21 to September 22.
6. B. AZ 2a–3b and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Yalkut, Isa., §43.
7. "Thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth" (Gen. 28:14).
8. "I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven" (Gen. 22:17).
9. B. Meg 16a.

36. When Israel reach the lowest degradation, they are certain to go up again, as is intimated in the words "He will go up from the earth" (Exod. 1:10).[1]

37. Israel are said to be like sand. You dig a pit in sand in the evening, and in the morning you find that the pit has filled itself up. Likewise, the loss of all those hosts in the days of David was made up in the days of Solomon, as is said, "Judah and Israel increased as the sand which is by the sea in multitude" (1 Kings 4:20).

Another comment: Israel are said to be like sand and the peoples of the world like lime, as is said, "The peoples shall be as the burnings of lime" (Isa. 33:12). If sand is not put into lime, it lacks staying power. So too without Israel, the peoples would be unable to stand up. Thus, but for Joseph, Egypt would have perished during the famine; but for Daniel, the wise men of Babylon would have perished.[2]

38. Why did the Holy One choose to speak to Moses out of a thornbush? Because, so said R. Yohanan, just as one makes a fence for a garden out of thornbushes, so is Israel[3] a fence for the world.

Another answer: Just as thornbushes grow both in a garden patch and by a river, so Israel share both in this world and in the world-to-come. Another answer: Just as a thornbush grows thorns and roses, so in Israel there are both righteous and wicked.

R. Phinehas the Priest bar Hama said: Just as when a man puts his hand into a thornbush, he feels no pain at first, but when he pulls it out, his hand is lacerated,[4] so no one noticed Israel when they came into Egypt, but when they left, they left with signs, with wonders, and with warfare.[5]

39. "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree" (Ps. 92:13). As no part of the palm tree is without worth—the dates for food, the branches to wave during Hallel,[6] the fronds to cover the sukkah, the bast to make rope, the leaves for sweeping, the planed boards for ceilings of houses, so there are none in Israel without worth. Some are versed in Scripture, others in Mishnah, some in Talmud, others in Aggadah, some in deeds of piety, still others in deeds of charity.

What is true of the palm and the cedar? Whoever climbs to their top and does not take care will fall down and die. So, too, whoever comes to attack Israel will take his comeuppance at their hands.[7]

40. "As an apple tree among the trees of the wood," etc. (Song 2:3). Why are Israel said to be like an apple tree? Because just as in an apple tree the fruit [buds] appear before the leaves, so Israel voiced, "We will do" before, "We will hear" (Exod. 24:7).[8]

41. "I went down into the garden of nuts" (Song 6:11).[9] The nut, if it falls into muck, may be picked up, wiped, rinsed, and washed. It is thus restored to its original condition and is fit to eat. So, too, with Israel: however much they may be soiled with iniquities during all the days of the year, when the Day of Atonement comes, it washes them clean.

Another comment. A nut tree may have Perekh[10] nuts, whose shells are soft; nuts whose shells are moderately hard; and nuts whose shells are very hard. The nut with a soft shell bursts open (niphrakh) of itself; the nut with a moderately hard shell will crack open when you strike it; and the nut with a hard shell is too hard to be cracked, so that you must strike it with a stone to shatter it, and even then you do not get much good out of it. So, too, Israel: there are some among them who do good of their own accord; there are others who, when you ask them for charity, will give at once; and there are those who will not give, even when pressed hard.

Another comment. Nuts cannot escape customs, because they make themselves heard and are thus recognized. So it is with Israel: wherever one of them goes, he cannot say that he is not a Jew, for he is recognized as such: "All that see them shall recognize them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. 61:9).

Another comment. With nuts, if you take one out of a pile, all the others tumble down, rolling over one another. So it is with Israel: when one man is punished, all of them feel it.

Another comment. With all other fruits—whether dates, mulberries, or figs—it is possible to take some of a particular kind out of a sack, and the other fruit will not be disturbed. But with nuts, as soon as you reach in and take a few of them, all the others are in commotion. So it is with Israel: when one of them sins, all the others are disturbed. "When one man sins, You are wrathful with the whole community" (Num. 16:23).[11]

42. "To the garden of nut trees" (Song 6:11). R. Joshua ben Levi said: Israel is likened to a nut tree. Why? Because when a nut tree is pruned, it renews itself; and since it renews itself, the pruning is for its own good. [The nut tree is thus] like hair, which grows quickly after being shorn, or like nails, which grow again after being pared. So, too, whenever Israel allow themselves to be shorn of the fruit of their labor in this world in order to give freely to those who labor at Torah, they are being shorn for their own good.

R. Joshua of Sikhnin taught in the name of R. Levi:

---

1. Exod. R. 1:9.
2. See Dan. 3. PRKM 2:9; Num. R. 2:17.
3. Their Torah and their deeds.
4. Since the thorns bend downward, they grip the hand only when it is taken out.
5. Exod. R. 2:5.
6. Pss. 113–18, recited during the waving of the lulav cluster on Sukkot, the Feast of Tabernacles.
7. Gen. R. 41:1; Num. R. 3:1.
8. P. Shab 88a.
9. In Jewish commentary, the Song of Songs is interpreted as a dialogue between God and Israel. The nut, according to Philo, "signifies perfect virtue" (The Life of Moses 2.181 [ed. Colson 6:539]).
10. Nuts from Perekh, the modern Ferka near Samaria, were noted for their soft shells. See Or 3:7.
11. Song R. 6:11, §1; PR 11:2 (YJS 1:200–1).

All other kinds of saplings thrive if, when planted, their roots are covered with earth; but with roots uncovered, they do not thrive. The sapling of a nut tree, however, will not thrive if its roots are covered with earth at the time it is planted. The same is true of Israel: "He that covereth his transgressions shall not prosper" (Prov. 28:13).[1]

43. "Thy name is as oil poured forth" (Song 1:3). Just as oil is bitter at its beginning and sweet in the end, so, "though thy beginning was distressing, yet thy end shall greatly increase [in sweetness]" (Job 8:7).[2] Just as oil is improved only by crushing [the olives thoroughly], so are Israel brought to repent by being crushed in affliction. Just as oil will not mix with other liquids, so Israel will not mix with other nations of the world. Just as oil brings light to the world, so are Israel light to the world, for Scripture says, "Nations shall walk at thy light" (Isa. 60:3). Just as oil rises above all other liquids, so Israel rises above all other peoples, as Scripture says, "The Lord thy God will set thee on high above all the nations of the earth" (Deut. 28:1). Just as oil makes no noise when poured, so in this world Israel makes no noise.[3]

44. "As a lily among thorns" (Song 2:2). R. Avun said: The lily, when the sun's heat beats upon it, withers, but it blooms again when dew falls upon it. So Israel. As long as the shadow of Esau endures, Israel in this world appear—if one dare say such a thing—withered. But in the time-to-come, when the shadow of Esau will have disappeared, Israel will become moist and bloom again. Just as the lily will not cease to exist until its fragrance does, so will Israel not cease to exist unless their observance of precepts and doing of good deeds come to an end. Just as the lily is readily recognized among plants, so are Israel recognized among the peoples of the world, as is said, "All that see them shall recognize them" (Isa. 61:9).

R. Hanina son of R. Abba applied the verse to [oppression by] the kingdoms. Just as a lily among thorns, bending toward the south when the north wind blows, is pricked by thorns, and bending toward the north when the south wind blows, is pricked by thorns, yet its heart remains steadfastly turned upward; so, too, Israel: though produce tax is collected from them and forced labor imposed on them, their heart remains steadfastly directed toward their Father in heaven.

R. Aibu interpreted the verse as alluding to the redemption soon to come. When the lily is among thorns, it is difficult for its owner to pluck it. What does he do? He brings fire, burns everything around the lily, and then plucks it. So "the Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob, that they that are round about him should be his adversaries" (Lam. 1:17). Accordingly, when the time of redemption nears, what will the Holy One do? He will bring fire and burn all around Israel, as is said, "The peoples shall be as the burnings of lime" (Isa. 33:12). What is said about Israel? "The Lord shall lead him alone" (Deut. 32:12). Even as the lily is held ready for Sabbath and festivals, so are Israel held ready for the redemption soon to come.[4]

45. "Thou didst pluck up the vine [Israel] out of Egypt" (Ps. 80:9). The vine is not planted in stony ground, but first the ground is gone over and the stones removed; and only then is it planted. So, too, Israel: "Thou didst remove the nations and didst plant it" (ibid.). The more you clear away from under the vine, the better it becomes. So, too, Israel: "Thou didst clear it" (Ps. 80:10) of the thirty-one kings of Canaan, and after that, Israel "took deep root, and filled the Land" (ibid.). The vine is not planted haphazardly but is arranged in ordered rows. So, too, Israel are arranged under separate standards—"every man with his own standard, according to their emblems" (Num. 2:2). The vine is lower than all other trees, yet it is deferred to more than any other tree. So, too, Israel: they appear to be lowest in this world, but in the time-to-come they are destined to inherit from one end of the world to the other. A single bough may come forth the vine and spread its tendrils over many trees. So, too, Israel: one righteous man may come forth from them, and his influence will be felt from one end of the world to the other. The vine's leaves give shelter to clusters of grapes. So, too, Israel: the unlearned among them give shelter to students of Torah. Upon the vine are clusters large and small, the larger one appearing to be lower than its mate. So, too, Israel: he who surpasses his fellow in Torah holds himself to be lower than his fellow. Upon the vine are grapes as well as raisins. So, too, Israel: among them are masters of Scripture, masters of Mishnah, masters of Talmud, masters of Aggadah. The vine yields wine as well as vinegar, the one requiring a benediction and the other requiring a benediction. So, too, Israel are required to utter a benediction for good as well as for evil. The vine's fruit is first trodden underfoot but in the end ascends to the table of kings. So, too, Israel: they appear to be contemned in this world, as is said, "I am become a laughingstock to all peoples, the butt of their jibes all day long" (Lam. 3:14); yet in the time-to-come "the Lord thy God will set thee on high" (Deut. 28:1) and "kings shall be thy foster fathers" (Isa. 49:23). When a man drinks wine from the vine, his countenance brightens. [So, too, "a man's wisdom maketh his face to shine" (Eccles. 8:1) when he is asked a question and is able to answer.] When a man attacks the vine's unripe fruit, his teeth are set on edge. So, too, Israel: he who attacks them in battle will receive his due at their hands. Because the vine is propped up by dried sticks of [dead] wood, it remains moist and alive. So, too, Israel: only because [they are propped up] by the merit of their [dead] fathers do they remain alive. The vine's keeper stands above it and watches over it. So, too, Israel: their Keeper stands above them and watches over them, as is said, "Behold, He that keepeth Israel doth neither slumber nor sleep" (Ps. 121:4).[5]

---

1. Song R. 6:11, §7.
2. The study of Torah, difficult at the beginning, becomes pleasant in the end. JV: "Though thy beginning was small, yet thy end shall greatly increase." But mitz'ar ("small") may be associated with tz'r ("to distress").
3. Song R. 1:3, §2.
4. Song R. 2:2, §5–6; Lev. R. 23:6.
5. Lev. R. 36:2; Exod. R. 44:1; Yalkut, Ps., §829; Midrash Sam. 16.

46. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: This people is like a vine: its branches are the householders; its clusters, the sages; its leaves, the unlearned; its twigs, those in Israel devoid of learning as well as of good deeds. The importance of their being together was implied in the message sent [to Babylonia] from the Land of Israel: Let the clusters pray for the leaves—if not for the leaves, the clusters could not exist.[1]

47. [With the nations of the world in mind], R. Eliezer the Elder said: Since the House of Israel is the Holy One's vineyard, do not peek into it. But if you should peek into it, do not enter it. If you should enter it, do not breathe in its fragrance. If you should breathe in its fragrance, do not eat of its fruit. Now, if you do peek into it, enter it, breathe in its fragrance, and eat of its fruit, the end of such as you is that you will be rooted out of the world.[2]

48. "Thine eyes are doves" (Song 1:15). As a dove is artless, so were Israel artless with the Holy One at Sinai, for they did not say, "Ten commandments are enough, or twenty, or thirty," but, "All that the Lord hath spoken, we will do and obey" (Exod. 24:7). As a dove is distinguished [by its cooing], so are Israel distinguished by their deeds. As a dove is chaste, so are Israel chaste. As a dove is graceful when it moves, so are Israel when they move as pilgrims for the festivals. The dove will not leave its cote even when a man takes its young from it; so Israel continue to go up to Jerusalem even though the Temple is destroyed. As the dove goes away but comes back, so Israel: "They shall come trembling as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria" (Hos. 11:11). As a dove brings others with her, so proselytes are brought along with Israel. As a dove stretches out her neck for slaughter and does not struggle as other birds do, so Israel offer up their lives for the Holy One. As a dove does not desert its mate, so Israel do not desert the Holy One. As a dove brought as an offering atones for iniquities, so Israel atone for the nations.[3]

49. "Oh My dove, that art in the clefts of the rock" (Song 2:14). Scripture does not say, "O dove," but, "O My dove," implying that the Holy One said: To Me they are as innocent as a dove, although to the nations they may seem as wily as serpents.[4]

50. "He made thee and wound thee" (Deut. 32:6).[5] R. Meir used to say: Israel is a roll in which all kinds of people are wound—its priests are within it, its prophets within it, its scribes within it, as intimated in the verse "Within it are cornerstones, within it are tent pegs" (Zech. 10:4).[6]

51. Let Israel be; [they will know what to do]. For if they are not prophets, they are sons of prophets.[7]

Israel's Afflictions

52. "Behold, Thou art fair, my Beloved, pleasing even in wrath" (Song 1:16).[8] [The congregation of Israel] said: Master of the universe, the wrath You bring upon me is pleasing. Why? Because You thus restore me to Yourself, bringing me back to the right way.[9]

53. R. Yohanan said: Why are Israel said to be like the olive? Because as the olive will not yield its oil unless it is crushed, so Israel do not return to the right way unless they are crushed by affliction.[10]

54. "A leafy olive tree, fair with goodly fruit" (Jer. 11:16). Olives, while still on the tree, are marked for shriveling, after which they are knocked down and brought up to a roof, where they are left to dry;[11] then they are placed in a grinding mill, where they are ground; their pulp is then tied up in a hempen bale, upon which heavy stones are placed. Only after all of that do olives yield their oil. So, too, Israel. The nations of the earth knock them down, drive them from place to place, imprison them, put chains around their necks, and post soldiers all around them. Only then do Israel resolve on repentance, and the Holy One responds to them.[12]

55. R. Abba bar Kahana said: Ahasuerus's removal of his signet ring [and his giving it to Haman] was more effective than the forty-eight prophets and seven prophetesses who prophesied to Israel. All of these were unable to bring Israel back to the right way. But Ahasuerus's removal of his signet ring brought them back right away.[13]

56. R. Eleazar said: Calamity comes to the world only because of Israel, for it is said, "I wiped out nations; their corner towers are desolate. . . . And I thought that she would fear Me, would learn a lesson" (Zeph. 3:6).[14]

57. [The prophet] Elijah said to Ben He He (some say to R. Eleazar): The verse "Behold, I refine you, but not as silver; I test you in the furnace of poverty" (Isa. 48:10) implies that, among all the good states of being that the Holy One scrutinized to give to Israel, He found none better than poverty.[15]

---

1. B. Hul 92a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 43 (JPS, p. 141).
3. Song R. 1:15, §2; Yalkut, Song, §985.
4. BhM 5.
5. JV: "Hath He not made thee and established thee?" But knn ("to establish") may also mean "to wind."
6. Sif Deut., §309.
7. B. Pes 66b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. JV: "Behold, thou art fair, my beloved, yea, pleasant." But af ("yea") also means "anger, wrath."
9. Song R. 1:16, §1.
10. B. Men 53b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. The passage "Olives while the tree . . . left to dry" represents the text as emended by A. A. Ha-Levi on the basis of the Oxford manuscript and the first edition of Exod R. See his edition of Shemot R. (Tel Aviv, 1959), p. 475.
12. Exod. R. 36:1.
13. The dread of Haman made them turn to God. B. Meg 14a.
14. B. Yev 63a.
15. B. Hag 9b.

58. R. Akiva said: Poverty is as becoming to the daughter of Jacob as a red ribbon on the neck of a white horse.[1]

59. R. Aha said: Carobs [are poor men's fare, and poor fare] is what Israel require to put them on the road to repentance.[2]

60. "Thy desolation is comely" (Song 4:3).[3] According to R. Levi, the Holy One said: In its state of desolation, Israel raised up righteous men for Me, but when it was in its state of prosperity, it raised up wicked men for Me. In its state of desolation, it raised up righteous men for Me—Daniel and his associates, Mordecai and his associates, Ezra and his associates. But in its state of prosperity, it raised up wicked men for Me—men such as Ahaz and his associates, Manasseh and his associates, Amon and his band. Beside R. Levi's comment, R. Avin bar Kahana, citing R. Yohanan, used to quote the verse "Far more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife" (Isa. 54:1).[4]

61. "Surely he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of His eye" (Zech. 2:12). R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: No part of the body is more precious than the eye: when a man is struck on the head, he closes only his eyes. Thus you can see that no part of the body is more precious than the eye, and it is to God's eye that Scripture likens Israel.[5]

62. "He hath burned in Jacob like a flaming fire, which then devoured round about" (Lam. 2:3). R. Simeon ben Lakish said: When calamity comes to the world, the first to feel it is Jacob. And the proof? "He hath burned in Jacob . . . a fire." And when boons come to the world, the first to feel them is Jacob, as is said, "Let Jacob rejoice, let Israel be glad" (Ps. 14:7).[6]

63. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: The Holy One does not smite Israel unless He creates healing for them beforehand, as is said, "When I would heal Israel" (Hos. 7:1), and only after that "does the punishment of Ephraim reveal itself" (ibid.). Not so with other nations. First He smites them, and then He creates a healing for them, as is said, "The Lord will smite Egypt, smiting and healing" (Isa. 19:22)—first "smiting" and then "healing."[7]

The Characteristics of Israel

64. R. Ishmael said: The children of Israel—may I be an atonement for them—are like boxwood, neither black nor white but of an intermediate shade.[8]

65. This people is distinguished by three characteristics: they are merciful, modest, and benevolent. He who has these three characteristics is fit to join this people. He who does not have these three characteristics is not fit to join them.[9]

66. R. Abba bar Aha said: It is difficult to fathom the character of this people: when asked to contribute to making the [golden] calf, they respond; when asked to contribute to building the Tabernacle, they respond![10]

Transgressors in Israel

67. We have been taught: "Ye are sons of the Lord your God" (Deut. 14:1). When you conduct yourselves like sons, you are called sons. When you do not conduct yourselves like sons, you will not be called sons. Such is the opinion of R. Judah. But R. Meir said: The verse means that in either event you are called sons, for elsewhere it is said, "They are sottish sons" (Jer. 4:22), and, "They are sons in whom is no faith" (Deut. 32:20), and, "A seed of evildoers, sons that deal corruptly" (Isa. 1:4).[11]

68. "Their baseness has played Him false—still, despite their blemishes, His sons" (Deut. 32:5).[12] Though full of blemishes, said R. Meir, they are still His sons. For R. Meir used to say: If they are still called sons when full of blemishes, how much and more so when they have no blemishes. The same inference may be drawn from "A seed of evildoers, sons that deal corruptly" (Isa. 1:4): if they are called "sons" when they deal corruptly, how much and more so when they do not deal corruptly.[13]

69. "Thy temples (rakkatekh) are like a pomegranate" (Song 6:7). R. Simeon ben Lakish said: Read not rakkatekh, but rekatekh, "thine empty ones," signifying that even those among you who are "empty" are nevertheless as full of good deeds as [there are seeds] in a pomegranate.[14]

70. "Israel hath sinned" (Josh. 7:11). R. Abba bar Zavda said: Even though they sinned, they are still called Israel. R. Abba commented: Hence people say: Though a myrtle stands among thorns, its name is still myrtle, and people call it myrtle.[15]

71. A certain heretic said to R. Hanina: You are surely unclean, for Scripture says, "Her filthiness was in her skirts" (Lam. 1:9). R. Hanina replied: Look what else it says of them: "That dwelleth with them in the midst of their uncleanness" (Lev. 16:16), that is, the Presence dwells among them even at the time they are unclean.[16]

---

1. Lev. R. 35:5; Yalkut, Isa., §389.
2. PRKM 14:3 (PRKS, p. 268).
3. Midbar may mean "mouth, speech" or "wilderness, ruin."
4. Song R. 4:4, §9.
5. Sif Num., §84.
6. The repetition of the terms for "joy" is taken to imply that Israel will be first to feel it. Lam. R. 2:3, §7.
7. B. Meg 13b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. Neg 2:1.
9. B. Yev 79a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. Shek 2b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. B. Kid 36a.
12. JV: "Is corruption His? No, His children's is the blemish."
13. Sif Deut., §308.
14. B. Er 19a.
15. B. Sanh 44a.
16. B. Yoma 56b–57a.

72. "We are the people of His pasture, and the sheep of His hand" (Ps. 95:7). When are we His people? When we are the sheep of His pasture, as is said, "When ye are My sheep, ye are the sheep of My pasture" (Ezek. 34:31). But when we are lions, God hates us, as is said, "My heritage is unto Me as a lion in the forest. . . . Therefore have I hated her" (Jer. 12:8).[1]

73. When Israel repose trustfully in the shadow of their Creator, they bestow blessing—since they are kind and loving, there is benefit for the world from them. But when they turn away from their Creator, they bestow curses—since they are malevolent and bitter, there is no benefit for the world from them.[2]

74. When the congregation of Israel will stand for judgment before Him who is everywhere and say: Master of the universe, I know not who sinned against whom and who changed toward the other—whether Israel did in fact sin against Him who is everywhere or whether He who is everywhere changed toward them—toward Israel. But since Scripture says, "The heavens declare His righteousness" (Ps. 50:6), one must assume that Israel had sinned against the Holy One and that the Holy One had not changed toward Israel, as is said, "For I the Lord change not" (Mal. 3:6).[3]

75. "Give ear, ye heavens, and I will speak; and let the earth hear the words of my mouth" (Deut. 32:1). Moses asked two witnesses [heaven and earth] who endure forever and ever to be ready to testify against Israel, saying to them, "I am flesh and blood—soon I will die. Should Israel wish to say, 'We did not receive the Torah,' who will come forward to contradict them?" Therefore he called two witnesses who endure forever and ever to be ready to testify against them. And the Holy One called the song to be ready to testify against them, saying, "That this song may be a witness for Me against the children of Israel" (Deut. 31:19). God said: The song will bear witness against them on earth below, and I in heaven above.[4]

76. "A foolish people, and not wise" (Deut. 32:6)—a people foolish with regard to past [boons], and unwise in [not mending its ways] for the future.[5]

77. "They are Thy people, and Thine inheritance" (Deut. 9:29). In the name of R. Levi, R. Berekhiah told the parable of a king who had a vineyard that he turned over to a tenant. When the vineyard produced good wine, the king used to say, "How good is the wine of my vineyard!" When it produced bad wine, he used to say, "How bad is my tenant's wine!" So the tenant said to him, "My lord king, when the vineyard produces good wine, you say it is yours, but when it produces bad wine, you say it is mine. Yet good or bad, the wine is still yours." Likewise, the Holy One first said to Moses, "Come now . . . that thou mayest bring forth My people" (Exod. 3:10). But after Israel did that deed of theirs [the golden calf], what did He say? "Go, get thee down, for thy people . . . have dealt corruptly" (Exod. 32:7). Then Moses replied to the Holy One, "When they sin You say they are mine, and only when they are free from sin do You say they are Yours. Yet sinful or sinless, they are still Yours—'They are Thy people, and Thine inheritance' " (Deut. 9:29).[6]

78. R. Eleazar said: Moses spoke reproachfully to Him above, for it is said, "Moses prayed unto the Lord" (Num. 11:2). Read not el, "unto the Lord," but al, "against the Lord."

The school of R. Yannai drew the same inference from "And Di-zahav" (Deut. 1:11): What can the place-name Di-zahav suggest but that Moses spoke reproachfully to the Holy One: Master of the universe, it is the silver and gold (zahav) You lavished upon Israel until they had to say "Enough (dai)!" that is what led to their making the golden calf. For, so the school of Yannai continued, a lion does not get excited over a heap of straw but goes wild in his delight over a heap of flesh.

[To illustrate Moses' reproach], R. Oshaia told a parable: A man had a heifer who was lean but of large build [so that its appetite was huge]. When he fed it tasty vetches, the heifer [in its delight inadvertently] kicked him. So the man said: What led you to kick me, unless it was the tasty vetches I myself fed you?[7]

[To illustrate Moses' reproach], R. Hiyya bar Abba, citing R. Yohanan, told another parable: A man had a son, whom he bathed and anointed. He gave him food and drink, but then hung a purse around his neck and seated him at the entrance to a brothel. What was that son to do but sin? As R. Aha the son of Ravina said in the name of R. Sheshet, the above bears out the proverb "A full belly leads to rebellious deeds." Thus Scripture: "When they were fed, they became full, they were filled, and their heart was exalted; therefore have they forgotten Me" (Hos. 13:6). Or, according to R. Nahman: "Then thy heart be lifted up and thou forget the Lord" (Deut. 8:14). Or, according to the sages: "They shall have eaten their fill, and waxen fat, and turned unto other gods" (Deut. 31:20). Or, if you prefer, derive the proverb from "But Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked" (Deut. 32:15).

R. Samuel bar Nahmani taught: How do we know that in the end the Holy One, reversing himself, admitted to Moses that He was wrong? Because God said, "I . . . multiplied unto her silver and gold, which [I should have known] they would use for Baal" (Hos. 2:10).[8]

79. When the Holy One said to Hosea, "Your children sinned," Hosea should have replied, "They are Your children, children of those You greatly loved, children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Let the measure of Your mercy roll gently over them." Not only did Hosea not speak

---

1. MTeh 95:2.
2. PRE 9.
3. Sif Deut., §306; Yalkut, Mal., §589.
4. Sif Deut., §306.
5. Ibid.
6. Yalkut, Ki Tissa, §391, based on PRKM 16:9.
7. Vetches are so tasty that human beings ate them in emergencies.
8. B. Ber 32a; Yalkut, Devarim, §792.

in this way, but he actually dared say to God, "Master of the universe, all the world is Yours [to do with as You like]. Put another people in their place."

The Holy One said: What shall I do with this so-called sage? I will tell him, "Take yourself a whoring wife, who will bear you children of whoredom." Later I will tell him, "Send her away from you." If he is able to do so, I, too, will send Israel away [from Me]. So Hosea went and took Gomer the daughter of Diblaim [a woman of ill repute]. After two sons and a daughter were born to him, the Holy One said to Hosea, "Should you not follow the example of your teacher Moses, who separated from his wife as soon as I began speaking to him? You too should live apart from yours." Hosea replied, "Master of the universe, I have children by her—I cannot send her away or divorce her." The Holy One: "You—whose wife is a whore and whose children are children of whoredom, so that you do not know whether your children were fathered by you or by others—still reply in this way. Yet you dare say of Israel who are My children, children of those tested by Me, children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Israel who are one of the four masterpieces—Torah, heaven and earth, the Temple, and Israel—I wrought in My world, yet you dare say of them, 'Put another people in their place!' " Thus made aware that he had sinned, Hosea started to beseech mercy for himself. But the Holy One rebuked him: "Before beseeching mercy for yourself, beseech mercy for Israel."[1]

80. R. Hana bar Bizna said in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: A fast in which transgressors of Israel do not participate is no fast. For consider: though the odor of galbanum is vile, yet it is included among the ingredients for the incense.[2]

81. R. Joshua ben Levi contrasted two verses, one saying, "Ye have not followed the norms of the nations that were round about you" (Ezek. 5:7),[3] while the other asserts, "Ye have followed the norms of the nations that were round about you" (Ezek. 11:2). The right norms that were theirs you did not adopt, while the wrong ones you did.[4]

82. "Then flew unto me one of the seraphim, with a glowing stone (rtzph) in his hand" (Isa. 6:6). The usual word for "glowing coal," ghlt, is not used here; the word rtzph, "glowing stone," is used instead. What is intimated by the word rtzph? R. Samuel bar Nahman explained rtzph as signifying "Silence (rtz)[5] the mouth (ph) of him who denounces My children."[6]

83. R. Abbahu and R. Simeon ben Lakish were about to enter the notorious city of Caesarea when R. Abbahu said to R. Simeon ben Lakish, "What business do we have entering a city filled with blasphemers and revilers?" R. Simeon ben Lakish got off his donkey, scraped up some sand, and stuffed it into R. Abbahu's mouth. R. Abbahu: "What is the meaning of this?" R. Simeon: "God is displeased with him who denounces Israel. For Israel pleads, 'Regard me not as one swarthy' [Song 1:6], and Scripture enjoins, 'Slander not a servant unto his Master' " (Prov. 30:10).[7]

84. "In the womb he attacked his brother at the heel" (Hos. 12:4). The verse will be understood by the parable of a widow who was about to bring charges against her son before a judge. But when she saw the judge sitting in judgment and sentencing people to be punished with fire, with pitch, and with whips, she said: If I denounce the misconduct of my son to the judge, he may even sentence him to death. So she waited until the judge finished trying the cases before him. After he had done so, he asked her: This son of yours—how did he offend against you? She replied: My lord, he kicked me when he was in my womb. He asked her: Has he done anything to you since? She replied: No. He said to her: Go your way. There is no offense in what he did.[8]

Israel—One Cluster

85. Of the four plants that make up the lulav cluster, two bear fruit and two do not. The ones that bear fruit must be combined with those that do not bear fruit; and the ones that do not bear fruit must be combined with those that bear fruit. And a man does not fulfill his obligation until the four plants are bound together in one cluster. And so it is with Israel's endeavor to conciliate God, which is successful only when all of Israel are together in one cluster, as is said, "He buildeth his upper chambers in the heaven and establisheth [Israel] on the earth when it is together in one cluster" (Amos. 9:6).[9]

86. "The fruit of goodly trees" (Lev. 23:40), the etrog symbolizes [a type of man in] Israel: even as the etrog tree has edible fruit and fragrance, so Israel have men in their midst who have knowledge of Torah and the fragrance of good deeds. "Branches of palm trees" (ibid.) also symbolize [a type of man in] Israel: as the palm tree has edible fruit but no fragrance, so Israel have men in their midst who have knowledge of Torah but not the fragrance of good deeds. "And branches of a tree screened by its network of foliage" (ibid.) also symbolize [a type of man in] Israel: as the myrtle tree has fragrance but does not bear edible fruit, so Israel have men in their midst who have the fragrance of good deeds but do not have Torah. "And willows of the brook" (ibid.) also symbolize [a type of man in] Israel: even as the willow has neither edible fruit nor fragrance, so Israel have men in their midst who have

---

1. B. Pes 87b and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Yalkut, Hos., §515.
2. See Exod. 30:34. B. Ker 6b.
3. What, for example, Eglon king of Moab did. Upon being told, "I have a message from God unto thee" (Judg. 3:20), he at once rose up in respect.
4. In sacrificing human beings, as was the usage of another king of Moab (2 Kings 3:27). B. Sanh 39b.
5. Literally, "break" or "smash." Cf. Rashi on Isa. 6:6.
6. PR 33:3; Song R. 1:6, §1.
7. Song R. 1:6, §1; Yalkut, 1 Kings, §218.
8. Lev. R. 27:6.
9. JV: "He buildeth . . . And hath founded His vault upon the earth." The word aguddah can mean "vault" or "cluster." B. Men 27a.

neither knowledge of Torah nor the fragrance of good deeds. What does the Holy One do with the last? To destroy them is out of the question. So the Holy One says: Let all of them be joined together in one cluster, and the ones will atone for the others. If you are willing to act in this way, I will be exalted. With reference to such a cluster, Scripture says, "He buildeth His upper chambers in the heaven" (Amos 9:6). When is He thus exalted? When Israel are joined together in one cluster, as the verse goes on to say: "When [Israel] on earth is established as His cluster" (ibid.).[1]

87. "Ye are standing this day erect all of you" (Deut. 29:9). When are you described as "standing erect"? As on this day when "all of you" are joined together in one cluster.

"When His cluster [is one], He will establish it upon the Land" (Amos 9:6).[2] In the nature of things, when a man picks up a cluster of reeds, can he possibly break them at one time? But if picked up one by one, then even a child can break them. Thus you find that Israel cannot be redeemed until they are one cluster, as is said, "In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the House of Israel, and together [in one cluster] they shall come out of the land of the north" (Jer. 3:18).[3]

88. "And He was acclaimed Sovereign over Jeshurun" (Deut. 33:5). When Israel are unanimous in counsel below, His great Name is acclaimed above. For the words "And He was acclaimed Sovereign over Israel" imply that it is so when, as the verse goes on to say, "the heads of the people are gathered, all the tribes of Israel together" (ibid.)—when they are together in one [large] cluster, not when they are made up of many [small] clusters.[4]

89. As long as Israel are joined together in one cluster on the earth below, the kingdom of Heaven—if one dare speak thus—is in its place.[5]

90. "He buildeth firmly His upper chambers in the heaven, after He hath set up His cluster on earth" (Amos 9:6). The verse may be explained by the parable of a palace built on pontoons. As long as the pontoons are joined together, the palace on them stands firm. Likewise—if one dare speak thus—His throne stands firm above when Israel are joined in one cluster [below].[6]

91. "Mine eye shall weep sore, and run down with tears, because the Lord's flock is carried away captive" (Jer. 13:17). You find that before Israel were exiled, they were divided into several flocks—flocks of priests apart, flocks of Levites apart, flocks of Israelites apart. But when they were exiled, they became one flock: "The Lord's flock is carried away captive." Scripture does not say, "The Lord's flocks are carried away captive," but, "The Lord's flock is carried away captive."[7]

92. "They shall stumble one because of another" (Lev. 26:37)—one because of the iniquity of another. The verse teaches that all Israel are responsible for one another.[8]

93. All Israel are responsible for one another. With what may this responsibility be compared? With a ship in which one compartment has split apart. Of something like this, it is not said, "A compartment in the ship has split apart." What people say is, "The entire ship—the whole thing—split apart."[9]

94. Hezekiah taught: "Israel are scattered sheep" (Jer. 50:17). What is true of a sheep? When it is smitten in one of its limbs, all the other limbs feel it.[10] So it is with Israel: when one of them sins, all the others feel it.

"When one man sins, Thou art wroth with all the congregation" (Num. 16:22).[11] R. Simeon ben Yohai taught: The verse may be illustrated by the parable of men on a ship, one of whom took a drill and began to drill [a hole] under his own seat. When his companions asked him, "Why are you doing this?" he replied, "Why should it bother you? Am I not drilling only under my own seat?" His companions: "But the water will rise up and flood the ship for all of us."[12]

The Enemies and Friends of Israel

95. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: What is signified by the verse "Faithful are the wounds of a friend; but the kisses of an enemy are importunate" (Prov. 27:6)? Better was the curse that Ahijah the Shilonite uttered against Israel than the blessing the wicked Balaam bestowed upon them. Ahijah the Shilonite cursed them by likening them to a reed. He said to Israel, "The Lord will strike Israel until it sways like a reed in water" (1 Kings 14:15). What is true of a reed? Because a reed grows in a well-watered area, its stock keeps driving up new shoots; and because its roots are many, even if all the winds of the world come and blow at it, they cannot move it from its place, for it sways to and fro with them. When the winds have subsided, the reed resumes its erect stance. But the wicked Balaam blessed them by comparing them to a cedar, saying of Israel, "As cedars" (Num. 24:6). What is true of a cedar? Because it does not grow in a well-watered area, its stock does not drive up new shoots and its roots are few. Still, even if all the winds of the world come and blow at it, they cannot move it from its

---

1. Lev. R. 30:12; Yalkut, Emor, §651.
2. JV: "And hath founded His vault upon the earth." But aguddato ("His vault") also means "His cluster"; and eretz ("earth") also means "the Land of Israel."
3. Tanhuma B, Nitzavim §4; Yalkut, Nitzavim, §440.
4. Sif Deut., §346.
5. Midrash Sam. 5.
6. Num. R. 15:18.
7. Lam. R., proem 25.
8. B. Shevu 39a.
9. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 56.
10. True of all animals, but more so of a sheep because of its small size.
11. In JV, the sentence is interrogative.
12. Lev. R. 4:6; Yalkut, Jer., §334.

place. If, however, the south wind blows at the cedar, it uproots it at once and lays it flat on its face.

What's more, [because it yields so readily], the reed has the privilege of being used for pens with which to write the books of Torah, Prophets, and Writings.[1]

96. "These are the rebukes" (Deut. 1:1). R. Aha son of R. Hanina said: The rebukes should have been uttered by Balaam and the blessings by Moses. But had Balaam uttered the rebukes, Israel would have said, "An enemy rebukes us. [So what?]" Had Moses blessed them, the nations of the world would have said, "A friend blesses them. [So what?]" Therefore the Holy One declared: Let Moses, who loves them, rebuke them, and let Balaam, who hates them, bless them, so that the genuineness of the blessings and of the rebukes bestowed upon Israel will be made clear.[2]

97. When a heathen met R. Ishmael and greeted him with a blessing, R. Ishmael replied: The response to you has already been spoken. When another heathen met him and cursed him, he again replied: The response to you has already been spoken. His disciples wondered: Master, you replied to the second as you did to the first! R. Ishmael: But it has been spoken! "Cursed by everyone that curseth thee, and blessed by everyone that blesseth thee" (Gen. 27:29).[3]

98. "Ah, the uproar of many peoples, that roar like the roaring of the seas" (Isa. 17:12). Israel is said to be like sand (Hos. 2:1) and the nations like the sea. They take counsel against Israel, but the Holy One depletes their strength.

Isaiah said, "The wicked are like the troubled sea" (Isa. 57:20), in which the first wave says, "I now rise up and will flood the entire world." But when it reaches the sand, it bows before it and is shattered. Should not the second wave have learned from the first? To illustrate: Pharaoh came and vaunted himself over Israel. So the Holy One hurled him down, as is said, "He . . . hurled Pharaoh and his host down into the sea" (Ps. 136:15). Should not Amalek have learned from Pharaoh? Yet "then came Amalek" (Exod. 17:8), but "Joshua discomfited Amalek" (Exod. 17:13). Should not Sihon and Og have learned from Amalek? Still "Sihon . . . went out against Israel" (Num. 21:23), and "Og . . . went out against them" (Num. 21:33). Balak, likewise. Should he not have learned from Sihon and Og? Yet Balak was determined to wage war against Israel, and so he sent for Balaam to come and curse Israel.[4]

99. "The sons of Japheth . . . Dodanim" (Gen. 10:2, 4). This verse calls them Dodanim, but another verse elsewhere calls them Rodanim (1 Chron. 1:7). R. Simon and R. Hanin differ in their explanations. R. Simon: They are called Dodanim because they are Israel's kinsmen (dodim) and called Rodanim because they keep coming to persecute (rodim) them. R. Hanina: When Israel are on the rise, they say; We are your kinsmen; but when Israel are in decline, they come and persecute them.[5]

100. "Jacob arrived in peace" (Gen. 33:18). "A Song of Ascents. 'Much have they attacked me from my youth up,' Israel kept saying" (Ps. 129:1). The Holy One asked Israel (Jacob), "But have they prevailed against you?" And he answered, "Indeed, they have not prevailed against me" (Ps. 129:2)—[I, Jacob, have arrived in peace].[6]

Constellations Have No Power over Israel

101. Our masters taught: When the sun is in eclipse, it is a bad sign for the entire world, all of it. By what parable may the matter be illustrated? By the one of a king of flesh and blood who made a feast for his servants and placed a lamp before them. But then he became angry at them, so he told one of his servants, "Take away the lamp from them and let them sit in the dark." But we are told, R. Meir said: When the luminaries are in eclipse, it is a bad sign for Israel—may such fate befall its enemies—accustomed as Israel are to being scourged. Thus, when a teacher comes with a strap in his hand, who is the one who worries? He who is accustomed to be whipped day after day is the one who worries.

On the contrary, when Israel obey the will of Him who is everywhere, they do not fear any such signs, as is said, "Learn not the way of the nations, and you will not be dismayed at the signs of heaven; for only the nations are dismayed at them" (Jer. 10:2). The nations are dismayed, but Israel will not be dismayed."[7]

102. "And He had him go forth beyond" (Gen. 15:5). When Abraham spoke up to God, "Master of the universe, I looked in the sign of the zodiac that guides my destiny and [found] I am not destined to have a son," the Holy One replied, "Go forth beyond what you see in the stars—no sign of the zodiac has power over Israel."[8]

103. No sign of the zodiac has power over Israel.

In the days of Jeremiah, Israel were willing to subject themselves to the power of the zodiac, but the Holy One did not let them, for He said, "Learn not the ways of the nations, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven, for only the nations are dismayed at them" (Jer. 10:2). Long ago, your father Abraham was willing to subject himself to such power, but I did not let him. Abraham said, "Behold, to me Thou wilt give no seed" (Gen. 15:3), since my zodiac sign discourages me, saying, "Abram, you are not to beget." At once God "had him come forth beyond" (Gen. 15:5), which means that the Holy One showed him

---

1. B. Ta 20a.
2. Deut. R. 1:4.
3. P. Ber 8:9, 12c.
4. Tanhuma, Va-yikra, §12; Yalkut, Balak, §765.
5. Gen. R. 37:1.
6. Gen. R. 79:2.
7. B. Suk 29a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. B. Ned 32a.

the paths of heaven [beyond the stars] and said, "Go beyond stargazing. You are a prophet, not an astrologer."

In the name of R. Yohanan, it was said: The Holy One had Abraham go up above the vault of the firmament. Such is the implication of "Look now toward heaven" (Gen. 15:5)—the word "look" (habbet) means looking down from above to below. The Holy One went on, "He who is placed below the stars is afraid of them. But you who are placed beyond them—hold your head high at the sight of them."[1]

104. A story: R. Yannai and R. Yohanan were seated at the gate of Tiberias where there were two astrologers. When they saw two Jews go forth to their work, the two stargazers said: These two men will go forth but not come back, for a serpent will sting them. R. Yannai and R. Yohanan overheard these words. What did they do? They remained at the entrance to the city to find out whether the two men who went forth to their work would come back. They did in fact come back, and when R. Yannai and R. Yohanan saw them, they said to the astrologers: Did you not say that these two men would go forth and not come back, because a snake would sting them? The astrologers: Yes. The sages: But they went forth in peace and came back in peace. The astrologers kept looking at the two men and finally asked: What in particular did you do today? The two men: We did nothing other than what we are accustomed to do—we read the Shema and prayed. The astrologers: Oh, you are Jews? Astrologers' predictions are not fulfilled in people such as you, who are Jews. For "to you the Lord your God has not assigned the like" (Deut. 18:14).[2]

Israel Endure Forever

105. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: It is written, "As the days of a tree shall be the days of My people" (Isa. 65:22), and here "tree" can only mean Torah, of which it is said, "She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her" (Prov. 3:18). Who was created for the sake of whom? Torah for the sake of Israel, or Israel for the sake of Torah? Was it not Torah that was created for the sake of Israel? Now, if Torah, which was created for the sake of Israel, will endure forever and ever, all the more so Israel, who were created for their own sake.[3]

106. R. Joshua ben Levi said: Scripture says, "I have spread you abroad as the four winds of heaven, saith the Lord" (Zech. 2:10). As the world cannot endure without winds, so the world cannot endure without Israel.[4]

107. R. Berekhiah said: The congregation of Israel requested something not suitable for her, but the Holy One responded by giving her something suitable. She asked, "Let us know, eagerly strive to know the Lord . . . and He shall come unto us as the rain" (Hos. 6:3). The Holy One responded: My daughter, you ask for something [rain] that is desired at times and not desired at other times. But I will be something for you that is desired at all times: "I will be as the dew unto Israel" (Hos. 14:6).

On another occasion the congregation of Israel asked for something not suitable for her, when she said to Him: Master of the universe, "set me as a seal upon Thy heart, as a seal upon Thine arm" (Song 8:6). The Holy One replied: My daughter, you ask for something that is seen at times and not seen at other times.[5] But I will do something for you that is seen at all times: "Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of My hands" (Isa. 49:16).[6]

108. "But Zion said: 'The Lord hath forsaken me, the Lord hath forgotten me' " (Isa. 49:14). Is not forsaken the same as forgotten? Resh Lakish explained: The congregation of Israel said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, when a man weds a second wife, forsaking the first, he still remembers the deeds of the first. But You have both forsaken me and forgotten me. The Holy One replied: My daughter, in the firmament I created twelve constellations. For each constellation I created thirty hosts; for each host I created thirty legions; for each legion I created thirty cohorts; for each cohort I created thirty maniples; for each maniple I created thirty camps. And to each camp I attached three hundred and sixty-five thousands of myriads of stars corresponding to the days of the solar year. And all of them I created only for your sake. Yet you say, "Thou hast forsaken me, Thou hast forgotten me"! "Can a woman forget her sucking child (ullah)?" (Isa. 49:15). By which the Holy One meant: Can I possibly forget the burnt offerings (olah) of rams you brought Me in the wilderness? Israel replied: Master of the universe, since there is no forgetfulness before the throne of Your glory, You will probably not forget my making the golden calf. The Holy One replied, " 'These' shall be forgotten" (Isa. 49:15).[7] Your saying to the images of the golden calf, "These are thy gods, O Israel" (Exod. 32:4), shall be forgotten. The congregation of Israel spoke up: Master of the universe, since there is forgetfulness before the throne of glory, will You perhaps forget my instant obedience at Mount Sinai? God replied: Your response to the "I" in "I am the Lord thy God" (Exod. 20:2), I shall not forget.[8]

109. R. Hanina bar Papa said: What is meant by "I the Lord repeat not" (Mal. 3:6)?[9] I have never smitten a people and had to repeat the smiting. "But ye, O sons of Jacob, have not been consumed" (ibid.). These words are clarified by the verse "I will consume My arrows upon them" (Deut. 33:23)—Mine arrows will be consumed, but they will not be consumed. Israel was therefore able to say, "He hath bent His bow, and set me as a mark for His arrow" (Lam. 3:12). How may what Israel said be illustrated? By the parable of a warrior who sets up a post at which he shoots

---

1. Gen. R. 44:12; Tanhuma, Hayye Sarah, §6.
2. Tanhuma, Shofetim, §10.
3. Eccles. R. 1:4, §4.
4. B. Ta 3b.
5. Being covered by clothing.
6. B. Ta 4a.
7. JV: "Yea, these shall be forgotten."
8. B. Ber 32b.
9. JV: "I the Lord change not." But shaniti ("change") also means "repeat."

his arrows. The arrows are consumed, but the post remains standing. So, too, Israel. Despite the fact that at all times affliction comes at them, the affliction is consumed, but Israel remain as they are.[1]

110. "But fear not, O Jacob My servant" (Isa. 44:2). In the name of R. Meir, it is said: The verse teaches that [in the dream of the ladder (Gen. 8:12)] the Holy One showed Jacob the prince of Babylon going up and coming down, the prince of Media going up and coming down, the prince of Greece going up and coming down, the prince of Edom [Rome] going up and coming down. Then the Holy One said to Jacob: You, too, go up. In that instant our father Jacob grew fearful and said: Perhaps, God forbid, as there is a coming down for these, there will be a coming down for me as well. The Holy One replied, "But thou, fear not, O Jacob My servant" (Jer. 30:10). Though you go up, you will never experience a coming down.[2]

111. "Their bodies were as of sapphire" (Lam. 4:7). Do you think the sapphire is fragile? R. Phinehas told the story of a man who went up to Rome to sell a sapphire. The buyer made the purchase of the sapphire contingent upon his testing it. He laid it on an anvil and proceeded to strike it with a hammer. The anvil split, the hammer was shattered, but the sapphire remained undamaged.[3]

112. "The Lord called thy name a leafy olive tree" (Jer. 11:16). R. Joshua ben Levi taught: Why is Israel said to be like the olive tree? To tell you that even as the leaves of an olive tree fall neither during the summer season nor during the rainy season, so Israel will never cease to be, neither in this world nor in the world-to-come.[4]

113. "I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth" (Gen. 13:16). As the dust of the earth is from one end of the world to the other, so your children will be dispersed from one end of the world to the other. As dust is trodden by all, so will your children by trod upon by the peoples of the world. As dust outlives all vessels of metal while it endures forever, so all the peoples of the world will cease to be, while Israel endures forever.[5]

114. "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh; but the earth abideth forever" (Eccles. 1:4). Solomon meant: Even though "one generation passeth away, and another generation cometh," one kingdom passes away and another kingdom comes, one decree passes away and another decree comes, "the earth abideth forever": Israel abide forever—they have not been forsaken, nor will they be forsaken. As Scripture says, "I the Lord change not; and ye, O sons of Jacob, are not consumed" (Mal. 3:6). Even as I have not changed and will not change, so you, O house of Jacob, have not been consumed and will not be consumed. "But ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God are alive every one of you this day" (Deut. 4:4).[6]

The Purity of Families in Israel

115. R. Hama bar Hanina said: When the Holy One causes His Presence to dwell, He causes it to dwell only upon families in Israel whose lineage is unsullied, as is said, "At that time, saith the Lord, will I be the God of all the families of Israel" (Jer. 31:1). Scripture does not say, "Of all Israel," but, "Of all the families of Israel [whose lineage is unsullied]."[7]

116. R. Eleazar said: Ezra did not go up from Babylon until he made [the Jewish families in] it as pure as the purest sifted flour.[8] Only then did he go up.[9]

117. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: When you see two men continually at strife, there is some blemish in the lineage of one of them, and therefore the two men should be discouraged from becoming related to each other [by ties of marriage].

R. Joshua ben Levi said: If you see two families continually at strife, there is some blemish in the lineage of one of them, and therefore the two families should be discouraged from becoming related to each other [by ties of marriage].[10]

118. "And he . . . shall purge them as gold and silver, there will also be those that will be permitted to offer unto the Lord offerings because of His charity" (Mal. 3:3). The Holy One, said R. Isaac, shows charity to Israel, for even a blemished family, once assimilated [in Israel beyond tracing back], should be deemed to be fully assimilated.

There was the family named Bet ha-Tzerifah beyond the Jordan, which Ben Zion declared unfit [to marry Jews of unblemished lineage], and another family he declared fit. There was yet another family whose identity the sages declined to reveal, but once every seven-year period they confided its name to their children and their children's children.[11]

119. Mari bar R. Judah said: Ever since the day when the Book of Genealogies was hidden,[12] the strength of the sages has been depleted and the light in their eyes dimmed.[13]

---

1. B. Sot 9a; Tanhuma, Nitzavim, §1.
2. Lev. R. 29:2.
3. The sapphire is second in hardness only to the diamond. Nevertheless, if subjected to the test mentioned above, it would shatter, even as a diamond would. The translator thanks his friend Albert M. Schaler of Providence, R.I., for this information. Lam. R. 4:7, §10.
4. B. Men 53b.
5. Gen. R. 41:9; Gen. R. 69:5; Yalkut, Lekh Lekha, §70.
6. Per Sha.
7. B. Kid 70b.
8. That is, established purity of lineage by careful investigation.
9. B. Kid 69b and 71b.
10. B. Kid 71b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. B. Kid 71a.
12. Suppressed or forgotten. It contained reasons for certain laws in Scripture. So Rashi.
13. B. Pes 62b.

120. R. Yose said: Earlier generations, who knew their lineage, named their children after an event,[1] whereas we, who do not know our lineage, name our children after our immediate forebears. But R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: Earlier generations, who were able to make use of the holy spirit, named their children for events that were to occur; whereas we, who are unable to make use of the holy spirit, name our children after our immediate forebears.[2]

Proselytes in Israel

121. "And they shall be My people" (Ezek. 37:27). Rabbah bar R. Huna said: Compared to proselytes, Israel are given somewhat higher status, for of Israel it is written, "I will be their God, and they shall be My people" (ibid.), whereas Scripture says of proselytes "Whosoever hath pledged his heart to approach unto Me, saith the Lord, ye shall then be My people, and I will be your God" (Jer. 30:21–22).[3]

R. Helbo said: Proselytes are as troublesome to Israel as the itch (sappahat),[4] for it is said, "The proselyte who joins himself with them shall be like the itch for the house of Jacob" (Isa. 14:1).[5]

122. R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: An assembly of proselytes is not called an assembly [of the Lord].[6]

123. There are three kinds of proselytes: a proselyte who is still in every respect a heathen; a proselyte who is like [Shechem son of] Hamor;[7] and a proselyte who is like our father Abraham. How so? A proselyte of the first kind, who had in his house flesh of carrion, of diseased animals, and of abominable and creeping creatures [all forbidden to Jews], said, "Isn't it time that I go and become a proselyte, and live among Jews, whose food is wholesome, who eat delicate food on their festivals and Sabbaths, so that I shall no longer have vile food in my house?" So, forcing himself, he went and became a proselyte. Of him, the Holy One said to Israel: My children, even as he has come to love you, so are you to love him, as is said, "Love ye therefore the proselyte" (Deut. 10:19).

Another kind of proselyte is like [Shechem son of] Hamor. How so? He sought to wed a Jewish maiden, and was told [by her kinsmen], "We will not give her to you as a wife until you consent to become a proselyte." So, forcing himself, he went and became a proselyte. Of such a one, the Holy One said to Israel: My children, as this one sought the security [of your congregation from you], so you must give security to him, as is said, "A proselyte shalt thou not wrong, neither shalt thou oppress him" (Exod. 22:20).

Finally, the third kind of proselyte is like our father Abraham. How so? He went about making inquiries among all the nations, and, having heard all of them speak of the excellence of Israel, he said, "I will go and become a proselyte, and enter under the wings of the Presence." Of such a man, it is said, "Neither let the alien, that hath joined himself to the Lord, speak, saying: 'The Lord will keep me apart from His people.' . . . For thus saith the Lord: I will give them in My house and within My walls a monument and a name" (Isa. 56:3–5).[8]

124. "Happy is everyone that feareth the Lord, that walketh in His ways" (Ps. 128:1). The psalm does not say, "Happy is Israel," "Happy are the priests," "Happy are the Levites," but says, "Happy is everyone that feareth the Lord." It refers to proselytes who, because they fear the Lord, are included in the apostrophe "happy." Even as Israel is told, "Happy art thou, O Israel" (Deut. 33:29), so it is said of proselytes, "Happy is everyone that feareth the Lord." Of what sort of proselyte is "happy" said? Of one who is a true proselyte, not one like these Cutheans, of whom it is said, "They feared the Lord, and served their own gods" (2 Kings 17:33), but like the proselyte who fears the Holy One and walks in the ways of the Holy One, of whom it is said, "That walketh in His ways" (Ps. 128:1).

The words "When thou eatest the labor of thy hands" (Ps. 128:2) are spoken to a proselyte who has no merit of the fathers. In order that he should not say, "Woe is me who has no merit of the fathers, so that, for all the good deeds I may accumulate, I shall have reward only in this world," the psalm announces good tidings to him: because of his own merit, he will "eat" in this world as well as in the world-to-come. Hence, "when thou eatest the labor of thine own hands"—the good deeds he has labored to perform in this world—what is to be his reward? "Happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee" (ibid.). "Happy shalt thou be" in this world, and "it shall be well with thee" in the world-to-come.

"Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine" (Ps. 128:3). Even though his wife became a proselyte with him and is not of the daughters of Israel, she shall be like the daughters of Israel, "as a fruitful vine" that is heavy with fruit. Not as a barren vine—she will be privileged to have children. "In the innermost parts of thy house" (ibid.)—if she conducts herself according to the Jewish religion and is modest, she will be privileged to produce children who are masters of Scripture, masters of Mishnah, masters of good deeds.

---

1. Since their forebears lived long lives, the descendants knew their identity and did not need to name children after them to keep their memory alive.
2. Gen. R. 37:7.
3. Proselytes must first come to God.
4. A skin disease that produces itchy sores.
5. JV: "shall cleave (nispehu) to the house of Jacob." "R. Helbo's words did not embody a religious objection. They merely expressed a political fact. It was dangerous for Jews who lived at the time of the Council of Nicaea (325 C.E.) to receive proselytes, and R. Helbo said so" (William G. Braude, Jewish Proselyting in the First Five Centuries of the Common Era [Providence, R.I., 1940], p. 48). B. Kid 70b.
6. Unlike born Jews, proselytes may marry bastards or other stock that is deemed blemished. B. Yev 57a.
7. Hamor, the father of Shechem who seduced Dinah, the daughter of Jacob and Leah. See Gen. 34.
8. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 146; Yalkut, Shelah, §745.

"Thy children like olive plants" (Ps. 128:3). The olive plant has olives for eating, olives to be dried, olives for oil; its oil burns better than all other oils, and its leaves fall neither during the summer season nor during the rainy season. So, too, do the children of proselytes turn out: some as masters of Scripture, some as masters of Mishnah, some as masters of the give-and-take of business, some as sages, some as men of common sense, some as knowing the right time to do something. And besides, they will have progeny who will endure forever. "Round about thy table" (ibid.). Your merit will stand your children in good stead. Because [of the generosity] of your table, your children will be endowed with noble virtues.

"Behold, surely thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the Lord" (Ps. 128:4). Even as we find that Abraham and Sarah became proselytes and were blessed, so shall all proselytes who pattern themselves after their conduct be blessed.

"The Lord bless thee out of Zion" (Ps. 128:5). The Holy One will bless them out of the same place whence He blesses Israel, for blessings come out of Zion. "And see . . . the good of Jerusalem" (ibid.)—they will see the good of Jerusalem in the time-to-come.

"And see thy children's children. Peace be upon Israel" (Ps. 128:6). But how does it follow that, just because the proselyte will see the children of his children, peace will come to Israel? What the verse means is that the proselyte will be privileged to wed his daughter to a priest, and from her children, who are his children's children, will arise priests, who will bless Israel, saying, "May the Lord bless thee . . . and give thee peace" (Num. 6:24 and 6:26).[1]

125. At the time the Gibeonites said to Joshua, "Come up to us quickly, and save us and help us" (Josh. 10:6)—at that time Joshua asked himself: Shall we burden the community for the sake of these proselytes? The Holy One said to him: Joshua, if you keep away those who have been far off, you will end up keeping away those who are near. Besides, consider your own origin—is it not from proselytes?[2]

126. "The hand upon the throne of the Lord: the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation" (Exod. 17:16). The Holy One swore a solemn oath: "By My right hand and again by My right hand, by My throne and again by My throne, I swear that if would-be proselytes come from any of the nations of the earth, I will receive them, but if from the seed of Amalek, I will not receive them.[3]

127. Our masters taught: If, at the present time, a man comes seeking to be a proselyte, he should be asked: What makes you wish to be received as a proselyte? Are you not aware that at this time Israel is broken down, pushed about, swept from place to place, driven here and there, and overcome by afflictions? If he says, "I am fully aware. But I am scarcely worthy of [the privilege of becoming a Jew]," he is to be received at once and instructed in a few minor and a few major precepts. He should be told of the sin of not giving gleanings,[4] forgotten sheaves,[5] corner crop,[6] and poor man's tithe.[7] He is also to be told of the punishments for disobedience to divine commands. He should be told further: You are to be aware that before coming to this state, had you eaten forbidden fat, your life would not have been shortened; had you profaned the Sabbath, you would not have been subject to stoning. But henceforth, should you eat forbidden fat, your life will be shortened; should you profane the Sabbath, you will be subject to stoning. Even as he is told the punishment for disobeying divine commands, so should he be told the reward for obeying them. He should be told further: You are to be aware that the world-to-come is prepared only for the righteous and that at this time [in this world] Israel are unable to receive very much reward or very much punishment.[8]

One should take care not to impose on him too many commandments nor go into fine details about them.[9]

128. A proselyte has the legal status of a newborn child.[10]

129. "A proselyte shalt thou not vex" (Exod. 22:20). You are not to vex him with words. You are not to say to him, "Only yesterday you worshiped idols and up until just now swine's flesh was between your teeth."

Because the proselyte's origin may be tainted, Scripture warns about him in a great many passages.[11]

130. "And the Levite . . . and the proselyte shall come" (Deut. 14:29). Moses spoke up to the Holy One: Is a proselyte as important to You as a Levite? God replied: He is more important to Me, since he became a proselyte for My sake. A parable of a stag who grew up in the wilderness and on his own joined the flock. The shepherd not only gave him food and drink, but loved him more than any of the other animals in his flock. He was asked: How is it that you love the stag more than any other in the flock? He replied: I had to perform many kinds of labor for my flock until they grew up: I took them out in the morning and brought them back in the evening. But this one, who grew up in the wilderness and forests, came into my flock on his own. Should I not love him very much? Likewise the Holy One said: Much did I have to labor for Israel: I brought them out of Egypt, lit the way for them, sent down manna for them, swept in quail for them, made the well gush up for them, and encompassed them with clouds of glory before they were willing to accept My Torah.

---

1. Num. R. 8:9.
2. Through Ephraim, Joshua descended from Asenath, an Egyptian. Num. R. 8:4.
3. PRKM 3:16.
4. Lev. 19:9 and 23:22.
5. Deut. 24:19.
6. Lev. 19:9 and 23:22.
7. Given to the poor in the third and sixth years of a seven-year cycle.
8. Since they are incapable of coping with the impulse to evil.
9. B. Yev 47a–b.
10. B. Yev 22a.
11. If provoked, he may lapse into idolatry. Ger 4.

But this one came on his own. He is therefore deemed by Me the equal of an Israelite, even of a Levite.[1]

131. Proselytes are beloved, for in each and every passage Scripture likens them to Israel.[2]

132. Why are proselytes at this time oppressed and visited with afflictions? Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eleazar: Because they perform divine commands not out of love but out of fear of punishment.[3]

133. "And Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took sackcloth . . . and she suffered not the birds of the air to nest on them . . . by night" (2 Sam. 21:10). But it is written, "If a man have committed a sin worthy of death . . . and thou hang him on a tree, his body shall not remain all night upon the tree" (Deut. 21:22–23). [Why then were the bodies of the sons of Saul, who were executed, allowed to remain unburied all night?] R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Jehozadak: It is well to have one word [the word "not" in the phrase "not remain all night"] rooted out of the Torah, so that the Name of Heaven is openly hallowed thereby. For passersby, seeing the bodies thus exposed, would ask, "What sort of men were these?" "They were princes." "But what did they do?" "They laid violent hands on proselytes who came in from improper motives." Hearing that, the passersby would say: "There is no people so worth attaching oneself to as Israel. If princes were punished thus, how much more and more would commoners be punished. If this was done for the sake of proselytes who came in from improper motives, how much more and more would be done for Israelites!"

Immediately one hundred and fifty thousand [proselytes] were added to Israel.[4]

134. "And he looked on the Kenite, and took up his parable, and said: Firm be thy dwelling place" (Num. 24:21). A parable of a bird hunter who caught one bird and was about to catch another, but he stopped in indecision because the bird had flown off and perched on a statue of the king. So he spoke of the bird in this way: If I throw a stone at her, I may forfeit my life; if I poke at her with a stick, I fear it might strike the king's image. I do not know what to say to you, except that you fled to a perfect place and made good your escape. So, too, Balaam, aware that Jethro and Amalek had been present in Pharaoh's deliberation [about the fate of Moses],[5] confronted Amalek and pronounced doom upon his name.[6] But then, when he looked at Jethro and realized that he had repented [indeed, had become a proselyte], Balaam said: You have fled to a perfect place; "firm be thy dwelling place."[7]

135. "And the souls they made in Haran" (Gen. 12:5)—these are the proselytes they welcomed, which shows that he who brings a stranger near and causes him to become a proselyte is deemed as though he had created him.[8]

136. A story of Monobazos and Zotos, King Ptolemy's sons, who sat reading the book of Genesis. When they reached the verse "And ye shall be circumcised in the flesh of your foreskin" (Gen. 17:11), each turned his face to the wall and began to weep. Then each of them went and had himself circumcised. After a while, when they again sat and read the book of Genesis, and reached the verse "And ye shall be circumcised," one said to the other, "Alas, my brother." The other replied, "Alas for you, my brother, but not for me." Then each disclosed to the other what he had done. When their mother became aware of it, she went and told their father, "Your sons had a growth on their member, and the physician ordered that they be circumcised." He said to her, "Then let them be circumcised."[9]

137. "He declareth His word unto Jacob" (Ps. 147:19). Akilas[10] once said to Hadrian Caesar: I wish to convert and become a Jew. Hadrian: You would join this people, which I have humiliated so greatly, so many of whom I have slain? You would get mixed up with the very lowest of nations? What do you see in them that makes you wish to become a proselyte? He replied: The least among them knows how the Holy One created the world, what was created on the first day and what was created on the second day, how long it is since the world was created, and on what the world is founded. Besides, their Torah is truth. Hadrian: Go ahead, then, and study their Torah, but do not be circumcised. Akilas: Unless he be circumcised, even the wisest man in your kingdom, even a venerable man who is a hundred years old, cannot study their Torah, concerning which it is said, "He declareth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His ordinances unto Israel. He doth not accord these to any other nation" (Ps. 147:19–20). To what nation alone? To Israel.[11]

138. Akilas, who was Hadrian's nephew, wished to become a proselyte but was afraid of his uncle Hadrian. So he said to him: I want to go into business. Hadrian: Does that mean you are in need of silver or gold? My treasures are open before you. Akilas: I still want to go into business, to get outside, to learn what people think. And I seek your counsel on how to go about it. Hadrian: Any merchandise whose price is depressed, all but sunk in the ground—go and deal in it, for in the end its price will rise and you will realize a profit. So Aquilas went to the Land of Israel and studied Torah. After a while R. Eliezer and R. Joshua came upon him, and, noticing a change in his countenance, they said to each other: Akilas is apparently studying Torah. When he came into their presence, he

---

1. Num. R. 8:2; MTeh 146:8.
2. Num. R. 8:2.
3. B. Yev 48b.
4. B. Yev 79a.
5. See above, part 1, chap. 4, §19; Exod. R. 27:6.
6. He said: "His end shall come to destruction" (Num. 24:20).
7. Exod. R. 27:6.
8. Gen. R. 39:14.
9. Gen. R. 46:10; Yalkut, Lekh Lekha, §82.
10. After his conversion, he became a disciple of R. Akiva and translated the Bible into Greek. See JE, s.v. "Aquila."
11. Exod. R. 30:12.

proceeded to put many questions to them, which they answered. Then he went up to his uncle Hadrian, who asked him: Why is your countenance changed? I suspect that either your merchandise sold at a loss, or can it be that someone has distressed you? Akilas: No. You are my kinsman—would any man dare distress me? Hadrian: Then why is your countenance changed? Akilas: Because I have studied Torah. What is more, I have had myself circumcised. Hadrian: Who told you to do so? Akilas: It was you I consulted. Hadrian: When? Akilas: When I told you that I wanted to go into business, and you said to me, "Any merchandise whose price is depressed, all but sunk in the ground—go and deal in it, for in the end it will rise in value." I then went around among all nations and found none held in lower esteem and deemed to be more deeply sunk in the ground than Israel. But in the end they will be exalted, as Isaiah said, "Thus saith the Lord, the Redeemer of Israel, his Holy One, to him who is despised of men, to him who is abhorred of nations, to a servant of rulers: Kings shall see him and rise, princes, they shall prostrate themselves (Isa. 49:7).[1]

139. Akilas the Proselyte once came to R. Eliezer and asked: Is all the love the Holy One bestowed upon a proselyte shown only in giving him bread and raiment—"He . . . giveth him bread and raiment" (Deut. 10:18)? Why, I have so many peacocks, so many pheasants, that even my servants pay no attention to them. R. Eliezer reprimanded him: Is such a gift so trivial in your eyes? It is one for which the venerable [Jacob] prostrated himself, saying, "If God . . . will give me . . . bread to eat, and raiment to put on" (Gen. 28:20). And now a person like yourself comes, and it is offered to you [daintily] at the tip of a reed.

Akilas then came to R. Joshua's home, who began to console him, saying: "Bread" means Torah, which says, "Come, eat of my bread" (Prov. 9:5). "Raiment" means a sage's cloak. When a man acquires Torah, he acquires such a cloak. More: proselytes may marry off their daughters into the priesthood, and children of their children may become high priests.

It is said: But for R. Joshua's patient treatment of Akilas, Akilas might have reverted to his evil past. To R. Joshua was applied the verse "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty" (Prov. 16:32).[2]

140. One day a certain Caesar, an enemy of the Jews, asked the princes of his realm: If one has a sore on his foot, should he cut off the sore and enjoy life, or leave it and suffer distress? They replied: He should cut it off and enjoy life. But Ketia[3] bar Shalom said: To begin with, you cannot get rid of all of those of whom God said, "I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven" (Zech. 2:10). Besides, yours will be called "a realm part of which has been cut away." Caesar: You have spoken well. But he who defeats Caesar in an argument is thrown into the potter's kiln.

When Ketia was seized, a Roman noblewoman said to him: Alas for the ship that sets out to sail without paying the toll![4] At this, he picked up a knife to cut off his foreskin. Others say that he bit off the foreskin with his teeth and announced: I have paid the toll and will pass into Paradise. As he was thrown into the kiln, he cried out: I bequeath all my possessions to R. Akiva and his companions.

A divine voice came forth, proclaiming: Ketia bar Shalom is destined for life in the world-to-come.

[On hearing what happened], Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] wept and said: One may acquire eternal life in a single hour, another only after so many years![5]

141. Once, when our masters R. Eliezer, R. Joshua, and Rabban Gamaliel were in Rome, the imperial Senate issued a decree that after thirty days no Jew should remain in the entire [Roman] world. One senator, who feared Heaven, came to Rabban Gamaliel and disclosed the decree to him. Our masters were greatly distressed, but the man who feared Heaven said to them: Be not distressed. Within the next thirty days the God of the Jews will stand by them. After twenty-five days, he disclosed the decree to his wife, who said: But twenty-five days are already gone. He: Five days are still left. His wife, even more righteous than he, said: Have you no ring? Suck the poison concealed in it and die. Then the sessions of the Senate will be suspended for thirty days in mourning for you, and the decree will not take effect.[6] He heeded what she had to say, sucked the ring, and died.

When our masters heard of this, they came to his wife to express their sympathy. While there, they said: Alas for the ship that set out to sail without paying the toll. She replied: I understand what you mean. As you live, the ship did not sail until she paid the toll due. Then she went into the bedchamber and brought them a box in which lay the foreskin, wrapped in blood-stained rags. At that, our masters applied to that senator the verse "They among the peoples who volunteer are gathered together, the people of the God of Abraham; for unto God belong the shields of the earth; He is highly exalted" (Ps. 47:10). What is signified by "the shields of the earth?" God said: To Abraham I became a shield of strength. And the proof? Because it is said, "I am thy shield" (Gen. 15:1). But to this senator I will become many shields. To Abraham I said, "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great" (Gen. 12:2), and only after that did he have himself circumcised. But to this senator I made no such promise. What then is signified by "He is highly exalted"? That this one is exalted high above Abraham.[7]

142. When Onkelos son of Kalonymos became a proselyte, Caesar sent a troop of Romans to arrest him. But

---

1. Tanhuma, Mishpatim, §5.
2. Gen. R. 70; Num. R. 8:9; Eccles. R. 7:8, §1.
3. Ketia means "he who is to undergo the cut [of circumcision]."
4. Entry into Paradise might be denied him, since circumcision is the "toll" for admission.
5. B. AZ 10b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. "The Romans had a rule that if the Senate made a decree, and before it was carried into effect one of the senators died, the decree was annulled" (Deut. R. Soncino, p. 52, n. 3).
7. Deut. R. 2:24; Yalkut, Ps., §754.

he won them over by citing verses from Scripture, and they too became proselytes. Caesar then sent another troop of Romans and instructed them: Say nothing at all to Onkelos. After they seized him and went off [with him], he said to them: May I speak to you about a matter that is not Scripture? A torchbearer carries a torch before a litter carrier, a litter carrier before a commander, a commander before a general, a general before the emperor. But does an emperor bear a torch before other people? They replied: No. Then he said: But the Holy One carries a torch before Israel, as is said, "And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud . . . by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light" (Exod. 13:21). At that, all of them too became proselytes. Then Ceasar sent still another troop and enjoined them: Do not engage in any conversation whatsoever with Onkelos. As they seized him and went off with him, they saw a mezuzah affixed to the doorway, and when he put his hand on it and smiled, they asked him: Why are you smiling? He replied: It is the way of the world that a king is seated inside while his servants stand guard outside. But the Holy One—His servants are inside, while He stands guard outside, as is said, "The Lord shall guard thy going out and thy coming in," etc. (Ps. 121:8). At this, they too became proselytes. Caesar did not send soldiers for him again.[1]

Those Who Became Proselytes Because of Lions

143. R. Nehemiah used to say: They who become proselytes because of lions,[2] because of dreams, or because of fear of Mordecai and Esther are not deemed proselytes unless they are ready to be converted again at a time such as ours.[3]

144. The ways of the Samaritans (Cutheans) are at times like those of Gentiles and at other times like those of Jews, but most of their ways are like those of Jews.

Why are Samaritans forbidden to marry Jews? Because they intermarried with the priests of heathen high places.

When are they to be received as proselytes? When they deny the sanctity of Mount Gerizim and acknowledge Jerusalem's preeminence and the resurrection of the dead.[4]

145. Whenever the Samaritans adhere to a precept, they adhere to it more firmly than the Jews.[5]

146. R. Meir sent R. Simeon ben Eleazar to fetch wine from a Samaritan home. A certain venerable man met him and quoted, "If thou art a man of conscience, put a knife to thy throat" (Prov. 23:2).[6] When R. Simeon ben Eleazar went and reported to R. Meir what he was told, R. Meir prohibited the use of Samaritan wine. What was his reason? Because, said R. Nahman bar Isaac, on the summit of Mount Gerizim the sages discovered the likeness of a dove, which the Samaritans worshiped.[7]

147. R. Meir met a certain Samaritan and asked him, "From whom are you descended?" The Samaritan: "From Joseph." R. Meir: "No." The Samaritan: "From whom then?" R. Meir: "From Issachar." The Samaritan: "What is your proof?" R. Meir: "Because in the verse 'The sons of Issachar: Tola . . . and Shimron' [Gen. 46:13] the latter name refers to the Samaritans." The Samaritan then went to their patriarch and reported, "The elder of the Jews told me something astonishing." The patriarch: "What was it?" The Samaritan: "He asked me from whom I was descended. When I told him, 'From Joseph,' he said to me, 'No, from Issachar, because in the verse "The sons of Issachar: Tola . . . and Shimron" the latter name refers to the Samaritans.' " The patriarch: "As you live, he excluded you from the lineage of Joseph but did not bring you into the lineage of Issachar."[8]

148. On his way to pray in Jerusalem, R. Ishmael son of R. Yose was passing that notorious Mount [Gerizim] when a Samaritan saw him and asked: Master, where are you going? R. Ishmael: I am going up to pray in Jerusalem. The Samaritan: Would it not be better for you to pray at this mountain, upon which a blessing was pronounced,[9] than at that dunghill? R. Ishmael: I will tell you whom you resemble: a dog eager for carrion. You know that idols are hidden under this mountain, of which it is said, "Jacob hid them under the terebinth which was by Shechem" (Gen. 35:4). That is why you are eager about Mount Gerizim. Then the Samaritans suspected R. Ishmael of wishing to remove those idols. When he heard them say: We will rise early in the morning and destroy the thorns, he knew that they planned to slay him. So he rose up and fled during the night.[10]

149. R. Jonathan was going up to pray in Jerusalem. When he reached Mount Gerizim, a Samaritan met him and asked: Where are you going? R. Jonathan: To pray in Jerusalem. The Samaritan: Would it not be better for you to pray at this mountain, upon which blessing was bestowed, than at that dunghill? R. Jonathan: In what way is this mountain blessed? The Samaritan: It was not covered by water during the flood. The appropriate response escaped R. Jonathan for the moment, so he was unable to reply. But his ass driver said to him: Master, permit me,

---

1. B. AZ 11a.
2. Like the Samaritans (2 Kings 17:25), who became proselytes after a visitation of lions, because they regarded their coming as a manifestation of divine wrath.
3. In 135 C.E., after the Hadrianic wars, when only love of God and Torah could move people to become Jews. B. Yev 24b.
4. Kut 1–2; B. Kid 74b.
5. B. Ber 47b.
6. Meaning: You may as well kill yourself if you, an observant Jew, do not abstain from using their wine.
7. B. Hul 6a.
8. The Samaritans came to their name because they settled in Samaria, a place so named because the site was purchased from Shemer (1 Kings 16:25). Hence, they could not be descendants of Shimron son of Issachar, a far more ancient person. Gen. R. 94:7.
9. See Deut. 27:12–13.
10. Gen. R. 81:3; P. AZ 5:4, 44d.

and I will answer him. He asked that Samaritan: What do you consider Mount Gerizim to be? One of the high mountains? But Scripture says that during the flood "all the high mountains . . . were covered" (Gen. 7:19). One of the low mountains? Scripture gave it no heed and mentioned it not at all. The Samaritan remained silent, for he found no answer.

At that, R. Jonathan dismounted the ass, and had his driver ride it for three mil. With regard to him, R. Jonathan quoted three verses: (1) "Thou shalt be blessed above all peoples; there shall not be male or female barren [of wisdom] among you, or among your cattle (behemtekha)" (Deut. 7:14)—for "cattle," he said, read "cattle drivers (behamim)"; (2) "No weapon that is formed against thee shall succeed; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in debate thou shalt defeat" (Isa. 54:17); and (3) "Thine empty ones (rakkatekh)[1] are like a pomegranate split open" (Song 6:7)—in Israel, even an ass driver seemingly empty of knowledge (rekan) is as full of pertinent replies as a pomegranate is full of seeds.[2]

The Nations of the World

150. [The prophet] Elijah said: One day, as I was walking along a road, a man accosted me. He came toward me like one coming at another aggressively and charged: "You Jews say that seven prophets[3] have arisen to admonish the heathen nations of the world that they must [change their ways, or else] they will go down to Gehenna." I said, "My son, that is so." The man said, "But after the seven generations [contemporary with the seven prophets] have passed away, the nations of the world may argue: Torah was not given to us [as a guide], and no prophets have subsequently come to admonish us. Why then should we be doomed to go down to Gehenna?"

I replied, "My son, the sages have taught thus: If a heathen seeks to become a proselyte, a hand of welcome should be held out to bring him under the wings of the Presence. Thereafter, the proselytes in each succeeding generation are there to admonish their heathen brethren."[4]

151. The Holy One declares no creature unfit, but receives all. The gates [of mercy] are open at all times, and he who wishes to enter may enter.

R. Meir said: What is the proof that even a Gentile who occupies himself with Torah is like a high priest? Scripture says, "With which if a man occupy himself, he shall live by them" (Lev. 18:5). It does not say, "A priest, a Levite, an Israelite," but, "A man." Hence you may infer that even a non-Jew who occupies himself with Torah is like a high priest.

R. Jeremiah used to say: What is the proof that even a Gentile who keeps the Torah is like a high priest? The verse "Which if a man do, he shall live by them." Scripture also says, "This is the Torah of man,[5] O Lord God" (2 Sam. 7:19)—not "of priests, Levites, or Isralites," but "of man." Scripture also says, "Open ye the gates, that the righteous Gentile . . . may come in" (Isa. 26:2)—not that "priests, Levites, or Israelites may come in," but that "the righteous Gentile who keeps the faith may come in." Scripture also says, "This is the gate of the Lord; the righteous shall enter it" (Ps. 118:20)—not "priests, Levites, or Israelites shall enter it," but "the righteous shall enter it." Scripture also says, "Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous" (Ps. 33:1)—not "Rejoice, O ye priests, Levites, and Israelites," but "Rejoice . . . O ye righteous." Scripture also says, "Do good, O Lord, unto the good" (Ps. 125:4)—not "to priests, Levites, and Israelites," but, "Do good, O Lord, unto the good."

Thus, even a Gentile who keeps the Torah is like a high priest.[6]

152. [The prophet] Elijah said: I call heaven and earth to witness that whether it be Jew or Gentile, man or woman, manservant or maidservant, the holy spirit will suffuse each in proportion to the deeds he or she performs.[7]

153. "Thy priests are clothed with righteousness" (Ps. 132:9). These are the righteous of the nations of the world, such as [Emperor] Antoninus and his companions, who in this world are as priests for the Holy One.[8]

154. Should a person tell you that there is wisdom among the nations, believe it, for of their wisdom it is written, "I will make the wise vanish from Edom" (Obad. 1:8). That there is Torah among the nations—do not believe it, for it is said, "Her king and her princes are among the nations, where Torah is not" (Lam. 2:9).[9]

155. "May God endow Japheth[10] with beauty (yapht), and may it dwell in the tents of Shem" (Gen. 9:27)—may the beauty of Japheth [forebear of Yavan: Greece] dwell in the tents of Shem.[11]

156. Canaan enjoined five things upon his sons: Love one another, love robbery, love lewdness, hate your masters, and do not tell the truth.[12]

157. R. Meir said: Among cities, you have none as wicked as Sodom. When a man is wicked, he is called a Sodomite. Among peoples, you have none as cruel as the Amorites. When a man is cruel, he is called an Amorite.[13]

---

1. Rakkatekh can mean "thy Temples" or "thine empty ones."
2. Gen. R. 32:10; Song R. 4:1, §5; Deut. R. 3:6.
3. Shem, Eliphaz, Zophar, Bildad, Elihu, Job, and Balaam.
4. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 35; Lev. R. 2:9.
5. JV: "This too after the manner (torah) of great men." But torah may mean not only "manner," but also "instruction" or "Torah."
6. B. BK 38a; Exod. R. 19:4; Sif Lev. 86b.
7. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 48.
8. Yalkut, Isa., §429. The citation from the Yalkut is incorporated in the editions of TdEZ preceding Meir Friedmann's.
9. Lam. R. 2:9, §13.
10. JV: "God enlarge Japheth." But yapht may be derived from pth ("to enlarge") or yph ("to make beautiful").
11. B. Meg 9b.
12. B. Pes 113b.
13. Gen. R. 41:7.

158. Hypocrisy and arrogance descended to Babylon.[1]

159. Ten kav of wealth descended to the world: the Romans took nine, and all the rest of the world one.

Ten kav of poverty descended to the world: Babylon took nine, and all the rest of the world one.

Ten kav of presumptuousness descended to the world: Elam[2] took nine, and all the rest of the world one.

Ten kav of might descended to the world: the Persians took nine, and all the rest of the world one.

Ten kav of vermin descended to the world: Media took nine, and all the rest of the world one.

Ten kav of witchcraft descended to the world: Egypt took nine, and all the rest of the world one.

Ten kav of harlotry descended to the world: Arabia took nine, and all the rest of the world one.

Ten kav of impudence descended to the world: Mesene[3] took nine, and all the rest of the world one.

Ten kav of drunkenness descended to the world: the Ethiopians took nine, and all the rest of the world one.[4]

160. There are ten portions of stupidity in the world—nine among the Ishmaelites, and one in the rest of the world.

There are ten portions of outlawry in the world—nine among the Ishmaelites, and one in the rest of the world.

There are ten portions of physical beauty in the world—nine in Media, and one in the rest of the world.

There are ten portions of ugliness in the world—nine in the east, and one in the rest of the world.

There are ten portions of physical strength in the world—nine among the Chaldeans, and one in the rest of the world.[5]

161. "I looked up again and saw two women come soaring with the wind in their wings—they had wings like those of a stork—and carry off the tub between earth and sky. 'Where are they taking the tub?' I asked the angel who talked with me. And he answered: 'To build a shrine for it in the land of Shinar' " (Zech. 5:9–11). R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: The two women symbolize hypocrisy and arrogance, which made their home in Babylon.

But did arrogance really make its home in Babylon? Did not the master say: Ten kav of presumptuousness descended to the world—Elam took nine, and all the rest of the world one? Yes, it first descended to Babylon, but then it spread out into Elam.[6]

162. R. Hiyya bar Abba and R. Assi sat before R. Yohanan, and R. Yohanan was dozing off. So R. Hiyya bar Abba asked R. Assi: Why are the fowl of Babylon fat? He replied: Go to the wilderness of Gaza, and I will show you fatter ones.

Why are festivals in Babylon so joyous?

Because its people are poor.[7]

Why are disciples of the wise in Babylon so elegant in their attire?

Because they are not true sons of Torah.[8]

Why do heathens exude a fetid odor?

Because they eat forbidden animals and reptiles.

Just then R. Yohanan woke up with a start and said: You amateurs! Did I not teach you: "Say unto wisdom: 'Thou art my sister' " (Prov. 7:4)? If a matter is as clear to you as that your sister is forbidden to you [in marriage], say it. Otherwise, do not say it. So they asked him: Will the master answer the several queries for us, beginning with "Why are the fowl of Babylon fat?"

Because they were never banished,[9] as is said, "Moab hath been at ease from his youth. . . . Neither hath he gone into captivity; therefore his taste remaineth in him" (Jer. 48:11).

Why are festivals in Babylon so joyous?

Because they were not included under that curse which declared, "I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feasts, her New Moons, and her Sabbaths" (Hos. 2:13), and, "Your New Moons and your appointed seasons My soul hateth; they are a burden unto Me" (Isa. 1:14).

Why are disciples of the wise in Babylon so elegant in their attire?

Because they are not of local origin.[10] As people say, "In my own town, my name's my fame; elsewhere, it's what I wear."

Why do heathens exude a fetid odor?

Because Israel stood at Mount Sinai, their stench ceased.[11] But the stench of the heathens, who did not stand at Mount Sinai, did not cease.

R. Aha son of Rava asked R. Ashi: What about proselytes? R. Ashi replied: Even though they were not present, their constellations were, as is said: "I make this covenant . . . with him that standeth here with us this day . . . and also with him that is not here" (Deut. 29:14).[12]

163. "And behold, another beast, a second, like to a bear" (Dan. 7:5). R. Joseph taught: The verse refers to the Persians, who eat and drink like a bear, are fleshy like a bear, are as hairy as a bear, and as restless as a bear.

Whenever R. Ammi saw a Persian riding by, he would say, "There goes a wandering bear."

When Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said to Levi: Tell me what Persians are like, he replied: They are as mighty as the hosts of David.

What are the Habbars[13] like?

---

1. B. Kid 49b.
2. The country named after the oldest son of Shem (Gen. 10:22). Babylon was west of it.
3. An island formed by the confluence of the Euphrates, the Tigris, and the Royal Canal.
4. B. Kid 49b.
5. Esther R. 1:17.
6. B. Sanh 24a.
7. Since their lives are so drab, they are eager to live it up.
8. They display their raiment in lieu of Torah, which they do not possess.
9. Unlike the fowl of the Land of Israel, which were banished and then returned.
10. So many of them emigrated from Palestine.
11. The moral stench injected by the serpent in Eden was curbed by Torah.
12. B. Shab 145b–146a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
13. Parsee priests who were fanatical Zoroastrians. They were put in power by Ardavan (in 226 C.E.), who established the Sassanid dynasty. The Sassanids' original home was Haber near Shiraz. Hence the name Habbar. See Git, Soncino, p. 63, n. 2.

They are like destroying angels.
What are Ishmaelites like?
Like demons of the privy.
What are disciples of the wise in Babylon like?
Like ministering angels.[1]

164. "I will provoke them with a vile nation" (Deut. 32:21). These are the people of Tunisia and Britannia,[2] who go naked in the streets. For nothing is more abominable and detestable to Him who is everywhere than one who walks naked in the street. But. R. Yohanan said: These are the Parsees.

When. R. Yohanan was told: The Parsees have come to Babylon, he reeled and fell. When told they would accept bribes, he recovered and sat up again.

The Parsees issued three decrees: that ritually slaughtered meat not be eaten, that bathhouses not be used, that graves be dug up.[3]

165. When Rabbah bar Bar Hanah fell ill, R. Judah and Rabbah came to visit him and inquired about a certain matter of law. Meanwhile, a Habbar came in and removed the lamp.[4] Said Rabbah bar Bar Hanah: Master of the universe, either in Your shadow or in the shadow of the scion of Esau![5]

Are we actually to say that the Romans are better than the Parsees? Did not R. Hiyya interpret "God understandeth the way thereof, and He knoweth the place thereof" (Job 28:23) as meaning that since the Holy One knew that Israel could not endure the decrees of the Romans, He banished them to Babylon? There is no contradiction: one dictum refers to the time before the Parsees arrived in Babylon; the other, to the time after the Parsees came to Babylon.[6]

166. R. Hiyya bar Abba said: The kings of Media were blameless. The Holy One had nothing against them other than the idolatry their forebears had transmitted to them.[7]

167. R. Akiva said: I like the Medes for three things: when they cut meat, they cut it only on the table; when they kiss, they kiss only the back of the hand; when they hold counsel, they hold counsel only in the field.[8]

Rabban Gamaliel said: I like the Persians for three things: they are temperate in their eating, modest in the privy, and restrained in sexual matters.[9]

168. The exilarch said to R. Sheshet: Even though you are venerable sages, yet the Persians are better versed in arrangements for a meal. When two couches are set up, the senior guest takes his place first and the junior one above him.[10] When three couches are set up, the senior occupies the middle couch; the next to him in rank takes the place above him; and the third, one below him.[11] R. Sheshet said: So when the senior wants to talk to the one above him, he has to sit up? The exilarch: This does not bother the Persians, who [do not speak during a meal, but] communicate in sign language.

R. Sheshet further asked: With whom do they begin the washing of the hands before a meal? The exilarch: With the senior guest.

Is the senior guest forced to wait, making sure his hands remain clean until all the others have washed?

The exilarch: No. A table with food upon it is brought to him immediately.

With whom does the washing after the meal begin?

The exilarch: With the most junior guest present.

And does the senior guest sit with greasy hands until all have washed?

The exilarch: Until the water is brought to him, his table is not removed.[12]

169. R. Huna said: The kingdom of Greece excels the wicked kingdom [of Rome] in three matters: in laws, in keeping records,[13] and in oratorical style.[14]

170. R. Joseph taught: Edom is told, "Thou art greatly despised" (Obad. 1:2)—for the Romans have neither literary form nor oratorical style of their own.[15]

171. "The boar out of the wood doth ravage it" (Ps. 80:14). Why is the kingdom of Rome said to be like a boar? Because like the boar, which extends its cloven hooves when lying down, as if to say, "See how kosher I am,"[16] so this wicked kingdom of Edom [Rome] robs and despoils, yet makes it appear that the legal tricks it resorts to are fair practice.

It happened that a Roman ruler who kept executing men guilty of theft, adultery, and sorcery confided to his counselors: In a single night I committed all three of these acts.[17]

172. "And behold, it is very good" (Gen. 1:31). R. Simeon ben Lakish said: The words "Behold, it is very good" refer to the kingdom of Heaven; the words "And behold, it is very good" refer to the kingdom of the Romans.[18] Why

---

1. B. Kid 72a.
2. The text reads, "Barbaria and Mauretania." But see Jastrow, p. 190.
3. The Parsees, sometimes called Habbars, believed that corpses buried in the earth polluted it. Hence corpses were burned or thrown to beasts and birds of prey. B. Yev 63b.
4. Because it was a Habbar festival, on which lighting of fire in homes was forbidden.
5. Edom, the Roman Empire; rather than live in the shadow of Zoroastrian Persia.
6. B. Git 16b–17a.
7. Esther R. 1:18.
8. Because walls have ears.
9. B. Ber 8b.
10. Head to head.
11. With his head to the senior's feet.
12. In the meantime, he can go on eating. B. Ber 46b.
13. Another reading: "in the building of ships and palaces."
14. Gen. R. 16:4.
15. B. AZ 10a. They borrowed both from the Greeks.
16. Clean (kosher) animals have cloven hooves and chew the cud; the pig has cloven hooves but does not chew the cud, hence is not clean.
17. Gen. R. 65:1; Lev. R. 13:5; Yalkut, Shemini, §536.
18. "The word 'and' seems superfluous; hence it is assumed that it adds something to the meaning of the statement. Therefore, since 'Behold, it is very good' refers to the kingdom of Heaven, the added 'and' must refer to another kingdom, that of Edom/Rome" (Leon Nemoy).

is the kingdom of the Romans called "very good"? Because it endeavors to protect the wronged, as implied in "I, even I, have made the earth, and created Edom[1] upon it. . . . [I summoned him to execute righteousness]" (Isa. 45:12–13).[2]

173. On one occasion, while R. Judah, R. Yose, and R. Simeon ben Yohai were sitting together, Judah the son of proselytes happened to join them. R. Judah began the discussion by observing, "How noble are the works of this [Roman] nation! They laid out streets, they built bridges, they erected bathhouses." R. Yose remained silent, but R. Simeon ben Yohai spoke up and said, "All that they made, they made to serve themselves: they laid out streets to settle harlots in, baths to pamper themselves in, bridges to levy tolls on." Judah the son of proselytes went off and retold the sage's words, until they were heard by the Roman government, which decreed: Judah, who acclaimed [Rome], shall be acclaimed [as spokesman for the Jews]; Yose, who remained silent, shall be exiled to Sepphoris; Simeon, who vilified, shall be put to death.[3]

174. You find no nation smitten unless its gods are smitten with it, as is said, "And also against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgments" (Exod. 12:12).[4]

175. "And, behold, Mitzrayim[5] was marching after them" (Exod. 14:10). The name of their prince in heaven was Mitzrayim. The Holy One does not fell a nation before he first fells its prince in heaven.

"While the word was in the king's mouth, Kal[6] fell in heaven" (Dan. 4:28). R. Joshua bar Avin said: Nebuchadnezzar's prince in heaven was Kal, and the Holy One felled him first. So, too, Pharaoh's prince in heaven was Mitzrayim, and he, too, was flying in pursuit of the children of Israel. Accordingly, when the Holy One sank the Egyptians in the sea, He first sank their prince, as is said, "And the Lord hurled down Mitzrayim" (Exod. 14:27), meaning the prince of Egypt; and only then "Pharaoh's chariots and his hosts hath He hurled down into the sea" (Ps. 136:15).[7]

176. Every distress in which Israel and the nations are partnered is distress indeed; but a distress that is Israel's alone is no distress.[8]

177. "Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked; draw not out his muzzle"[9] (Ps. 140:9). Jacob prayed to the Holy One: Master of the universe, grant not to wicked Esau his heart's desire. What then is implied by "Draw not out his muzzle?" Jacob prayed: Master of the universe, make a muzzle for the wicked Esau, that his serenity not be complete. And what muzzle did the Holy One make for Esau? The Barbarians and the Germans,[10] said R. Hama bar Hanina, of whom the Romans are afraid. But for them, the Romans would have proceeded to destroy the entire world.

R. Hama bar Hanina also said: In Germania, a province of Rome, there are three hundred crowned heads, and in Babylonia there are three hundred and sixty-five generals. Every day the ones go out against the others, and one of the crowned heads or generals is slain, and so they are too busy to appoint a supreme king under whose command they would conquer the world.[11]

178. "Deliver me, I pray Thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau" (Gen. 32:12): In the time-to-come, deliver my children from Esau's children's children, who will come at them with the power of Esau. Of Jacob's prayer, it is written, "I considered the horns, and behold, there came up among them another horn, a little one" (Dan. 7:8)—the son of Natzar[12]—"before which three of the first horns were plucked up by the roots" (ibid.)—Macrinus, Carinus, and Kyriades.[13] "And behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things" (ibid.): the wicked empire [of Rome], which drafts soldiers from all the nations in the world.

Quoting "As for the ten horns, out of this kingdom shall ten kings arise" (Dan. 7:24), R. Yohanan said: Scripture speaks of all these as descendants of Esau, but "I considered the horns, and behold, there came up among them another horn, a little one" (Dan. 7:8)—this one is the wicked empire [of Rome]; "before which three of the first horns were plucked up by the roots" (ibid.)—these are the three preceding empires;[14] "and behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man" (ibid.)—this [describes] the wicked empire [of Rome], which casts an envious eye upon a man's possessions, saying, "So-and-so is rich—we will make him a magistrate;[15] so-and-so is rich—we will make him a counselor."[16]

179. At the time Israel crossed the sea, the ministering angels were about to chant their daily song before the Holy One. But the Holy One said to them: The works of My hands are drowning in the sea, and you would chant song before Me?[17]

---

1. JV: adam ("man"). Scripture seemingly equates the creation of Edom to the creation of the earth.
2. Gen. R. 9:13.
3. B. Shab 33b.
4. B. Suk 9a.
5. JV: "the Egyptians." The Hebrew text says, "Egypt was marching after them," not, as one would expect, "the Egyptians."
6. JV: "a voice (kol)."
7. Exod. R. 21:5.
8. Because God quickly responds to Israel's urgent pleas for help (Mah). Deut. R. 2:22.
9. JV: "further not his evil device." But zemam may mean "evil desire" as well as "a muzzle."
10. The Goths and the Huns.
11. B. Meg 6a–b; Gen. R. 75:9.
12. According to Heinrich Graetz, he was Odenathus of Palmyra, a robber chief who became the founder of a dynasty (Gen. R., Soncino, p. 705, n. 8).
13. Three Roman generals who fell before Odenathus. Possibly Quietus should be read, instead of Kyriades. So Gen. R. TA.
14. Babylon, Persia, and Greece.
15. An office that ruins its holder.
16. A post equally ruinous. Gen. R. 76:6.
17. B. Meg 10b; B. Sanh 39b; Exod. R. 23:7.

180. Our masters taught: If a Jew on the road happens to come upon a heathen [walking in the same direction], he should keep him walking at his right. R. Ishmael son of R. Yohanan ben Beroka said: If the heathen has a sword, one should keep him walking at one's right; if he has a stick, at one's left.[1] If the Jew and the heathen are going up or down [a hill], the Jew should make sure that he is not below and the heathen above. The Jew should also make sure not to bend down before him, lest the heathen smash his skull. If the heathen asks him where he is going, he should mention a place beyond his destination. This is what our father Jacob did with the wicked Esau, when he said, "Until I come to my lord in Seir" (Gen. 33:14), while, in fact, "Jacob journeyed to Sukkoth"[2] (Gen. 33:17).

It once happened that some disciples of R. Akiva, who were journeying to Chezib, were overtaken by robbers. The robbers asked them where they were going. They replied, "To Acco."[3] But when they reached Chezib, they turned in to their destination. The robbers asked them, "Whose disciples are you?" "R. Akiva's." The robbers: "Happy are R. Akiva and his disciples, whom no evil man is likely to do mischief to."[4]

181. When Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] and R. Yose son of R. Judah, who were walking along a road, saw a heathen coming toward them, they said: He will ask us three things: Who are you? What is your occupation? Where are you going? When asked "Who are you?" we will say, "Jews." "What is your occupation?"—we will say, "Merchants." "Where are you going?"—we will say, "To buy wheat from the granaries of Yavneh."

Rabbi [Judah] stood facing the heathen to see what he would ask, but R. Yose son of R. Judah waited [in the background], thinking: If the heathen continues to question, I will [step forward and] give another answer. Later, Rabbi Judah asked R. Yose: Where did you learn [the need for] such [precaution]? R. Yose: From our father Jacob, who instructed the foremost to say, "He also is behind us. And he instructed also the second" (Gen. 32:19–20).[5]

182. R. Eleazar said: A Jew should never stick his finger into the mouth of a heathen unless the heathen first sticks his finger into the mouth of a Jew.[6]

183. R. Yohanan said: I remember that it used to be said in the academy: He who concedes to heathens falls into their hands; and he who trusts them—what belongs to him will become theirs.[7]

---

1. A sword is worn on the left side; a stick is carried on the right side. The Jew will thus be instantly alerted in the event of an attack.
2. Much nearer than Seir.
3. Beyond Chezib.
4. B. AZ 25b.
5. Gen. R. 76:8.
6. The Jew is not the one to initiate strife. Or: With his finger in the Jew's mouth, the heathen is not likely to bite the Jew's finger for fear of getting his own finger bitten off. Gen. R. 80:7.
7. B. BB 91b.

CHAPTER TWO

THE LAND OF ISRAEL

The Land and Israel

1. The Holy One said to Moses: The Land is precious to Me, and Israel are precious to Me. I shall bring Israel who are precious to Me into the Land that is precious to Me.[1]

2. There is a man who is comely, but his clothes fit badly; there is another who is ungainly, but his clothes fit him well. Israel becomes the Land, and the Land becomes Israel: "Yea, the heritage becomes me well" (Ps. 16:6).[2]

3. Beginning his discourse with the verse "He stood and measured the earth" (Hab. 3:6), R. Simeon ben Yohai said: The Holy One took the measure of all lands and found no land but the Land of Israel worthy of being given to Israel.[3]

4. R. Isaac said: The Torah should have started with no other verse than "This month shall be unto you" (Exod. 12:2), which is the first precept enjoined upon Israel. Why then does it begin with "In the beginning" (Gen. 1:1)? Because "He wished to declare to His people the power of His works, to be able to give them the heritage of the nations [without causing protest]" (Ps. 111:6). For, should the peoples of the world say to Israel: You are a people of robbers, for you conquered the lands of seven nations, Israel will be able to reply: The entire earth and the fullness thereof belong to the Holy One. He created it and gave it to whoever seemed right to Him. So when He chose, He gave it to you, and when He chose, He took it from you and gave it to us.[4]

5. There are three sites concerning which the peoples of the world cannot taunt Israel and say, "They are yours by acts of robbery." The three are: the cave of Machpelah, the grave of Joseph, and the area for the Temple.[5]

6. It is taught that R. Simeon ben Yohai said: The Holy One gave Israel three precious gifts, each of them through suffering: Torah, the Land of Israel, and the world-to-come. The proof for Torah? "Happy is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, for thus Thou teachest him Thy Torah" (Ps. 94:12). The Land of Israel? "As a man chasteneth his son, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee" (Deut. 8:5), followed by: "The Lord thy God bringeth thee into the good Land" (Deut. 8:7). And the world-to-come? "The commandment is a lamp, and the teaching is light, and reproofs of suffering are the way to life[-to-come]" (Prov. 6:23).[6]

7. Three things—the Land of Israel, the Temple, and the dynasty of David—were given conditionally. Proof for the Land of Israel? "Take heed to yourselves, lest your heart be deceived . . . and the anger of the Lord be kindled against you . . . and ye perish quickly from off the good Land" (Duet. 11:16–17). Proof for the Temple? "As for this house which thou art building, if thou wilt walk in My statutes," etc. (1 Kings 6:12); but if not, "this house which is so high [shall become desolate]" (1 Kings 9:8).[7] Proof for the dynasty of David? "If thy children keep My covenant . . . their children also forever shall sit on thy throne" (Ps. 132:12); if not, "I will visit their transgression with the rod" (Ps. 89:33).[8]

The Land and Its Settlement

8. Our masters taught: A man should ever strive to live in the Land of Israel, even in a city whose inhabitants are mostly heathens, and should avoid living outside the Land, even in a city whose inhabitants are mostly Jews. For he who lives in the Land of Israel is like one who has a God, whereas he who lives outside the Land is like one who has no God.[9] Therefore it is said, "To give you the land of Canaan, to be your God" (Lev. 25:38). But is it conceivable that he who lives outside the Land has no God? No, but what Scripture means is that he who lives outside the Land is regarded as though he worshiped idols. Thus David is quoted as saying, "They have driven me out this day, that I should not cleave unto the inheritance of the Lord, saying: Go, serve other gods" (1 Sam. 26:19). Could it be supposed that anyone would actually say to David, "Go, worship other gods"? Rather, the verse implies that he who lives outside the Land is regarded as though he worshiped idols.[10]

9. It is taught that R. Ishmael said: Jews outside the Land worship idols without meaning to. How? When a heathen prepares a feast for his son and invites all the Jews in his city, even though they eat their own [kosher food] and drink their own [kosher wine], and their own attendant waits on them, Scripture regards them as though

---

1. Num. R. 23:7.
2. Num. R. 23:6.
3. Lev. R. 13:2.
4. Gen. R. 1:2; Yalkut, Bo, §187; Rashi on Gen. 1:1 and Ps. 111:6.
5. Each of these sites was purchased. See Gen. 23:9, Josh. 24:32, and 1 Chron. 21:25–26. Gen. R. 79:7; Yalkut, Va-yishlah, §133.
6. B. Ber 5a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. So Mek, La 2:188. BR quote Mic. 7:13, which is less to the point.
8. Mek, Yitro, Amalek, 4.
9. "They mingled themselves with the nations, and learned their works" (Ps. 106:35).
10. B. Ket 110b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

they had eaten sacrifices to inert idols, as is said, "When he invites thee, thou eatest of his sacrifice" (Exod. 34:15).[1]

10. "And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land of thy sojournings, all the land of Canaan . . . and I will be their God" (Gen. 17:8). R. Yudan said: If your children enter the Land, they agree to accept My Godhead; otherwise, they do not.[2]

11. "My soul hath them still in remembrance, and is bowed down within me" (Lam. 3:20). R. Hiyya taught: The verse will be understood from the parable of a king who used to go to the hot baths of Gedor[3] and take his sons with him. On one occasion his sons provoked him, and he swore that he would not take them again. After that, when the king went forth by himself without his sons, he would remember them and say tearfully: Would that my sons were with me, even if they did provoke me. The king in the parable is the Holy One. The sons are Israel. After Israel were no longer in the Land, He kept saying: Would that Israel were with Me, even if they did provoke Me. In expressing this wish, God said, "Oh that I were again in the wilderness with the complaints[4] of wayfaring men" (Jer. 9:1), by which the Holy One meant: Oh that My sons were with Me now, as they were in the wilderness, where they kept complaining against Me. Likewise, "let the House of Israel dwell in their land, even if they defile it" (Ezek. 36:17),[5] by which the Holy One meant: Oh that My children were still with Me in the Land of Israel, even if they were to keep defiling it.[6]

12. R. Eleazar said: He who makes his home in the Land of Israel lives untainted by iniquity, as is said, "The people that dwelleth therein has its iniquity lifted" (Isa. 33:24).[7]

13. "And the spirit to them that walk therein" (Isa. 42:5) teaches, so said R. Jeremiah bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan, that anyone who walks even as little as four cubits in the Land of Israel is assured that he is destined for the world-to-come.[8]

14. "Oh that I had wings like a dove" (Ps. 55:7). Why like a dove? Because, said R. Azariah in the name of R. Yudan, all other birds rest on a rock or on a tree when tired; but when a dove is tired, she draws in one of her wings and continues flying. "Since I will have to keep moving farther and farther away" (Ps. 55:8)—moving and moving on again, exile and on to another exile—"I would lodge in the wilderness" (ibid.)—I would rather dwell in the wilderness of the Land of Israel than in palaces outside the Land.[9]

15. "Ye shall dwell in your Land safely" (Lev. 26:5). Inside your Land, you dwell safely; but outside it, you do not.[10]

16. R. Simlai expounded: Why did Moses our teacher long to enter the Land of Israel? Are we to suppose that what he needed was to eat its fruit or be sated with its bounty? Rather, what Moses had in mind was that many precepts given to Israel could not be fulfilled except in the Land of Israel.[11]

17. A story of R. Judah ben Betera, R. Matia ben Heresh, R. Hanina the nephew of R. Joshua, and R. Jonathan, who were going to settle abroad. When they came to Platus and remembered the Land of Israel, they lifted their tear-filled eyes, rent their garments, and recited the verse "Ye shall possess it, and dwell therein, for in it ye can observe all the laws" (Deut. 11:31–32). Then they turned around and went back, saying: Living in the Land of Israel is equivalent to performing all the commands in the Torah.

Another story of R. Eleazar ben Shammua and R. Yohanan the Sandal Maker, who were traveling to Nisibis [in Babylonia] to study Torah in the school of R. Judah ben Betera. When they reached Zidon and remembered the Land of Israel, they lifted their tear-filled eyes, rent their garments, and recited the verse "Ye shall possess it, and dwell therein, for in it ye can observe all the laws" (Deut. 11:31–32). Then they turned around and went back, saying: Living in the Land of Israel is equivalent to performing all the commands in the Torah.[12]

18. "Dwell in the cities that ye have taken" (Jer. 40:10). Hezekiah said: How did you take them? By dwelling in them. The school of R. Ishmael taught: "Ye shall possess it, and dwell therein" (Deut. 11:31). How do you come to possess it? By dwelling in it.[13]

19. R. Yohanan taught: Why did Omri merit kingship? Because he added a large city to the Land of Israel, as is said, "He bought the hill Samaria from Shemer . . . and called the name of the city which he built . . . Samaria" (1 Kings 16:24).[14]

20. "Then will I remember My covenant with Jacob . . . and I will remember the Land" (Lev. 26:42). From this verse you may infer that the Land is equivalent to [the covenant of] circumcision. Accordingly, even as the Sabbath is set aside for circumcision, so the Sabbath is set aside for the conquest of the Land.[15]

---

1. B. AZ 8a.
2. Gen. R. 46:9.
3. On the Yarmuk River.
4. JV: "lodging place." But malon ("lodging place") could also be derived from the root lvn ("to complain").
5. JV: "When the House of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it."
6. Lam. R. 3:20, §7; Yalkut, Lam., §638.
7. B. Ket 111a.
8. Ibid. For the holy spirit's role in the resurrection, see Sot. 9:15ff.
9. Gen. R. 39:8; Yalkut, Ps., §771.
10. Sif Lev. 111a.
11. B. Sot 14a.
12. Sif Deut., §80; Yalkut, Deut. §877.
13. B. Kid 26a.
14. B. Sanh 102b.
15. Yalkut, Deut., §861.

21. When a man purchases a house in the Land of Israel, the bill of sale for it may be written even on the Sabbath.[1]

22. From the very beginning of creation, the Holy One was occupied first with the planting of trees, as is shown by the verse "The Lord God first planted a garden in Eden" (Gen. 2:8). You, too, when you enter the Land, must occupy yourselves first with nothing else but planting trees, as is said, "When you come into the Land, ye shall plant . . . trees" (Lev. 19:23).[2]

23. R. Levisaid: When Abraham was traveling through Aram-naharaim and Aram-nahor, he saw the inhabitants eating and drinking and reveling. "May my portion not be in this land," he exclaimed. But when he reached the promontory of Tyre and saw the people there engaged in weeding at weeding time and in hoeing at hoeing time, he exclaimed, "Would that my portion be in this land." At that, the Holy One said, "Unto thy seed will I give this land" (Gen. 12:7).[3]

24. R. Yohanan ben Zakkai used to say: If you have a sapling in your hand and are told, "Look, the Messiah is here," you should first plant the sapling and then go out to welcome the Messiah.[4]

25. "Walk [before Me] in My very presence" (Gen. 12:1). To whom may Abraham be likened? To a king's friend, who, seeing the king walking about in dark alleys,[5] began lighting the way for him through a window. When the king looked up and saw him, he said: Instead of [indirectly] lighting the way for me through a window, come and light the way [directly] for me in my very presence. So, too, the Holy One said to our father Abraham: Instead of [indirectly] lighting the way to Me from Mesopotamia and neighboring territories, come down here and light the way to Me [directly] in My very presence—in the Land of Israel.[6]

26. After Jacob had brought his sons and his flocks to the Land of Israel, he got busy and sold all the flocks he had brought with him from outside the Land. He set up the proceeds in piles of gold. Then he said to Esau, "You own an equal share with me in the area of Machpelah. Which do you prefer—to take these piles of gold or share Machpelah with me?" Esau said to himself: What do I have to do with this cave? I would rather have the gold.

Do you suppose that Jacob lost anything by that? Not at all. For the Holy One made up his loss and at once restored everything to him.[7]

27. "Better is a handful quietly come by," etc. (Eccles. 4:6). R. Isaac interpreted this verse as applicable to the tribes of Reuben and Gad,[8] who, upon coming into the Land of Israel, saw how many areas suitable for sowing grain were there, how many areas suitable for planting trees were there.[9] And so they said, "Better is a handful quietly come by" in the Land of Israel "than two fistfuls after much struggle" (Eccles. 4:6) on the east bank of the Jordan. After reflecting, they asked themselves: Are we not the ones who chose [the east bank in preference to the Land]?[10]

28. "Better is a dry morsel and quietness therewith, than a house full of feasting with strife" (Prov. 17:1). R. Yohanan said, "Better is a dry morsel"—the Land of Israel, where even if day after day a man eats no more than a morsel with salt, yet because he lives in the Land he gains the world-to-come; "than a house full of feasting with strife"—than living outside the Land, where acts of violence and robbery are rife.[11]

29. Our masters taught: One may not leave the Land to go outside the Land unless two seah of wheat cost four denars. R. Simeon [ben Yohai] objected: When may one leave the Land? Only if there is no wheat to be purchased; but if one does find wheat for purchase, then even if one seah costs as much as four denars, one may not leave.

Indeed, R. Simeon ben Yohai taught: Elimelech, Mahlon, and Chilion were the notables who led their generation. Why then were they punished [by untimely death]? Because they left the Land to go outside it, for it is written, "All the city was astir concerning them, and the women said: 'Is this Naomi?' " (Ruth 1:19). What did they mean by "Is this Naomi?" They meant, said R. Isaac, "Look at Naomi, who left the Land to go outside the Land—look what happened to her."[12]

30. Simeon bar Abba came to R. Hanina and said: Write me a letter of recommendation, so that I may go abroad for my livelihood. R. Hanina replied: Before long, when I join your forebears, each of them will say to me: I had a precious sapling in the Land of Israel and you allowed it to go abroad!

A certain priest came to R. Hanina and asked: May I go to Tyre to perform a commandment—to undergo halitzah by or to marry the childless widow of my deceased brother? R. Hanina replied: Your brother left the bosom of his motherland and embraced the bosom of an alien land. May He who is everywhere be blessed for having smitten him—and you would do what your brother did![13]

31. "And the Lord said unto Jacob: Return unto the Land of thy fathers, and unto her who begat thee; and I will be with thee" (Gen. 31:3). In saying, "Return unto the Land of thy fathers," etc., the Holy One said, "Your father is

---

1. B. BK 80b.
2. Lev. R. 25:3.
3. Since the land required constant care and cultivation, allowing no time for idling, which leads to drinking and reveling, Abraham hoped that his children would settle in it. Gen. R. 39:8.
4. ARNB 31.
5. Where people steeped in idolatry lived.
6. Gen. R. 30:10.
7. Tanhuma B, Va-yishlah, §11.
8. The two tribes chose to settle on the east bank of the Jordan.
9. Unlike the grazing land on the east bank.
10. Lev. R. 3:1; Eccles. R. 4:6, §1.
11. Yalkut, Prov., §556.
12. B. BB 91a; Gen. R. 25:3.
13. You should stay in the Land and let the widow come here. P. MK 3:1, 81a.

waiting for you, your mother is waiting for you, and I Myself am waiting for you," meaning, so taught R. Assi in the name of Resh Lakish, that there is no enduring blessing in wealth acquired outside the Land, but once you return to the Land of your fathers, I Myself will be with you.[1]

32. Even when a man has the merit of his fathers, it does not stand by him once he leaves the Land and goes outside it.[2]

Love for the Land

33. "I will give thee a desirable Land" (Jer. 3:19)—a Land all the notables of the world deemed desirable.[3]

34. "I had rather stand on the threshold (histopheph) of the house of my God" (Ps. 84:11). What is meant by histopheph? R. Tanhum son of R. Hanilai and Rav differed. According to one, David said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, even if I had an antechamber and a chamber outside the Land, and only a threshold (saph) in the Land, "I had rather stand on the threshold." According to the other: Even if in the Land of Israel I had nothing to eat other than the leavings (sippuph) of carobs, "I would settle for the leavings."[4]

35. On his way to the Land of Israel, when R. Zera found no ferry to take him across [the Jordan], he held on to a rope bridge and crossed over. Watching him, a certain heretic sneered: "O you impulsive people, who opened your mouths before you opened your ears![5] You still persist in your impulsiveness [exposing yourselves to the danger of drowning]." R. Zera replied, "A Land that neither Moses nor Aaron was deemed worthy of entering—who could possibly assure me that I would be deemed worthy of entering?[6]

36. R. Abba used to kiss the cliffs of Acco. R. Hanina used to repair broken sections of the roads in the Land. R. Hiyya ben Gamda used to roll himself in its dust, in keeping with "Thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and love her dust" (Ps. 102:15).[7]

37. Ulla came down [from the Land of Israel to Babylonia], where he died. [As he was dying] he began to weep. When asked, "Why are you weeping? We will carry your coffin up to the Land of Israel," he replied, "What good will it do me? I am about to lose the precious pearl given me in a land that is unclean. He who discharges this pearl into the bosom of his motherland is not like him who discharges it into the bosom of an alien land."

When R. Eleazar was told of Ulla's death, he exclaimed, "O that you, Ulla, 'had to die in a land that is unclean' " (Amos 7:17). When informed, "But his coffin has just arrived [in the Land]," he said, "He whom the Land receives while still alive is not at all like one whom it has to receive after his death."[8]

38. A story. As R. Berokia and R. Eleazar ben Pedat were strolling through the city gate to the outskirts of Tiberias, they saw some coffins arriving from abroad. R. Berokia asked R. Eleazar, "What good will it do them? While alive, they left the Land, and now, dead, they have had themselves brought back to her? To such I apply the verse 'You regarded My heritage as an abomination' [Jer. 2:7] while you were alive, and 'when ye entered as corpses ye defiled My Land' [ibid.]." R. Eleazar replied, "What you imply is not right. For as soon as they are buried in the Land of Israel, and a clod of the Land's earth is thrown over them, it will make expiation for them, as is said, "And His Land shall make expiation for His people" (Deut. 32:43).[9]

39. R. Levi said: Moses pleaded with the Holy One: Master of the universe, Joseph's bones are being allowed to enter the Land—should I not be allowed to enter? The Holy One replied: He who acknowledged it as his Land is rightfully buried in the Land.[10] But he who did not acknowledge it as his Land[11] cannot claim the right to burial in it.[12]

40. R. Eleazar said: The dead [buried] outside the Land of Israel will not come back to life, for it is said, "I will set glory in the Land of the living" (Ezek. 26:20): in the Land, where My glory is set, the dead will come back to life; but not so the dead in a land where My glory is not.[13]

41. "Bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt" (Gen. 47:29). Why did all the patriarchs demand and yearn for burial in the Land of Israel? R. Eleazar said: There is a reason for it. R. Joshua ben Levi explained that in saying, "There is a reason for it," R. Eleazar alluded to the verse "O that I might walk before the Lord in the lands of the living" (Ps. 116:9), a verse our masters, in the name of R. Huldah, explained as follows: Why did the patriarchs yearn for burial in the Land of Israel? Because the dead buried in the Land of Israel will be the first to come to life in the days of the Messiah and will enjoy the age of the Messiah. But he who dies outside the Land and is buried there has, said R. Hananiah, two agonies to contend with [the agony of dying and the agony of burial outside the Land].

Does this mean, asked R. Simon, that the righteous buried outside the Land will lose out? No. What will the Holy One do for them? For their sake, He will provide

---

1. Gen. R. 74:1.
2. B. BB 91a.
3. Tanhuma, Mishpatim, §23.
4. Tanhuma, Re'eh, §8.
5. At Sinai you said, "We will do," before saying, "We will hear." See Exod. 24:7.
6. B. Ket 112a.
7. Ibid.
8. P. Kil 9:4, 32c; B. Ket 111a.
9. PR 1:6 (YJS 1:44–45); P. Kil 9:5, 32d; Gen. R. 96:5.
10. Joseph said: "I was stolen out of the Land of the Hebrews" (Gen. 40:15).
11. Moses allowed the daughters of Jethro to say of him, "An Egyptian delivered us out of the hand of the shepherds" (Exod. 2:19).
12. Deut. R. 2:8.
13. B. Ket 111a.

underground passages, which go on and on like subterranean caves, and the righteous will roll through them until they reach the Land of Israel, where the Holy One will restore the spirit of life to them and they will stand up. And the proof? The verse "I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, O My people, when I bring you into the Land of Israel" (Ezek. 37:12), followed by "I will put My spirit in you and ye shall live" (Ezek. 37:14).[1]

42. "Of Zion it shall be said: 'This man and that man was born in her' " (Ps. 87:5). R. Meyasha grandson of R. Joshua ben Levi explained: The phrase "This man and that man" refers to the man actually born in Zion and to the man yearning to see her.[2]

The Holiness of the Land

43. The Land of Israel is the holiest of all lands.[3]

44. Why did the holy spirit dwell in the territory of Benjamin? Because all the other tribe fathers were born outside the Land, while Benjamin was born in the land of Israel.[4]

45. "And the Lord spoke unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, saying" (Exod. 12:1). "In the land of Egypt" implies that it was outside the city. But perhaps it means inside the city? However, since Scripture says, "Moses said unto him: 'As soon as I am gone out of the city, I will spread forth my hands unto the Lord' " (Exod. 9:29), may not the matter be argued a fortiori? If, in order to pray—an ordinary event—Moses would insist on going outside the city, how much more so would he go outside the city to receive a communication from God—an extraordinary event? And why would God speak to him only outside the city? Because the city was full of abominations and idols.

Before the Land of Israel had been chosen, all lands were suitable for God to speak in. After the Land of Israel was chosen, all other lands were excluded.

Before the eternal Temple had been chosen, all of Jerusalem was fit for the Divine Presence. After the eternal Temple was chosen, the rest of Jerusalem was eliminated, as is said, "The Lord hath chosen Zion" (Ps. 132:13), and goes on to quote God as declaring, "This is to be My resting place forever" (Ps. 132:14).

Should you say, "But I can mention prophets to whom God spoke outside the Land": even though to be sure, He did speak to some prophets outside the Land, He spoke to them only because of the merit of the fathers. And, it might be added, even though He did speak to them outside the Land because of the merit of the fathers, He spoke to them only in a place that was clean, near water. As Daniel said, "I was by the stream Ulai" (Dan. 8:2) and "I was by the great river, which is Tigris" (Dan. 10:4): and as is said, "The word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel . . . by the river Chebar" (Ezek. 1:3).

R. Eleazar ben Zadok pointed out that Scripture also says to Ezekiel: "Arise, go forth into the plain" (Dan. 3:2), which shows that a plain was a suitable place for divine utterance.

You can see for yourself that the Presence does not reveal itself outside the Land, for Scripture says, "Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the Presence of the Lord" (Jon. 1:3). Could he have thought that it was possible to flee from the Lord? Had not David said, "Whither shall I go from Thy spirit? Or whither shall I flee from Thy Presence" (Ps. 139:7)? Rather, what Jonah had in mind was: Gentiles are more inclined [than Israel] to repent. So, in order not to put Israel in a bad light, I will go outside the Land, to a place where the Presence neither dwells nor reveals itself.[5] The matter may be illustrated by the parable of a priest's heathen slave who said: I will flee to the cemetery, where my master cannot follow me.[6] But his master said to him: You are not the only heathen slave I have. So, too, Jonah said: Since Gentiles are more inclined to repent, in order not to put Israel in a bad light, I will go outside the Land, where the Presence does not reveal itself. But the Holy One said to him: [I do not depend on you.] You are not the only emissary I have, as is said, "The Lord hurled a great wind into the sea" (Jon. 1:4).[7]

46. We have been taught: Before Israel entered the Land, miracles in whatever land they occurred were commemorated with hymns of praise [Hallel]. After Israel entered the Land, miracles occurring in other lands were no longer commemorated in this way.[8]

Torah of the Land

47. The Holy One said: A small company in the Land of Israel is more precious to Me than the Great Sanhedrin outside the Land.[9]

48. Even when there are saintly men and sages outside the Land, and in the Land none but shepherds and cowherds, the year is intercalated only on the testimony of the shepherds and cowherds who are within the Land of Israel. More! Even if there are prophets outside the Land, and in the Land none but unlearned men, the year is intercalated only on the testimony of the unlearned men within the Land.[10]

49. R. Safra said that R. Abbahu used to tell the following: When Hananiah the son of R. Joshua's brother

---

1. Gen. R. 96:5.
2. B. Ket 75a.
3. Kel 1:6.
4. Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 4.
5. Lest it become evident that Israel were not as ready to heed the prophets as were the people of Nineveh.
6. A priest may not enter a cemetery.
7. Mek, Bo, Pis'ha 1; Yalkut, Bo, §187.
8. B. Meg 14a.
9. P. Ned 6:8, 40a.
10. PRE 8.

went down to the Diaspora, he used to intercalate years[1] and fix New Moons[2] outside the Land. So [the High Court] dispatched two disciples of the wise, R. Yose ben Kippar and the grandson of Zechariah ben Kevutal. When Hananiah saw them, he asked: Why did you come? They replied: We came to learn Torah [from you]. At that, he had it announced: These men are notables of the generation and their forebears ministered in the Temple, for we are taught, "Zechariah ben Kevutal said: 'Many times I read the Book of Daniel to the high priest.' "[3] Before long, R. Hananiah proceeded to declare unclean what was declared clean by the two disciples of the wise from the Land and to prohibit what they permitted. This time he had it announced: These are men of falsehood and chaos. They replied: You already built us up and cannot tear us down. You have already built a fence [of good repute about us] and cannot break it down. So he asked them: Why do you declare clean what I declare unclean? Why do you permit what I prohibit? They replied: Because you intercalate years and fix New Moons outside the Land. He said: But did not Akiva ben Joseph himself use to intercalate years and fix New Moons outside the Land? They replied: Let R. Akiva be—he did not leave his equal in the Land of Israel. Hananiah retorted: I, too, did not leave my equal in the Land of Israel. They replied: The kids you left have become goats with horns, and it is they who sent us to you, saying, "Go speak to him in our name. If he listens, well and good. If not, he will be placed under a ban. Also tell our brethren in the Diaspora [not to obey him]. If they listen to you, well and good. If not, they may as well go up a mountain top [and make themselves a high place], where Ahiah[4] will build the altar, Hananiah[5] will play the harp, and all of them will become renegades who declare that they have no portion in the God of Israel."

Hearing this, all of the people burst into weeping as they said: God forbid! We do have a portion in the God of Israel.

Why all this to-do? Because Scripture says, "Out of Zion shall go forth the Law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem" (Isa. 2:3).[6]

50. We have been taught that R. Eleazar ha-Kappar said: Synagogues and houses of study outside the Land are destined to be implanted in the Land of Israel, for it is said, "As Tabor among the mountains and Carmel by the sea did come" (Jer. 46:18).[7] The matter may be argued a fortiori: If Tabor and Carmel, which came only for a while to learn Torah, are implanted in the Land of Israel, all the more so synagogues and houses of study, where Torah is constantly read and expounded.[8]

51. R. Yose bar Halafta said to his son R. Ishmael: If you would see the face of the Presence in this world, then occupy yourself with Torah in the Land of Israel.[9]

52. The air of Israel's Land makes one wise.[10]

53. "Among the nations there is no Torah" (Lam. 2:9) implies that Torah is in the Land of Israel, [the Land] "where there is gold" (Gen. 2:11)—where there are words of Torah more to be desired than gold, than much fine gold.

"And the gold of that Land is good" (Gen. 2:12). These words assert that there is no Torah like the Torah of Israel's Land and no wisdom like the wisdom of Israel's Land.

"There is bdellium and the onyx stone" (Gen. 2:12)—Scripture, Mishnah, Talmud, Tosefta, and Aggadah.[11]

54. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: A sage who dwells in the Land of Israel but then goes to live abroad diminishes himself, so that one who continues to dwell in the Land is superior to him. Even though he has diminished himself, he is still superior to all the superior ones in foreign lands. By what analogy may the matter be illustrated? By analogy with Indian iron, which comes from a land far across the sea. Even when deteriorated through use, it is still better than the best in all other lands.[12]

55. "A well of living waters" (Song 4:15)—such is the Torah in Israel's Land.[13]

56. R. Ze'era said: Even the everyday talk of people in the Land of Israel is Torah.[14]

57. Ten kav of wisdom came down to the world—the Land of Israel took nine, and all the rest of the world one.[15]

The Dimensions of the Land

58. R. Abba bar Hanina said: Had Israel not sinned, they would have been given only the five books of Torah and the book of Joshua, the latter containing the dimensions of Israel's Land.[16]

59. "Then shalt thou arise, and get thee up unto the place which the Lord thy God shall choose" (Deut. 17:8). These words teach that the Temple is on higher ground than the entire Land of Israel and that the Land of Israel is on higher ground than all other lands.[17]

60. Ever since the early prophets, there was a stone [in the Temple] called the foundation stone, because, so it is taught, upon it the world was founded.

---

1. That is, add a month to certain years.
2. Fix the day when the new month begins.
3. Yoma 1:6.
4. He was head of the community.
5. He was a Levite.
6. B. Ber 63b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. There is a tradition that the two mountains originally stood outside the Land of Israel, but because they offered themselves as mountains on which the Torah could be given—that is, the mountains wanted to study Torah—they were permitted to enter the Land of Israel. See Gen. R. 99:1 and Strashun's note; MTeh 68:9.
8. B. Meg 29a.
9. MTeh 105:1.
10. B. BB 158b.
11. Sif Deut., §37; Gen. R. 16:4.
12. ARN 28.
13. Yalkut, Song, §537.
14. Lev. R. 34:7.
15. B. Kid 49b.
16. B. Ned 22b.
17. B. Zev 54b.

We have been taught: R. Eliezer the Elder said: "These are the generations of the heaven and of the earth, when they were created in the day that the Lord God made earth and heaven" (Gen. 2:4)—that is, the progeny of heaven[1] was generated from heaven, and the progeny of earth was generated from earth. However, the sages said: Both were generated from Zion, for Scripture says, "God, God, the Lord, hath spoken and called the earth, from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof" (Ps. 50:1), and goes on to say, "Out of Zion, the perfection (mikhlal) of beauty" (Ps. 50:2), which implies that out of Zion was the world's beauty perfected (mukhlal).[2]

61. "I made me gardens and parks, and I planted trees in them of all kinds of fruit" (Eccles. 2:5). Even as the navel is in a man's middle, so the Land of Israel, it is said, "dwells in the middle of the earth" (Ezek. 38:12). It is situated in the world's middle, and from there the foundation of the world extends. Now, Jerusalem is in the middle of the Land of Israel, and the Temple area in the middle of Jerusalem, the Holy of Holies[3] in the middle of the Temple, the Ark in the middle of the Holy of Holies, and the foundation stone out of which the world was founded in the front of the Ark. Since Solomon was wise, he came to know the "roots" issuing from it to the entire world. If an artery went to Ethiopia, he planted pepper upon it, and on other arteries he planted all kinds of trees that brought forth all kinds of other fruit.[4]

62. When R. Dimi came [to the Land], R. Yohanan said: The verse "He hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods" (Ps. 24:2) refers to the seven seas and four rivers that surround the Land of Israel. The seven seas: the Sea of Tiberias, the [Salt] Sea of Sodom, the Sea [Gulf] of Elath, the Sea of Shalith, the Sea of Samachonitis,[5] the Sea of Apamea, and the Great [Mediterranean] Sea. The four rivers: the Jordan, the Yarmuk, the Keramiyon, and the Pigah.

But is there not also the Sea of Emessa? No, because Diocletian brought the waters of several rivers together to form that sea.[6]

63. We have been taught that the Jordan issues from the cave of Panias, passes through the Sea of Samachonitis and the Sea of Tiberias, and rolls down into the Great Sea, where it rolls on until it rushes into the mouth of Leviathan, who is described as "confident, because the Jordan rushes forth to his mouth" (Job 40:23).[7]

64. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: The pool of Siloam used to bring forth a steady flow of water through a narrow mouth the size of an issar.[8] At the king's order, the pool's mouth was widened so that its flow would increase. Instead, it diminished. Then they went back and narrowed its mouth as before, and the pool again brought forth its steady flow.[9]

A Land Flowing with Milk and Honey

65. "Tevel is supreme among terrains" (Prov. 8:26).[10] The word tevel, said R. Simeon ben Yohai, refers to the Land of Israel, for of the Torah it is said, "Playing in tevel which is His own Land" (Prov. 8:31). Why is it called tevel? Because it is seasoned (metubbelet) with everything, for, among all other terrains, each has something the others lack. But the Land of Israel lacks nothing, as is said, "Thou shalt not lack anything in it" (Deut. 8:9).[11]

66. "And of Joseph he said: Blessed of the Lord be his land" (Deut. 33:13). The verse teaches that Joseph's land was the most blessed of all lands. Dew is always available for it; it is irrigated by springs, open to the sun, open to the moon, abundant, and not lacking any blessing.[12]

67. "A land of hills and valleys" (Deut. 11:11). In mentioning hills,[13] does the verse speak in disparagement of the Land of Israel? Not at all, for the verse also mentions valleys—as valleys are mentioned in praise of the Land, so are hills mentioned in praise of it. Besides, there is a reason for hills and a reason for valleys. Fruits growing on a hill ripen early; fruits growing in a valley are more succulent.

R. Simeon ben Yohai said: When an area is a valley, it produces a kor[14] of grain. When it is a hill, it produces a kor on its eastern side, a kor on its western side, a kor on its southern side, a kor on its northern side, and a kor on its summit—a fivefold crop.

"Thus saith the Lord God: This is Jerusalem! I have set her in the midst of nations, and lands are round about her" (Ezek. 5:5). It is a land that has many kinds of soil—areas of soil for tillage, areas of sand [from which glass may be made], and areas of soil completely free of rocks or stones.

Another comment: "A land of hills and valleys." The verse indicates that the taste of fruit growing on a mountain is not like the taste of fruit growing in a valley, and the taste of fruit growing in a valley is not like the taste of fruit growing on a mountain. And the proof that the taste of fruit growing on each and every hill and fruit growing in each and every valley is distinct? The verse "A land of hills and valleys"—many, many hills, and many, many valleys.

R. Simeon ben Yohai said: There are twelve different

---

1. Sun, moon, and stars.
2. B. Yoma 54b.
3. Literally, "the Temple Hall," which in this instance includes chambers west of the Holy of Holies, as well as the Holy of Holies itself.
4. Tanhuma, Kedoshim, §10.
5. North of the Sea of Tiberias.
6. B. BB 74b; P. Kil 9:4, §32c; P. Ket 12:3, §35b; MTeh 24:6.
7. B. BB 74b.
8. A small Roman coin.
9. B. Ar 10b.
10. JV: "The beginning of the dust of the world."
11. Sif Deut., §37.
12. Sif Deut., §353.
13. Where plowing is difficult.
14. Thirty seah.

kinds of lands corresponding to the twelve tribes, and the fruits growing in one tribe were not like the fruits growing in another tribe.

R. Yose ben Meshullam said: Where is the proof that even as there are different savors in that which grows on land, so there are different savors in that which grows in the sea? The verse "And the gathering together of the waters called He seas" (Gen. 1:10), a verse that indicates that the taste of a fish caught in Acco is not like the taste of a fish caught in Tyre, nor is the taste of a fish caught in Tyre like the taste of a fish caught in Apamca.

Or, since the soil on a mountain is poor and the soil in a valley rich, you might suppose that the rainwater will wash the poor soil of the mountain down into the valley [and this poor soil will cause the water to sink below the ground], thus depriving plants of water.[1] Scripture therefore speaks of "hills and valleys," meaning that a hill will remain what it is and a valley will remain what it is.

Or, since rocks in the Land of Israel are fractured, producing hills, one might suppose that only the bare summits of the hills will be watered, while the sheltered sides of the hills will not be watered.[2] Therefore Scripture says, "It drinketh water from the precipitation[3] of heaven" (Deut. 11:11), meaning that both the bare summits and the sheltered sides of the hills will be watered. Scripture also says, "Yea, He ladeth the thick cloud with moisture, He spreadeth abroad the cloud of His lightning" (Job 37:11), which implies that the clouds encompassed every part of the Land, irrigating every side of it.

Or, because the Land drinks rainwater, it might perhaps not drink water from brooks? Hence Scripture: "A land of brooks of water" (Deut. 8:7). Or, because it drinks water from brooks, it might perhaps not drink water of snows? Hence Scripture: "It drinks water from [every kind of] precipitation from heaven"—since water is mentioned, it must also include melted snow, as indeed is clearly stated in "The rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven" (Isa. 55:10).

Or, since it drinks water of snows, it might perhaps not drink water of dews? Hence Scripture: "It drinketh water from the precipitation of heaven," implying that the Land drinks water of dews as well.[4]

68. "The Land . . . is not as the land of Egypt" (Deut. 11:10). The land of Egypt drinks the water of its own streams; the Land of Israel drinks rainwater. The land of Egypt—a low-lying area drinks; an elevated area cannot drink. The Land of Israel—both low-lying and elevated areas can drink. The land of Egypt—bare hilltops drink; sheltered sides do not. The Land of Israel—both bare hilltops and sheltered sides drink. The land of Egypt first drinks and then is sown;[5] the Land of Israel drinks, is sown, may be sown again, and then drinks again. The land of Egypt does not drink every day; the Land of Israel drinks every day. The land of Egypt—if one does not toil over it, [channeling its water] with mattock and ax, depriving oneself of sleep, one gets nothing from it. Not so the Land of Israel—people sleep in their beds while He who is everywhere brings down rain for them.

A parable of a king who during a journey met a man of good family and gave him one of his own slaves to serve him. Later, the king saw another person also of good family, delicately reared, working hard at a task. Since the king knew that person and his forebears as well, he said to him: I decree that you are to stop working with your hands—I myself will maintain you. So, too, all other lands were given servants to minister to them: Egypt drinks from the Nile, Babylon from the Euphrates. Not so the Land of Israel: people sleep in their beds while the Holy One brings down rain for them. To teach you incidentally that the ways of mortals are not like the ways of Him who is everywhere: a mortal acquires for himself servants in order that they may feed and sustain him, but He who spoke and the world came into being acquires for Himself servants in order that He may feed and sustain them.[6]

69. The sages taught: In her blessed years, an area in Israel's Land sown with a seah of grain would produce five myriad kor of grain; whereas even in the days of her prosperity, the same area in Zoan yielded no more than seventy kor. Now, among all the countries none is more fertile than the land of Egypt, of which it is said, "Like the garden of the Lord, like the land of Egypt" (Gen. 13:10); and in the entire land of Egypt there is no area more fertile than Zoan, where Egypt's kings used to be reared, as is said, "Its princes are in Zoan" (Isa. 30:4). Further: In all the Land of Israel, no ground is more rocky than Hebron, where the dead are buried.[7] Nevertheless, Hebron was seven times more fertile than Zoan, as may be inferred from the verse "Hebron was built (mevunneh) seven years before Zoan in Egypt" (Num. 13:22). What can the meaning of mevunneh be here? If it be suggested that it means "built," is it likely that [Ham] would build a house for his younger son [Canaan] before he built one for his elder son [Egypt]? The order of the birth of the two sons is given in the verse "The sons of Ham, Cush and Mizraim [Egypt], and Put and Canaan" (Gen. 10:6). The meaning of mevunneh[8] must be that Hebron [in Canaan] was seven times more fertile than Zoan.[9] This refers to stony ground; but in ground where there are no stones, an area in which a seah of grain is sown would yield at least five hundred kor.[10] This applies to times when the area was not blessed; but of a time when it was blessed, Scripture says, "Isaac sowed in that Land and reaped in the same year a hundredfold" (Gen. 26:12).[11]

---

1. Not only rain, but snow and dew as well.
2. In the valleys, encompassed by the sheltered hillsides, the air mass is thicker and warmer, so there is less precipitation. Professor Bruno Giletti of Brown University provided the meteorological information.
3. Interpretation follows Elijah of Vilna and David Hoffmann. See Sif Deut., ed. Eliezer (Louis) Finkelstein (New York, 1983), p. 79.
4. Sif. Deut., §39; Yalkut, Ekev, §858.
5. If it is sown before the inundation by the Nile, its water will wash away the sown seed.
6. Sif Deut., §38.
7. See Gen. 49:31.
8. The root bnh may mean "to build" or "to produce."
9. Seven times seventy kor is four hundred ninety kor.
10. Only ten more kor than rocky ground.
11. A hundred times five hundred equals fifty thousand or five myriads. B. Ket 112a.

70. When Sennacherib came to persuade Israel to make peace, what did he say to them? "I come and will take you away to a land like your own land" (2 Kings 18:32). He did not say, "To a land better than your own land," but, "To a land like your own land." The matter may be argued a fortiori: when one who comes to speak in praise of his own land is unable to find any fault with Israel's Land, all the less so when one wishes to speak in praise of Israel's Land.

R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Sennacherib was a fool who did not know how to persuade effectively, as may be illustrated by the parable of a man who, intending to wed a wife, said to her, "Your father is a king, and I am a king. Your father is rich, and I am rich. Your father gives you meat and fish to eat and aged wine to drink, and I will give you meat and fish to eat and aged wine to drink." This is not effective wooing. What kind of wooing is effective? If he were to say to her, "Your father is a commoner and I am a king; your father is poor and I am rich; your father feeds you nothing but varieties of greens and pulse, while I will feed you meat and fish; your father takes you to the baths on foot, while I will take you in a sedan chair." Now, if one who came to speak in praise of his own land was unable to find any fault with Israel's Land, all the less so he who comes to speak in praise of Israel's Land.[1]

71. "That thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil" (Deut. 11:14)—that the Land of Israel may be full of new grain, wine, and oil, and that all lands will send their overflow of silver and gold [to buy its produce].[2]

72. "I shall give thee a land of desire, a heritage of beauty desired by the nations (tziv'ot goyim)" (Jer. 3:19). What does tziv'ot goyim mean? It means that the Land of Israel is desired (tzovin) and coveted by all the nations (goyim).[3]

73. "I shall give thee a land of desire, a heritage of beauty desired by the nations"—a land of desire, a land set up with many castles for kings and rulers. For any king or ruler who had not acquired a site in the Land of Israel would say, "I have accomplished nothing." In this connection, R. Judah said: The thirty-one kings whom Joshua subdued—could all of them have been in Israel's Land? Of course not. The situation then was like the one nowadays in Rome, where any king or ruler who has not acquired an estate and a castle in Rome says, "I have accomplished nothing." So, too, a king or a ruler who had not acquired an estate and a castle in the Land of Israel would say, "I have accomplished nothing."[4]

74. "They invite their kin to the mountain" (Deut. 33:19). From this verse one may infer that peoples and kings setting out in companies come looking for the wares of the Land of Israel. Then they will say: Since we took such trouble to come here, let us go and see the nature of the Jews' own wares. So they go up to Jerusalem [the mountain of the Lord's house], where they see Jews worshiping one God and following one kind of diet. Since among the nations the god of one is not the god of another, nor is the diet of one the diet of another, they say, "There is no better nation to cleave to than this nation."

And the proof that they will not budge from there until they become proselytes and bestir themselves to bring sacrifices and burnt offerings? The end of the verse: "There shall they offer the sacrifices of righteousness" (Deut. 33:19).[5]

75. "They shall draw upon the riches streaming into the sea" (Deut. 33:19), that is, into the sea of Haifa,[6] which is being kept for the righteous in the time-to-come. Whence the proof that in the case of all ships lost in the Great Sea with treasures of silver and gold, precious stones and pearls, and other valuables—all these the Great Sea spews up into the Sea of Haifa, which is being kept for the righteous in the time-to-come? The verse "They shall draw upon the riches streaming into the sea."[7]

R. Yose said: Once, while I was on a journey from Chezib to Tyre, I came upon an old man whom I greeted and asked, "How do you make your living?" "From the purple snail."[8] I asked, "But where is it found?" He replied, "By Heaven, there is an area in the sea where the creature lies between mountains. Spiders bite it, and it dies and dissolves in its place." I said, "By Heaven, they do say that it is kept for the righteous in the world-to-come."[9]

76. "The hidden treasures of the sand" (Deut. 33:19). The word "hidden" refers to the purple snail, "treasures" refers to the torit,[10] and "sand" to glass. The tribe of Zebulun protested to Him who is everywhere, saying: Master of the universe, to my brothers You gave lands, while to me You gave seas. To my brothers You gave fields and vineyards, while to me You gave the purple snail. God replied: In the end I will make them dependent on you for this purple snail. Zebulun: Master of the universe, what means will I have of making certain that the purple snail will be utilized only by me? God: Take this as a sign: anyone who steals it will see no blessing in his trade.[11]

77. "Nebuzaradan . . . left the poorest of the land to be koremim and yogevim"[12] (Jer. 52:16). The koremim, R. Joseph taught, were the balsam gatherers from En Gedi

---

1. Sif Deut., §37.
2. Sif Deut., §42.
3. MTeh 5:1.
4. Sif Deut., §33 and §353; Yalkut, Berakhah, §959.
5. Sif Deut., §354; Yalkut, Berakhah, §961.
6. "Haifa," as emended by Samuel Klein (see Sif Deut., ed. Finkelstein, p. 416). Some editions read "Jaffa."
7. Sif Deut., §354; Yalkut, Berakhah, §961.
8. A snail yielding a special kind of blue dye (tekhelet).
9. Sif Deut., §354; Yalkut, Berakhah, §961.
10. Salted or pickled fish; all three items in this sentence were valuable articles in commerce.
11. Sif Deut., §354. "Making dye from the purple snail was a highly profitable and highly skilled trade, and its secrets were jealously kept. Hence, an outsider who stole a basketful of snails could get no profit from it" (Leon Nemoy).
12. JV: "Vinedressers and husbandmen."

to Ramah, while the yogevim were those who catch the purple snail from the Ladder of Tyre as far as Haifa.[1]

78. Hammath (Josh. 19:35) is Tiberias. Why was it called Hammath? Because of the hot baths (hamme) of Tiberias.

Rakkath (Josh. 19:35) is Sepphoris. Why was it called Rakkath? Because it is situated high up, like the steep bank (rakkat) of a river.

"And Kinneret" (Josh. 19:35). Kinneret is Gennesaret. Why was it called Kinneret? Because its fruit is as sweet as the music of harps (kinnorot).

Rava said: Hammath is the hot baths of Geder.[2] Rakkath is [not Sepphoris but] Tiberias.

R. Jeremiah said: Its real name is Rakkath. Why then is it called Tiberias [Teveria]? Because it is situated in the center (tabbur) of the Land of Israel. Rather, said Rabbah, because its scenery is superb (tovah re'iyat).

Zeira said: Kitron (Judg. 1:30) is Sepphoris. Why is it called Sepphoris? Because it is perched on top of a mountain like a bird (tzippor).

Resh Lakish said: I myself have seen the trail of milk and honey[3] around Sepphoris, and it was sixteen by sixteen mil.

"Ekron shall be rooted up" (Zeph. 2:4)—that is, Caesarea daughter of Edom,[4] situated in a sandy area. In the days of the Greeks it had been a painful peg in Israel['s side]. When the might of the Hasmonean house grew strong and the Greeks [there] were overpowered, the event came to be spoken of as the Capture of the Tower of Tyre.[5]

79. R. Isaac said: Leshem (Josh. 19:47) is Pamias.[6] "And Ekron shall be rooted up" (Zeph. 2:4)—that is, Caesarea daughter of Edom, which was a metropolis of kings. Some say this means that kings were brought up there, while others say that kings were appointed from there.[7]

80. Michmas and Zanoha rank first in the quality of their fine flour. Second to them is Afarayim in the valley.[8]

81. Our masters taught: "I will give you rains in their season" (Lev. 26:4). The verse means that the soil will be neither saturated nor parched, but moderately rained upon. For when rain is excessive, it makes the soil muddy, so that it yields no fruit.

Another comment: The words "in their season" mean that rain would fall only on the nights ushering in Wednesday[9] and the Sabbath. Thus we find that in the days of R. Simeon ben Shetah, rain fell only on the eve of Wednesdays and Sabbaths, so that grains of wheat grew to the size of kidney beans, and grains of barley to the size of olive pits, and lentils to the size of gold denars. Specimens of these were stored for the generations.[10]

82. "The early rain" (yoreh) (Deut. 11:14)—so called because it indicates (moreh) to people that they are to bring in their fruits, to caulk their roofs, and to attend to all their other needs [for the coming of winter].

Another explanation: Being concerned with the earth's well-being, the early rain does not come down (yored) with vehemence.

Or: It saturates (marveh) the ground, watering it right down to the abyss.

The text goes on to call the late rain malkosh, because it puts an abundance (memalle) of produce into the stalks (kash).

Or: Malkosh because it comes down on ripe ears (melilot), as well as on the stalks (kash).[11]

83. Rafram bar Papa said in the name of R. Hisda: Ever since the day the Temple was destroyed, rain does not come down from the good treasure. In saying, "The Lord will open unto thee His good treasure," etc. (Deut. 28:12), Scripture implies that when Israel[12] dwell in their Land, rain comes down from the good treasure; but when Israel do not dwell in their Land, rain does not come down from the good treasure.[13]

84. "I give thee a pleasant land, the heritage of the deer"[14] (Jer. 3:19). Why is the Land of Israel compared to a deer? To tell you that even as the hide of a deer, upon being flayed, [shrinks and] cannot contain its flesh, so the Land of Israel[15] cannot contain its produce.

Or: As the deer is the swiftest of all animals, so is the Land of Israel swiftest of all lands in the ripening of its fruits. Now, one might suppose that, just as the deer is swift but its flesh is not succulent, so the Land of Israel is swift to ripen but its fruits not succulent. Therefore Scripture says, "Flowing with milk and honey" (Exod. 3:17), implying that its fruit is as rich as milk and as sweet as honey.[16]

85. The fruits of the Land of Israel are easier to digest than the fruits of all other lands.[17]

---

1. B. Shab 26a.
2. Or, Gerar.
3. "Left by the goats eating dates" (Meg, Soncino, p. 28, n. 7).
4. As an outpost of the Roman Empire, it was called "daughter of Edom," i.e., of Rome.
5. "The reference is probably to the conquest of Caesarea by Alexander Jannaeus [Yannai]. . . . The old name of Caesarea was Strato's Tower, after the Phoenician king Strato, its founder" (Isidore Epstein in Meg, Soncino, p. 28, n. 5). B. Meg 6a.
6. "More correctly Panias, Caesarea Philippi, the modern Banias, a place near the source of the Jordan" (Meg, Soncino, p. 29, n. 5).
7. B. Meg 6a.
8. The three sites are mentioned in Scripture: the first in Ezra 2:27; the second in Josh. 15:34 and 15:56; the third in Josh. 19:19 and 2 Chron. 13:19. Men 9:1.
9. People did not venture out during the night ushering in Wednesday, since it was believed that demons were abroad then. Cf. B. Pes 112b.
10. B. Ta 22b–23a.
11. Sif Deut., §42; B. Ta 6a.
12. The words "obey the will of Him who is everywhere" are deleted. So Bah.
13. B. BB 25b.
14. JV: "a goodly heritage." But tzevi can mean "deer" as well as "goodly."
15. Its storehouses or granaries.
16. B. Ket 112a; Sif Deut., §37.
17. Sif Deut., §37.

86. R. Meir used to say: From Scripture's saying "Ye shall count the fruit thereof as forbidden" (Lev. 19:23), would I not understand that trees for food are being spoken of here? Then why does it say in the same context, "Of trees for food" (ibid.)? In order to include a tree whose wood has the same taste as its fruit. What is that tree? The pepper tree. This teaches you that the Land of Israel lacks nothing, as Scripture says, "A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness; thou shalt not lack anything in it" (Deut. 8:9).[1]

87. Rami bar Ezekiel once visited Bene Berak, where he saw some goats grazing under fig trees. Honey oozed down from the figs, and milk dripped from the goats, and they mingled with each other. So he quoted, "A land flowing with milk and honey" (Exod. 3:17).[2]

88. [It happened that R. Jonathan ben Eleazar was sitting under a fig tree, which was full of succulent figs. When dew came down, the figs oozed honey, which the wind kneaded into the soil. Then a she-goat came along and dripped milk into the honey. So he called out to his pupils, saying to them: Come and see a paradigm of the world-to-come, of which it is said, "It shall come to pass in that day that the mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk" (Joel 4:18).[3]

89. R. Jacob ben Dostai said: From Lod to Ono is about three mil. Once I got up early in the morning twilight and walked in fig honey all the way up to my ankles.[4]

90. "And He made him suck honey out of the crag" (Deut. 32:13) applies to Sikhnin and cities nearby.

Once R. Yudan said to his son in Sikhnin: Go up [to the roof] and bring us dried figs from the jar. So he went up, put his hand into the jar, and found it full of fig honey. When he said to his father, "Papa, but this is a jar of honey," the father said, "Put your hand deeper into the jar, son, and you will bring up dried figs."

"[And He made him suck] oil out of the flinty rock" (Deut. 32:13). These are olives from Gush Halav.[5]

Once R. Yose said to his son in Sepphoris: Go and bring us olives from the upper chamber. He went up and found the upper chamber flooded with olive oil.[6]

91. "And of Asher he said: . . . Let him dip his foot in oil" (Deut. 33:24). The land of Asher gushed oil like a spring. It is told that when the people of Laodicea were in need of oil, they appointed an agent and instructed him, "Go and purchase for us a hundred myriad [maneh] worth of oil." He first went to Jerusalem and said, "I need a hundred myraids' worth of oil"; he was told, "Go to Tyre." He went to Tyre and said, "I need a hundred myriads' worth of oil"; there he was told, "Go to Gush Halav." He went to Gush Halav and said, "I need a hundred myriads' worth of oil"; he was told, "Go to So-and-so." Going to So-and-so's house, he did not find him, but he was told, "He is in the field." He went to the field and found him there, breaking up the earth under his olive trees. When the agent told him, "I need a hundred myriads' worth of oil," the man in the field replied, "Wait until I finish with the olive trees." After the man had finished with his olive trees, he slung his tools over his back and proceeded on his way, kicking stones from his path as he went. The agent asked himself: Is it likely that such a man would have a hundred myriads' worth of oil? It would seem that the Jews have had a good laugh at my expense. When the man got home, his maidservant brought him a kettle of hot water, and he washed his hands and feet in it. Then she brought him a golden bowl full of oil, and he dipped his hands and feet in it (in fulfillment of "Let him dip his foot in oil"). After they ate and drank, the man got up and measured out to the agent a hundred myriads' worth of oil. Then he asked, "Do you need more?" The agent: "Yes, but I have no more money with me." The man: "If you wish to buy more, take it, and I will go back with you for the money." The man then measured out to him an additional eighteen myriads' worth of oil. It is said that there was not a horse, a mule, a camel, or an ass in the Land of Israel the agent did not hire [to transport the oil]. When he got back to his city, the citizens came out to give him a hero's welcome. He said, "No one deserves your applause but this man; all of this oil is his, and I still owe him for eighteen myriads' worth."

The story illustrates the verse "There is that pretendeth himself rich, yet hath nothing; there is that pretendeth himself poor, yet hath great wealth" (Prov. 13:7).[7]

92. R. Hanina said: When I came up from exile, I undid my own girdle, my son's, and my animal's, [and I tied them together in order] to encircle the trunk of a carob tree, but it was so thick I was unable to do it.

R. Hanina also said: When I first came up from exile, I cracked a carob pod I happened to find, and out of it gushed enough honey to fill my hand.[8]

93. R. Yohanan said: I remember that when a child would crack a carob pod, a thread of honey would run down both his arms.

And R. Eleazar said: I remember that when a raven would pick up a piece of meat, a thread of fat would run down from the top of the wall to the ground.[9]

94. When R. Dimi came [to Babylonia], he said: The verse "Binding its colt unto the vine" (Gen. 49:11) implies that there is not a vine in the Land of Israel that does not require a colt to carry off the harvest from it. And "Two

---

1. B. Ber 36b.
2. B. Ket 111b.
3. Tanhuma B, Tetzavveh, §10; Tanhuma B, Ve-hizhir, p. 100b.
4. B. Ket 111b.
5. In Upper Galilee, where olive trees grew in the midst of rocks. The place-name means "lump of milk."
6. P. Pe 7:3, 20a; Sif Deut., §316.
7. Sif Deut., §355; B. Men 85b; Yalkut, Berakhah, §962.
8. P. Pe 7:3, 20a.
9. B. BB 91b.

asses to a wild tree" (ibid.)[1] means that not even a wild tree in the Land of Israel fails to produce a load[2] for two she-asses. Lest you suppose that such grapes make no wine, Scripture says, "He washes his garments in wine" (ibid.). Lest you suppose that such wine is not red, Scripture says, "In the blood of grapes" (ibid.). Lest you suppose that such wine does not intoxicate, Scripture says, "Its intoxicating power" (ibid.).[3] Lest you suppose that such wine has no flavor, Scripture says, "Hakhlili after tasting what looks like wine" (Gen. 49:12),[4] which means: Any palate (hekh) that tastes it says, "More of it for me, more of it for me (li, li)." Lest you suppose it may be suitable for young people but not suitable for aged people, Scripture says, "And le-ven shinayim with milk" (ibid.). Read not le-ven shinayim, "his teeth white," but le-ven shanim, "[suitable] for aged people."[5]

95. R. Hiyya bar Adda, who was the teacher of Resh Lakish's young children, took time off for three days and did not come [to teach]. When he did come, Resh Lakish asked him: Why did you absent yourself? He replied: My dear father left me a trellis laden with vines. On the first day I gathered three hundred clusters, each cluster yielding one keg [of wine]. On the second day I gathered three hundred clusters, each two clusters yielding one keg [of wine]. On the third day I gathered three hundred clusters, each three clusters yielding a keg [of wine]. And even then, I had to declare ownerless (hefker) more than half of the grapes on the trellis. Resh Lakish said: Had you not taken time off from teaching Torah, the trellis would have yielded even more.[6]

96. A certain heretic said to R. Hanina: You may well boast of your Land. My father left me a parcel of land fifty by fifty cubits, and from it I get oil, wine, and grain, and my ox also feeds on it.[7]

---

1. JV: "and his ass's colt unto the choice vine." But beni (singular) is read as the plural bene, and serekah ("choice vine") is read serakah ("wild tree").

2. "A wild tree . . . is one that bears no fruit and is generally used either for shade or for firewood. Hence it seems that the two she-asses were laden with something other than fruit fit for human consumption. What was it? Acorns fit for animal feed? Or dead twigs fit for fuel?" (Leon Nemoy).

3. JV: "its vesture." But svt ("vesture") may be associated with the verb svt: "to agitate, to incite, to intoxicate."

4. JV: "His eyes shall be red (hakhlili) with wine." But enayim ("eyes") is taken to mean "to look like," as in Num. 11:7. Leon Nemoy differs: "I find several stumbling blocks here: enayim is a noun, not a verb—it can't mean 'to look like'; enayim does not describe yayin—it is affected by yayin; hence yayin is not something that looks like wine—it is wine.

"Hence JV's 'His eyes shall be red with wine' seems to me to be perfectly suitable for this context with a slight modification: 'His eyes, affected by the wine [made out of the aforementioned abundant harvests of grapes], [cry out], "The palate [says]; More for me, More for me!" ' "

5. B. Ket 111b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

6. The successive reduction in the clusters' yield was intended as a hint to R. Hiyya that, by interrupting his teaching activity, he was not acting properly. Ibid.

7. B. Ket 112a.

97. We have been taught that R. Yose said: A parcel of land in Judah fifty by fifty cubits sown with a seah of seed used to yield five seah: a seah of ordinary flour, a seah of fine flour, a seah of ordinary bran, a seah of coarse bran, and a seah of short bran.[8]

98. We have been taught that R. Yose said: It once happened in Shihin that a man was left by his father a mustard stalk with three twigs, one of which split and was found to contain nine kav of mustard seed. A potter's hut was roofed with its timber.

R. Simeon ben Tahalifa said: Father left us a cabbage stalk, and we used to climb up and down on it, as on a ladder.[9]

99. A story of a scribe who used to go up to Jerusalem year after year, and people in Jerusalem became aware that he was greatly learned in Torah. So they said to him: Take fifty gold coins a year and stay with us. He replied: I have one vine that is more productive for me than all the other vines. It yields three crops a year and produces six hundred jars of wine every year—three hundred jars from the first crop, two hundred from the second, and a hundred from the third. I sell all of them for a very considerable sum.[10]

100. When R. Dimi came [to Babylonia], he said that King Yannai had a city in King's Mountain, to which from Sabbath eve to Sabbath eve they used to bring [11] sixty myriad bowls of salted fish for the men trimming fig trees.

When Ravin came [to Babylonia], he said that King Yannai had a tree in King's Mountain from which forty seah of pigeon chicks from three broods used to be taken down every month.[12]

101. R. Joshua ben Levi once visited Cabla,[13] where he saw [vines laden with] grape clusters as big as calves. "Calves among the vines!" he exclaimed, and was told, "They are clusters of ripe grapes." At that, he again exclaimed, "Land, O Land, withhold your fruit. For whom are you producing your fruit? For these Arabs, who on account of our sins have risen up against us?" The following year, R. Hiyya happened to visit there. When he saw clusters of grapes as big as goats, he exclaimed, "Goats among grapes!" So they said to him, "Go away. Do not do to us what your companion did."[14]

102. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said to R. Perida, "Will you not show me that famous cluster in your vineyard?" R. Perida replied, "Very well," and went out [with Rabbi], intending to show it to him. At some distance, R. Judah saw something that looked like an ox and asked,

---

8. B. Ket 112a.

9. B. Ret 111b; Sif Deut., §317.

10. Tanhuma B, Tetzavveh, §10.

11. Literally, "King's Mountain, for whose sake . . . there used to be produced."

12. B. Ber 44a.

13. Southeast of the Dead Sea.

14. He cursed the crop. B. Ket 112a.

"Does this ox not injure the vineyard?" R. Perida: "What you take to be an ox is that grape cluster." Then Rabbi Judah cited the verse "While the King sat at His table, my spikenard sent forth its fragrance" (Song 1:12). But now the Temple is destroyed, yet you, O vineyard, stubbornly continue to produce such grapes.

From then on, when people looked for those grapes, they could not be found.

Between New Year's Day and the Day of Atonement—it happened to be at the end of a sabbatical year—two radishes as heavy as the weight of a camel's load were brought to R. Judah, who asked, "Are they not prohibited? Are they not the aftergrowths of a sabbatical year?" He was told, "They were planted at the end of the sabbatical year.[1]

It was on that occasion that R. Judah permitted the purchase of greens soon after the end of a sabbatical year.[2]

103. An Amorite once asked an Israelite who entered the Land of Israel [with Joshua], "How many dates do you gather from that date palm standing on the bank of the Jordan?" The Israelite: "Sixty kor." The Amorite: "You have just come into the Land, and you have already ruined it. We used to gather one hundred and twenty kor from it." The Israelite: "[So do we]—the amount I mentioned to you is from only one side of the date palm."[3]

104. R. Huna said in the name of R. Avun: Cinnamon, which Israel produced, [was so abundant] that it was used as feed for goats.[4]

105. R. Yohanan said: There used to be sixty myriads of townships between Gabbath and Antipatris.[5] The smallest was Beth-shemesh, whose population you may estimate from the fact that Scripture says, "And He smote of the men of Beth-shemesh . . . seventy men, and fifty thousand men" (1 Sam. 6:19). And these were from just one side of Beth-shemesh. But now, if you were to plant in Beth-shemesh as many reeds as the men smitten, its area could not contain them. Israel has, as R. Hanina said, shrunk greatly.[6]

106. At one time, it used to be said: Grain is in Judea, straw in Galilee, and chaff on the other side of the Jordan. But [after the Land was laid waste] the saying was: In Judea there is no grain [only straw], in Galilee there is no straw—only chaff, and on the other side of the Jordan there is neither the one nor the other.[7]

107. R. Ze'era said: Pause and consider how irrepressible is the Land of Israel, for it continues to bear fruit. Why does it? Two Amoraim differ in their answers. One said: Because it is well manured. The other: Because the soil is [carefully] turned over.[8]

108. R. Helbo, R. Avira, and R. Yose bar Hanina once visited a certain place in the Land of Israel where a peach as large as a stewpot of Kefar Hino[9] was brought to them. (And how big is a stewpot of Kefar Hino? Five seah.) A third they ate: a third they declared free for all; and a third they fed to their mounts.

R. Eleazar visited the place again a year later and was served peaches so small that he could hold them all in one hand. So he recited the verse "A fruitful land into a salt waste, because of the wickedness of them that dwell therein" (Ps. 107:34).[10]

109. "And I will bring the Land into desolation" (Lev. 26:32). There is some consolation in this curse, in that Israel need not say, "Now that we are exiled from our Land, the enemies will come in and find satisfaction in it." For the verse goes on to say, "Your enemies that settle therein shall be astonished at it" (ibid.), meaning that the enemies who come in afterward will find no satisfaction there.[11]

Jerusalem

110. R. Hanina bar Papa said: The Holy One wished to confine Jerusalem within definite measurements, for it is said, "Then said I: Whither goest thou? And he said unto me: To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof?" (Zech. 2:6). But the ministering angels spoke up before the Holy One: Master of the universe, You have created in Your world many cities for the nations of the earth, and You did not fix the measure of their length or the measure of their breadth. Yet now for Jerusalem, in whose midst is Your Name, in whose midst is Your Sanctuary, in whose midst are the righteous—for it You fix a measure? "Thereupon [one angel speaking to another] said unto him: 'Run, speak to this young man, saying: Jerusalem shall be inhabited without walls, for the multitude of men and cattle therein' " (Zech. 2:8).[12]

111. "I went down to the bottoms of mountains . . . into Thy holy Temple" (Jon. 2:7–8).[13] Jerusalem is situated on seven hills.[14]

---

1. But grew so rapidly.
2. P. Pe 7:3, 20b.
3. B. Ket 112a.
4. P. Pe 7:3, 28a.
5. Gabbath was in the territory of Dan, and Antipatris was northwest of Jerusalem.
6. P. Ta 4:5 and 4:8, 69b; Meg 1:1, 70a.
7. ARN 27.
8. P. Ta 4:5, 69b; Lam. R., proem 34.
9. "Identified by Klein . . . as Kefar Hananiah in Upper Galilee" (Isidore Epstein in Ket, Soncino, p. 724, n. 9).
10. B. Ket 112a.
11. Sif Lev. 112a.
12. B. BB 75b.
13. The words "From this verse we learn that" are omitted, as suggested by Elijah of Vilna. See David Luria's commentary, ad loc.
14. PRE 10. Leon Nemoy writes: "Rome, too, was built on seven hills. Is the implied conclusion here to say to the Romans, 'Quit bragging about your seven-hilled imperial capital—Jerusalem has seven hills, too, in addition to lots of precious things that Rome never had and never will have.'?"

112. Ten kav of beauty came down to the world—Jerusalem took nine, and all the rest of the world one.

You will find no beauty like the beauty of Jerusalem.[1]

113. Ten portions of suffering are in the world—nine in Jerusalem, and one in the rest of the world.

Ten portions of physical strength are in the world—nine in Judea, and one in the rest of the world.

Ten portions of wisdom are in the world—nine in Jerusalem, and one in the rest of the world.

Ten portions of hypocrisy are in the world—nine in Jerusalem, and one in the rest of the world.

Ten portions of Torah are in the world—nine in Jerusalem, and one in the rest of the world.[2]

114. R. Joshua ben Levi said: "Jerusalem that art builded as a city that is compact together" (Ps. 122:3)—a city that makes all Israel feel the fellowship that binds them together.[3]

115. "The valley of vision" (Isa. 22:1)—the valley concerning which all seers have prophesied, the valley out of which all seers rise. For, as R. Yohanan said, any prophet whose city is not named is a Jerusalemite.[4]

116. Ten things are said about Jerusalem: It is not impossible to buy back one's house there;[5] no heifer is brought to have its neck broken [when someone slain is found lying in the open in the vicinity of Jerusalem and the identity of the slayer is unknown];[6] it may not be declared a condemned city;[7] it is not subject to uncleanness from house plagues;[8] attachments to windows or balconies may not protrude over its thoroughfares;[9] dungheaps may not be located within it; artisans' kilns may not be built there; other than rose gardens that existed from the days of the early prophets, gardens and orchards may not be cultivated in it;[10] chickens are not to be raised within it;[11] and a corpse may not be kept overnight there.[12]

117. Our masters taught: In Jerusalem there was a Stone of Losses. He who lost an article went there [and so did he who found one]. The finder stood up and announced what he found, and its owner stood up and called out the identifying marks and had the lost article restored to him.[13]

118. R. Yohanan said: Outside of Jerusalem there was an arcade called the Arch of Accounts, and when people had accounts to settle, they used to go and settle them under the arch. Thus, it could not happen that a man, while reckoning his account, would be brought to grief—a thing that must not be allowed to occur, because Jerusalem is called "the joy of the whole earth" (Ps. 48:3). True, as soon as Jerusalem was destroyed (harevah), that joy was darkened (arevah) and the gladness of the whole earth was exiled. But when the Holy One rebuilds Jerusalem, He will restore to it all the joy, as is said, "The Lord hath comforted Zion. . . . Joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody" (Isa. 51:3).[14]

119. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: The Siloam used to issue through a narrow mouth the size of an issar. So it was suggested: Let us widen the mouth, and its water will increase. They did widen it, but its water diminished. So they narrowed its mouth again, and the flow returned to what it had been before.[15]

120. R. Judah said: Jerusalem's [fuel] logs were of cinnamon, and when they were burning, their fragrance pervaded the entire Land of Israel. After Jerusalem was destroyed, they were hidden, only as much as the size of a barley grain being left, and it is found in Queen Zimzemai's collection of rarities.[16]

121. Caesarea and Jerusalem [are rivals]. If someone says to you that both are destroyed, do not believe him; if he says both are flourishing, do not believe him; if he says Caesarea is waste and Jerusalem is flourishing, believe him. Or that Jerusalem is waste and Caesarea is flourishing—you may believe him. For Scripture says, "I shall be filled, she is laid waste" (Ezek. 26:2)—if this one is filled, the other is laid waste; and if the other is filled, this one is laid waste.[17]

122. R. Joshua ben Levi taught that the Holy One said to Israel: You people caused My house to be destroyed and My children to be banished. Now go on inquiring about Jerusalem's peace, and I will give you peace.[18]

123. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said: According to an Aggadah transmitted through the generations, Jerusalem will not be rebuilt until all the exiles have been gathered. If someone says to you: All the exiles have been gathered, but Jerusalem is still not rebuilt, do not believe him, for Scripture says, "The Lord will rebuild Jerusalem" (Ps. 147:2) and then "He will gather together the dispersed of Israel" (ibid.).[19]

124. R. Yohanan said: Jerusalem is destined to become the metropolis of all lands.[20]

---

1. B. Kid 49b; ARN 28.
2. ARNB 48.
3. P. Hag 3:6, 79d.
4. Lam. R., proem 24.
5. Unlike other walled cities. See Lev. 25:29–34.
6. See Deut. 21.
7. See Deut. 13:13–28.
8. See Lev. 14:35–53.
9. Lest pilgrims be hurt.
10. Lest they spread the stench of manure.
11. By going into dung to pick for grains, they proliferate uncleanness.
12. B. BK 82b.
13. B. BM 28b.
14. Exod. R. 52:5.
15. P. Suk 5:6, 55d.
16. B. Shab 63a.
17. B. Meg 6a.
18. Per Sha.
19. Tanhuma B, Noah, §17.
20. Exod. R. 23:10.

125. Jerusalem is destined to be widened and to rise upward, until it reaches the throne of glory and says, "The place is too narrow for me" (Isa. 49:20).[1]

126. R. Nahman asked R. Isaac: What is meant by the verse "The Holy One in the midst of thee, and I will not come into the city"[2] (Hos. 11:9)? Surely it cannot mean that the prophet said, "Because the Holy One is in the midst of thee, I will not enter the city"! R. Isaac replied that R. Yohanan explained it in this way: "The holy one" refers not to God but to the holy city, and God the Holy One is saying, "I will not come into the city of Jerusalem that is above until I first come into the city of Jerusalem that is below."

But can it be that there is a Jerusalem above?

Yes. Scripture says, "Jerusalem that art builded like the city with which it is companioned" (Ps. 122:3).[3]

1. Song R. 7:5, §3.
2. JV: "in fury." But ir ("fury") can also mean "city."
3. JV: "Jerusalem, that art builded as a city that is compact together (hubberah lah)." B. Ta 5a.

CHAPTER THREE

LANGUAGE

The Sacred Tongue

1. It is taught in the name of R. Meir: Everyone who dwells permanently in the Land of Israel, recites the Shema morning and evening, and speaks the sacred tongue is assured that he will dwell in the world-to-come.[1]

2. "And ye shall teach them to your children, to speak of them" (Deut. 11:19). From this verse it is inferred: When a child begins to speak, his father should speak to him in the sacred tongue and teach him Torah; if he does not speak to him in the sacred tongue and does not teach him Torah, it is as though he were burying him, for Scripture says, "Ye shall teach them to your children, to speak of them . . . that your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children" (Deut. 11:19 and 11:21). If you teach them to your children, your days and the days of your children will be multiplied; if you do not, your days and the days of your children will be made fewer.

For the rule is that a negative commandment implies the corresponding positive commandment, and a positive commandment the corresponding negative commandment.[2]

3. Israel were redeemed from Egypt because they did not change their names. They went down there as Reuben and Simeon, and came back up as Reuben and Simeon. Reuben was not called Rufus, nor Judah Julianus, nor Joseph Justus, nor Benjamin Alexander. Also, because they did not change their language—they continued to speak the sacred tongue, for Scripture says, "When the house of Jacob [went forth] from a people of strange language" (Ps. 114:1), and Joseph also said, "It is my mouth that speaketh unto you" (Gen. 45:12)—speaks to you in the sacred tongue.[3]

4. "She shall be called woman (ishah) because she was taken out of man (ish)" (Gen. 2:23). It is said in the name of R. Simon: Just as the Torah was given in the sacred tongue, so was the world created with the sacred tongue. Have you even heard anyone say gune, gunya; anthrope, anthropia; gavra, gavarta?[4] But ish and ishah are used. Why? Because [in Hebrew] the masculine form and the feminine form correspond to each other.[5]

5. It is written, "And the whole earth was of one language, even though they used ahadim words" (Gen. 11:1). R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan differed on the meaning of ahadim. According to one, it means "several," that is, the seventy languages of the world. According to the other, it means the language of the One that is unique in the world—the sacred tongue.[6]

6. R. Assi asked R. Yohanan: What is the law governing wine mixed (mesakho) with water[7] by a heathen? R. Yohanan replied: The correct verb is mezago. R. Assi: I used the verb that occurs in Scripture, "She hath killed her beasts, she hath mingled (masekhah) her wine" (Prov. 9:2). R. Yohanan: For mixing wine with water, mesakho is still not the right word. Torah has its language, and the sages have theirs.[8]

When Assi bar Hini came up [to the Land of Israel], R. Yohanan found that, while teaching R. Yohanan's son Mishnah, Assi used the masculine plural rehelim for "ewes." R. Yohanan said: The correct plural is feminine: rehelot. Assi: But it is written, "Two hundred rehelim" (Gen. 32:15). R. Yohanan: Torah has its language, and the sages have theirs.[9]

7. R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Simeon bar Halafta forgot the meaning of several words in the Aramaic version of Scripture and went to a marketplace of Arabs [who spoke Nabatean] to learn from them. They heard a man who meant to say to his companion, "Place this burden on me," say instead, "Place this yehav on me," from which they concluded that yehav means "burden," as in the verse "Cast yehavekha (thy burden) upon the Lord, and He will sustain thee" (Ps. 55:23). Then again, they heard a man who wished to say to his companion, "Why do you tread (mevasseh) on me?" say instead, "Why do you measseh on me?" They accordingly interpreted the verse "Ve-assotem (Ye shall tread down) the wicked" (Mal. 3:21). They then heard a woman say to her companion, "Come and bathe," and receive the reply, "I am galmudah," meaning "menstruating." They accordingly interpreted the verse "Seeing I have been bereaved and galmudah"[10] (Isa. 49:21). They then heard another woman who meant to say to her companion, "Come, raise your lament," say, "Come, raise your livyah." They accordingly interpreted the verse "Who are ready to raise their livyah" (Job 3:8). For "Lend me

---

1. Sif Deut., §333; P. Shab 1:3, 3c.
2. Sif Deut., §46.
3. Lev. R. 32.6; Song R. 4:12, §1; MTeh 114:4.
4. "In Greek, gune means 'woman'; but to reflect nature, there should be a gune–gunya word pair for 'man'–'woman.' Instead, anthrope in Greek means 'man,' with no corresponding anthropia to mean 'woman.' Likewise, Aramaic gavra ('man') has no corresponding gavarta for 'woman' " (Brother Caedmon Holmes).
5. Gen. R. 18:4.
6. The word ahadim may be taken as the plural of "one"—hence, seventy; or as a plural of majesty—hence, the One who is unique. P. Meg 1:9, 71b.
7. Wine was usually diluted with water before drinking.
8. In rabbinic Hebrew, masakh means not to mix wine with water but to mix strong wine with weaker wine.
9. B. AZ 58b; B. Hul 137b.
10. "Shunned" (as one unclean).

your broom," a woman said, "Lend me your matate." They accordingly interpeted the verse, "I will sweep it with the matate of destruction" (Isa. 14:23). For "Lend me your pearls," they heard a woman say, "Lend me your cesitha."[1] For "Take this ewe out to pasture," they heard, "Take this kesitah out to pasture." Hence: "A hundred kesitah" (Gen. 33:19).[2]

8. R. Honi said: The sages did not know what the words serugin, haloglogot, and matate meant; nor which is to be deferred to—one greater in wisdom or one greater in years. They decided: Let us go and inquire at the house of Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]. When they got there, one said to the other, "Let So-and-so go in first." "No, let So-and-so go in first." A maidservant of Rabbi [Judah's] household came out and said, "Enter according to your seniority in years." They began entering at intervals. So she asked them, "Why are you entering serugin, serugin, 'in a broken line'?" Among them was a young man carrying purslane, which fell from his hand. The maidservant said to him, "Young man, your haloglogot, 'purslane,' has scattered all over. I will bring a matate." And she brought a broom [and swept it up].[3]

9. At the baths, secular matters may be discussed in the sacred tongue.[4]

The Sacred Tongue and Other Languages

10. "And he said: 'The Lord came from Sinai' " (Deut. 33:2). When the Holy One revealed Himself to give Torah to Israel, He revealed Himself not in one language, but in four. "And he said: 'The Lord came from Sinai' " in Hebrew; 'and rose from Seir unto them' (ibid.) in the language of Rome; 'and shined forth from Mount Paran' (ibid.) in the Arab language; 'and He came from Meribath-Kadesh' "[5] (ibid.) in the Aramaic language.[6]

11. Ben Damah, R. Ishmael's nephew, asked R. Ishmael: May one such as I, who have studied the entire Torah, also study Greek wisdom?[7] R. Ishmael recited to him the verse "The book of Torah shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night" (Josh. 1:8)—go and find a time that is neither day nor night, and in it you may study Greek wisdom.[8]

12. R. Joshua was asked: May a man teach his son Greek? He replied: He may teach him at a time that is neither day nor night, for Scripture says, "Thou shalt meditate therein day and night" (Josh. 1:8). [The inquirer objected], "But according to you, one should be forbidden to teach his son a craft, because Scripture says, 'Thou shalt meditate therein day and night.' Yet R. Ishmael taught: The words 'Thou shalt choose life' (Deut. 30:19) refer to learning a craft."

R. Abba son of R. Hiyya bar Abba, citing R. Yohanan, said: [Greek should not be taught] because of informers [who might use their proficiency in Greek to curry favor with the gentile authorities by denouncing innocent persons].

R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan: A man may teach his daughter Greek, because it is an ornament for her. When Simeon bar Abba heard this, he said: Just because R. Abbahu wishes to teach Greek to his daughter, he attributes to R. Yohanan permission to do so. When R. Abbahu heard this, he said: May such-and-such befall me if I have not actually heard this permission from R. Yohanan himself.[9]

13. We have been taught that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] asked: Why should anyone speak Syriac—Aramaic—in the Land of Israel? Either the sacred tongue or the Greek tongue!

R. Yose said: Why speak Aramaic in Babylonia? Either the sacred tongue or the Persian tongue.[10]

14. R. Samuel bar Nahman said in the name of Yohanan: Do not think lightly of the Syriac language, for we find that the Holy One pays honor to it in the Torah, in the Prophets, and in the Writings. In the Torah: "Jegar-sahadutha" (Gen. 31:47);[11] in the Prophets: "Thus shall ye say unto them: 'The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, these shall perish from the earth' " (Jer. 10:11);[12] in the Writings: "Then spoke the Chaldeans to the king in Aramaic: 'O king, live forever!' " (Dan. 2:4).[13]

15. R. Hanina said: It was to Babylonia that the Holy One exiled Israel because their language is close to the language of Torah.[14]

16. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Adam spoke Aramaic.[15]

17. R. Judah said: A man should never pray for his needs in Aramaic.

R. Yohanan said: When a man prays for his needs

---

1. The spelling variation may, Leon Nemoy suggests, be a scribe's error; the two words would have been pronounced the same.
2. So Jacob may have bought the land either for a hundred precious pearls or for a hundred sheep. JV: "a hundred pieces of money." Gen. R. 79:7.
3. P. Meg 2:2, 73a.
4. B. Shab 41a.
5. So Meir Friedmann, Sif Deut. (Vienna, 1864). JV: "from the myriads holy." The verse itself is of course entirely in Hebrew. But the three places mentioned in addition to Sinai—Seir = Edom = Rome, Paran = Arabian desert, and Kadesh = Syria—suggests that God also revealed Himself in the languages of these countries. So Leon Nemoy.
6. Sif Deut., §342.
7. Perhaps Greek philosophy.
8. B. Men 99b.
9. P. Sot 19:15, 24c; P. Shab 6:1, 7d.
10. B. BK 82b–83a.
11. "The heap of witness."
12. The text is in Aramaic (Syriac).
13. Gen. R. 74:14; P. Sot 7:2, 21c.
14. B. Pes 87b.
15. "This may have been said in justification of the abandonment by the Babylonian Jews of the Hebrew language in favor of Aramaic" (Isidore Epstein in Sanh, Soncino, p. 243, n. 6). B. Sanh 38b.

in Aramaic, the ministering angels, who do not understand Aramaic, will not respond to him.[1]

18. R. Jonathan of Beth Gubrin said: There are four beautiful languages, which all the world should use: Greek for song, Roman—Latin—for battle, Syriac—Aramaic—for lamentation, and Hebrew for conversation. Some add: Assyrian for writing.

Assyrian has a script but is no longer a spoken language. Hebrew is a spoken tongue but has no script of its own. The Hebrews chose for themselves the Assyrian script and the Hebrew tongue. Why is the Hebrew script called Assyrian? Since it is clear, easy reading of it is assured. R. Levi said: Because it came to them from Assyria.[2]

19. "I will . . . saith the Lord . . . cut off from Babylon name and remnant" (Isa. 14:22). "Name" refers to the script [whereby a nation's name spreads abroad and comes to be known], and "remnant" refers to the spoken tongue [whereby a nation survives as such, and so has a remnant in the world].[3]

20. "Thou art greatly despised" (Obad. 1:2), for Rome possesses neither script nor tongue.[4]

21. "And Balaam said: . . . Because thou hast mocked (hit'alalt) me" (Num. 22:29). Even when he speaks in the sacred tongue, a heathen's language is foul.[5]

22. "Come, let us go down, and there confound their language" (Gen. 11:7). He confounded their language, so that one did not understand the language of the other. The first language they had been speaking was the sacred tongue, by which the world had been created.

So the Holy One said: In this world, because of the impulse to evil, My creatures have been separated and have become divided into seventy languages. But in the time-to-come, all of them will come as one to call upon My Name and worship Me, as is said, "Then I will make the peoples pure of speech, so that they will all invoke the Lord by name, and serve Him with one accord" (Zeph. 3:9).[6]

Exactness in the Use of Language

23. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: The Judeans, who were particular about their language, retained their learning in Torah, but the Galileans, who were not particular about their language, did not retain their learning.

The Judeans were particular about their use of language. For example, a Judean once announced that he had a cloak to sell. He was asked, "What is the color of your cloak?" He replied, "Like that of beets on the ground."

The Galileans were not particular about their use of language. For example: A certain Galilean went around asking, "Who has amar?"[7] "Which do you mean, O foolish Galilean?" he was asked. "An ass for riding, wine to drink, wool for clothing, or a lamb for slaughtering?"[8]

---

1. "Angels were held to mediate between God and man, carrying the prayers of the latter to the former" (Shab, Soncino, p. 48, n. 3). B. Shab 12b.
2. P. Meg 1:9, 71b; Esther R. 4:12.
3. B. Meg 10b.
4. "Greek remained the spoken and written language throughout the East even after the establishment of the eastern Roman Empire, to which allusion is here made" (Isidore Epstein in AZ, Soncino, p. 50, n. 2). B. AZ 10a.
5. The expression hit'olel is used in connection with acts of obscenity (see Judg. 19:25). Num. R. 20:14.
6. Tanhuma, Noah, §22.
7. Since he did not pronounce some sounds distinctly, it was not clear whether he meant hamar ("an ass"), hamar ("wine"), amar ("wool"), or immar ("a lamb").
8. B. Er 53a.

CHAPTER FOUR

EXILE

The Hardship of Exile and the Enslavement by Kingdoms

1. Heavy is the burden of exile: it outweighs all other divine afflictions.[1]

2. In the academy of Rav, it was said: There are four things the Holy One regrets having created, and one of them is exile.[2]

3. "And you I will scatter among the nations" (Lev. 26:33). This is a particularly severe measure against Israel. For if the people of a province, all of them, are banished to one place, they at least see one another and so are comforted. But here Scripture says, "And I will scatter you among the nations"—I will disperse you among the nations so that not one of you will be near another, in keeping with "I will scatter thee among the nations, and disperse thee through the countries" (Ezek. 22:15). Scripture says again, "I will scatter them as with a winnowing fork through the settlements of the earth" (Jer. 15:7), the way a man does who scatters barley with a winnowing fork, so that one grain will not stick to another.[3]

4. "Judah is gone into exile" (Lam. 1:3). Do not the peoples of the world also go into exile? They do, but inasmuch as they eat of each other's bread and drink of each other's wine, their exile is not true exile. Whereas for Israel, who do not eat other nations' bread and do not drink other nations' wine, exile is true exile.[4]

5. "Sell me the birthright, and a day as well" (Gen. 25:31).[5] Jacob said to Esau: Sell me just one day of your many days. In this regard, R. Aha said: He who can reckon up the days in exile will find that in fact Jacob did spend one day [a short period] in peace under the shadow of Esau.[6]

6. "If they are driven hard a single day, all the flocks will die" (Gen. 33:13). R. Huna said in the name of R. Aha: But for the mercies of the Holy One, when they were driven hard one day, all the flocks [that is to say, all Israel] would have died in Hadrian's day.[7]

7. "Put a space betwixt drove and drove" (Gen. 32:17). Jacob said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, if troubles are to befall my children, let these not come one right after the other, but let them have a breathing space between their troubles.[8]

8. "I was transpierced by the yoke of my transgressions" (Lam. 1:14). The congregation of Israel meant: I was transpierced by the kingdoms. I had supposed that He would impose them on me one by one. I had not realized that He would bring them on me in pairs: Babylon and the Chaldea, Media and Persia, Greece and Macedon, Edom and Seir.[9]

"They come in broken succession" (Lam. 1:14). The pairs of kingdoms He brought on me alternated in their treatment of me: Babylon was severe, but Media was mild; Greece severe, but Edom mild; Chaldea severe, but Persia mild; Macedon severe, but Seir mild.[10] With regard to such alternation, Scripture says, "Some of the kingdoms will be fierce, and some mild" (Dan. 2:42).[11]

9. "Behold a smoking furnace and a torch of fire" (Gen. 15:17). Simeon bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: The Holy One showed four things to our father Abraham: Gehenna, [the yoke of] the kingdoms, the giving of Torah, and the Temple. And He said to him: As long as your children occupy themselves with the latter two, they will be saved from the former two. If they neglect the latter two, they will be punished by the former two. The Holy One also asked Abraham: How do you wish your children to be chastised—by Gehenna or by the kingdoms? According to R. Hanina bar Papa, Abraham chose the yoke of the kingdoms, as implied in "Their rock had given them over" (Deut. 32:30), "their rock" being Abraham, and "The Lord had delivered them up" (ibid.), meaning that the Holy One ratified Abraham's choice.

However, R. Yudan, R. Idi, and R. Hama bar Hanina maintained that Abraham chose Gehenna, but the Holy One changed his choice to the yoke of the kingdoms. This is implied in the verse "Thou hadst caused man to ride over our heads, which is as though we went through fire and water [through Gehenna]" (Ps. 66:12).

---

1. Enumerated in Deut. 27–28. Sif Deut., §43 (ed. Finkelstein, p. 100).
2. B. Suk 52b.
3. Sif Lev., Be-hukkotai 6:6 (ed. Isaac Hirsch Weiss [Vienna, 1862], p. 112a); Yalkut, Be-hukkotai, §675.
4. Lam. R. 1:3, §28.
5. AV: "Sell me this day (ka-yom) the birthright." Since ka-yom is deemed superfluous, R. Aha construes it as a request for something in addition to the birthright.
6. R. Aha may be referring to the period of the Maccabees, 160 B.C.E.; to the coming of Pompey, 66 B.C.E.; or to the time of Agrippa I, ca. 41–44 C.E. So A. A. Ha-Levi in Bereshit R. (Tel Aviv, 1956), p. 489. Gen. R. 63:13.
7. Gen. R. 78:13.
8. Gen. R. 75:13.
9. Possibly Rome and Byzantium.
10. To correct the chronological order, David Luria emends as follows: "Chaldea was severe, but Babylon mild; Persia severe, but Media mild; Greece severe, but Macedon mild; Edom severe, but Ishmael mild."
11. Lam. R. 14, §42.

According to R. Huna, citing R. Aha, all that day our father Abraham sat wondering and asking himself: Which shall I choose, since Gehenna is cruel and the yoke of the kingdoms is cruel? The Holy One said: Abraham, how long will you sit and search your heart? Cut short the deliberation and choose the yoke of the kingdoms. "In that day the Lord cut short Abram" (Gen. 15:18).[1]

10. "And lo, a dread, a darkness, a great one, fell upon him" (Gen. 15:12). "Dread" refers to Babylon; "darkness," to Media, which darkened the eyes of Israel with fasting and self-affliction; "a great one," to Greece; and "fell upon him" refers to Edom.

"[Who led thee through a . . . wilderness] wherein were serpents, fiery serpents, and scorpions" (Deut. 8:15). By "serpents" is meant Babylon; by "fiery serpents," Media; by "scorpions," Greece.[2]

11. R. Yohanan said: "Wherefore a lion out of the forest doth slay them" (Jer. 5:6)—that is Babylon;[3] "a wolf of the deserts doth spoil them" (ibid.)—that is Media; "a leopard watcheth over their cities" (ibid.)—that is Greece; "everyone that goeth out thence is torn in pieces" (ibid.)—that is Edom.[4]

12. "And again I lifted up mine eyes, and behold, there came four chariots" (Zech. 6:1)—these are the four chariots of the four kingdoms. "In the first chariot were red horses" (Zech. 6:2)—this is the kingdom of Babylon, which spilled so much of Israel's blood. "And in the second chariot black horses" (ibid.)—this is the kingdom of Persia and Media, under which the faces of Israel were made black [with grief] by the decree of Haman. "And in the third chariot white horses" (ibid.)—this is the kingdom of Greece, which through blasphemies and revilings whitened the faces of Israel with humiliation. "And in the fourth chariot grizzled bay horses" (ibid.)—this is the fourth kingdom [Rome], which issued decrees of so many varieties, each different from the others.[5]

13. "I was not at ease, neither was I quiet, neither had I rest; but trouble came" (Job 3:26). "I was not at ease" because of Babylon; "neither was I quiet" because of Media; "neither had I rest" because of Greece; "but trouble came" because of Edom.[6]

14. "There are four things which are little upon the earth" (Prov. 30:24)—these are the four kingdoms. "The ants are a people not strong" (Prov. 30:25)—this is Babylon, of which it is said, "Behold, the land of the Chaldees—this is the people that was not" (Isa. 23:13). "The rock badgers are but a feeble folk" (Prov. 30:26)—this is Media. "Yet they would erect [Israel's] house upon the crags" (ibid.)—this is Cyrus, who wished to build the Temple. "The locusts have no king" (Prov. 30:27)—this is Greece and refers to Alexander of Macedon, who roved about the entire world like locusts, which rise high and fly about in the air. "The spider thou canst take with the hands" (Prov. 30:28)—this is Edom, for even as, among creeping things, none is as hated as a spider, so, too, is it said, "But Esau I hate" (Mal. 1:3). "Yet she is in the king's palaces" (Prov. 30:28), for Edom destroyed the Temple of the King who is King of kings.[7]

15. "Who is she that looketh forth as the dawn, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, terrible as an army with banners" (Song 6:10). Here are four articles of praise for Israel, as against the four kingdoms, since under these four kingdoms that subjugated Israel, Israel did not deny the Holy One. The proof concerning the kingdom of Babylon referred to in "Who is she that looketh forth as the dawn?": Nebuchadnezzar worshiped the sun, for to him Scripture says, "Thou who worshipest (heilel) the rising (young) daybreak (sun) (Isa. 14:12).[8] Daniel, too, used to rise at dawn and pray evening, morning, and noon[9] to Him who is everywhere, for Scripture says, "Now his windows were open in his upper chamber toward Jerusalem, and he kneeled upon his knees three times a day" (Dan. 6:11). For what did he rise at dawn to pray? That the Holy One have mercy upon Israel. With regard to him, Solomon prophesied, "He who diligently rises at dawn to pray [will find] favor" (Prov. 11:27). Indeed, God let Himself be found by them at the time of their trouble, as is said, "I love them that love Me, and those that seek Me at dawn shall find Me" (Prov. 8:17). And so we find that when Daniel was cast into the lions' den, he was not harmed; when Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah were cast into the fiery furnace, they, too, were not harmed. Instead, they gave light to the world, just as the dawn gives light to the world. Moreover, they prevailed upon heathen nations to recognize the Holy One and to acclaim Him.

When the kingdom of Media was the enemy, Israel was said to be "fair as the moon." You find that when the moon is not visible in the sky at night, the darkness in the world is such that a man cannot [see to] walk about even in the city. But once the moon appears in the sky, all rejoice and are able to walk about. So, too, in the days of Ahasuerus, when it was decreed that Israel should be destroyed, slain, and exterminated. But then Esther appeared and gave light to Israel, as is said, "The Jews had light and gladness, and joy and honor" (Esther 8:16).

When Greece was the enemy, Scripture uses the phrase "clear as the sun." The reference is to Alexander son of the sun[10] and to Greece, identified with the sun. The sun is called a mighty man, as in the verse "He rejoiceth as a mighty man to run his course" (Ps. 19:6).

---

1. "In that day the Lord made a covenant with Abram." Gen. R. 44:21; PR 15:2 (YJS 1:305–7); Tanhuma, Pekudei, §9.
2. Gen. R. 44:17.
3. The kingdom of which Jeremiah said, "A lion is gone up from his thicket" (Jer. 4:7).
4. Exod. R. 51:7; Lev. R. 13:5.
5. Yalkut, Zech., §574.
6. Exod. R. 26:1.
7. Midrash Prov. 30 (ed. Buber, pp. 106–7); Yalkut, Prov., §964.
8. The interpretation of Isa. 14:12 was suggested by Leon Nemoy.
9. "The word shahar is played on here: it can mean 'rise at dawn,' and it can mean 'be diligent,' 'seek it diligently' " (Brother Caedmon Holmes).
10. His name is given in Greek: Alexandros uios Hēliou.

Who can stand up to the sun during the summer solstice? All flee from it, as is said, "There is nothing hid from the heat thereof" (Ps. 19:7). Likewise, during the ascendancy of Greece, all fled from it. But Mattathias the Priest and his sons stood up in their faith in the Holy One. The armies of Antiochus fled before them and were all slain. For to Mattathias and his sons, the Holy One had said, "Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears; let the weak say: 'I am mighty' " (Joel 4:10). In the end it could be said, "So perish all Thine enemies, O Lord; but they that love Him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might" (Judg. 5:31).

When Israel was said to be "terrible as an army with banners," Edom was the enemy. Why should Israel then have been called terrible? Because it stood up to a kingdom that inspired terror, the kingdom referred to in the words "And behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly" (Dan. 7:7). What then is implied by saying that Israel is "terrible as an army with banners"? You find that there are twelve constellations in the sky. Even as the heavens cannot endure without the twelve constellations, so the world cannot endure without the twelve tribes, as is said, "If these ordinances [concerning the constellations] depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel shall also cease from being a nation before Me forever" (Jer. 31:36).

"Terrible as an army with banners." The use of the term "banners" implies hosts, as indicated in the verse "The banner of the camp . . . and its host, and those that were numbered of them" (Num. 2:3–4). Just as the banners of heaven are the angels, so are Israel the banners of the earth—the Lord of both is the Holy One. And just as all fear the Holy One and the angels, so will the heathen peoples fear Israel, as is said, "All the peoples of the earth shall see that the Name of the Lord is called upon thee; and they shall fear thee" (Deut. 28:10).[1]

16. "At nights on my bed" (Song 3:1). The congregation of Israel said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, in the past You were wont to give me light between one night and another—between the night of Egypt and the night of Babylon, between the night of Babylon and the night of Media, between the night of Media and the night of Greece, and between the night of Greece and the night of Edom. But now one night follows immediately upon another.[2]

17. When Israel were driven into exile, the peoples of the world said: The Holy One no longer desires this people, as is said, "Silver melted down[3] shall men call them" (Jer. 6:30). Just as silver is refined and made into a utensil, then is refined again and made into a new utensil, and so many times over, until what is left of it finally breaks in one's hand and is no longer fit for any useful purpose; so Israel were saying that they had no hope of being restored [as with silver refined beyond use], that the Holy One had rejected them. When Jeremiah heard this, he came to the Holy One and said: Master of the universe, is it true that You have rejected Your children? "Hast Thou utterly rejected Judah? Hath Thy soul loathed Zion? Why hast Thou smitten us, and there is no healing for us?" (Jer. 14:19). If You desire to drive us out [of this world], then smite us until we die.[4]

18. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: Our forebears had only a whiff of the distress inflicted by the kingdoms, yet they lost their courage. All the more so we, who have been swallowed up in the kingdoms' very innards for so many days, so many years, so many periods, so many epochs![5]

19. "Or hath God assayed to go and take Him a nation from the midst of another nation?" (Deut. 4:34). R. Avin taught in the name of R. Simon: What is meant by "from the midst of another nation"? That the children of Israel were swallowed up in the very innards of Egypt, as is said, "They had swallowed us up alive" (Ps. 124:3).[6]

20. "As a lily among thorns" (Song 2:2). R. Eliezer interpreted the verse as referring to the redemption from Egypt. Just as a lily, when growing between thorns, is difficult for its owner to pluck, so the redemption of Israel was difficult for the Holy One, as is said, "Or hath God assayed to go and take a nation from the midst of another nation?"

Note, said R. Joshua citing R. Hanan, that the text does not say, "A nation from the midst of a people" or "A people from the midst of a nation," but, "A nation from the midst of a nation," for Israel were uncircumcised even as the Egyptians were uncircumcised; Israel grew locks even as the Egyptians grew locks; Israel put on garments made of mixed fibers even as the Egyptians put on garments of mixed fibers. So the measure of justice [alone] would not have allowed that Israel ever be redeemed.[7]

21. Our masters taught: Who wrote the Scroll of Fasts?[8] The answer: Hananiah ben Hezekiah and his company, because they cherished [the memory of] past tribulations [from which they had been rescued]. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: We, too, cherish our tribulations. But what are we to do? Were we to attempt writing them down, we would not have enough time [our tribulations being so many]. Or [perhaps] a fool is not aware of being oppressed. Or the flesh of a corpse does not feel the scalpel.[9]

22. "That they have said to thy soul: 'Bow down, that we may go over' " (Isa. 51:23). What did they do to them? They made them lie down in the streets and had paving rollers go over them.[10]

---

1. Exod. R. 15:6.
2. Song R. 3:1, §1.
3. JV: "Rejected (nim'as) silver shall men call them." But here nim'as is apparently equated with nimas ("melted down").
4. Exod. R. 31:10.
5. Song R. 3:4, §2; Lam. R. 5:9, §1.
6. MTeh 114:6.
7. Song R. 2:2, §2.
8. In it, the days commemorating Jewish victories were set down as festal days, on which fasting was prohibited.
9. B. Shah 13b.
10. Gen. R. 69:5.

23. Once the wicked empire [of Rome] issued a decree that Israel should not occupy themselves with Torah nor circumcise their sons, and should profane the Sabbath. What did Judah ben Shammua and his companions do? They went and consulted a Roman noblewoman whose home all the notables of Rome used to visit. She advised: Go and make proclamation [of your sorrows] at night.[1] They went and proclaimed them at night, saying, "In Heaven's name, are we not your brothers? Are we not sons of one father, are we not sons of one mother? How are we different from any other nation and tongue, that you issue such hard decrees against us?" The decrees were subsequently annulled.[2]

24. "Her adversaries are the chief" (Lam. 1:5). Rabbah said, citing R. Yohanan: Everyone who oppresses Israel becomes a chief.[3]

25. R. Hiyya taught: What is meant by "God understandeth the way thereof, and He knoweth the place thereof" (Job 28:23)? The Holy One knows that Israel would be unable to endure the cruel decrees of Esau or of Ishmael, so He exiled them to Babylonia.

R. Hanina said: The Holy One exiled them to Babylonia because the language is akin to the language of the Torah. R. Yohanan said: Because He thus sent Israel back to their mother's house. As when a man grows angry at his wife, where does he send her? Back to her mother's house. Ulla said: [God sent them to Babylonia] so that they might eat dates and occupy themselves with Torah.[4]

26. R. Avin opened his discourse with the verse "He changeth the times and the seasons" (Dan. 2:21), meaning that Jeremiah said to Israel: Had you been worthy, you would be dwelling in Jerusalem and drinking the waters of Siloam, whose waters are pure and sweet. But now that you are unworthy, you are being exiled to Babylon, where you will be drinking the waters of the Euphrates, whose waters are impure and ill smelling, as Scripture says, "And now, what is the good of your going to Egypt to drink the waters of the Nile? And what is the good of your going to Assyria to drink the waters of the Euphrates?" (Jer. 2:18).[5]

27. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah took sick, and R. Judah and Rabbah came to visit him. At this point a Habbar[6] came in and took away their lamp.[7] So Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said: Master of the universe, either in Your shadow or in the shadow of the son of Esau.[8]

28. We have been taught that R. Yose said: Throughout my days I was baffled by the verse "And thou shalt grope at noonday as the blind gropeth in darkness" (Deut. 28:29). What difference, I kept asking myself, does it make to a blind man whether it is dark or light? Then the following incident occurred: once I was walking on a pitch-black night when I saw a blind man walking on the road with a torch in his hand. So I said to him, "My son, this torch—why do you need it?" He replied, "As long as a torch is in my hand, people see me and keep me away from holes in the ground, from thorns and briers."[9]

29. R. Judah said: Exile atones for three decrees [which otherwise would have been imposed], for Scripture says, "Thus saith the Lord: . . . He that abideth in this city shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence; but he that goeth out and falleth away to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live" (Jer. 21:9).[10]

R. Yohanan said: Exile atones for everything. Thus it is written, "Thus saith the Lord: Write ye this man childless" (Jer. 22:30). But after this man was exiled, it is said, "The sons of Jeconiah—the same is Assir-Shealtiel his son," etc. (1 Chron. 3:17).[11]

30. R. Sheshet said in the name of R. Eleazar ben Azariah: I can justify the exemption of the entire [Jewish] world from condign judgment from the destruction of the Temple until the present time, for Scripture says, "Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted, and drunken, but not with wine" (Isa. 51:21).[12]

31. "Jacob said to his sons: 'Why should you show yourselves?' " (Gen. 42:1).[13] What Jacob meant was: "Do not show yourselves when you are full, either to Esau or to Ishmael, lest they envy you [and rob you].[14]

32. "Thy sons have fainted, they lie at the head of all the streets, as an antelope in a net" (Isa. 51:20). Even as an antelope, when fallen into a net, is shown no pity, so Israel's possessions are shown no pity when fallen into the hands of heathens.[15]

33. "The sound of a driven leaf shall chase them" (Lev. 26:36). R. Joshua ben Korhah said: Once, while we were seated in the midst of trees, the wind began to blow and the leaves rustled. So we jumped up and ran, crying: Woe unto us, the horsemen may catch up with us. After a while we turned around and saw not a creature there. So we sat down where we were and wept as we said: Woe unto us, for unto us has been fulfilled the verse "The sound of a driven leaf shall chase them."[16]

---

1. The Jews' lament would keep the citizenry awake, and the public would demand that the Jews be pacified so that Romans could sleep. Suggested hesitantly by Leon Nemoy.
2. B. RH 19a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. B. Sanh 104b.
4. B. Pes 87b–88a; Git 17a.
5. Lam. R. proem 19.
6. A fire worshiper.
7. It was a Habbar festival, when kindling a fire was forbidden.
8. B. Git 16b–17a.
9. B. Meg 24b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. Wandering in exile and the hardships that attend it are taken to be a lesser evil than the three evils in the city.
11. B. Sanh 37b.
12. Since Israel is described as "drunken" [with troubles], it cannot be held responsible for its actions. B. Er 64b–65a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
13. JV: "Why do you look upon one another?"
14. B. Ta 10b.
15. B. BK 117a.
16. Sif Lev. 112b; Yalkut, Be-hukkotai, §675.

34. Our masters taught: It once happened that evil edicts were brought to the notables of Sepphoris. They went and asked R. Eleazar ben Perata, saying to him, "Master, evil edicts came to us from the [Roman] government. What do you advise? Shall we flee?" Fearful of saying to them, "Flee," he replied in veiled language, "Are you asking me? Go ask Jacob, Moses, and David."

What is written of Jacob? "And Jacob fled" (Hos. 12:13). So also of Moses: "But Moses fled from before Pharaoh" (Exod. 2:15). And so it was with David: "Now David fled, and escaped" (1 Sam. 19:18). It is in this spirit that Scripture says, "Come, My people, enter thou into thy chambers. . . . Hide thyself for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast" (Isa. 26:20).[1]

35. "Come, My people, enter thou into thy chambers." When you see that a particular time is brazen, do not attempt to stand up against it, but be willing to make room for it. Look at Me—if one dare say such a thing—when I saw that, because of your sins, the time was brazen, I made room for it, as is said, "He hath drawn back His right hand" (Lam. 2:3).[2]

Israel: An Object of Derision among the Nations

36. "I am become a derision to all my people" (Lam. 3:14). R. Abbahu began his discourse with the verse "They that sit in the gate talk of me" (Ps. 69:13), "they" being the nations of the world who are seated in theaters and circuses. "And I am the song of the drunkards" (ibid.)—after they eat and drink and get drunk, they start talking of me and ridiculing me, saying, "We do not live on carobs as the Jews have to." Then they ask one another, "How many years do you wish to live?" and reply, "As long as a Jew's shirt lasts, which he wears only on the Sabbath." Then they bring a camel into their theaters, with his [black] covers upon him, and ask one another, "Why is this one in mourning?" and they answer, "These Jews are observing the sabbatical year, and since they have no greens, they eat up the thorns used by this camel, and he mourns the loss of them." Then they bring a clown into their theaters, his head shaven, and ask one another, "Why is the head of this one shaven?" and they reply, "These Jews keep the Sabbath, and whatever they toil for during the week, they consume on the Sabbath. Since they have no wood to cook with, they break up their [wooden] beds and use them for fuel. Then they have to sleep on the ground, get covered with dust, and need to anoint their hair with oil, [which Jews use in such quantities] that the price of oil has become prohibitive."[3]

37. R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: They have yet another festival in Rome: once every seventy years they bring a healthy man and have him ride on a lame man. They dress him in Adam's choice garments,[4] place on his head R. Ishmael's scalp,[5] hang on his neck [a chain] of fine gold in the weight of four zuz, stud his thighs with emeralds, and proclaim before him in Greek: Sak kyriou plastēr, meaning: The reckoning of the ruler is wrong. The brother of our Lord is an impostor. Let him who sees this see it. For he who does not see it will not live to see it again.[6] Of what avail is fraud to a cheat or deceit to a deceiver?

And they conclude: Woe unto the one when the other arises![7]

38. R. Phinehas said: It happened that two harlots in Ashkelon were quarreling. In the course of their quarrel, one said to the other: Why don't you leave town? You look like a Jewess! After a while, they became reconciled, and the one said to the other: Everything is forgiven you, except your remark "You look like a Jewess"—that I cannot forgive. Hence it is said, "See, O Lord, and behold, how abject I am become" (Lam. 1:11).[8]

39. "Make me not the reproach of the base" (Ps. 9:9). R. Hama bar Hanina said: The nations of the earth should have no sickly or broken-down people among them.[9] Why then are there sickly and broken-down people among them? So that they should not taunt Israel and say, "Are you not a people made up of those who are sickly and broken down?" Thus Israel's prayer "Make me not the reproach of the base" is fulfilled.

R. Samuel bar Nahman said: None among the nations of the earth should have persons with running sores. Why then are there among them some who have running sores? So that they should not taunt Israel, saying, "Are you not a people of lepers?" Israel's prayer "Make me not the reproach of the base" is thus fulfilled.[10]

The Holy One Is Partner in Israel's Travail

40. Whenever the Holy One calls to mind His children deep in travail among the nations of the world, He—if one dare say this—lets fall two tears into the Great [Mediterranean] Sea. Their splash is heard from world's end to world's end, and that is the cause of earthquakes.

The sages say: He treads heavily upon the sky. Others say: He roars with His voice, and makes worlds shake, as

---

1. Tanhuma B, Mas'e, §1; Num. R. 23:1.
2. Tanhuma B, Va-yetze, §5; Yalkut, Shemot, §168.
3. And since the clown cannot afford the high cost of oil, he shaves his head. Lam. R., proem 17; Lam. R. 3:14, §5.
4. Which God made for Adam and Eve. See above, part 1, chap. 2, §135, and chap. 3, §98.
5. See above, part 1, chap. 11, §180.
6. Since the spectacle is to be seen only once in seventy years.
7. The healthy man in the charade is Esau; the lame one, Jacob (see Gen. 32:32). "The reckoning of the ruler" refers to Jacob's calculation of the time of Israel's redemption. The "fraud" and "deceit" allude to Jacob's deception of his brother Esau. And the conclusion is a warning to Israel to beware of the power of Rome. So Rashi. B. AZ 11b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. Lam. R. 1:11, §39.
9. Since this world is to be theirs.
10. Gen. R. 88:1; Yalkut, Va-yeshev, §146.

is said, "The Lord doth roar from on high. . . . He doth mightily roar because of His fold" (Jer. 25:30).[1]

41. Baltza asked R. Akiva: What causes earthquakes? R. Akiva: When the Holy One observes heathen temples and their worshipers enjoying peace and prosperity in this world, and sees His own Temple destroyed and in the hands of idolaters, He—if one dare ascribe such feeling to Him—becomes jealous and roars. As a result, heaven and earth shake, as is said, "The Lord roars from Zion, and utters His voice from Jerusalem, and the heavens and the earth shake" (Joel 4:16).[2]

42. We have been taught that R. Yose said: Once, while on a journey, I entered into one of the ruins in Jerusalem to pray. [The prophet] Elijah, ever remembered on good occasions, appeared and waited for me at the door until I finished my prayer. After I finished my prayer, he said to me, "Peace be with you, my master." I replied, "Peace be with you, my master and teacher." He asked, "My son, why did you go into this ruin?" I: "To pray." He: "You should have prayed on the road." I: "I was afraid that passersby might interrupt me." He: "What sound did you hear in the ruin?" I: "I heard a divine voice cooing like a dove and saying:

> 'Alas that I destroyed My house, > burned my Temple Hall,
> and exiled My children among the peoples.' "

Elijah said to me, "By your life and by the life of your head, not only at this time alone does it so exclaim. But every day, three times a day, it exclaims thus. More; when Israel enter synagogues and houses of study, and respond, 'Amen, may the great Name be blessed,' the Holy One—if one dare speak thus—nods His head and says:

> 'Happy the King who is thus praised in His own house!
> What is one to say of a Father who banished His children?
> Alas for children banished from their Father's table.' "[3]

43. "My dove, My twin"[4] (Song 5:2). R. Yannai said: As with twins, when the head of one aches, the other also feels it, so, too—if one dare utter such a thing—the Holy One said, "I am with him in trouble" (Ps. 91:15). And again, "In all their affliction, He too was afflicted" (Isa. 63:9). The Holy One said to Moses: Are you not aware that I am wracked with pain even as Israel is wracked with pain? Take note of the place whence I speak to you—from the midst of a thornbush. I am—if one may ascribe such a statement to God—a partner in their pain.[5]

44. Pause and consider how plentiful always are the mercies of the Holy One for the people of Israel. For in any generation that you find righteous, faithful, and worthy men [grieving in exile], the Holy One claps both hands together, then He clasps them over His heart, then He folds His arms as He weeps secretly for the righteous. Why does He weep for them secretly? Because it is unseemly for a lion to weep before a fox, unseemly for a sage to weep before his disciple, unseemly for a king to weep before the least of his servants, as is said, "So that you will not hear it, My soul shall weep in secret" (Jer. 13:17).[6]

45. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Pause and consider how beloved are Israel in the sight of God. Wherever they were exiled, the Presence was with them. When they were exiled to Egypt, the Presence was with them, for Eli was told, "Did I not reveal Myself to thy forebear [Aaron's] house when they were in Egypt?" (1 Sam. 2:27). When they were exiled to Babylon, the Presence was with them, as is said, "For your sake I had Myself sent to Babylon" (Isa. 43:14). When they were exiled to Elam, the Presence was with them, as is said, "I will set My throne in Elam" (Jer. 49:38). When they were exiled to Edom, the Presence was with them, as is said, "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with crimsoned garments from Bosrah?" (Isa. 63:1). And when they are redeemed, the Presence will be with them, as is said, "The Lord thy God will return with thy captivity" (Deut. 30:3). Scripture does not say, "Cause to return thy captivity"; rather, it says, "Return," proving that the Holy One will return with them out of the several exiles. Thus also it is said, "Come with Me from Lebanon, My bride, with Me from Lebanon; look from the top of Amana, from the top of Senir and Hermon, from the lions' dens, from the mountains of the leopards" (Song 4:8).

Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: How may the matter be illustrated? By the parable of a king who said to his servant: If ever you seek me, you will find me with my son. Whenever you seek me, you will find me with my son. Thus Scripture: "That dwelleth with them in the midst of their uncleanness" (Lev. 16:16).[7]

46. "My soul shall weep in secret for the glory"[8] (Jer. 13:17). R. Samuel bar Unia said in the name of Rav: The Holy One has a place, and its name is Secret. What is meant by "for the glory"? R. Samuel bar Isaac said: For the glory of Israel, which was taken from them and given to the peoples of the world.[9]

47. Zavdi ben Levi began his discourse with the verse "God seated the unique ones together in a house, after He brought forth the prisoners into prosperity. But then, as rebellious ones, they were made to dwell in a parched

---

1. B. Ber. 59a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. Exod. R. 29:9.
3. B. Ber 3a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. The word tammati ("My undefiled") is read as though spelled te'omati ("My twin").
5. Exod. R. 2:5.
6. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 154.
7. B. Meg 29a; Sif Num., §161.
8. JV: "for the pride."
9. B. Hag 5b.

land" (Ps. 68:7).[1] You find that before Israel were redeemed from Egypt, they dwelled by themselves, and the Presence dwelled by itself. But after they were redeemed, Israel and the Presence became one entity. Then, after they were exiled, the Presence resumed existence apart, and Israel resumed existence apart.[2] Hence Scripture: "How doth she sit solitary" (Lam. 1:1).[3]

48. "Open to Me, My sister, My love, My dove, My undefiled; for My head is filled with dew" (Song 5:2). In the time-to-come, when the Holy One comes to redeem Israel, they will say: Master of the universe, You exiled us among the nations and thrust us out of Your house. And now You come to redeem us? The Holy One will reply: I will tell you the parable of a king who divorced his wife and the next day came to bring her back. She said: My lord king, yesterday you drove me out of your house, and today you come to take me back? He said: You should know that since you left my house, I, too, have not gone into my house. If you do not believe me, look at the dew on my head. Likewise, the Holy One will say to Israel: Ever since the day you left My house, I, too, have not gone into My house. If you do not believe Me, put your hands upon My head, and you will see that "My head is filled with dew, My locks with the drops of the night" (ibid.).[4]

The Guardian of Israel

49. R. Joshua ben Levi said: Why are they called "the Men of the Great Assembly"?[5] Because they restored the manner of praising God to its ancient form.

Moses instituted the order of prayer for Israel when he said, "The great God, the mighty, the awesome" (Deut. 10:17). Then came Jeremiah and said: Heathen nations are battering at His Temple Hall—where are His awesome deeds? So He decided not to say, "The awesome God." Then came Daniel and said: Heathen nations are enslaving His children—where are His mighty acts? So [in his order of prayer] Daniel decided not to say, "The mighty God."

Then came the Men of the Great Assembly and said: On the contrary! The greatness of His might lies precisely in His restraining His wrath and extending patience to the wicked. And these are His awesome deeds: but for the awe of the Holy One, blessed be He, how could one nation exist among seventy hostile nations?

But how dared flesh and blood[6] assert that God has limitations?

Because, so said R. Isaac ben Eleazar, the prophets knew that their God demanded truth, and they did not attempt to flatter Him.[7]

50. Hadrian said to R. Joshua: The lamb that stays alive among seventy wolves must be great. R. Joshua: Even greater is the shepherd who delivers it, protects it, and destroys the wolves around it. Hence, "no weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper" (Isa. 54:17).[8]

51. A philosopher asked R. Eleazar: Did not a prophet attribute to God the words "They shall build, but I will throw down" (Mal. 1:4)? Yet all buildings [of the nations of the world] remain standing! R. Eleazar replied: Scripture speaks not about physical buildings, but about plans [behind them]. All that you plot to build up against us in order to destroy us—the plan you come to, He demolishes. The philosopher then said: By your life, this is so. Every year we meet to figure out how to destroy you, but a certain elder comes and nullifies [what we intend].[9]

52. R. Abbahu extolled R. Safra to the Minim[10] as a learned man, and he was thus exempted by them from paying taxes for thirteen years.[11] One day, on coming across R. Safra, they said, "It is written, 'You only have I loved of all the families of the earth; therefore will I visit upon you all your iniquities' [Amos 3:2]. Is it just that an irate person should let out his ire on his friend?" R. Safra remained silent and gave no answer. So they wound a scarf around his neck and tormented him. When R. Abbahu came and found them at it, he asked, "Why do you torment him?" They replied, "Did you not tell us that he was a great man? Yet he cannot explain the meaning of this verse in Amos." R. Abbahu: "I told you [that he was learned] in Mishnah. Did I tell you that [he was equally learned] in Scripture?" They: "How come you know it?" R. Abbahu: "We, who are now under your rule, set ourselves the task of studying Scripture thoroughly, but others[12] do not study it as carefully." They: "Then you tell us the verse's meaning." R. Abbahu replied, "I will explain it by a parable. To whom may God in this verse be compared? To a man who is the creditor of two persons, one a friend and the other an enemy. From his friend he is willing to accept payment little by little; but from his enemy he will exact immediate payment in one lump sum."[13]

53. "O Lord, rebuke me not in Thine anger" (Ps. 6:2). R. Eleazar said: With whom may God in His punishment [of Israel] be compared? With a king who became angry at his son and at that moment, holding in his hand an unsheathed Indian sword, swore that he would whip it across his son's head. But then the king softened and said: If I whip it across my son's head, his life will be gone, and who will inherit my kingdom? And yet it is impossible for me to revoke my royal word. What did the king do? He put the sword back into its sheath and then whipped it across his son's head, and so his son was spared while his royal word was kept.

---

1. JV: "God maketh the solitary to dwell in a house; He bringeth out the prisoners into prosperity; the rebellious dwell but in a parched land."
2. "In a parched land," where the Presence is not.
3. Lam. R., proem 29.
4. Midrash based on Yalkut Eliezer 68.
5. A supreme authority established under Ezra and Nehemiah.
6. Jeremiah and Daniel.
7. B. Yoma 69b and En Yaakov, ad loc.; P. Ber 7:3, 11c.
8. Tanhuma, Toledot, §5.
9. Yalkut, Mal., §587.
10. The Judeo-Christian authorities.
11. Such exemption was granted to scholars.
12. Those of Babylonia.
13. B. AZ 4a.

R. Hanina taught: God may be compared with a king who became angry at his son and, seeing at that moment a large stone before him, swore that he would heave it at his son. But then the king said: If I throw it at my son, his life will be gone. What did the king do? He ordered that the stone be broken up into small pebbles and that these be thrown, one by one, at his son. And thus the king spared his son and yet kept his royal oath.[1]

54. R. Oshaia said: What is meant by "The merciful act of His dispersing Israel" (Judg. 5:11)?[2] The Holy One showed mercy to Israel in dispersing them among the nations.

In this regard, a certain Christian said to R. Hanina: We are more compassionate than you. Of you it is written, "Joab and all Israel remained there six months until he had cut off every male in Edom" (1 Kings 11:16). But we—just consider how many years you have been living in our midst, yet we do you no harm whatsoever. R. Hanina replied: Will you allow a disciple to join you [in debating the matter? Accordingly,], R. Oshaia joined them and said to the Christian: It is because you do not know how to go about it. You would like to exterminate all of us. But all of us are not living among you. Should you exterminate only those of us who are in your midst, you will be called a suicidal kingdom. The Christian said: By the Roman eagle! It's a tough nut to crack—whatever we do involves as much loss as profit for us.[3]

55. "Then Judah went down from his brethren" (Gen. 38:1). The brothers said: Come, let us disperse. As long as we are together, the writ of debt [for the sale of Joseph] may be called.[4]

56. R. Judah son of R. Simon said: The tribes of Judah and Benjamin were not exiled to the same place that the other tribes were. The ten tribes were exiled beyond the river Sambatyon, while the tribes of Judah and Benjamin were dispersed in all lands.[5]

57. "And he said: 'If Esau come to the one camp, and smite it' " (Gen. 32:9). This alludes to our brethren in the south. "Then the camp which is left, shall escape" (ibid.) alludes to our brethren in Galilee. Even though they escaped, said R. Oshaia, we nevertheless fast in their behalf on Mondays and Thursdays.[6]

58. R. Eleazar said: The Holy One exiled Israel among the peoples only in order that proselytes might be multiplied, as is said, "I will sow her unto Me in the Land" (Hos. 2:25). Does not a man sow a seah [seed] in the ground only so that it may bring in many kor [of harvest]?[7]

Watchman, What of the Night?

59. "One calleth unto me out of Seir: 'Watchman, what of the night?' " (Isa. 21:11). Israel said to Isaiah: Our master Isaiah, what will come for us out of this night? He replied: Wait until I ask. After he had asked, he came back to them, and they asked again: "Watchman, what did He say?" (ibid.)[8]—what did the Watchman of both worlds [this world and the next] say? Isaiah replied: "The Watchman said: 'The morning cometh and also the night' " (Isa. 21:12). They asked: [After the morning], is night to come again? Isaiah replied: It is not as you suppose. There will be morning for the righteous and night for the nations of the world. They asked: When? Isaiah replied: When you wish it, He will wish it—"If you desire it, He will desire it" (ibid.).[9] They asked: What hinders it? Isaiah: [Your lack of] repentance—"Return, come" (ibid.).[10]

60. "Arise, shine, for thy light is come" (Isa. 60:1). R. Yohanan said: A parable of a man walking on a road after sunset. Someone came and kindled a lamp for him, but it went out. Another person came and kindled a lamp for him, but it, too, went out. The man then said: From now on, I will wait for nothing but the light of morning. So, too, Israel said to the Holy One: We made a candelabrum for You in the days of Moses, and it went out. We made another in the days of Solomon, and it, too, went out. From now on, we will wait for nothing but Your light, as is said, "For with Thee is the fountain of life; in Thy light do we see light" (Ps. 36:10).[11]

61. "I adjure you, O daughters of Jerusalem, by the gazelles and by the hinds of the field, that ye awaken not, nor stir up love, until it please" (Song 2:7). R. Yose son of R. Hanina said: What is the purpose of these three adjurations?[12] One: that Israel [repent and thus earn their redemption, and] not attempt to return to the Land en masse [until they are cleansed of sin]. Another: the Holy One adjured Israel that they should not rebel against the nations of the world. Third: the Holy One adjured the nations of the world that they should not enslave Israel too harshly.

"By the gazelles and by the hinds of the field." R. Eleazar said: The Holy One told Israel: If you abide by the adjuration, well and good; but if not, I will have your flesh be lawful prey, like the flesh of gazelles and hinds of the field.[13]

---

1. MTeh 6:3; Yalkut, Ps., §633.
2. JV: "The righteous acts of His rulers (pirzono) in Israel." But by metathesis, pirzono is read pizrono ("His dispersing").
3. The literal translation may be: "With this concern we lie down, and with it we get up." But yoredim may also mean "weigh" or "consider loss," and olim may mean "weigh" or "consider profit." So Leon Nemoy. B. Pes 87b.
4. Gen. R. 85:2.
5. Gen. R. 73:6.
6. Gen. R. 76:3; Yalkut, Va-yishlah, §131.
7. A kor is thirty seah. B. Pes 87b.
8. JV: "Watchman, what of the night (millel)." But the word can also mean "he said."
9. Reading be'iyo for be'ayu ("do ye desire it").
10. P. Ta 1:1, 64a.
11. Yalkut, Isa., §499.
12. The other two are in Song 3:5 and 5:8.
13. B. Ket 111a.

62. "I adjure you . . . that ye awaken not, nor stir up love, until it please" (Song 2:7). R. Onia said: The Holy One addressed four adjurations to Israel, corresponding to the four generations who tried to hasten the time destined for redemption and came to grief: once in the days of Amram; once in the days of Dinai[1] (some say, in the generation of [Hadrian's] persecution); once in the days of Ben Kozeva; and once in the days of Shuthelach son of Ephraim, as is said, "The children of Ephraim were as archers handling the bow" (Ps. 78:9).[2]

63. "But the dove found no rest" (Gen. 8:9). R. Judah said in the name of R. Simeon ben Lakish: Had the dove found a place of rest, it would not have returned. So, too, "she dwelleth among the nations, she findeth no rest" (Lam. 1:3). Had she found rest, she would not have returned [in contrition to God]. So, too, "among the nations shalt thou have no repose, and there shall be no rest for the sole of thy foot" (Deut. 28:65). Had they found it, they would not have returned [in contrition to God].[3]

64. Moses said, "Ye shall perish among the nations" (Lev. 26:38). Then came Isaiah and said, "It shall come to pass in that day, that a great horn shall be blown, and they shall come that were lost in the land of Assyria" (Isa. 27:13).

Rav said: I am fearful about that verse which asserts, "Ye shall perish among the nations."

[But R. Papa demurred at Rav's apprehension]: May not "being lost" be taken in the sense of something lost and then eagerly sought, as in the verse "I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek Thy servant" (Ps. 119:176)?

It was, however, the latter part of the verse—"and the land of your enemies shall eat you up" (Lev. 26:38)—that frightened Rav.

[Mar Zutra]: May not the eating be like the eating of cucumbers and pumpkins [whose seeds are left to sprout anew]?[4]

65. "She is become as a widow" (Lam. 1:1). R. Judah said in the name of Rav that the verse has an aspect of blessing: "As a widow," but not an actual widow—more like a woman whose husband has gone to a city far across the sea, with the firm intention of returning to her.[5]

66. "And be thou like to a gazelle" (Song 8:14). Even as a gazelle may wander to the end of the world and yet invariably returns to its place, so are Israel: even though they are dispersed throughout the world, they are destined to return.[6]

67. We have been taught: "And yet, for all that, when they are in the land of their enemies, I have not rejected them" (Lev. 26:44)—in the days of the Chaldeans, when I raised up for them Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah. "Neither have I abhorred them" (ibid.)—in the days of Haman, when I raised up for them Mordecai and Esther. "To destroy them utterly" (ibid.)—in the days of the Greeks, when I raised up for them Simeon the Righteous and the high priest Mattathias son of Yohanan Hasmonai and his sons. "To break My covenant with them" (ibid.)—in the days of the Romans, when I raised up for them the sages of the house of Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] and the sages of successive generations. "For I am the Lord their God" (ibid.)—also in the time-to-come, when no people or tongue will be able to prevail over them.[7]

68. "Know, yea, know, that thy seed shall be a stranger" (Gen. 15:13): "Know" that I shall disperse them, but "know" also that I will gather them together; "know" that I shall give them in pledge,[8] but "know" also that I will redeem them; "know" that I will allow them to be enslaved, but "know" also that I will deliver them.[9]

69. "The Lord answer thee in the day of trouble" (Ps. 20:2). A parable of a father and son who were journeying on a road. The son, growing weary, asked his father, "Father, where is the city?" The father replied, "My son, take this as a sign: when you see a burial ground before you, then surely the city is near you." Likewise, the Holy One said to the children of Israel: When you see troubles hard by you, surely in that very hour you will be redeemed, for it is said, "The Lord will answer thee in the day of trouble."[10]

70. The children of Israel said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, when will You redeem us?" He answered, "When you have gone down to the very bottom of the pit. In that very hour I shall redeem you, as is said, 'The children of Judah and the children of Israel shall be gathered together—and shall rise up from the earth' " (Hos. 2:2). So, too, the sons of the Korah said, "We are at the very bottom of the pit, as is said, 'For our soul is sunk deep in the dust' " (Ps. 44:26). [And what did they go on to say?] "Arise for our help" (Ps. 44:27).[11]

71. "The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau" (Gen. 27:22). R. Judah bar Ilai said that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] used to expound the verse: The voice of Jacob cries out because of what the hands—the hands of Esau—have done to him.[12]

72. What is meant by the words "And Thou, O Lord, how long" (Ps. 6:4)? In answer, R. Kahana told the parable of a sick man who was under a physician's care. The sick man was eagerly waiting for the physician: when will he come—at the fourth hour, the fifth hour, the sixth, or the

---

1. Probably during the Second Temple.
2. See 1 Chron. 7:21. Song R. 2:7, §1.
3. Gen. R. 33:6; Lam. R. 1:3, §29.
4. B. Mak 24a.
5. B. Ta 20a; B. Sanh 104a; Lam. R. 1:1, §3.
6. Yalkut, Song, §964.
7. B. Meg 11a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. Being in exile is intended as a pledge that Israel will expiate their sins.
9. Gen. R. 44:18.
10. MTeh 20:4; Yalkut, Ps., §680.
11. MTeh 45:3; Yalkut, Hos., §533.
12. Gen. R. 65:21.

seventh? But the physician did not come. The eighth, ninth, and tenth hours passed by. Still he did not come, and only as the sun was setting was the physician seen approaching, feeling his way in the dark. The sick man said, "Had you delayed your coming a little longer, my soul would have left me!" So, too, David cried out. When he saw the kingdoms continuing to enslave the people of Israel, he exclaimed, " 'And Thou, O Lord, how long?' You, who are my healer, are delayed in Your coming to me."[1]

73. The verse "Therefore fear thou not, O Jacob My servant, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel" (Jer. 30:10) applies to an episode in Jacob's life, when "he dreamed, and behold a ladder . . . and . . . angels of God ascending and descending on it" (Gen. 28:12). These angels were the princes of the nations of the earth. Further, this verse indicates that the Holy One showed to our father Jacob the prince of Babylon climbing up seventy rungs of the ladder, then climbing down; the prince of Media climbing up fifty-two rungs; the prince of Greece, one hundred and eighty rungs; and the prince of Edom [Rome] climbing and climbing, no one can tell how many rungs. At the sight of Edom's climbing, our father Jacob grew afraid and said: Is one to suppose that this prince will have no comedown? The Holy One replied, "Fear thou not, O Jacob My servant" (Jer. 30:10). Even if—as though such a thing were possible!—you were to see Edom come up and sit next to Me, I will have him eventually brought down from there. Indeed, Edom is told in Scripture, "Though thou make thy nest as high as the eagle, and though thou set it among the stars, I will bring thee down from thence, saith the Lord" (Obad. 1:4).[2]

74. "Surely blood of your lives will I require; at the hand of every beast will I require it" (Gen. 9:5). This refers to the four kingdoms.[3] "Even at the hand of a man's brother" (ibid.)—of Esau, about whom Jacob prayed, "Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau" (Gen. 32:12).[4]

75. "For He hath clothed me with garments of salvation" (Isa. 61:10), with the seven garments that, according to Scripture, the Holy One will have put on successively from the day the world was created until the day He requites wicked Edom. When He created the world, He put on glory and majesty. When He appeared to us at the Red Sea, He put on pride. When He gave the Torah to His people, He put on strength. When He requited the Chaldeans, He put on vengeance. When He will have forgiven the iniquities of Israel, He will put on a white garment. And when the Messiah appears, God will be clothed in righteousness. Finally, when He comes to requite Edom, He will put on red apparel, as is said "Wherefore is Thine apparel red?" (Isa. 63:2)—that is, red with vengeance against Edom. At that time the ministering angels will say to the Holy One: Master of the universe, the comely apparel You wear now becomes You more than all the apparel You put on before.[5]

76. It is taught in the name of R. Eliezer: Vengeance on Israel comes through the agency of the poor, as is said, "And he cry unto the Lord against thee, and it be sin against thee" (Deut. 15:9). So, too, will vengeance on Edom come through the agency of [poor, oppressed] Israel, as is said, "I will lay My vengeance upon Edom by the hand of My people Israel" (Ezek. 25:14).[6]

77. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: [Messiah] son of David will not come until the kingdom of Edom [Rome] will have spread its power over the whole world for nine months, as is said, "Therefore will He give them up, until the time that she who is with child hath brought forth; then the residue of his brethren shall return with the children of Israel" (Mic. 5:2).[7]

78. "Some of this red, red pottage" (Gen. 25:30). He was red, his food red, his land red, his warriors red, his garments red. He who requites him will likewise be red and clad in red garments. He was red: "And the first came forth ruddy" (Gen. 25:25). His food was red: "Let me swallow, I pray thee, some of this red, red pottage" (Gen. 25:30). His land was red: "To Esau his brother unto the land of Seir, the field of red"[8] (Gen. 32:4). His warriors are red: "The shield of his warriors is painted red" (Nah. 2:4). Their garments are red: "The valiant men are in scarlet" (ibid.). He who requites him will be red: "My Beloved is white and ruddy" (Song 5:10), clad in red: "Wherefore is Thine apparel red?" (Isa. 63:2).[9]

79. R. Jonathan said: Three things were given as a gift to the world: Torah, the luminaries, and rain. R. Azariah said in the name of R. Simeon ben Lakish: Also peace. R. Joshua ben Nehemiah: Also deliverance. R. Tanhuma: Also the Land of Israel. R. Isaac ben Maryon: Also the crossing of the Great [Mediterranean] Sea. But for this gift, a man would perish as soon as he went down into the sea. The sages say: Also compassion. And some say: Also vengeance on Edom.[10]

---

1. MTeh 6:5.
2. PRKM 23:2; Tanhuma, Va-yetze, §3; Yalkut, Jer., §312.
3. Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome, the four beasts in Daniel's vision (Dan. 7:3 and 7:17).
4. Gen. R. 34:13.
5. PR 37:2.
6. Lev. R. 34:9.
7. B. Yoma 10a.
8. Literally: "Edom."
9. Gen. R. 63:12.
10. Gen. R. 6:5; Lev. R. 35:8.

CHAPTER FIVE

REDEMPTION AND THE DAYS OF THE MESSIAH

Archives of Travails and Archives of Deliverance

1. R. Ishmael said: [When I went up to the firmament], the angel of the Presence said to me: My beloved, sit in my lap, and I will tell you what is to befall Israel, the holy people. I sat in his lap, and he looked at me and wept; his tears, flowing from his eyes, dripped down and fell on me. I said to him, "Splendor of my radiance, why are you weeping?" He replied, "Beloved, come, and I will bring you into the innermost chambers and innermost archives."

He then took hold of me and brought me within, and showed me documents on which were indited travails, each more monstrous than the one preceding. I asked, "For whom are these intended?" He replied, "For Israel." I asked, "Can Israel withstand these?" He said, "Come tomorrow, and I will show you travails even more cruel than these." The next day he led me into the innermost chamber and showed me travails even more cruel than the previous ones: "Such as are for the sword, to the sword; and such as are for the famine, to the famine" (Jer. 15:2); "such as are for the plunder, to the plunder"; "and such as are for captivity, to captivity" (ibid.). I said to him, "Splendor of my radiance, did only Israel sin?" He replied, "Every day new travails as cruel as these are intended for them. But when they enter synagogues and houses of study, and say, 'Amen! May His great Name be blessed,' we do not let these travails go forth from the innermost chambers."

When I came down from before him, I heard a voice speaking Aramaic proclaim:

> The holy Sanctuary will turn into a ruin;
> Its Temple Hall will burn in fire.
> The King's dwelling will stand guard over desolation.
> Young maidens and young men will be plunder,
> Royal princes will be slain,
> The pure altar will be defiled,
> Jerusalem—to mounds of rubble,
> And the Land of Israel—to quaking.

In that instant I was so shaken that I fell down on my back. The angelic prince Hadarmiel came and stood me on my feet and said to me, "Come, I will bring you into the archives of deliverances and consolations."

He brought me in and showed me companies and companies of ministering angels sitting and weaving garments of deliverance, making crowns of life set with precious gems and pearls, pounding all kinds of spices and aromatics of the world, and sweetening wines for the righteous in the time-to-come. I asked, "Splendor of my radiance, for whom are these intended?" He replied, "For Israel."

Then I saw one crown different from all the other crowns—the sun, the moon, and the twelve constellations were set in it. I asked, "For whom is this exquisite crown intended?" He replied, "For David, king of Israel." I said, "Splendor of my radiance, show me the glory of David." He replied, "My beloved, wait three hours. David will come, and you will see him in his greatness."

He took hold of me, seated me in his lap, and asked me, "What do you see?" I replied, "I see seven lightnings flashing together as one." He said, "Shut your eyes, my son, lest you be frightened. These lightnings are going forth to meet David, king of Israel." At that, all the ofannim,[1] seraphim, sacred creatures, wheels of the chariot,[2] clouds of glory, storehouses of snow, storehouses of hail, stars and constellations, ministering angels, and other fiery beings of the fourth heaven[3] were stirred to say, "For the Leader. A Psalm of David. The heavens declare the glory of God" (Ps. 19:1). Then I heard the sound of a great commotion coming from Eden, reverberating the words "The Lord will reign forever and ever" (Exod. 15:18).

And behold, David, king of Israel, coming out first, and all the kings of the house of David following him, each one with his crown on his head. But David's crown was brighter and more beautiful than all the others, so that its radiance reached to the end of the world. Then David went up to the heavenly Temple, where a fiery throne was prepared for him. He sat on it with all the kings of the house of David seated facing him and all the kings of Israel standing behind him. Then David rose up and uttered songs and praise no ear had ever heard. After David had begun with the songs and praises, Metatron and the entire heavenly household began to proclaim, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts" (Isa. 6:3).

And the sacred creatures uttered praise, saying, "Blessed is the glory of the Lord wherever His place be" (Ezek. 3:12).

And the firmaments declared, "The Lord will reign forever and ever" (Exod. 15:18).

And the earth followed with: "The Lord reigns, the Lord did reign, the Lord will reign forever and ever."

And all the kings of the house of David responded, "The Lord shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall the Lord be One, and His Name One" (Zech. 14:9).[4]

2. "This I recall to my mind, therefore have I hope" (Lam. 3:21). R. Abba bar Kahana, citing R. Yohanan, said: By what parable may the verse be understood? By the one of a king who wed a noblewoman. He wrote out a substantial marriage settlement for her and told her, "I am to provide

---

1. Wheel-angels.
2. See Ezek. 1.
3. The site of the heavenly counterpart of Jerusalem.
4. BhM 5:167–68.

so-and-so many state apartments for you. I am to give you so-and-so many purple garments. I am to give you so-and-so many seagoing ships. I am to give you so-and-so many towns on the mainland." Then the king left her, went away to a country far across the sea, and tarried there. Meanwhile, her neighbors visited her and sought to provoke her, saying, "The king has left you, gone away to a country far across the sea, and he will never come back to you." She wept and sighed. But then she would go into her bridal pavilion, open [the chest in which her marriage settlement was deposited], take it out, and read it. On seeing, "I am to provide so-and-so many state apartments for you. I am to give you so-and-so many purple garments. I am to give you so-and-so many seagoing ships. I am to give you so-and-so many towns on the mainland," she was at once comforted.

After a long time, the king came back and said to his wife, "My little one, I marvel how you were able to wait for me all these years!" She replied, "My lord king, but for the substantial marriage settlement you wrote out and gave me, my neighbors would long since have caused me to feel that you were lost to me."

[As her companions mocked the king's wife], so the nations of the earth mock Israel, saying to them, "Your God has hidden His face from you and removed His Presence from you. How long will you die for your God, letting yourselves be slain for His sake, giving up your lives for His sake? He will never come back to you." And Israel weep and sigh. But then they go into synagogues and houses of study, open the Torah scroll, read in it, and find written in it, "I will have respect unto you, and make you fruitful, and I will set My tabernacle among you . . . and I will walk among you" (Lev. 26:9 and 26:11–12). Then they are comforted.

In the future, when the time of redemption comes, the Holy One will say to Israel, "My children, I marvel how you were able to wait for Me all these years." And Israel will reply, "Master of the universe, but for Your Torah You gave us, the nations of the earth would long since have caused us to feel that You were lost to us."

David said likewise, "But for Thy Torah, my delight, then in my affliction I would have felt that You were lost to me" (Ps. 119:92).[1]

The Merit of the Fathers

3. "These two anointed ones, that stood by the Lord of the whole earth [provide the merit for Israel's redemption]" (Zech. 4:14). R. Levi said: The verse implies that the Holy One went about seeking some justification for redeeming Israel and could not find it until He came upon the merit of Moses and Aaron. It was the merit of these two that stood by Israel. How may the matter be illustrated? By the parable of a king who wanted to wed a woman but was told that she was poor, possessing only two nose rings. [He replied: The two nose rings are sufficient for me to wed her.] So, too, God said: The merit of Moses and Aaron provides sufficient reason for Israel to be redeemed.

"Hark! my Beloved! Behold, He cometh" (Song 2:8). When Moses went and told Israel: Thus did the Holy One speak to me: "This day go ye forth, in the month of Aviv" (Exod. 13:4), they asked: Where is He? Moses replied: Behold, He is about to stand before you—"Hark! my Beloved, He cometh" (Song 2:8). But what, asked R. Judah, is the meaning of "Leaping upon the mountains" (ibid.)? The Holy One said: If I look closely at the deeds of Israel, they will never be redeemed. Upon whom then should I look closely? Upon their holy forefathers. I will redeem them because of the merit of their forefathers. Hence: "Leaping upon the mountains"—"mountains" here meaning the fathers.

R. Nehemiah gave another interpretation: What, he asked, is meant by "Leaping upon the mountains"? The Holy One said: Israel have no good deeds that would justify their redemption, other than the merit of their elders. "Go, gather the elders of Israel together" (Exod. 3:16). Hence "mountains" means "the elders."[2]

4. "Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob . . . and I will remember the Land" (Lev. 26:42). Why, in mentioning the merit of the fathers, does Scripture mention with them the merit of the Land? Resh Lakish told the parable of a king who had three sons, all of them brought up by one of his maidservants. So whenever the king inquired about the well-being of his sons, he would add: Inquire also about the well-being of her who brought them up. So, too, whenever the Holy One mentions the fathers, He mentions the Land with them.[3]

5. R. Perida began his discourse with the verse "I said unto the Lord, 'Thou art my Lord.' [God]: 'My gratitude is not with thee' " (Ps. 16:2). The congregation of Israel said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, show me gratitude for having made You known in the world." God replied, "My gratitude is not with you. I am grateful to none other than Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who were first to make Me known to the world—'with the holy ones that were on the earth; they are the mighty ones in whom is all My delight' " (Ps. 16:3).[4]

6. How long will the merit of the fathers endure? R. Aha said: The merit of the fathers endures forever.

R. Yudan bar Hanan taught in the name of R. Berekhiah that the Holy One said to Israel: My children, when you see the merit of the fathers declining and the merit of the mothers shaken, go and hang on to God's kindness, as is said, "The mountains may decline" (Isa. 54:10)—the merit of the fathers; "and the hills be shaken" (ibid.)—the merit of the mothers. Thenceforth you may be certain that "My kindness shall not move from thee, neither shall the power of my covenant of peace decline, saith the Lord that hath compassion on thee" (ibid.).[5]

---

1. JV: "I should then have perished in mine affliction." Lam. R. 3:21, §7; PR 21:15.

2. Exod. R. 15:3–4.

3. Lev. R. 36:5.

4. B. Men 53a.

5. P. Sanh 10:1, 27d; Lev. R. 36:6.

7. R. Isaac said: At the time the Temple was being destroyed, the Holy One found Abraham standing in the Temple and asked him, "What hath My beloved to do in My house?" (Jer. 11:15). Abraham: I have come because of what is happening to my children. God: Your children sinned and are to go into exile. Abraham: May it be that they sinned unwittingly? God: "She wrought with premeditation" (ibid.).[1] Abraham: Perhaps only a few of them sinned? God: "With many" (ibid.). Abraham: You should have remembered in their behalf the covenant of circumcision. God: "The hallowed flesh they pass from thee" (ibid.).[2] Abraham: Perhaps had You waited for them, they would have repented? God: "When thou doest evil, then thou rejoicest" (ibid.). Then Abraham put his hands on his head [in a gesture of grief], wept bitterly, and cried: Can it be, God forbid, that there is no mending for them? A divine voice came forth and said to him, "The Lord called thy name a leafy olive tree, fair with goodly fruit" (Jer. 11:16). As the olive tree produces its best only at the very end,[3] so Israel will flourish at the end of time.[4]

8. R. Samuel ben Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: What is meant by "Thou art our Father; for Abraham knoweth us not; and Israel doth not acknowledge us; Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer" (Isa. 63:16)? In the time-to-come, the Holy One will say to Abraham: Your sons have sinned against Me. He will answer: Master of the universe, let them be wiped out, that Your Name may be hallowed. God will then say: I will speak to Jacob, who had great distress in bringing up his children—perhaps he will entreat mercy on their behalf. So He will say to Jacob: Your children have sinned against Me. He, too, will reply: Master of the universe, let them be wiped out for the hallowing of Your Name. Then, deciding that there is no reason in men advanced in age [such as Abraham], nor counsel in those young in years [such as Jacob], God will say to Isaac [who is in his middle years]: Your children have sinned against Me. But Isaac will reply: Master of the universe, are they now my children—not Your children? When they said to You, "We will do," before saying, "We will hear," You called them "Israel, My son, My firstborn" (Exod. 4:22). But now they are my sons, not Your sons! Moreover, how much have they sinned? How many are a man's years? Seventy. Deducting the first twenty, during which You do not inflict punishment,[5] fifty remain. Subtract the twenty-five that comprise the nights, and so twenty-five are left. Subtract twelve and a half spent in prayer, eating, and answering calls of nature. Twelve and a half are left. If You are willing to bear all of these years, well and good; if not, let half be upon me and half upon You. Should You say that they must all be upon me, remember, I once offered myself as a sacrifice before You. At this, Israel will begin to say to him, "You are our father" (Isa. 63:16). But Isaac will say: Before you acclaim me, acclaim the Holy One. And Isaac will show them the Holy One, for them to see with their own eyes. At once they will lift their eyes on high and say, "Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer from everlasting is Thy Name" (ibid.).[6]

The Time of Redemption

9. "Gather yourselves together, that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the end of days. . . . Reuben, thou art my firstborn" (Gen. 49:1–3). The verse teaches that when Jacob was about to reveal to them the time of redemption, it was hidden from him. A parable of a man who bore the title of the king's friend[7] and who knew the king's secrets. In the course of time, the king's friend was about to die. He started to say to his sons gathered around his couch, "Come, and I shall reveal to you the secrets of the king." But just then he lifted his eyes and saw the king. Instead, he said to them: "My sons, heed the honor of the king." So, too, our father Jacob lifted his eyes and saw the Presence standing over him, whereupon he said, "My sons, heed the honor of the Holy One."[8]

10. "The day of vengeance is in My heart, and the year of My redemption is come" (Isa. 63:4). What is meant by "The day of vengeance is in My heart"? According to R. Yohanan, God said: I have revealed it to My heart but not to My limbs. According to R. Simeon ben Lakish, God said: I revealed it to My heart, but not to the ministering angels.[9]

11. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: Blasted be the bones of those who presume to calculate the time of redemption. For they are apt to say, "Since redemption has not come at the time expected, it will never come." Rather, one must wait for it, as is said, "Though it tarry, wait for it" (Hab. 2:3). Lest you say, "We are looking forward to its coming, but He does not seem to," Scripture asserts, "Truly the Lord is waiting to show you grace, truly He will arise to pardon you" (Isa. 30:18). But since we look forward to it and He also looks forward to it, what then delays its coming? The measure of justice delays it. But since the measure of justice delays it, what point is there in our waiting for it? To receive reward [for hoping], as is said, "Blessed are all they that wait for it" (ibid.).[10]

12. Rav said: All times set for redemption have passed, and the matter now depends only on repentance and good deeds. But Samuel said: To endure the experience of mourning is sufficient punishment for the mourner [for the people of Israel].[11]

---

1. JV: "She hath wrought lewdness (mezimmatah)," a word that can also mean "premeditation."
2. They sought to disguise their circumcision by blistering the skin.
3. It bears fruit only after years of growth.
4. B. Men 53b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. Even as the people under twenty were not punished for having accepted the slanderous report of the spies (see Num. 14:29). So Rashi, ad loc.
6. B. Shab 89b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. A court title, as was "companion of the king." Cf. Polybius 31.3.7.
8. Gen. R. 98:2; PR 21:13.
9. Who serve God as limbs serve man. B. Sanh 99a.
10. B. Sanh 97b.
11. Regardless of repentance, Israel's suffering warrants redemption.

How redemption is to come about is also disputed among the Tannaim. For R. Eliezer said: If Israel repent, they will be redeemed; but if not, they will not. R. Joshua retorted: You say they will not be redeemed if they do not repent. On the contrary, they will be redeemed, for the Holy One will raise up against them a king whose decrees will be as cruel as Haman's, so that Israel will be driven to repentance, and thus He will bring them back to the right path.[1]

13. In the school of Elijah it is taught: The world, as we know it, was intended to exist for six thousand years—two thousand years in desolation [without Torah], two thousand years with Torah, and two thousand years of the Messiah's reign. Because of our many, many iniquities, the years [God had intended to be the Messiah's] were [temporarily] withheld.[2]

14. R. Hanan bar Tahalifa sent word to R. Joseph: I once met a man who possessed a Hebrew scroll written in Assyrian characters.[3] I asked him: Where did you get this? He replied: I had hired out as a mercenary in the Persian army and found it in the Persian archives. In it is written that four thousand two hundred and ninety-one years after creation, the world will be orphaned.[4] [As to the years that follow], some will be spent in the war of the great sea monsters;[5] some in the war of Gog and Magog; and the remaining period will be the years of the Messiah's reign. The Holy One will renew His world only after seven thousand years. After five thousand years, said R. Aha son of Rava.

We have been taught that R. Nathan said: There is a verse that pierces to the very abyss [in the mystery of its implication]: "For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie. Though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not delay" (Hab. 2:3).[6]

15. "I sleep; nevertheless, my heart waketh" (Song 5:2). The congregation of Israel said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, "I sleep" in ignorance of the time set for redemption; "nevertheless, my heart waketh" for the time of redemption.[7]

16. R. Joshua ben Levi pointed out a [seeming] contradiction within a verse, which asserts, "In its time [redemption will come]" (Isa. 60:22), and then goes on to say, "I will hasten it" (ibid.). However, he said, the meaning is: If they are worthy, "I will hasten it"; if not, "in its time."[8]

17. [R. Joshua ben Levi sid]: Israel's redemption is compared to four things: to harvesting, to vintaging, to gathering of spices, and to a woman with child.

It is compared to harvesting, because when a field is harvested prematurely, even the straw is unusable; if the field is harvested in its proper time, even the straw is fully usable. Hence Scripture: "Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe" (Joel 4:13).

It is compared to vintaging, because when a vineyard is vintaged before its time, even the vinegar made from it is not good; but if gathered in its time, even its vinegar is good. Thus: "Sing ye of her: A vineyard of foaming wine" (Isa. 27:2)—only when the grapes in the vineyard are full of juice are you to gather them.

It is compared to spices, because if spices are gathered when they are still moist and soft, they do not give off fragrance; but if gathered when they are dry, they give off fragrance, as is said, "That the spices thereof may flow out" (Song 4:16).

It is compared to a woman with child, because if the woman gives birth before the time, the child will not live; but if at the right time, the child lives. So it is written, "Therefore He will give them up until the time that she who travaileth hath brought forth" (Mic. 5:2).[9]

18. When R. Joshua ben Levi found the prophet Elijah standing by the entrance to the cave in which R. Simeon ben Yohai was buried, he asked him, "Will I be allowed to enter the world-to-come?" Elijah answered, "If this master here desires it." R. Joshua later said, "I saw two [Elijah and myself] but I heard the voice of a third."[10] He then asked Elijah, "When will the Messiah come?" "Go and ask him yourself," was his reply. "Where is he sitting?" "At the entrance to the city [of Rome]." "And by what sign may I recognize him?" "He is sitting among the poor who are stricken with illnesses; all of whom untie and retie all the bandages over their sores at the same time, whereas he unties and reties each bandage separately, saying to himself; Should I be wanted, I must not be delayed."

So R. Joshua went to the Messiah and greeted him: "Peace be upon you, my master and teacher." "Peace be upon you, son of Levi," the Messiah replied. R. Joshua: "When will you come, O master?" "Today," was the Messiah's answer.

When R. Joshua came back to Elijah, the latter asked him, "What did he say to you?" R. Joshua: "Peace be upon you, son of Levi." Elijah observed, "By that he assured you and your father of a portion in the world-to-come." R. Joshua: "[How can I believe him, seeing that] he spoke falsely to me, for he told me that he would come today, yet he has not come." Elijah: "When he told you, 'Today,' he was quoting the first word of a verse that goes on to say, 'If you will hear His voice' " (Ps. 95:6).[11]

19. When R. Yose ben Kisma's disciples asked him, "When will [Messiah] son of David come?" he replied, "I fear you will ask me for a sign that my answer is right." They: "We will ask for no sign." R. Yose: "After this

---

1. B. Sanh 97b.
2. B. Sanh 97a–b.
3. The square characters.
4. Will be in great distress.
5. The great nations.
6. B. Sanh 97b.
7. Song R. 5:2, §1.
8. B. Sanh 98a.
9. Song R. 8:14, §1; Yalkut, Ps., §639.
10. The Presence.
11. B. Sanh 98a.

gate[1] falls down and is rebuilt, falls down again and is again rebuilt, falls down a third time—then, before there will be time to rebuild it, [Messiah] son of David will come." They said, "Our master, give us a sign." R. Yose: "Did you not promise me that you would not ask me for a sign?" They replied, "Just the same, please." R. Yose: "If so, let the waters of the grotto of Paneas turn to blood." And turn to blood they did.

When R. Yose was dying, he said, "Place my coffin deep in the ground, for there is not a palm tree in Babylonia to which a Persian horse will not be tied and not a coffin in the Land of Israel out of which a Median horse will not eat straw.[2]

20. Israel have been assured that Elijah will not come on the eve of a Sabbath or the eve of a festival, when people are preoccupied with preparations.[3]

21. Abbaye said: The Messiah will come only on the ninth of Av, which is set apart as our time for mourning but which the Holy One will turn into a festive day, as is said, "I will turn their mourning into joy," etc. (Jer. 31:12).[4]

22. R. Hanina ben Dosa said: The ram that was created at twilight on the sixth day of creation—not a part of it was without purpose. The ram's ash was the foundation for the altar within the Temple Hall; its sinews provided the ten strings for the harp David played on; its hide became the leather girdle on the loins of Elijah, ever remembered on good occasions; its two horns were made into shofars—the left horn is the one the Holy One blew on Mount Sinai; and the right horn, larger than the left one, the Holy One will blow in the time-to-come, as is said, "And it shall come to pass on that day, that a large horn shall be blown" (Isa. 27:13).[5]

The Footprints of the Messiah

23. R. Yohanan said: When you see a generation ever dwindling, expect the Messiah then, for Scripture says, "The afflicted people Thou wilt save" (2 Sam. 22:28).

R. Yohanan also said: When you see a generation that is overwhelmed by many troubles, as by a river in flood, expect the Messiah then, for Scripture says, "When the enemy shall come in like a river, the spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him" (Isa. 59:19), and then Scripture goes on to say, "The redeemer shall come to Zion" (Isa. 59:20).

R. Yohanan said further: [Messiah] son of David will come only in a generation that is altogether righteous or altogether wicked. In a generation altogether righteous, for it is said, "Thy people shall be all righteous, they shall inherit the Land forever" (Isa. 60:21). Or altogether wicked, for it is written, "And He saw that there was no man, and was astonished that there was no intercessor," etc. (Isa. 59:16), and elsewhere it is written, "Then for Mine own sake, for Mine own sake will I do it" (Isa. 48:11).[6]

24. R. Isaac said: [Messiah] son of David will not come until every kingdom is converted to the belief of the sectarians. And the proof? Rava quoted, "It is all turned white: he is clean" (Lev. 13:13).[7]

25. R. Eleazar bar Avina said: When you see the [great] kingdoms fight one another, look for the footprints of the Messiah.[8]

26. R. Simlai said in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: [Messiah] son of David will not come until all judges and officers[9] are gone from Israel.

R. Zeiri said in the name of R. Hanina: [Messiah] son of David will not come until arrogant men cease to be in Israel.[10]

27. R. Assi said: [Messiah] son of David will not come until all souls in the treasury of souls[11] have been used up, as is said, "The spirit that is before Me will enwrap [mankind] when all souls I made [have been used up]" (Isa. 57:16).[12]

28. The sages said: King Messiah will not come until all souls that have been considered for creation have been created; and these are the souls referred to in the Book of Adam.[13]

29. Rav said: The Torah is destined to be forgotten in Israel, because it is said, "Then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful" (Deut. 28:59). Now, I do not know what "wonderful" in such a context signifies. However, it is said, "Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a wonderful work among this people, even a wonderful work and a wonder, and the wisdom of their wise men . . . shall perish" (Isa. 29:14). Hence one may conclude that "the wonder" refers to Torah['s being forgotten].

Our masters taught: When our masters entered the vineyard[14] in Yavneh, they said: The Torah is destined to

---

1. "The gate of Caesarea Philippi, the home of R. Yose. Its fall would be a signal of the destruction of the Roman power by the Parthians" (Isidore Epstein in Sanh, Soncino, p. 665, n. 1).
2. The Persian invaders will be so numerous that coffins will be used as cribs for their horses. B. Sanh 98a–b.
3. B. Er 43b.
4. PR 28:3.
5. PRE 31.
6. B. Sanh 98a.
7. In leprosy, a white swelling is a symptom of uncleanness; however, when the skin on the entire body turns white, the whiteness is declared a mark of cleanness. So, too, when the entire world turns sectarian, the Messiah, the purifier, is sure to come. B. Sanh 97a.
8. Gen. R. 42:4.
9. Who are apt to abuse their power or pervert justice.
10. B. Sanh 98a.
11. Literally guf ("body") where the souls of the unborn are kept.
12. That is, assigned to bodies of living men.
13. A book containing the entire history, past and future, of mankind. Gen. R. 24:4; Lev. R. 15:1.
14. Vineyard is a metaphor for an academy where scholars sat in rows resembling rows of vines.

be forgotten in Israel, for it is said, "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will send a famine in the Land, not a hunger for bread, nor a thirst for water, but a hunger for hearing the words of the Lord" (Amos 8:11); and it also says, "And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east; they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it" (Amos 8:12). It is said: A woman is destined to take a loaf of terumah[1] and go around to synagogues and academies in order to find out whether it is clean or unclean, and no one will even understand the question.

We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Yohai said: God forbid that the Torah be forgotten in Israel, for it is said, "It shall not be forgotten out of the mouths of their seed" (Deut. 31:21). What then is implied in the words "They shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it"? That they will not find a clear and intelligible Halakhah or a clear and intelligible Mishnah in any of the places [where they will seek it].[2]

30. R. Yohanan said: In the generation in which [Messiah] son of David comes, disciples of the wise will grow fewer and fewer. And as for those who remain, their eyes will be consumed with sorrow and sighing. And many agonies [will afflict the entire people]—harsh decrees added one to anoother, so that while one is still in force, another is quickly promulgated.

Our masters taught as follows of the particular seven-year period at whose end [Messiah] son of David will appear. The first year there will be fulfilled the verse "And I will cause it to rain upon one city, and cause it not to rain upon another city" (Amos 4:7). The second year, arrows of famine will be launched. The third year, there will be a universal famine; men, women, little children, and men of piety and good deeds will die, and [because of hunger] the Torah will be forgotten by those who study it. The fourth year, there will be a scarcity of one thing and a surplus of another. The fifth year, there will be a great plenty; people will eat and drink and rejoice, and the Torah will return to those who study it. During the sixth year, there will be rumors [of war]; and during the seventh, wars. And with the departure of the seventh, [Messiah] son of David will appear.[3]

31. At the approaching of the Messiah, insolence will increase and honor will be held in contempt. The vine will yield abundant fruit, but wine will be costly and there will be none to reprove.[4] The chamber where scholars meet for study will be used for harlotry. Galilee will be laid waste; the Gavlan region[5] will be made desolate. The men of the border region will go about from town to town and find no pity. The wisdom of scribes will be deemed a stench, those who fear sin will be despised, and truth will be lacking. The face of the generation will be [brazen] like the face of a dog. The young will cause the faces of their elders to go pale [with humiliation], and the great will wait upon those of little worth. A son will revile his father. A daughter will rise up against her mother, a daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. A man's enemies will be the inmates of his own house (Mic. 7:6). A son will feel no shame before his father.

Upon whom then can we rely? Upon our Father in heaven.[6]

32. Our Masters taught: "For the Lord shall vindicate His people . . . when He seeth that their power is gone, and there is no one being ruled and no one being helped"[7] (Deut. 32:36): [Messiah] son of David will not come until informers are so numerous [that Israel appears helpless]. Another interpretation [of "Their power is gone"]: Until disciples [of the wise] dwindle to a few. Others say: Until the last copper is gone from the purse. Another interpretation: Until hope of redemption is given up, as is said, "There is no one being ruled and no one being helped"—until, if one dare say such a thing, there is neither Supporter nor Helper for Israel.

Whenever R. Zera found sages engaged [in calculating the time of the Messiah's coming], he would say to them: I beg of you, do not put it further off, for we have been taught that three come without warning: Messiah, something found, and a scorpion.[8]

33. Ulla said: Let the Messiah come, but let me not see him. Rabbah said likewise: Let him come, but let me not see him.

R. Joseph, on the other hand, said: Let him come, and may I be worthy of sitting in the shadow of the saddle of his ass.

Abbaye asked Rabbah: What is your reason for not wishing to see him? Should you say, "Because of the birth pangs preceding the Messiah's coming," have we not been taught: R. Eliezer's disciples asked him, "What should one do to be spared the pangs of the Messiah?" [He answered], "Let him engage in study of Torah and in good deeds." And you, master—in you are Torah and good deeds. Rabbah replied: Still, sin may bring on [suffering].[9]

34. R. Hillel[10] said: There will be no Messiah for Israel, because they have already used him up in the days of Hezekiah.[11]

R. Joseph said: May R. Hillel's heavenly Master forgive him for saying so. When did Hezekiah live? In the days of the First Temple. Yet Zechariah, prophesying in the days of the Second Temple, proclaimed, "Rejoice

---

1. Of grain given as a heave offering to priests.
2. B. Shab 138b–139a.
3. B. Sanh 97a.
4. There will be so much drinking that no one will be able to reproach another.
5. "East of the Sea of Galilee and of the upper Jordan" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 655, n. 4).
6. B. Sot 49b; B. Sanh 97a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. A euphemism for "There is no one ruling and no one helping." AV: "and then is none shut up, or helped."
8. B. Sanh 97a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. B. Sanh 98b.
10. "A brother of R. Judah II" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 669, n. 4).
11. Who was saved from total defeat at the hands of the invading Assyrian army. Instead, God Himself will redeem Israel. So Rashi.

greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold, thy king cometh unto thee, he is just and brings salvation," etc. (Zech. 9:9).[1]

35. R. Joshua ben Levi cited two verses that seemed mutually contradictory. One verse says, "And behold, one like the son of man came with the clouds of heaven" (Dan. 7:13); while the other says, "[Behold, thy king cometh unto thee] . . . lowly, and riding upon an ass" (Zech. 9:9). However, the two verses declare: If Israel are meritorious, Messiah will come "with the clouds of heaven"; if not, he will be "lowly, and riding upon an ass."

King Shapur [I] said to Samuel: You say that the Messiah will come riding upon an ass. I would like to send him a brightly colored steed of mine. Samuel replied: Do you have a thousand-hued steed?[2]

Redemption and the Ingathering of Exiles

36. "So that I come back to my father's house in peace, [and it shall come to pass (ve-hayah) that He be a God unto me]" (Gen. 28:21). R. Joshua of Sikhnin said in the name of R. Levi: The Holy One took the words used by the patriarchs and made them a key for the redemption of their descendants. Thus the Holy One said to Jacob: You said, "And it shall come to pass (ve-hayah) that He be a God unto me." By your life, all boons, blessings, and consolations I will give to your children, I will bestow with this very expression, as is said, "And it shall come to pass (ve-hayah) in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem" (Zech. 14:8); "And it shall come to pass (ve-hayah) in that day, that the Lord will set His hand again the second time to recover the remnant of His people" (Isa. 11:11); "And it shall come to pass (ve-hayah) in that day, that the mountains shall drop down sweet wine" (Joel 4:18); "And it shall come to pass (ve-hayah) in that day, that a great horn shall be blown," etc. (Isa. 27:13).[3]

37. "Gather yourselves together . . . assemble yourselves" (Gen. 49:1). Jacob warned them against dissension, bidding them, "Be you all joined in a unified gathering." Thus it says, "And thou, son of man, take thou one stick, and write upon it: For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions; then, take another stick, and write upon it . . . that they may all come to be joined in thy hand" (Ezek. 37:16–17). Once Israel are joined in a single cluster, you may prepare yourselves for redemption. For what follows directly? "I will make them one nation in the Land, upon the mountains of Israel" (Ezek. 37:22).[4]

38. R. Abba said: There is no sign of the coming of redemption more evident than what is set forth in the verse "But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to My people Israel. Then will My day of redemption be at hand" (Ezek. 36:8).[5]

39. R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Simeon ben Halafta were walking in the valley of Arbel and saw the light of daybreak. R. Hiyya the Elder said to R. Simeon: Eminent master, Israel's redemption will be like this—little by little at the beginning; but as it advances, it will grow larger and larger.[6]

40. In the book of Samuel it is said, "God . . . is the mighty tower (migdol) of deliverance for His king" (2 Sam. 22:51), while the parallel verse in Psalms, taken literally, reads: "Mightily He enlargeth (magdil) deliverance for His king" (Ps. 18:51). "This means," R. Yudan said, "that deliverance will come to this people not all at once, but little by little." Can "mightily He enlargeth" be understood in any way except that deliverance for Israel will gradually grow larger and larger (mitgaddelah)? The children of Israel now live in the midst of great troubles, and if deliverance were to come all at once, they would be unable to bear such great deliverance. . . . Hence, it will come little by little and will be enlarged gradually for Israel. Therefore is deliverance likened to the dawn, as is said, "Then shall thy light break forth as the dawn" (Isa. 58:8). Why is deliverance likened to the dawn? Because you know no darkness greater than that in the hour nearest to dawn; were the whole sphere of the sun to wheel up at that hour, when creatures are still sleeping, they would all be stunned. Therefore, the first streak of dawn appears and gives light to the world; after that, the whole sphere of the sun wheels up and gives its light, and so creatures are not stunned, as is said, "The path of the righteous is as the dawning light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day" (Prov. 4:18).[7]

41. R. Aha said, Israel is likened to an olive tree: "A leafy olive tree fair with goodly fruit" (Jer. 11:16). And the Holy One is likened to a lamp: "The lamp of the Lord is the spirit of man" (Prov. 20:27). What use is made of olive oil? It is put into a lamp, and then the two together give light as though they were one. Hence the Holy One will say to Israel: My children, since My light is your light and your light is My light, let us go together—you and I—and give light to Zion: "Arise, give light, for thy light has come" (Isa. 60:1).

R. Hoshaia said: Jerusalem is destined to become a torch for the nations of the world, who will walk by its light, as is said, "Nations shall walk at thy light" (Isa. 60:3).[8]

42. "Said [the angel of Esau (Edom, Rome)] to Jacob: 'Let me go, for dawn is breaking' " (Gen. 32:27). Regarding the verse "Renewed in the mornings, [we know that] great is Thy faithfulness" (Lam. 3:23), R. Alexandri

---

1. B. Sanh 99a.
2. B. Sanh 98a.
3. Gen. R. 70:6.
4. Gen. R. 98:2.
5. So Targum Jonathan, ad loc. JV: "for they are at hand to come." B. Sanh 39a.
6. P. Ber 1:1, 2c.
7. MTeh 18:36.
8. PRKM 21:4; Yalkut, Isa., §499.

said: From the fact that You have renewed us in the morning [after the night of the ascendancy] of each of the three kingdoms, we know that great is Your faithfulness to redeem us [from Edom, the fourth kingdom].[1]

43. "The Lord will create over the whole habitation of Zion, and over her invited guests"[2] (Isa. 4:5). Rabbah said in the name of R. Yohanan: Jerusalem of the world-to-come will not be like Jerusalem of this world. For anyone who wishes to go up to Jerusalem of this world goes up. But only those invited will be able to go up to Jerusalem of the world-to-come.[3]

44. R. Yohanan said: The day of the gathering of exiles will be as momentous as the day heaven and earth were created.[4]

45. "In those days the house of Judah shall walk unto the House of Israel" (Jer. 3:18), the House of Israel being the ten tribes, who were exiled beyond the river Sambatyon. The exiles of Judah and Benjamin will go to them to bring them over, so that, together with themselves, these may merit the days of the Messiah and life in the world-to-come.[5]

46. The ten tribes are not destined to come back, for it is said, "The Lord . . . cast them into another land, as [it is] this day" (Deut. 29:27). As the day goes and does not return, so they went and will not return. Such is the opinion of R. Akiva. But R. Eliezer takes "as this day" to mean: As the day begins with darkness and then lights up, so their darkness is destined to light up for them.[6]

47. "Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say: 'As the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt'; but 'As the Lord liveth, that brought up and that led the seed of the House of Israel out of the north country, and from all the countries whither I had driven them' " (Jer. 23:7–8). This does not mean that recounting the exodus from Egypt shall be abolished; rather that [the deliverance from] subjection to the kingdoms will become the principal theme, and the exodus from Egypt secondary.

Thus also Scripture says, "Remember ye not the former things." This refers to subjection to the kingdoms. "Neither consider the things of old" (Isa. 43:18). This refers to the exodus from Egypt.

"Behold, I will do a new thing; now shall it spring forth" (Isa. 43:19). R. Joseph taught: This verse speaks of the war of Gog and Magog. By what parable may the matter be illustrated? By the one of a man who, while traveling on the road, was attacked by a wolf but was saved. Afterward, he kept telling about his experience with the wolf. Later a lion attacked him, and he was saved from it. So he started telling about his experience with the lion. Finally a snake attacked him, and when he was saved from it also, he forgot his experience with the wolf and the lion, and proceeded to tell about his experience with the snake. So, too, Israel—the later troubles make them forget the earlier ones.[7]

48. Samuel said: The only difference between this world and the days of the Messiah is the subjection to the kingdoms, for it is said, "The poor shall never cease out of the Land" (Deut. 15:11).[8]

49. "O Israel, that art saved by the Lord with an everlasting salvation; ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded" (Isa. 45:17). For the children of Israel say to the Holy One, "Did You not long ago redeem us by the hands of Moses, and by the hands of Joshua, and by the hands of judges and kings? Yet now we are again enslaved and despised, as though we had never been redeemed." And the Holy One replies, "Because your redemption was through creatures of flesh and blood, and because your leaders were mortal men, here one day and in the grave the next, your redemption was but a temporary one. But in the time-to-come, I Myself shall redeem you; I, who live and endure forever, shall redeem you with a redemption that will last forever, as is said, 'O Israel, that art saved by the Lord with an everlasting salvation' [Isa. 45:17]. Therefore, 'ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded, world without end' " (ibid.).

Then the Holy One will say further, "In days gone by, you could live in shame, in subjection to contempt, because you were young. But now that you are grown old, there is no strength in you to bear the shame of exile. Hence it is said, 'Fear not, for thou shalt not remain ashamed. . . . Indeed, thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth' " (Isa. 54:4).[9]

The Day of Darkness and Light

50. R. Simlai expounded: What is meant by the verse "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! Wherefore would ye have the day of the Lord? It is darkness, and not light" (Amos 5:18)? Its meaning will be understood by the parable of a cock and a bat who were waiting for the light of day. Said the cock to the bat: I wait for daylight because daylight is mine [to announce]. But what is daylight to you?

Similarly, a heretic asked R. Abbahu: When will the Messiah come? R. Abbahu replied: When darkness covers certain persons. The heretic: You are cursing me. R. Abbahu: The verse is explicit: "For behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the peoples; but

---

1. Gen. R. 78:1.
2. JV: "her assemblies." But mikra'eha, ("her assemblies") may also mean "her invited guests."
3. B. BB 75b.
4. B. Pes 88a.
5. Yalkut, Song §985.
6. B. Sanh 110b; Yalkut, Deut., §960.
7. B. Ber 12b–13a; Tos Ber 1:10–11.
8. Never—not even in the days of the Messiah. B. Ber 34b.
9. MTeh 31:2.

upon thee the Lord will arise, and His glory shall be seen upon thee" (Isa. 60:2).[1]

51. A Roman general asked Rabban Gamaliel: Who will seize royal power after us? [In reply], Rabban Gamaliel brought a piece of blank paper, took a quill, and wrote, "After that came forth his brother [Jacob], and his hand had hold of [Esau's] heel" (Gen. 25:26).

With regard to Rabban Gamaliel's reply, the comment was made: See how ancient words become new in the mouth of a sage.[2]

52. R. Yose bar Simon said: The nations of the earth will bring gifts to the king Messiah. When they come to the king Messiah, he will ask: Are there Israelites among you? Bring them as gifts to me, as is said, "O ye peoples, bring families unto the Lord" (Ps. 96:7), that is, "O ye nations, bring the families of Israel unto Me."

R. Aha said: This verse also implies [that the Messiah will say to the nations of the earth, "When you bring the families of Israel to me], bring them not in contempt but in honor," for the words that follow, namely, "Bring unto the Lord honor and strength, bring unto the Lord the honor of His Name" (Ps. 96:7), mean: "Bring unto the Lord those who have honored God's Name in the world."[3]

53. R. Kahana said: When R. Ishmael son of R. Yose fell ill, Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] sent word to him: Tell us two or three things of the kind you are wont to tell in your father's name. R. Ishmael sent back: Thus did my dear father say: Egypt is destined to send a gift to the Messiah, who will be inclined not to accept it. But the Holy One will say to him: Accept it from them, since they offered hospitality to My children in Egypt. And so "nobles shall come out of Egypt [bringing gifts]" (Ps. 68:21). Then Ethiopia will draw an inference for itself: if these who had enslaved them have their gifts accepted, how much more are our gifts likely to be accepted, seeing that we have not enslaved them. The Holy One will say to the Messiah: Accept gifts from these. At once, "Ethiopia shall hasten to stretch out her hands unto God" (ibid.). Then will the [wicked] kingdom of Edom draw an inference for itself: if these two, who are not Israel's kin, have their gifts accepted, all the more so by far should gifts be accepted from us, who are Israel's kin. But the Holy One will say to Gabriel, "Rebuke the wild beast of the reeds" (Ps. 68:31)—rebuke the wild animal that dwells among the reeds,[4] of which it is written, "The boar out of the wood doth ravage it, that which moveth in the field feedeth on it" (Ps. 80:14).

R. Hiyya bar Abba, citing R. Yohanan, interpreted this verse in the sense that God said to the Messiah: Rebuke the wild beast, all of whose actions [which intend evil for Israel] may be recorded with the same stroke of the reed pen. "The multitude of the valiant ones[5] as calves of peoples" (Ps. 68:31)—they slaughtered [Israel's] valiant ones as if they were ownerless calves. "Everyone opening his hand with the desire for money"[6] (ibid.)—they put forth their hands to receive money but then do not carry out the wishes of those who give them the money. "He hath scattered the people that delight in approaches"[7] (ibid.). What caused Israel to be scattered among the nations? The approaches to those whom Israel eagerly sought.[8]

54. An unlearned man said to R. Hoshaia, "If I tell you a good thing, will you repeat it in public in my name?" R. Hoshaia: "What is it?" "All those gifts," he replied, "that our father Jacob gave to Esau, the nations of the world are going to give back to the king Messiah in the time-to-come." "What proof have you?" "The verse 'The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall return tribute' [Ps. 72:10]. Scripture does not say, 'Shall bring,' but, 'Shall return.' " "By your life," R. Hoshaia exclaimed, "you said a good thing, and I will teach it in your name."[9]

55. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said: We have a traditional Aggadah that Esau will fall only at the hands of the descendants of Rachel. Why so? Because if the other tribes should come to judgment with Esau and ask him, "Why did you persecute your brother?" he could respond with, "Why did you persecute Joseph, your own brother? You are no better than I." But should Esau turn for help to Joseph,[10] Joseph, too, would ask him, "Why did you persecute your brother? Should you say, 'Because he did evil unto me,' my brothers also requited me with evil, yet I requited them with good." Then Esau will have to remain silent.[11]

The Messiah

56. "In Thy light do we see light" (Ps. 36:10). What light is it that the congregation of Israel looks for as from a watchtower? It is the light of the Messiah, of which it is said, "And God saw the light, that it was good" (Gen. 1:4). This verse proves that the Holy One foresaw the generation of the Messiah and his works before the world was created, and then stored it away under His throne of glory for the Messiah until the time of the generation in which he is to appear.

Satan asked the Holy One: Master of the universe, for whom is the light that is stored away under Your throne of glory?

God replied: For him who will turn you back and put you to utter shame.

---

1. B. Sanh 98b–99a.
2. Gen. R. 63:9; Yalkut, Toledot, §110.
3. MTeh 87:6.
4. See above, part 1, chap. 6, §110.
5. The word abbirim may mean "bulls," as in JV, or "valiant ones."
6. Mitrappes, ("submitting himself") is read mattir pas ("opening his hand"); and ratze ("pieces") is read as a form of rtzh ("to desire").
7. Or, as in JV, "wars." Had they submitted to Nebuchadnezzar and to Titus, and not made war, they would not have been exiled. So Samuel Edels.
8. B. Pes 118b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. Gen. R. 78:12.
10. Esau would naturally think that Joseph would side with him, since Joseph's brothers had sold Joseph into slavery.
11. Tanhuma B, Va-yetse, §15; Yalkut, Judg., §51.

Satan said: Master of the universe, show him to me.

God replied: Come and see him. Now, the moment he saw him, Satan was shaken. He fell down upon his face and said: Surely this is the Messiah, who will cast into Gehenna both me and all the heavenly counterparts of the princes of the earth's nations.

In that hour all [the princely counterparts of] the nations, greatly agitated, will say to Him: Master of the universe, who is this whose power we are to fall into? What is his name? What kind of being is he? The Holy One will reply: His name is Ephraim, My true Messiah, who will elevate his own stature and the stature of his generation, and who will light up the eyes of Israel and deliver his people; and no nation or tongue will be able to withstand him. And all his enemies and adversaries shall be overawed and flee from him. And even rivers will [yield to the power] of his right hand and stop flowing.

[At the time of the king Messiah's creation], the Holy One will tell him in detail what will befall him: These souls that have been put away with you—their sins will put you in a yoke of iron and make you like a calf whose eyes grow dim [with suffering]. They will strangle your breath with the yoke, and because of the sins of these souls, your tongue will cleave to the roof of your mouth. Are you willing to endure such trials?

The Messiah will ask the Holy One: Master of the universe, will my suffering last many years?

The Holy One will reply: Upon your life and the life of My head, I have decreed for you a period of seven years. But if your soul is saddened by the prospect of your suffering, I shall at this moment banish these sinful souls.

The Messiah will say: Master of universes, I take this suffering upon myself with joy in my soul and gladness in my heart, so that not one person in Israel may perish; that not only those who are alive may be saved in my days, but also those who are buried in the earth; not only those who died in my days, but also those who died ever since the days of Adam up to the time of redemption; and that not only these may be saved in my days, but also those who died as abortions; and that not only abortions, but all those the thought of whose creation came to Your mind but who were not created. Such are the things I desire, and for these I am ready to take upon myself [whatever You decree].

The sages said: During the seven-year period preceding the coming of [Messiah] son of David, iron beams will be brought and loaded upon the Messiah [son of Joseph's] neck, until his body is bent low. Then he will cry and weep, his voice will rise up to heaven, and he will say to God: Master of the universe, how much can my strength endure? How much can my spirit endure? How much my breath before it ceases? How much can my limbs suffer? Am I not flesh and blood?

At that time the Holy One will say to him: Ephraim, My true Messiah, long ago, ever since the six days of creation, you took this ordeal upon yourself. At this moment, let your pain be My pain. Ever since the day the wicked Nebuchadnezzar came up and destroyed My house, burned My Temple Hall, and banished My children among the nations of the world—and this I swear by your life and the life of My own head—I have not been able to ascend My throne. And if you do not believe Me, see the night dew that has fallen on My head.

At these words, the Messiah will reply: Master of the universe, now I am reconciled. The servant is content to be like his Master.

R. Isaac taught: In the year when the king Messiah reveals himself, all the kings of the nations of the earth will be at strife with one another. All the nations of the world will be agitated and frightened; they will fall upon their faces and be seized with pangs like the pangs of a woman in labor. And Israel, agitated and frightened, will say: Where shall we go, where shall we take ourselves? God will reply: My children, be not afraid. All that I have done, I have done only for your sake. Why are you afraid? Fear not. The time of your redemption is come. And this latter redemption will not be like your previous redemption, for following your previous redemption you again suffered anguish and enslavement by the kingdoms; but following this one, you will have no such anguish or enslavement.

At the time the Holy One redeems Israel, three days before the Messiah comes, [the prophet] Elijah will come and stand upon the mountains of Israel, and weep and lament over them, and then will say: O mountains of Israel, how long will you continue to be wasteland, dry and desolate? Elijah's voice will be heard from world's end to world's end. But then he will say to the mountains of Israel: Peace has come to the world.

On the second day, Elijah will come and stand upon the mountains of Israel, and say: Good has come to the world. On the third day, he will come and say: Salvation has come to the world.

In that hour, the Holy One will show His glory and His kingship to all the inhabitants of the world: He will redeem Israel, and He will appear at the head of them.

Our masters taught: When the king Messiah appears, he will come and stand on the roof of the Temple and make a proclamation to Israel, saying: Meek ones, the time of your redemption is come. And if you do not believe me, behold my light, which shines upon you: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee" (Isa. 60:1). And it has risen only upon you and not upon the nations of the earth: "For behold, darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the peoples; but upon thee the Lord will arise, and His glory shall be seen upon thee" (Isa. 60:2).

Then the Holy One will brighten the light of the king Messiah and of Israel, and all the nations shall walk by the light of the Messiah and of Israel: "And the nations shall walk at thy light, and kings at the brightness of thy rising" (Isa. 60:3). And they shall all come and lick the dust touched by the feet of the king Messiah. And all of them shall fall down upon their faces before the Messiah and before Israel, and say: Let us be slaves unto you and unto Israel.

"As a bridegroom putteth on a priestly diadem" (Isa. 61:10). This verse declares that the Holy One will clothe Ephraim, our true Messiah, with a garment whose splendor will radiate from world's end to world's end. And Israel will make use of his light and say:

Blessed is the hour in which he was created!
Blessed is the womb whence he came!
Blessed is the generation whose eyes behold him!
Blessed is the eye that waited for him,
Whose lips open with blessing and peace,
Whose speech is pure delight,
Whose heart meditates in trust and tranquility.
Blessed is the eye that merits seeing him,
Whose tongue's utterance is pardon and forgiveness for Israel,
Whose prayer is a sweet savor,
Whose supplication is purity and holiness.
Fortunate are Israel in what is stored up for them!

Our masters taught: In the month of Nisan the patriarchs will arise and say to the Messiah: Ephraim, our true Messiah, even though we are your forebears, you are greater than we, because you suffered for the iniquities of our children, and harsh and grievous ordeals befell you, ordeals such as did not befall earlier generations or later ones. For the sake of Israel you became a laughingstock and a derision among the nations of the earth, and you sat in darkness, in thick darkness, your eyes seeing no light, your skin cleaving to your bones, your body dry as a stick of wood, your teeth falling out from fasting, and your strength dried up like a potsherd—all these afflictions on account of the iniquities of our children. If it please you, let our children benefit by that goodness which the Holy One will bestow in abundance upon Israel. Or is it that, because of the anguish you suffered on their account and because they caused you to be imprisoned, you are displeased with them?

He will reply: O patriarchs, all that I have done, I have done only for your sake and for the sake of your children, so that they may benefit from the goodness that the Holy One will bestow in abundance upon Israel.

The patriarchs will say to him: Ephraim, our true Messiah, be content with what you have done, for you have made content the mind of your Maker and our minds as well.

Then—so taught R. Simeon ben Pazzi—the Holy One will lift the Messiah up to the heaven of heavens and cloak him in some of the splendor of His own glory as protection against the wicked nations of the earth. He will say to him: Ephraim, My true Messiah, you be the judge of these and do with them what your soul desires, for the nations would long since have destroyed you in an instant had not My mercies been exceedingly mighty in your behalf.

And then the Holy One will make seven canopies of precious stones, including pearls and emeralds, for him. Out of each canopy will flow forth four rivers—one of wine, one of honey, one of milk, and one of pure balsam. And the Holy One will embrace the Messiah in the sight of the righteous and bring him within the canopy, where all the righteous will gaze upon him. The Holy One will then say to the righteous: O righteous of the world, Ephraim, My true Messiah, has not yet been repaid for even half his anguish. I have one more measure of reward that I will give him, one that no eye in the world has ever seen. Then the Holy One will summon the north wind and the south wind, and say to them: Come, sweep and sprinkle all kinds of spices from the Garden of Eden before Ephraim, My true Messiah, as is said, "Awake, O north wind; and come, thou south wind; blow upon My garden, that the spices thereof may flow out" (Song 4:16).

At that moment, the Holy One will bring Elijah and the Messiah, a flask of oil in their hands and their staves in their hands, with all Israel gathered before them—the Presence will be at the head of Israel, the prophets at their rear, the Torah at their right, the ministering angels at their left—and they will lead Israel to the valley of Jehoshaphat, where all the nations will be gathered [for judgment].

At that time the Holy One will bring the worshipers of idols and say: Let them walk across the bridge over Gehenna. So they will start walking across it, but as they reach the middle, the bridge will seem to have shrunk to the thinness of a thread, and they will fall into Gehenna.

At this, Israel, seized with fear, will ask: Master of the universe, will You do with us as You have done with these? The Holy One will ask: Who are you? Israel will reply: We are Israel, Your people and Your inheritance. The Holy One will ask: Who will bear witness for you? Israel will reply: Abraham. The Holy One will summon Abraham and ask him: Will you bear witness that they are My people and I their God? Abraham will reply: Master of the universe, did You not say to me, "Also that nation whom they shall serve, I shall judge" (Gen. 15:14)? He will ask them further: Who else will bear witness? Israel will reply: Isaac. The Holy One will summon Isaac and ask him: Will you bear witness that they are My people and I their God? Isaac will reply: Master of the universe, did You not say to me, "Unto thee, and unto thy seed, I will give all these lands" (Gen. 26:3)? The Holy One will ask: Who else will bear witness? Israel will reply: Jacob. The Holy One will summon Jacob and ask him: Will you bear witness that they are My people and that I am their God? Jacob will reply: Master of the universe, did You not say to the children of Israel, "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me" (Exod. 20:3), and did they not say, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord is our God, the Lord alone" (Deut. 6:4)?

Then the Holy One will bring the Torah, put it in His bosom, and make the radiance of Israel shine from world's end to world's end.

And Gabriel will say to the Holy One: Master of the universe, let all the worshipers of idols come and see Israel's well-being.

Forthwith Gehenna will open its mouth, and all the worshipers of idols will come out and, seeing Israel's well-being, fall down on their faces and say: How comely is this Lord! How comely is this people whom He loves exceedingly, as is said, "Blessed is the people that is in such a case" (Ps. 144:15).[1]

57. "We will rejoice and be glad in Thee" (Song 1:4). A parable of a noblewoman whose royal husband, sons, and sons-in-law went to a country far across the sea. Presently she was told, "Your sons have come back!" She replied, "What does that matter to me? Let my daughters-in-law be glad." When her sons-in-law came back, she was told, "Your sons-in-law have arrived." She replied, "What does that matter to me? Let my daughters rejoice." But when she was told, "The king, your husband, is back!" she replied, "O perfect joy, O joy of joys!" Likewise, when in the time-to-come the prophets say to Jerusalem, "Thy sons have come from afar" (Isa. 60:4), Jerusalem will reply, "What does that matter to me?" Told, "Thy daughters are carried [to thee] on uplifted arms" (ibid.), Jerusalem will reply, "What does that concern me?" But when the prophets say to her, "Behold, thy King cometh unto thee" (Zech. 9:9), she will reply, "O perfect joy! 'I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God' " (Isa. 61:10).[1]

[1] PR, Piskas 35–37; Yalkut, Isa., §499.

[1] Song R. 1:4, §2.

CHAPTER SIX

IN THE TIME-TO-COME

The Good That Is to Be

1. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: All the prophets prophesied only about the days of the Messiah, but as for the world-to-come, "Eye hath not seen beside Thee, O God, who worketh for him that waiteth for Him" (Isa. 64:3).

What does "Eye hath not seen" refer to? Resh Lakish said: Eden, upon which the eye of no mortal has rested.[1]

2. Rabban Gamaliel, sitting in the teacher's chair, expounded: [In the time-to-come] a woman will bear a child every day. But a certain disciple ridiculed him by quoting, "There is no new thing under the sun" (Eccles. 1:9). Come, said Rabban Gamaliel, and I will show you its like in this world. He went out and showed him a chicken.

On another occasion, Rabban Gamaliel, sitting in the teacher's chair, expounded: Trees will yield fruit every day. The same disciple, ridiculing him, asked, But does not Scripture say, "There is nothing new under the sun"? Rabban Gamaliel replied: Come, and I will show you their like in this world. He went out and showed him the caper bush.[2]

On still another occasion, Rabban Gamaliel, sitting in the teacher's chair, expounded: The earth of Israel's land will bring forth loaves of bread and choice wool robes. The same disciple ridiculed him by quoting, "There is nothing new under the sun." Rabban Gamaliel replied: Come, and I will show you their like in this world. He went out and showed him morels and truffles;[3] and for the like of choice woolen robes, he showed him the bark of a young palm shoot.[4]

3. R. Yohanan, sitting in the teacher's chair, expounded: The Holy One will bring gems and pearls measuring thirty by thirty cubits, and, after hollowing out in them openings ten cubits wide and twenty cubits high, will set them up as the gates of Jerusalem, for Scripture says, "And I will make thy pinnacles of rubies, and thy gates of gems hollowed out"[5] (Isa. 54:12). The same disciple ridiculed him, saying: Why, you can't find a gem or pearl even as large as a pigeon's egg—how can such giant gems be found?

Sometime afterward the disciple sailed far out to sea, where he beheld ministering angels sawing gems and pearls that measured thirty by thirty cubits and hollowing out in them openings ten cubits wide and twenty cubits high. He asked: What are these for? The angels replied: These are the gems and pearls the Holy One is to set up as the gates of Jerusalem.

When the disciple returned and found R. Yohanan sitting in his teacher's chair and expounding the same passage in Isaiah, he said: Expound, my teacher, It is right for you to expound. What you spoke of, I actually saw. R. Yohanan replied: You good-for-nothing! If you had not seen, you would not have believed? You are given to ridiculing the words of the sages. R. Yohanan set his eyes on him, and in that instant he turned into a heap of bones.[6]

4. Our masters taught: The verse "A handful of wheat in the Land will reach up to the top of the mountains" (Ps. 72:16)[7] means that a stalk of wheat will rise as high as a palm tree, reaching up to the top of mountains. But you may say, "Then it will be difficult to reap it." Therefore Scripture says, "Its fruit shall rustle like Lebanon" (ibid.)—out of His treasury the Holy One will bring a wind, which will blow upon the wheat and cause its fine flour to drop. Then a man will go out into the field and bring in a mere handful of the flour, out of which there will be enough for his own and his household's maintenance.

"With the fat of kidneys of wheat" (Deut. 32:14). It is inferred from these words that a grain of wheat will be as large as the two kidneys of a big bull. And do not be astounded at this! For a fox once made his lair in a turnip, and when [the remainder of] the vegetable was weighed, it was found to weigh sixty litra by the standard of the litra of Sepphoris.

"And of the blood of the grape thou drankest foaming wine" (Deut. 32:14). It is inferred from these words that this world is not at all like the world-to-come. In this world, the harvesting and treading of grapes is wearisome. But in the world-to-come, a man will bring a single grape by wagon or ship, put it in a corner of his house, and use its contents as if it were a large cask; and he will use its stalk to kindle fire under a stewpot. There will not be a grape, mind you, that will contain less than thirty kegs of wine.[8]

5. R. Jeremiah sat before R. Zera and declared: The Holy One will bring forth from the Holy of Holies a stream along whose sides will grow all kinds of precious fruits. At this,

---

1. B. Ber 34b; B. Sanh 99a.
2. Whose various products are eaten successively. So Jastrow.
3. Which resemble slabs of bread.
4. On the inside it has a downy, silklike substance. B. Shab 30b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. Apparently, R. Yohanan interprets kdh in the sense of "to bore, hollow out" and not in the sense of "kindle" (hence "carbuncles" in JV). See Rashi on B. Sanh 100a. "For pearls as gates, cf. Apocalypse 21:21" (Brother Caedmon Holmes).
6. B. BB 75a; B. Sanh 100a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. JV: "May he be as a rich (pissat) cornfield in the land upon the top of the mountains." But pissat ("rich, spreading") can also mean "handful."
8. A gerev (keg) is the equivalent of a seah. B. Ket 111b.

a certain old man[1] said to him, "Well spoken!" And R. Yohanan taught likewise.[2]

6. R. Hiyya bar Ashi said in the name of Rav: All the wild trees in the Land of Israel will bear [edible] fruit.[3]

7. In the time-to-come, the Holy One will renew ten things: The first: He will illumine the whole world, for Scripture says, "The sun shall be no more thy light by day . . . but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light" (Isa. 60:19). But is there a man able to look at God? Rather, what will God do to the sun? He will make it give forty-nine times as much light, for Scriptures says, "And the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold"[4] (Isa. 30:26). Even when a man is sick, God will order the sun to heal him, as it says, "But unto you that fear My Name shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in its wings" (Mal. 3:20). The second thing: He will bring out living water from Jerusalem to heal all those who have a disease, as it says, "Every living creature wherewith it swarmeth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live . . . that all things be healed and may live whithersoever the river cometh" (Ezek. 47:9). The third thing: He will make trees yield their fruit each month, and when a man eats of them, he will be healed, for Scripture says, "And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow every tree for food. . . . It shall bring forth new fruit every month . . . and the leaf thereof for healing" (Ezek. 47:12). The fourth thing: All the waste cities will be rebuilt, so that there shall not be one waste place left in the world; even Sodom and Gomorrah will be rebuilt in the time-to-come, as Scripture says, "And thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate" (Ezek. 16:55). The fifth thing: He will rebuild Jerusalem with sapphire stones, as it says, "Behold, I will set thy stones in fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires" (Isa. 54:11), and, "I will make thy pinnacles[5] of rubies" (Isa. 54:12). These precious stones will shine like the sun, and the nations of the world will come and see the glory of Israel, as is said, "And nations shall walk at thy light" (Isa. 60:3). The sixth: "The cow and the bear shall feed together" (Isa. 11:7). The seventh: He will bring all the wild beasts, birds, and creeping things, and make a covenant with them and with all Israel, for Scripture says, "And in that day I will make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the earth" (Hos. 2:20). The eighth: There will be no more weeping or wailing in the world, for it says, "And the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying" (Isa. 65:19). The ninth: There will be no more death in the world, for it says, "He will swallow up death forever," etc. (Isa. 25:8). The tenth is that there will no longer be any sighing, wailing, or anguish, but all will be rejoicing, for Scripture says, "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion [and sorrow and sighing shall flee away]" (Isa. 35:10).[6]

8. "It shall come to pass in that day, that though there shall be no light, yet precious things will come to be perspicuous" (Zech. 14:6)[7]—that is, the explanation of things concealed from you in this world will be as clear to you as crystal in the time-to-come.[8]

9. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: In the time-to-come, there will be no Gehenna, but the Holy One will take the sun out of its sheath: the righteous will be healed and the wicked condemned by it. The righteous will be healed by it, for it is written: "But unto you that fear My Name shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in its wings" (Mal. 3:20). More—the righteous will be kept young by it, as is said, "Ye shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall" (ibid.). But the wicked shall be condemned by it, as is written, "Behold, the day cometh, it burneth as a furnace; and all the proud, and all that work wickedness shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall set them ablaze" (Mal. 3:19).[9]

10. In the time-to-come, the impulse to evil will have no power.[10]

11. "And God created the great sea monsters" (Gen. 1:21)—Leviathan the bolt-straight serpent and Leviathan the coiled serpent, so said R. Yohanan.

R. Judah said in the name of Rav: All that the Holy One created in His world, He created male and female. So, too, Leviathan the bolt-straight serpent and Leviathan the coiled serpent He created male and female, and if they had mated with each other, [their numerous progeny] would have destroyed the entire world, all of it. What did the Holy One do? He castrated the male and killed the female, preserving her in salt for the righteous in the world-to-come. Also the Behemoth,[11] which [daily] eats up the grass of a thousand hills, He created male and female. And if they had mated with each other, [their numerous progeny] would have destroyed the entire world, all of it. What did the Holy One do? He castrated the male and froze the female, preserving her for the righteous in the world-to-come.[12]

12. R. Dimi said in the name of R. Jonathan: Gabriel will stage a hunt of Leviathan, and but for the Holy One's helping him, he would be unable to prevail against it.

R. Dimi said in the name of R. Yohanan: When Leviathan is hungry, it emits a fiery breath from its mouth and brings all the waters of the deep to a boil, and but

---

1. Elijah?
2. B. Sanh 100a.
3. B. Ket 112b.
4. Interpreting "sevenfold" as seven times seven.
5. The word shimshotayikh can mean both "thy pinnacles" and "thy suns."
6. Exod. R. 15:2.
7. JV: ". . . not be light; but heavy clouds and thick."
8. Num. R. 19:6.
9. B. Ned 8b; B. AZ 3b.
10. Gen. R. 48:11.
11. See Ps. 50:10.
12. B. BB 74b.

for Leviathan's sticking its head into the Garden of Eden, no creature could endure the stench of its breath. When Leviathan is thirsty, it makes many furrows in the sea.

Rabbah said in the name of R. Yohanan: The Holy One will make a feast for the righteous out of the flesh of Leviathan, and what is left will be portioned out and made available as merchandise in the marketplaces of Jerusalem.

Rabbah also said in the name of R. Yohanan: The Holy One will make a sukkah for the righteous out of Leviathan's skin. The Holy One will spread the rest of the skin over the walls of Jerusalem, and its radiance will shine bright from one end of the world to the other, as is said, "Nations shall walk by thy light, and kings by thy shining radiance" (Isa. 60:3).[1]

13. Our masters taught: It happened that R. Eliezer and R. Joshua were traveling on a ship. R. Eliezer was sleeping and R. Joshua was awake. But then R. Joshua shuddered, and R. Eliezer, waking up with a start, asked: What happened, Joshua? What caused you to shudder? R. Joshua: I saw a great light in the sea. R. Eliezer: You may have seen the eyes of Leviathan, for it is written, "His eyelids are like the eyelids of the morning" (Job 41:10).[2]

14. "Every beast of the forest is Mine, and Behemoth upon a thousand mountains" (Ps. 50:10). I have a certain kind of cattle, which I created as food for you in the time-to-come—it is Behemoth, couched upon a thousand mountains, and the thousand mountains produce all kinds of grasses and all kinds of food for it to eat.

How does the Behemoth drink? Some say that its head is opposite the mouth of the Jordan and its mouth open against the Jordan's mouth, so that the river flows directly into Behemoth's mouth, and in this way it drinks the river's water. Others say that all the water the Jordan gathers up in six months, Behemoth swallows in a single draft, which is only enough to moisten its mouth.[3]

15. "Eye hath not seen" (Isa. 64:3). What hath eye not seen? The wine, so said R. Joshua ben Levi, that is preserved within its grapes since the six days of creation.[4]

16. R. Avira lectured: What is meant by the verse "When the child has grown, He will manifest His bountiful dealings" (Gen. 21:8)?[5] That the Holy One will make a great feast for the righteous on the day He manifests His bountiful dealings (yigmol) with the progeny of Isaac. After they eat and drink, the cup over which grace is to be said will be given to our father Abraham to say grace. But he will reply, "I cannot say it, for out of me came Ishmael." Then the cup will be given to Isaac, who will be bidden, "Take the cup and say grace." But he will reply, "I cannot say grace, for out of me came Esau." Then the cup will be given to Jacob, and he will be bidden, "Take the cup and say grace." But he will reply, "I cannot say grace, for I married two sisters[6] while both were alive, even though the Torah was to forbid such marriages." Then Moses will be bidden, "Take the cup and say grace." But he will reply, "I cannot say grace, since neither in life nor in death did I merit entering the Land of Israel." Then Joshua will be bidden, "Take the cup and say grace." But he will reply, "I cannot say grace, since I was not privileged to have a son."[7] When David will be bidden, "Take the cup and say grace," he will reply, "I shall say grace. It is proper for me to say it, since, because of His bountiful dealings with me, 'I will lift up the cup of salvation, and call upon the Name of the Lord' " (Ps. 116:13).[8]

17. R. Eleazar said: The Holy One will form a circle of righteous men in the Garden of Eden with Himself in the center, so that each of them will be able to point with his finger and say, "Lo, this is our God, for whom we waited, that He might save us; this is the Lord, for whom we waited, we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation" (Isa. 25:9).[9]

Resurrection of the Dead

18. "They are new every morning; great is Thy faithfulness" (Lam. 3:23). R. Alexandri said: Because you renew our spirits each and every morning [as we awaken], we are certain that in Your great faithfulness You will restore our spirits to us at the resurrection.[10]

19. A Caesar asked Rabban Gamaliel: You maintain that the dead will come back to life. But they turn to dust—can dust come to life? Caesar's daughter said to Rabban Gamaliel: Let me answer him. In our town are two potters. One fashions his wares from liquid [sperm], and the other from clay. Which deserves greater praise? Caesar replied: He who fashions them from liquid. His daughter then said: If He can fashion His wares [men] from liquid, He can surely fashion them from clay.

In the school of R. Ishmael it is taught: The inference may be drawn from glassware. If glassware—which is made by the breath of human beings—may be mended when broken, how much the more so flesh and blood made by the breath of the Holy One, blessed be He.[11]

20. A Sadducee said to R. Ammi: You maintain that the dead will revive, but they turn to dust—can dust come to life? R. Ammi replied: I will respond with a parable. What is to happen may be illustrated by the parable of a king

---

1. B. BB 74b–75a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. B. BB 74b.
3. PR 16:4 and 48:3 (YJS 1:347 and 2:824); Lev. R. 22:10.
4. B. Ber 34b.
5. "And the child grew, and was weaned (va-yiggamel)." But R. Avira reads the word in its active form, va-yigmol, hence, "will manifest His bountiful dealings."
6. Leah and Rachel.
7. "Nun his son, Joshua his son" (1 Chron. 7:27), but the text does not indicate that Joshua himself had sons.
8. B. Pes 119b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. B. Ta 31a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. Gen. R. 78:1.
11. B. Sanh 90b–91a.

of flesh and blood who commanded his servants, "Go and build me a great palace in a place where there is neither water nor earth." So they went and built it. But after some time it collapsed. He said to them, "Go back and rebuild the palace in the place where there is now both water and earth." They replied, "Impossible!" He became angry with them and said, "You could build in a place where there was neither water nor earth; surely you can do so where there are both!"[1] Yet, [continued R. Ammi], if you do not believe [this], go out into the field and observe a mouse, which today is half flesh and half dust,[2] and yet by tomorrow it will develop and become entirely flesh. And should you object, "But that takes a long time,"[3] go up to a mountain and see: where today there may be but one snail, tomorrow, after rain has come down, the mountain will be filled with snails.[4]

21. A Sadducee said to Gebiha ben Pesisa: Woe to you, O you scoundrels who maintain that the dead will come back to life! The living die—how can the dead live? Gebiha replied: Woe to you, O you scoundrels who maintain that the dead will not come back to life! If those who had never lived before now live, surely those who have lived before will live again. The Sadducee: You called me scoundrel. If I get up and kick you, I could remove the hump from your back. Gebiha: If you do that, you will be called a great physician and command large fees.[5]

22. Queen Cleopatra asked R. Meir: I know that the dead will come back to life. But when they rise up, will they arise nude or clad in their garments? R. Meir replied: You may come to the answer by inference from a grain of wheat. If a grain of wheat, which is buried naked, sprouts forth clad in many robes, how much more and more so the righteous, who are buried in their raiment.[6]

23. "Behold, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up . . . and I will bring you into the Land of Israel'" (Ezek. 37:12). R. Eleazar, who cited R. Simon, said: The Holy One will make underground passages for the righteous, who will roll through them until they reach the Land of Israel, and when they get to the Land of Israel, He will restore the breath of life to them, and they will stand up. For Scripture says, "I will bring you into the Land of Israel," and after that, "I will put My breath in you, and you shall live" (Ezek. 37:14).

But R. Simeon ben Lakish differed: Scripture is explicit in asserting that the instant they get to the Land of Israel, the Holy One will restore their souls to them, as is said, "He that giveth souls unto the people upon it, and spirits to them that walk therein" (Isa. 42:5).[7]

24. Hadrian—may his bones be ground—asked R. Joshua ben Hananiah: In the time-to-come, from what part of the body will the Holy One cause man to blossom forth? R. Joshua: From the nut in the spinal column. Hadrian: How do you know that? Then and there R. Joshua had such a nut brought and put it into fire, but it was not burned. He put it into water, but it did not dissolve. He tried to grind it between millstones, but it was not to be ground. He put it on an anvil and struck it with a hammer—the anvil was split apart, the hammer broke, but the nut of the spinal cord remained intact.[8]

25. As he was dying, R. Jeremiah ordered: Dress me in white raiment with borders, put socks on my legs, sandals on my feet, and a staff in my hand. Lay me on my side near the road, so that when the Messiah comes, I will be ready.[9]

26. "That which is hath been long ago, and that which is to be hath already been" (Eccles. 3:15). If a man says to you, "The Holy One will quicken the dead for us," say in reply, "This has already been done by the hand of Elijah, by the hand of Elisha, and by the hand of Ezekiel." For, as R. Aha said in the name of R. Eliezer ben Halafta, all that the Holy One intends to do or to renew in the time-to-come, He has already done in part by the hands of His righteous prophets in this world.[10]

27. In the school of Elijah it was taught: The righteous whom the Holy One will quicken will not return to the dust. You may ask, "In the thousand years during which the Holy One will renew His world,[11] what will they do?" [The answer is that] the Holy One will provide them with wings like eagles, and they will fly above the water.[12]

---

1. If God can make life without these, surely He is able to resuscitate those who have turned to dust.
2. It was believed that a species of mice sprang from the earth.
3. Whereas resurrection must happen in a moment.
4. Thus proving that God can create life with great speed. B. Sanh 91a.
5. Ibid.
6. B. Sanh 90b.
7. PR 1:6 (YJS 1:45); Tanhuma B, Va-yehi, §6.
8. Gen. R. 28:3; Lev. R. 18:1.
9. P. Kil 9:3, 32b; Gen. R. 100:2.
10. Lev. R. 27:4.
11. Years of desolation, between their resurrection during the Messiah's reign and the inauguration of the world-to-come.
12. B. Sanh 92a–b.

CHAPTER SEVEN

TORAH

On the Value and Study of Torah

1. The world endures because of three activities: study of Torah, divine worship, and deeds of loving-kindness.[1]

2. But for Torah, heaven and earth could not endure, as Scripture says, "But for My covenant with [those who took upon themselves to study] day and night, I would not have continued the ordinances for heaven and earth" (Jer. 33:25).[2]

3. Great is Torah, which in this world as well as in the world-to-come gives life to those who obey it, as is said, "[Words of Torah] are life to those who find them" (Prov. 4:22).[3]

4. "Light" (Esther 8:16)—this is Torah.[4]

5. The splendor of human beings is Torah.[5]

6. "Nevertheless, I will not reject them, neither will I abhor them" (Lev. 26:44). But was there anything left to Israel, so that it could still be said that they would not be rejected nor abhorred? Were not all good gifts that had been bestowed upon them taken away from them? What, then, did remain with them? The Torah scroll. Had it not been left with Israel, they would have been in no way different from the nations of the world.[6]

7. These are the activities whose income a man can enjoy in this world but whose principal remains undiminished for him in the world-to-come: honoring father and mother, deeds of loving-kindness, making peace between a man and his fellow. The study of Torah, however, equals all of these put together.[7]

8. Ben Bag Bag said: Turn to it, and turn to it again, for everything is in it. Pore over it, grow old and gray over it. Do not budge from it. You can have no better guide for living than it.[8]

9. The study of Torah ranks above the building of the Temple;
The study of Torah ranks above honoring father and mother;
The study of Torah ranks above the saving of lives;
Torah ranks above priesthood and royalty.[9]

10. R. Hananiah, deputy high priest, said: He who takes words of Torah to heart will be relieved of anxieties about war, anxieties about famine, anxieties about foolish preoccupations, anxieties about unchastity, anxieties about the impulse to evil, anxieties about craving another man's wife, anxieties about trifles, and anxieties about the yoke of flesh and blood. For in the book of Psalms, it is written by David, king of Israel, "The precepts of the Lord are right, a joy to the heart," etc. (Ps. 19:9). But he who does not take words of Torah to heart will be burdened by anxieties about war, anxieties about famine, anxieties about foolish preoccupations, anxieties about unchastity, anxieties about the impulse to evil, anxieties about craving another man's wife, anxieties about trifles, and anxieties about the yoke of flesh and blood. For it is written in Deuteronomy by our teacher Moses, "They shall serve as signs and proofs against you and your offspring for all time. Because you would not serve the Lord your God in joy and gladness over the abundance of everything, you shall serve—in hunger and thirst, naked and lacking everything—the enemies whom the Lord will let loose against you" (Deut. 28:46–48).[10]

11. Rava said: He who occupies himself with study of Torah needs neither burnt offering, nor meal offering, nor sin offering, nor guilt offering. R. Isaac asked: What is the proof for such a statement? and replied: Scripture's saying "This Torah for a sin offering" (Lev. 6:18) and "This Torah for a guilt offering" (Lev. 7:1). The two verses imply that he who occupies himself with the part of the Torah that details the sin offering—it is as though he brought a sin offering; and he who occupies himself with the part of the Torah that details the guilt offering—it is as though he brought a guilt offering.[11]

12. R. Meir used to say: Where do we find the proof that even a Gentile who pursues the study of Torah is like a high priest? From the assertion about Torah's ordinances that "by pursuing their study man shall live" (Lev. 18:5), where Scripture speaks not of priest, Levite, or Israelite, but of "man." So you learn that even a Gentile who pursues the study of Torah is like a high priest.[12]

13. R. Hisda said: What is meant by the verse "The Lord loveth the gates of Zion (Tziyyon) more than all other tabernacles of Jacob" (Ps. 87:2)? That the Lord loves gates

---

1. Avot 1:2.
2. B. Pes 68b.
3. Avot 6:6.
4. B. Meg 16b.
5. DEZ 5.
6. Sif Lev. 26:4 (ed. Weiss, p. 112c).
7. Pe 1:1.
8. Avot 5:25.
9. B. Meg 16b; B. Er 63b; Avot 6:6.
10. ARN 20; Zohar, Idra Zuta 15.
11. B. Men 110a.
12. B. Sanh 59a.

distinguished (metzuyyanim) by study of Halakhah more than [elaborate] synagogues and houses of study. This assertion supports what R. Hiyya bar Ammi said in the name of Ulla: Since the day the Temple was destroyed, the Holy One limits Himself in His world to an area no larger than the four square cubits of [him who studies] Halakhah.

Abbaye said: Formerly, I used to study in my home and pray in a synagogue. But after I heard the saying of R. Hiyya bar Ammi in the name of Ulla, I pray only where I study.

Though R. Ammi and R. Assi had [their choice of] thirteen synagogues in Tiberias, they would pray only between the pillars [of the academy] where they studied.[1]

14. R. Jeremiah was seated before R. Zera while the two were engaged in the study of Halakhah. As the sun was setting and the time for evening prayer arrived, R. Jeremiah was pressing [to adjourn study and pray]. R. Zera applied to him the verse "He that turneth away from hearing Torah, even his prayer is an abomination" (Prov. 28:9).

When Rava saw R. Hamnuna prolonging his prayers, he remarked: Some people forsake eternal life and concern themselves with temporal life.[2]

15. Our masters taught: "Therefore shall ye lay up (ve-samtem) these My words" (Deut. 11:18). The word samtem is to be understood as a compound of sam, "remedy," and tam, "perfect," the Torah being compared to a lifesaving remedy. A parable of a man who gave his son a severe blow and then put a plaster on the sore spot, saying: My son, as long as this plaster is on your sore, you may eat what you like, drink what you like, bathe in hot or cold water, and need not be afraid. But if you remove it, the sore will open up [and fester]. So, too, the Holy One said to Israel: My children, I created the impulse to evil, and I created the Torah as its antidote. If you occupy yourselves with Torah, you will not be delivered into the power of the impulse to evil, for Scripture says, "If thou occupiest thyself with that which is good, thou wilt be exalted" (Gen. 4:7). If you do not occupy yourself with Torah, you will be delivered into the power of the impulse to evil, "thou wilt couch at the door of sin" (Gen. 4:7).[3] More: all concerns of the impulse will be to make you sin, as is said, "Unto thee will be its desire" (ibid.). But if you choose, you can master it, as is said, "Thou wilt be master over it" (ibid.).[4]

16. R. Judah son of R. Hiyya said: Pause and consider how the effect of human action is not at all like the effect of the Holy One's action. In human action, when a man gives a drug to his fellow, it may be beneficial to one part of the body but injurious to another. Not so the Holy One: He gave Israel the Torah—a lifesaving drug for the entire body, as is said, "Healing to all his flesh" (Prov. 4:22).[5]

17. R. Joshua ben Levi said: When a man is on a journey and has no company, let him occupy himself with study of Torah, for Scripture says, "They[6] are to be companions of grace" (Prov. 1:9). When a man feels pain in his head, let him occupy himself with Torah, since the verse goes on to prescribe "for thy head" (ibid.). When a man feels pain in his throat, let him occupy himself with Torah, for the verse likens Torah's words to "a necklace about thy throat." When he feels pain in his innards, let him occupy himself with Torah, for another verse says of Torah that "it shall be healing to thy navel" (Prov. 3:8). When he feels pain in his bones, let him occupy himself with Torah, since the verse goes on to describe Torah as "marrow for thy bones" (ibid.). When he feels pain in his entire body, let him occupy himself with Torah, since another verse speaks of it as "healing for his whole body" (Prov. 4:22).[7]

18. R. Joshua ben Levi said: What is the meaning of the verse "This is the Torah which Moses set (sam) before the children of Israel" (Deut. 4:44)? If a man merits it, it becomes a potion (sam) of life for him; if not, a potion of death. That is what Rava meant in saying, "If used the right way, it is a potion of life; if not used the right way, a potion of death."[8]

19. "These are the words" (devarim) (Deut. 1:1). Just as bees (devorim) reserve their honey for their owner and their sting for others, so are words of Torah an elixir of life for Israel but deadly poison for the nations of the earth.[9]

20. R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: What is meant by "Thou makest men as the flesh of the sea" (Hab. 1:14)? In what way can men be spoken of as being like fish of the sea? In this way: as the fish of the sea, once they go up on dry land, promptly die, so human beings, as soon as they give up Torah and its precepts, promptly perish.[10]

21. We have been taught: "They went three days in the wilderness, and found no water" (Exod. 15:22). Those who expound the inner meaning of Scripture say that here "water" can mean only Torah, of which it is said, "Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye for water" (Isa. 55:1). Since the Israelites went for three days without Torah, they grew weary. So prophets and elders among them bestirred themselves and ordained that Torah be read on the Sabbath and not read on Sunday; read on Monday and not read on Tuesday and Wednesday; read on Thursday and not read on Friday. Thus Israelites will never go on for three consecutive days without hearing Torah.[11]

22. Words of Torah are likened to waters: "Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters" (Isa. 55:1). As waters reach from one end of the world to the other, so Torah

---

1. B. Ber 8a.
2. B. Shab 10a.
3. JV: "If thou doest well, shall it not be lifted up? and if thou doest not well, sin coucheth at the door."
4. B. Kid 30b.
5. B. Er 54a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. The Written and the Oral Torah.
7. B. Er 54a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. B. Yoma 72b.
9. Deut. R. 1:6.
10. B. AZ 3a.
11. B. BK 82a; Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yassa, §1.

reaches from one end of the world to the other. As waters give life to the world, so Torah gives life to the world. As waters are given without cost to the world, so is Torah given without cost to the world. As waters are given from heaven, so is Torah given from heaven. As waters are given to the accompaniment of powerful thunderings, so was Torah given to the accompaniment of powerful thunderings. As waters restore a man's spirit, so Torah restores a man's spirit. As waters cleanse a man from uncleanness, so Torah cleanses an unclean person from his uncleanness. As waters come down in myriads of drops and become a multitude of brooks, so are words of Torah; today a man learns two Halakhot, tomorrow two more, [and so on], until he becomes like a bubbling brook. As waters leave a high place and flow to a low place, so Torah leaves him whose opinion of himself is high and cleaves to him whose spirit is lowly. As water is not kept in vessels of silver or gold, but only in the cheapest of vessels, so Torah abides only in him who regards himself as lowly as an earthenware vessel. As when thirsty, a grown man is not ashamed to say to a child, "Let me have a drink of water," so in studying Torah an [unlearned] grown man should not be ashamed to say to a child, "Teach me a chapter," "Teach me a verse," "Teach me a word," even "Teach me a single letter." As with water, if one does not know how to swim in it, he will end by drowning, so with words of Torah: if one does not know how to swim in them and teach them, he will drown in the end.[1]

23. "At His right hand was a fiery law unto them" (Deut. 33:2). The verse asserts that words of Torah are likened to fire. As fire was given from heaven, so were words of Torah given from heaven. (Israel were told, "Ye yourselves have seen that I talked with you from heaven" [Exod. 20:22].) Even as fire is life for the world, so words of Torah are life for the world. Fire: close up to it, one is scorched; away from it, one is chilled; near but not too near, one enjoys it. So are words of Torah: as long as a man labors in them, they are life for him; but when he separates himself from them, they slay him. Even as fire is made use of in this world and in the world-to-come, so words of Torah are made use of in this world and in the world-to-come. Even as fire when used leaves a mark on a man's body, so words of Torah when used leave a mark on the body. Fire: they who work with it are readily distinguishable from other mortals. So, too—by their walk, by their speech, by their garments in the marketplace—disciples of the wise are just as readily distinguishable.[2]

24. "My doctrine shall drop as the rain" (Deut. 32:2). Even as rain gives life to the world, so words of Torah give life to the world. But while some people in the world rejoice in rain, others are grieved by it. Thus he whose pit or vat is full of wine, or his threshing floor full of grain, is distressed by rain. Is the same true of words of Torah? [No indeed], for Scripture goes on to say, "My speech shall distill as the dew" (Deut. 32:2). As all people in the world—all—rejoice in dew, so all people in the world, in all of it, rejoice in words of Torah.

"As showers upon the tender grass" (Deut. 32:2)—as showers coming down upon blades of grass raise them up and make them grow, so words of Torah raise up those who study them and make them grow. "And droplets upon the herb" (ibid.)—as the droplets that come down upon herbs refresh them and make them beautiful, so words of Torah refresh those who study them and make them beautiful.[3]

25. "Whoso keepeth the fig tree shall eat [all] the fruit thereof" (Prov. 27:18). Why is Torah likened to a fig tree? Because all other fruits contain useless [inedible] matter. Dates have pits, grapes have seeds, pomegranates have rinds. But the fig, all of it, is edible. So words of Torah have no worthless matter in them, as is said, "For it is not a thing [any part of which is] without use for you" (Deut. 32:47).[4]

26. R. Joshua ben Levi said: Each and every day a divine voice goes forth from Mount Horeb[5] to proclaim these words: "Woe unto [you], mankind, because of the humiliation Torah suffers from your neglect." For he who does not occupy himself with Torah is said to be under divine censure.[6]

27. Upon him who has the means to study Torah but does not study it, the Holy One brings unsightly afflictions, which affect him to the depths of his being, as is said, "When I keep silent, away from the good, my afflictions become unsightly" (Ps. 39:3).[7]

28. Rava said: All bodies are sheaths. Blessed is he who is privileged to be a sheath for Torah.[8]

29. R. Jeremiah ben Eleazar said: A house in which words of Torah are heard at night will never be destroyed, for it is said, "No one who giveth forth songs [of Torah] in the night saith: 'Where is God my Maker?' " (Job 35:10).[9]

30. R. Hananiah ben Teradion said: When two sit together and no words of Torah are spoken between them, theirs is a session of scorners. But when the two sit together and words of Torah are spoken between them, the Presence abides with them.[10]

31. R. Simeon said: If three eat at a table without speaking words of Torah, it is as though they were eating sacrifices offered to lifeless [idols]. But if the three eat at a table while speaking words of Torah, it is as though they were eating at the table of Him who is everywhere.[11]

---

1. Song R. 1:2, §3; MTeh 1:18; Sif Deut., §48.
2. Sif Deut., §343; Yalkut, Berakhah, §951.
3. Sif Deut., §306; Yalkut, Haazinu, §942.
4. Yalkut, Josh., §2, citing Yelammedenu.
5. That is, Mount Sinai, the place of the revelation of the Torah.
6. Avot 6:2.
7. B. Ber 5a.
8. B. Sanh 99b.
9. B. Er 18b.
10. Avot 3:2.
11. Avot 3:3.

32. R. Halafta ben Dosa of Kefar Hananiah said: When ten men sit together and occupy themselves with Torah, the Presence abides among them, as is said, "God abideth in the congregation of God"[1] (Ps. 82:1). How do we know that this is true even when there are only five? Because it is said, "When a band[2] is His, He establisheth [His Presence] upon the earth" (Amos 9:6). And from what do we infer that the same is true even when there are only three? From the verse "In the midst of the judges,[3] He judgeth" (Ps. 82:1). How do we know that the same is true when there are only two? From the verse "When they that fear the Lord spoke each to the other, the Lord hearkened, and heard" (Mal. 3:16). And how do we know that the same is true even of one? From the verse "In every place where I hear My Name mentioned, I will come to thee and bless thee" (Exod. 20:24).[4]

33. When one person sits and meditates on Torah, his reward is approved on high, for Scripture says, "When a man sits alone and meditates, [he will be rewarded], because he took it upon himself" (Lam. 3:28). How may the matter be illustrated? By the parable of a young son who, being left behind when his father went to the marketplace, up and took a Torah scroll, sat down, placed it between his knees, and began to make out its words. When his father came back from the marketplace, he said: Look what he did! My little boy, whom I left when I went out to the marketplace—on his own, he up and took the scroll, placed it between his knees, and now sits and studies it![5]

34. R. Simeon ben Eleazar reported a tradition in the name of R. Joshua ben Hananiah: He who recites a verse at the time appropriate for it brings good to the world, as is said, "How good is a word rightly timed" (Prov. 15:23).

Our masters taught: He who recites a verse from Song of Songs and treats it as a secular air [disregarding the traditional cantillation] or he who during a meal recites a verse out of the context where it belongs[6] [for no purpose other than to entertain] brings evil upon the world. Because the Torah girds itself in sackcloth, stands before the Holy One, and says, "Master of the universe, Your children have turned me into a harp to be played by frivolous people." When God replies, "My daughter, while they are eating and drinking, what else shall they occupy themselves with?" the Torah says, Master of the universe, if they are skilled in Scripture, let them occupy themselves with the Five Books, the Prophets, and the Writings; if they are skilled in Mishnah, let them occupy themselves with Mishnah—with Halakhot and Aggadot; if they are skilled in Talmud, let them occupy themselves with the laws of Passover on Passover, with the laws of the Feast of Weeks on the Feast of Weeks, and with the laws of Tabernacles on Tabernacles.[7]

35. "Thine oils have a goodly fragrance" (Song 1:3). Just as when you hold a cup full of oil and a drop of water falls into it, a drop of oil of equal volume will be forced out, so, too, when a word of Torah enters the heart, a scoffing word equal in volume will be forced out. And contrariwise, when a scoffing word enters the heart, a word of Torah equal in volume will be forced out.[8]

36. R. Levi said: A man who breaks off the study of Torah to engage in idle talk will be made to eat cinders of the broom tree.[9]

37. R. Simeon said: He who while walking on a road is repeating aloud what he learned, but then interrupts himself to say, "How beautiful is this tree," "How beautiful is this newly plowed field"—Scripture regards him as if he had incurred a guilt expiable only by his life.[10]

38. R. Hanina ben Hakinai said: He who while lying awake during the night, or walking alone on a road, makes room in his heart for thoughts that are trifling incurs a guilt expiable only by his life.[11]

39. Shammai said: Make your study of Torah a regular practice.[12]

40. It was taught in the school of R. Ishmael: Let not words of Torah be a [burdensome] duty to you, [to be avoided as far as possible], for you are never at liberty to desist from them.[13]

41. R. Tarfon used to say: It is not your duty to finish the task, but neither are you free to desist from it. If you study much Torah, a high wage will be paid you, and your Employer may be depended on to pay you in full the wages for your labor.[14]

42. Hillel said: Do not say, "I shall study when I have leisure." Perhaps you will never have leisure.[15]

43. "He that committeth adultery with a woman lacketh understanding" (Prov. 6:32). Resh Lakish said: This verse applies to one who studies Torah at [irregular] intervals.[16]

---

1. Ten men constitute a congregation. When such a congregation is described as "of God," it is one where words honoring Him are spoken.
2. "R. Halafta takes aguddah, 'band,' to mean a number of things held together by the five fingers of the hand, as well as the hand itself, consisting as it does of five separate fingers knit together" (Avot, Soncino, p. 30, n. 5, which cites Maimonides). JV: "His vault."
3. The smallest Jewish court consisted of three judges.
4. Avot 3:6.
5. ARN 8.
6. Such as verses recited in the saying of Kiddush or grace.
7. B. Sanh 101a.
8. Song R. 1:3, §2.
9. The broom tree's hot cinders, it is said, never die out. B. Hag 12b.
10. Avot 3:7.
11. Avot 3:4.
12. Avot 1:15.
13. B. Men 99b.
14. Avot 2:16.
15. Avot 2:4.
16. In the manner of an adulterer. B. Sanh 99b.

44. R. Jonathan said: One should never keep himself away from the house of study or from words of Torah, even when he is about to die, as is said, "This Torah, when a man dieth—[he is still to be] in [its] tent" (Num. 19:14): even at the time of death, a man should still occupy himself with Torah.[1]

45. Ben Damah, the son of R. Ishmael's sister, asked R. Ishmael: May one like myself, who has studied the entire Torah, study Greek wisdom? R. Ishmael cited to him the verse "This book of Torah shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night" (Josh. 1:8). Go and find an hour that is neither day nor night, and study Greek wisdom then.

But R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: This verse sets forth neither a duty nor a precept, but a blessing. For the Holy One saw that words of Torah were most precious to Joshua, as is said, "His minister Joshua, the son of Nun, even when young, departed not out of the tent [for the study of Torah]" (Exod. 33:11). So the Holy One said to him: Joshua, since words of Torah are so precious to you, "This book of Torah will not depart out of thy mouth."[2]

46. We have been taught that R. Judah ben Betera used to say: Words of Torah are not susceptible to uncleanness. Once a disciple, who was seated above R. Judah ben Betera, was mumbling indistinctly[3] as he read from the Torah. So R. Judah said to him: My son, open your mouth and let your words shine, for words of Torah are not susceptible to uncleanness, since Scripture says, "Is not My word like as fire?" (Jer. 23:29). As fire is not susceptible to uncleanness, so words of Torah are not susceptible to uncleanness.[4]

47. Our masters taught: Every day the Holy One weeps over three: over him who can occupy himself with Torah but does not, over him who cannot occupy himself with Torah but does so nevertheless [and misunderstands it], and over a communal leader who lords it over the community.[5]

48. Our masters taught: When a poor man, a rich man, and a sensual man come before the [heavenly] court for judgment, the poor man is asked, "Why have you not occupied yourself with Torah?" If he answers, "I was poor and preoccupied with making a living," he is asked, "Do you mean to say that you were poorer than Hillel?"

The rich man is asked, "Why have you not occupied yourself with Torah?" If he answers, "I was rich and preoccupied with tending to my possessions," he is asked, "Do you mean to say that you were richer than R. Eleazar ben Harsom?"

It is reported about R. Eleazar ben Harsom that his father left him a thousand hamlets on land and, matching them, a thousand ships at sea. Still, every day he would put on his shoulder a sack of flour [as food for himself] and travel from city to city and from province to province to study Torah. One day his servants came upon him and [not recognizing him] seized him for public service. When he said to them, "I beg of you, let me go to study Torah," they replied, "By the life of R. Eleazar ben Harsom, we shall not let you go." So he gave them much money to let him go. [Neither he nor they knew one another] because he had never seen his servants, sitting as he did all day and all night, occupied with Torah.

The sensual person is asked, "Why have you not occupied yourself with Torah?" If he answers, "I was handsome and obsessed by my sensual passion," he is asked, "Do you mean to say that you were more handsome and more obsessed by passion than the virtuous Joseph?" It is told of the virtuous Joseph that every day Potiphar's wife endeavored to win him with [flattering] words. Besides, she did not wear for him in the evening the garments she put on to [entice] him in the morning, and she did not wear for him in the morning those she put on for him in the evening. She kept saying to him, "Yield to me!" and he kept saying, "No!" Finally she said, "I shall have you imprisoned." He replied, "The Lord sets prisoners free" (Ps. 146:7). She said, "I shall bend down your proud stature." He replied, "The Lord makes those who are bent down stand straight" (Ps. 146:8). She said, "I shall blind you." He replied, "The Lord restores sight to the blind" (ibid.). Even when she offered him a thousand talents of silver, he still would not listen to her.

Thus Hillel shows up the poor, R. Eleazar ben Harsom shows up the rich, and the virtuous Joseph shows up the sensual.[6]

49. It was said of R. Judah ben Ilai's generation: [Their poverty was so great that] six disciples had to cover their bodies with but one cloak. Nevertheless, they occupied themselves with Torah.[7]

50. R. Yohanan said: When we studied Torah at the home of R. Oshaia, four of us used to sit [crowded] in the space of one cubit.[8]

Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: When we studied Torah at the home of R. Eleazar ben Shammua, six of us used to sit [crowded] within the space of one cubit.[9]

51. [The prophet] Elijah, ever mentioned on good occasions, said: Once, as I was walking on the road, a man who met me mocked and reviled me. I asked him, "My son, since you have refused to learn Torah, what will you say on the Day of Judgment?" He replied, "I have an answer: Understanding, knowledge, and spirit were not given me from Heaven [so how could I study Torah]?" I said, "My son, what is your work?" He replied, "I am a

---

1. B. Shab 83b.
2. B. Men 99b.
3. Having had a seminal emission during the night, he was reluctant to utter the Scriptural words distinctly.
4. B. Ber 22a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. B. Hag 5b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. B. Yoma 35b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. B. Sanh 20a.
8. So anxious were we to study with R. Oshaia.
9. B. Er 53a.

trapper of fowls and fish." I asked, "Who gave you knowledge and spirit to take flax, spin it into cords, weave the cords into nets, use the nets to trap fish and fowls, and sell them?" He replied, "Understanding and knowledge [to do my work] were given me from Heaven." I said, "To take flax, spin it into cords, weave cords into nets, and use nets to trap fish and fowls, understanding and knowledge were given to you from Heaven. But do you suppose that, for words of Torah, about which it is written, 'The word is very nigh unto thee' [Deut. 30:14], understanding and knowledge were not given to you?"[1]

52. R. Nehunia ben Ha-Kanah said: He who takes upon himself the yoke of Torah will be relieved of the yoke of government and the yoke of worldly concerns. But he who breaks off the yoke of Torah from himself will have the yoke of government and the yoke of worldly concerns imposed upon him.[2]

53. "The writing was the writing of God, graven (harut) upon the Tablets" (Exod. 32:16). Read not harut, "graven," but herut, "freedom," for no man is truly free unless he occupies himself with study of Torah.[3]

54. R. Eleazar ben Azariah said: Where there is no Torah, there are no good manners. Where there are no good manners, there is no Torah. . . . Where there is no bread, there is no Torah; where there is no Torah, there is no bread.[4]

55. It is said in the name of R. Judah bar Ilai: Pause and consider how recent generations are not like the former generations. The former generations made the study of Torah their regular concern and their daily work their occasional concern, and they succeeded in the one and in the other.[5] The recent generations have made their daily work their regular concern and their study of Torah their occasional concern, and they have succeeded neither in the one nor in the other.[6]

56. R. Judah ben Ilai said: Anyone who makes words of Torah his primary concern and worldly matters secondary will be made primary in the world-to-come. But anyone who makes worldly matters primary and words of Torah secondary will be made secondary in the world-to-come.[7] [But R. Judah ben Ilai also said: Anyone who does not teach his son a trade is as though he taught him to be a brigand;[8] and also: Work is primary in importance, honoring him who engages in it.[9] In fact, R. Judah counsels a middle course.] How is what he counsels to be illustrated? By the parable[10] of a highway that runs between two paths, one of fire and the other of snow. If a man walks too close to the fire, he will be scorched by the flames; if too close to the snow, he will be bitten by the cold. What is he to do? He is to walk in the middle, taking care not to be scorched by the heat nor bitten by the cold.[11]

57. It has been taught in the name of R. Meir: As great as the superiority of light over darkness is the superiority of Torah's words over the vaporous words [of worldly wisdom].[12]

58. R. Nehorai said: I prefer to put aside all worldly skills and teach my son nothing but Torah, whose interest a man enjoys in this world, while the principal endures for him in the world-to-come. It is not so with other occupations. For when a man falls ill or reaches old age or is beset by afflictions and thus is unable to engage in his work, he will die of hunger. Not so the Torah: it stands by a man, guards him in his youth from all evil, and gives him a future and a hope in his old age. Of the time of his youth, what does Scripture say? "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles" (Isa. 40:31). Of his old age, what does Scripture say? "They shall bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be full of sap and richness" (Ps. 92:15).[13]

59. "For I give you a good acquisition" (Prov. 4:2). In the way of the world, if two merchants stand side by side, one with silk yarn and the other with silk cloth, should the one say to the other, "Come, let us trade," and one takes all the silk yarn and the other all the silk cloth, then what the one now has the other has no longer; and what the other now has the one has no longer. Not so the Torah. If the one studies the Order of Seeds and another the Order of Festivals, and the one teaches the other, then the one is now master of two Orders and the other is master of two Orders. Can there be a better acquisition than this? Hence, "I give you a good acquisition."

Then, too, he who acquires merchandise and goes out on the highway is afraid of robbers. But with the Torah, it is not so. Can robbers possibly seize Torah out of a man's heart? Hence, "I give you a good acquisition."

A story of an associate scholar who was traveling with many merchants on a ship. When asked, "Where is your merchandise?" he replied, "My merchandise is more substantial than yours." They searched throughout the ship but found nothing that belonged to him. So they fell to making sport of him. Presently pirates attacked them and took everything they found in the ship. Consequently, when the travelers reached dry land and entered a city, they had neither bread to eat nor a garment to wear. But what did the associate scholar do? He went into a house

---

1. Tanhuma, Va-yelekh, §2; TdEZ 14; Yalkut, Nitzavim, §960.
2. Avot 3:5.
3. Avot 6.2.
4. Avot 3:17.
5. See "Man doth not live by bread alone, but by everything that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord" (Deut. 8:3).
6. B. Ber 35b.
7. So emended in ARN, p. 86; BR: "in this world."
8. B. Kid 29a.
9. B. Ned 49b.
10. This parable sets forth the mysteries of the chariot and of creation. P. Hag 2:1, 77a. See B. Z. Bacher, Aggadot ha-Tannaim (Berlin, 1922) 3:137. n. 3.
11. ARN 28.
12. Eccles. R. 2:13, §1.
13. B. Kid 82b; Sof 16.

of study, sat down, and expounded Scripture. When the people of the city realized that he was profoundly learned in Torah, they accorded him much respect and proceeded to maintain him. When the merchants saw this, they came to him, apologized, and asked him, "We beg of you, since you know us, speak favorably of us to the people of the city, so that we will not die of hunger." He replied, "Did I not tell you that my merchandise is more substantial than yours? Yours is perishable, while mine endures." Hence Scripture: "I have given you a good acquisition."[1]

60. R. Yose ben Kisma said: Once, as I was traveling on a road, a man met me and greeted me, and I returned his greeting. He asked, "Master, what place are you from?" I replied, "From a great city of sages and scribes." He said, "Master, if you consent to live with us in our place, I will give you a thousand thousand gold denars, besides precious stones and pearls." I replied, "If you were to give me all the silver and gold and precious stones and pearls in the world, I still would live nowhere except in a place of Torah. For thus it is written in the book of Psalms by David, king of Israel: 'The Torah of Thy mouth is worth more to me than thousands of gold and silver' " (Ps. 119:72). More: in the hour of a man's departure from the world, neither silver nor gold, neither precious stones nor pearls accompany him, but Torah and good deeds—only they, as is said, "When thou walkest, it shall lead thee; when thou liest down, it shall watch over thee; and when thou wakest, it shall talk with thee" (Prov. 6:22). "When thou walkest, it shall lead thee"—in this world; "when thou liest down, it shall watch over thee"—in the grave; "and when thou wakest, it shall talk with thee"—in the world-to-come.[2]

61. R. Yohanan said: Whoever has wearied himself with Torah in this world is not allowed to sleep in the world-to-come. He is taken to the house of study of Shem and Eber, of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and of Moses and Aaron. For how long? "Until I make thee a great name, like unto the name of the great ones that were in the earth" (2 Sam. 7:9; 1 Chron. 17:8).[3]

How Torah Is Acquired and in Whom It Maintains Itself

62. Torah demands forty-eight attributes [from its students]: study [aloud]; attentive listening; distinct pronunciation; alertness of mind; intuitive insight; awe [of one's master]; reverence [for God]; humility; cheerfulness; cleanness; attendance on sages; intense examination of a matter in the company of colleagues; subtle discussion with disciples; unhurried reflection; persistence in study of Scripture and Mishnah; strict moderation in business, in sleep, in chitchat, in pleasure, in hilarity, and in worldly interests; patience; a good heart; faith in the sages; resignation to afflictions; knowing one's place; contentment with one's lot; restraint in one's words; refraining from claiming merit for oneself; being loved; loving Him who is present everywhere; loving fellow creatures; loving reproof and rectitude; shunning honor; avoiding pride in one's learning; taking no delight in laying down the law; bearing the yoke with one's fellow; judging him charitably; guiding him to the true [Halakhah]; urging him to reconciliation [in a dispute]; being systematic in study; asking and answering; listening and being ready to answer [when asked]; learning in order to teach; studying in order to practice [precepts]; making his teacher wiser [by pointed questions]; noting with precision what he is hearing; and giving credit for a comment to the one who made it.[4]

63. Seek not greatness for yourself. Covet not honor. Your study should lead to practice. Crave not the [luxurious] table of kings, for your table [of learning] is greater than their table [of food], and your crown is greater than their crown. And faithful is your Employer to pay you the recompense for your work.[5]

64. "The small is great there, and the servant is free from his master" (Job 3:19). He who makes himself small—humbles himself—in this world for the sake of words of Torah is deemed to be great in the world-to-come; and he who in this world is willing to be a servant [so that he may learn words of Torah] will be a free man in the world-to-come.[6]

65. R. Hanina bar Idi said: Why are words of Torah likened to water, as in the verse "Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye for water" (Isa. 55:1)? To teach you that, just as water flows from a higher level to a lower level, so words of Torah abide only with one who is meek in spirit.

R. Oshaia said: Why are words of Torah likened to the three beverages water, wine, and milk, as in "Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye for water" and in "Come ye, buy and eat . . . wine and milk without money, and without price" (Isa. 55:1)? To teach you that, just as these three beverages are preserved only in the most humble of [earthenware] vessels, so words of Torah abide only with one who is humble in spirit.[7]

66. R. Eleazar said: What is meant by "And chains about thy neck" (Prov. 1:9)? If a man trains himself to be like a chain, which hangs loosely around the neck, at times visible and at other times not visible, his learning will remain with him. But if not, his learning will not remain.

R. Eleazar also said: What is meant by "His cheeks are as a furrow of spices" (Song 5:13)? If a man allows himself to be treated as a furrow, upon which everybody treads, and as spices, with which everybody perfumes himself, his learning will endure. But if not, his learning will not endure.[8]

---

1. Tanhuma, Terumah, §2; Tanhuma B, Terumah, §1.
2. Avot 6:9.
3. By "the great ones" are meant the patriarchs. Eccles. R. 5:11, §5.
4. Avot 6:6.
5. Avot 6.4.
6. B. BM 85b.
7. B. Ta 7a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. B. Er 54a.

67. R. Akiva said: He who exalts himself because of [his knowledge of] words of Torah—to what may he be likened? To a carcass cast upon the road. Every passerby, putting his hand on his nose [and mouth], tries to get far away from it, as is said, "When you exalt yourself, you turn yourself into a carcass; when you think so loftily of yourself, everyone's hand is on his mouth" (Prov. 30:32).[1]

Ben Azzai said: If one is willing to be degraded for the sake of Torah's words, willing to eat carobs and lupines and wear filthy clothes in order to sit assiduously at the doors of sages, though every passerby says, "That one is an idiot," he will in the end become a scribe, and you will find the entire Torah to be with him.[2]

68. R. Yose bar Hanina said: Words of Torah dwell only with one who is willing to remain naked [destitute] in their behalf, as is said, "I, wisdom, make my dwelling with nakedness"[3] (Prov. 8:12).

R. Yohanan said: Words of Torah endure only with one who is willing to make himself as nothing, for it is said, "Wisdom shall be found in nothing (Job 28:12).[4]

69. "Wisdom crieth aloud in the streets" (Prov. 1:20). Rava said: When one studies Torah in his home, Torah proclaims his merit in the streets.[5]

70. R. Yohanan of En Te'enah said: As firm as a formal covenant is the assurance that he who labors at his studies without ostentation will not soon forget them. And the proof? "Wisdom is with the unostentatious" (Prov. 11:2).[6]

71. Torah's sandal is humility; Torah's crown is fear [of God].[7]

72. R. Yohanan ben Zakkai used to say: Do not give yourself airs if you have learned much Torah, because for this purpose you were created.[8]

73. R. Yose said: Make yourself fit to study Torah, for it is not [something that will come automatically] to you as an inheritance.[9]

74. This is the way of life [usual for] study of Torah: You will eat bread with [nothing more than] salt, drink water by measure, sleep on the [bare] ground, live a life of privation, yet still keep laboring in Torah. If you act thus, "thou wilt be happy, and it shall be well with thee" (Ps. 128:2)—"happy" in this world and "well with thee" in the world-to-come.[10]

75. R. Jonathan said: If a man persists in the study of Torah in poverty, he will eventually find himself persisting in such study in the midst of wealth; if he puts aside the study of Torah in the midst of wealth, he will put aside study of Torah in [abject] poverty.

R. Meir said: Give little time to business, and occupy yourself assiduously with Torah. Be lowly in spirit before all men. If you have once been remiss in study of Torah, soon you will find many other occasions to be remiss in studying. But if you have toiled [assiduously] at the study of Torah, God has abundant reward to give you.[11]

76. The Torah said to the Holy One: Let my portion be in the tribe [of Levi],[12] which is marked by [its] poverty. For when rich people are at all occupied with me, they swell up with pride. But people who are poor, even when occupied entirely with me, continue to be mindful that they are hungry and lowly.[13]

77. The Torah was given to be expounded only by those who [are so poor that they] have [nothing but] manna to eat and only secondarily by those who eat [fat] terumah [heave offering].[14]

78. R. Yohanan said: The words "It is not in heaven" (Deut. 30:12) imply that Torah will not be found among those who are arrogant. "Neither is it beyond the sea" (ibid.)—it will not be found among merchant princes or petty traders.[15]

79. "It is not in heaven" (Deut. 30:12). Samuel said, "Torah is not to be found among astrologers, who spend [most of] their time gazing at the heavens." Samuel was disputed: "But you yourself are an astrologer and also great in Torah?" He replied, "I engage in astrology only when I am free from studying Torah." "When is that?" "When I enter the privy."[16]

80. "Surely business[17] turneth a wise man into a fool" (Eccles. 7:7). When a sage busies himself (mitasek) with many [worldly] matters, his wisdom gets addled. "And destroyeth the gift in the heart" (ibid.)[18]—the many matters destroy the Torah, which was given as a gift to man's heart.

---

1. JV: "If thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thyself, or if thou hast planned devices, lay thy hand upon thy mouth."
2. ARN 11; Yalkut, Prov., §964.
3. JV: "prudence." But ormah ("prudence") may, with a slight change in vocalization, also mean "nakedness."
4. B. Sot 21b.
5. B. MK 16b.
6. P. Ber 5:1, 9a.
7. Tanhuma, Bereshit, §1.
8. Avot 2:8.
9. Avot 2:12.
10. Avot 6:4.
11. Avot 4:9–10.
12. The tribe that received no allotment of land.
13. Yalkut, Ruth, §597.
14. "This is a bitterly sarcastic dictum: since manna fell only once in history, a person said to have only manna to eat is totally destitute and starving. The priesthood, eating of fat sacrifices, was often criticized for its selfishness" (Leon Nemoy). Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yassa, 3.
15. B. Er 55a.
16. Deut. R. 8:6.
17. Reading not oshek ("oppression") but esek ("business").
18. JV: "And a gift destroyeth the heart."

Another interpretation: "Surely business turneth a wise man into a fool." He who busies himself with the needs of the community causes his knowledge of Torah to be forgotten.

R. Joshua ben Levi said: R. Judah ben Pedaiah taught me sixty laws concerning a grave that has been plowed over. I have forgotten all of them because I have been busy with the needs of the community.[1]

81. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Yohai said: The Holy One gave Israel three precious gifts—Torah, the Land of Israel, and the world-to-come—each given only by means of chastisements. And the proof for Torah? The verse "Blessed is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him out of Thy Torah" (Ps. 94:12).[2]

82. What are the chastisements of love? Those that do not cause the study of Torah to cease.[3]

83. R. Bisna said: There is no man in the world who does not experience suffering. A man with pain in his teeth cannot sleep or with pain in his eyes cannot sleep; one who labors in Torah likewise does not sleep. The first two are kept awake, and the last one is kept awake. "Blessed is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, by teaching him out of Thy Torah" (Ps. 94:12).[4]

84. Resh Lakish said: What is the proof that words of Torah abide only with a man who all but kills himself for their sake? The verse "This is the Torah, [to be studied] even if a man die in [his] tent [while at it]" (Num. 19:14).[5]

85. "When I was in a frenzy, my wisdom stayed within me" (Eccles. 2:9).[6] R. Hanina bar Papa said: Torah, which I studied in a [kind of] frenzy, stayed with me.[7]

86. "The doctrine I acquired is as shattering as the rain" (Deut. 32:2). The sages said that Moses asked Israel: Are you aware of the pain I suffered for Torah's sake, the toil I put into it, the backbreaking labor I devoted to it, as is said, "And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights" (Exod. 34:28)? Moreover, I had to go into the midst of angels, had to go into the midst of the celestial creatures, had to go into the midst of seraphim, any one of which could incinerate the entire world, all of it. I all but gave my life for its sake. As I have learned it in pain, so will you learn it in pain. But now, as you have learned it in pain, will you also teach it by inflicting pain [on your pupils]? Therefore Scripture says, "My speech shall be as low in cost as dew" (Deut. 32:2)[8]—you will dispense it at low cost [painlessly].[9]

87. It was taught in the school of Elijah: For words of Torah, a man should be ever ready to submit himself like an ox to the yoke or like an ass to the burden.[10]

88. Sages in the school of R. Yannai taught: Concerning the verse "As milk under pressure produces butter" (Prov. 30:33): in whom do you find the "butter" [the richness] of Torah? In him [who puts himself under such pressure for its sake that he] all but regurgitates the milk he sucked at his mother's breast.[11]

89. R. Judah son of R. Simon expounded: He who is willing for the sake of Torah is to have his face blackened [by deprivation] in this world, the Holy One will make his countenance shine in the world-to-come.[12]

90. "In early hours, as in the evening" (Song 5:11).[13] In whom will you find words of Torah? In him who comes early and stays on into the evening at the house of study for their sake.

Rabbah, reading the verse "Black as a raven," took it to refer to one who for the sake of words of Torah is willing to have his face made as black [by deprivation] as a raven. Rava said: The verse refers to one who can bring himself to be as cruel to his children and to the members of his household as is the raven.[14] Such was the case with R. Adda bar Mattena, who was leaving [home] to study Torah. When his wife asked him, "How will I provide food for your children?" he answered, "Is watercress no longer in the marsh?"[15]

91. R. Isaac said: If a man claims, "I labored but did not find," do not believe him; "I did not labor but found nevertheless," do not believe him; "I labored and found," believe him.[16]

92. R. Eleazar said: Never in my life has anyone preceded me into the house of study, nor have I departed from it leaving anyone there. Once I rose early and found the carriers of manure and straw already abroad. So I recited the verse "If thou seek her as silver, and search for her as for hidden treasure, then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord" (Prov. 2:4). Should we not carry our "manure and straw" at least [as industriously] as professional carriers of manure and straw?

---

1. Exod. R. 6:2.
2. B. Ber 5a.
3. Ibid.
4. Tanhuma B, Mi-ketz, §16; Yalkut, Ps., §850.
5. B. Ber 63b.
6. JV: "Also (af) my wisdom stood me in stead." But af can also mean "frenzy, ferment."
7. Yalkut, Eccles., §968.
8. JV: "My speech shall distill (tizzal) as the dew." But tizzal can also be construed as a form of the noun zol ("low in price").
9. Sif Deut., §307.
10. B. AZ 5b.
11. B. Ber 63b.
12. B. Sanh 100a.
13. JV: "Black (shehorot) as a raven (orev)." But here the commentator boldly associates shehorot with shaharit ("early morning") and orev with arevit ("evening").
14. On the raven's neglect of its young, see B. Ket 49b and B. BB 8a.
15. Implying that water plants could be cooked for food. B. Er 21b–22a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
16. B. Meg 6a.

R. Phinehas ben Yair inferred from the verse just cited: Zeal [in the study and practice of Torah] leads to fastidiousness; fastidiousness leads to cleanness; cleanness leads to holiness; holiness leads to humility; humility leads to fear of sin; fear of sin leads to pious conduct; pious conduct leads to the holy spirit; the holy spirit leads to the resurrection of the dead; the resurrection of the dead leads to Elijah the Prophet, ever mentioned on good occasions.[1]

93. R. Eleazar says: Be diligent in studying Torah . . . and know in whose Presence you toil.[2]

94. R. Eliezer said: If all seas were ink, all reeds quills, heaven and earth scrolls, and all men scribes, they would not suffice to write down the amount of Torah I have learned, even though I abstracted no more from it than a man might take by dipping a painting stick in the sea.

So, too, R. Joshua said: If all seas were ink, all reeds quills, heaven and earth sheets of parchment, and all men scribes, they would not suffice to write down the amount of Torah I have learned, even though I abstracted from it no more than a man might take by dipping a painting stick in the sea.

R. Akiva said: As for me, I am in no position to say what my teachers[3] said. For, in fact, my teachers did abstract something, while I have abstracted no more than one who smells [the fragrance of] an etrog—he who smells it benefits, while the etrog itself is not diminished—or than one who fills his pitcher from a canal or kindles one lamp from another.[4]

95. Once, as Ben Azzai sat expounding Scripture, fire was flashing around him. They went and told R. Akiva, "Master, Ben Azzai sits and expounds, while fire flashes around him." R. Akiva went to Ben Azzai and said, "I hear that while you have been expounding, fire was flashing around you." Ben Azzai: "Yes." R. Akiva: "Were you perhaps discussing the innermost secrets of the divine chariot?" Ben Azzai: "No. But I was sitting and stringing words of Torah with one another, and words of Torah with words of the Prophets, and words of the Prophets with words of the Writings, and the words were as full of joy as when they were given at Sinai, as sweet as at the time of their first utterance. And were they not at their first utterance uttered in fire?"[5]

96. R. Hanina ben Hakinai and R. Simeon ben Yohai went to study Torah with R. Akiva in Bene Berak and remained there thirteen years. R. Simeon ben Yohai used to send home for news and so knew what was happening in his home. But R. Hanina ben Hakinai [did not send home for news], so he did not know [anything about his home]. Finally, his wife sent word to him: "Your daughter has come of age. Come back and get her married." So he got leave from R. Akiva and went home. Upon his return, he found that the lanes of his city had changed so much that he did not know how to get to his house. What did he do? He sat down on the bank of the river, where he heard the voices of young girls calling to one of them, "Daughter of Hakinai, fill your pitcher and let's go." He said: It is clear that this young girl is of my family. He followed her and entered his house unannounced. His wife was sitting and sifting flour. When she raised her eyes and became aware of him, her soul left her. At that, he said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, this poor woman—is such to be her recompense?" He entreated mercy for her, and her soul returned to her body.[6]

97. R. Hama bar Bisa went away [from his home] and spent twelve years at a house of study. When he returned, he said: I will not do what Ben Hakinai did. So he entered the [local] house of study and stayed there, while he sent word to his home [that he was back]. Just then his son R. Oshaia happened to walk into the house of study and sit down before him. R. Hama proceeded to ask him about some rulings in Halakhah. Seeing how sharp he was in the relevant traditions, R. Hama[7] became quite depressed as he said to himself: Had I remained home, I also might have had such a son. When R. Hama finally entered his home, his son also happened to walk in. R. Hama, believing that the young man wished to inquire about some other rulings in Halakhah, stood up in deference to him. At this, R. Hama's wife asked, "What father stands up for his own son?"

Rami bar Hama then recited the verse "A threefold cord is not quickly broken" (Eccles. 4:12), the threefold cord being [young] R. Oshaia, his father R. Hama, and his grandfather Bisa.[8]

98. R. Joseph son of Rava was sent by his father to the house of study to study with R. Joseph [the Elder], and it was arranged that he stay there six years. After three years passed, and the eve of the Day of Atonement came, the son said: I will go and see the members of my household. When the father heard of his son's coming, he picked up a stick and went out to meet him. "Are you here because you thought of [your wife, whom you call] your [little] pigeon?" They fell to quarreling, and neither was able to eat the final meal before the fast.[9]

99. There was a certain heretic who saw Rava utterly engrossed in his studies, with his hand under his leg, which pressed down so hard that his finger spurted blood. The heretic exclaimed: You precipitous people, who put your mouth before your ears.[10] You continue to be precipitous. You should have listened first to determine

---

1. Elijah is the herald of the Messiah and the Day of Judgment. Song R. 1:1, §9; P. Shab 1:3, 3c.
2. Avot 2:14.
3. R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.
4. Song R. 1:3, §1.
5. Song R. 1:10, §2.
6. B. Ket 62b; Lev. R. 21:8.
7. Who did not recognize him after twelve years and thought that he was some other man's son.
8. B. Ket 62b.
9. B. Ket 63a.
10. The heretic refers to Israel's having said "We will do," before saying, "We will listen." See Exod. 24:7.

whether you could accept the commandments. And if not, not accept them. Rava replied: Of us who walk in integrity, Scripture says, "The integrity of the upright shall guide them" (Prov. 11:3). But of those [like you] who walk in perversity, Scripture says, "The perverseness of the treacherous shall destroy them" (ibid.).[1]

100. "Attend and hear, O Israel: this day thou art become a people unto the Lord thy God" (Deut. 27:9). Was it on this day that the Torah was given to Israel? Was not this day in fact forty years after the Torah was given? However, the verse intends to teach you that, to those who study Torah, it is as beloved every day as the day when it was given from Mount Sinai.[2]

101. Hour after hour, words of Torah are loved as much by those who study them as when they first made their acquaintance with them.[3]

102. "Her breasts will satisfy thee at all times" (Prov. 5:19). Why are words of Torah likened to a breast? As with a breast, however often the infant feels it, he finds milk in it, so, too, with words of Torah—whenever a man meditates on them, he finds savor in them.

"With love for her wilt thou be ravished always" (Prov. 5:19),[4] as happened to R. Eleazar ben Pedat. It is said of R. Eleazar ben Pedat that he would sit in the lower marketplace of Sepphoris, while his linen cloak lay abandoned in Sepphoris's upper marketplace.

R. Isaac ben Eleazar related: Once a man was about to take it, but he found a venomous serpent lying [as guard] upon it.[5]

103. "And let them be like fish" (Gen. 48:16). Fish, though they grow in water, nevertheless, when a drop [of rain] falls from above, leap for it thirstily as if they had never tasted water in their lives. So, too, Israel: though brought up in the waters of Torah, nevertheless, when they hear a new exposition of it, they receive it thirstily, as though they had never before heard a word of Torah in their lives.[6]

104. We have been taught that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: When I went to R. Eleazar ben Shammua to have my learning examined (others say: to sound the learning of R. Eleazar ben Shammua), I found Joseph the Babylonian, whom R. Eleazar cherished exceedingly, seated before him. Joseph asked, "Master, what is the law if one has slaughtered an offering intending to leave the blood's sprinkling for the morrow?" "The blood is valid," R. Eleazar replied. The next morning he again replied, "It is valid." At midday he again replied, "It is valid." In the afternoon he replied, "It is valid." In the evening, however, he replied, "It is valid, but R. Eliezer declares it invalid." At that, the face of Joseph the Babylonian brightened. R. Eleazar: "Joseph, it seems to me that we did not get our traditions straight until now." "Quite so, master," he replied, "quite so. For R. Judah taught me that such blood is invalid; but when I went around among all his disciples to find the same opinion, I could not find any.[7] Now that you teach me that according to R. Eliezer, too, such blood is invalid [you provide me with another opinion in agreement with R. Judah's] and thus restore to me words of Torah I thought I had lost." R. Eleazar ben Shammua's eyes filled with tears of joy and he exclaimed, "Happy are you, O disciples of the wise, to whom the words of Torah are so dear!" He then said that Joseph might justly declare, "O how I love Thy Torah! It is my meditation all the day" (Ps. 119:97).[8]

105. R. Abbahu went to Caesarea and from there returned to Tiberias, his face shining. When R. Yohanan's disciples saw him, they came and told R. Yohanan, "R. Abbahu has found a treasure!" R. Yohanan asked, "How do you know?" They replied, "Because his face is shining." He said, "Perhaps he has heard a new interpretation of Torah." When R. Abbahu came in to see him, R. Yohanan asked him, "What new interpretation of Torah have you heard?" R. Abbahu replied, "Something in an ancient Tosefta."

R. Yohanan applied to him the verse "A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine" (Eccles. 8:1).[9]

106. A heretic who saw R. Judah bar Ilai with his face aglow said, "One of three things must be true of that man: either he is drunk with wine, or he lends money upon interest, or he raises swine."[10] R. Judah bar Ilai, overhearing the heretic's remark, said to him, "May the breath of life in that man be blown out of him, for not one of these things is true of me. I do not lend money upon interest. I do not raise swine. Both activities are prohibited to Jews. Nor am I drunk with wine. Even the four cups of wine I drink on the eve of Passover make my head ache from Passover to the Feast of Weeks." The heretic asked, "Why then is your face aglow?" He replied, "It is Torah that makes my face shine, as is written, 'A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine' " (Eccles. 8:1).[11]

107. Abbaye said: May good come to me, because whenever I see a disciple of the wise complete a tractate, I declare it a festal day [for all the sages].[12]

108. How do we know that a blessing is to be spoken over the reading of the Torah? R. Ishmael said: By infer-

---

1. B. Shab 88a–b.
2. B. Ber 63b.
3. B. Er 54b.
4. Or: " 'Because of love for her, thou makest a fool of thyself,' leaving both cloak and wares unattended." So Rashi, ad loc.
5. B. Er 54a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. Gen. R. 97:3.
7. And I therefore thought that I must have been mistaken in what I believed R. Judah had said, since his other disciples had not heard it.
8. B. Men 18a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. P. Shab 8:1, 11a; Eccles. R. 8:1, §4; PR 14:10.
10. Both immensely profitable occupations.
11. P. Shab 8:1, 11a; Eccles. R. 8:1, §4; PR 14:10.
12. Abbaye was head of the academy of Pumbedita. B. Shab 118b–119a.

ence. If a blessing must be pronounced over an occasion that brings temporal life, all the more so by far over the reading of the Torah, which brings life eternal.[1]

Torah for Its Own Sake

109. R. Eleazar said: What is signified in the verse "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and the Torah of loving-kindness is on her tongue" (Prov. 31:26)? Is there a Torah of loving-kindness and another Torah not of loving-kindness? What the verse means is that Torah studied for its own sake is a "Torah of loving-kindness," while Torah studied not for its own sake [for an ulterior motive] is a Torah not of loving-kindness.[2]

110. We have been taught: The verse "That thou . . . mayest love the Lord thy God, to hearken to His voice, to cleave unto Him" (Deut. 30:20) means that one should not say, "I will read Scripture so that I may be called 'sage,' I will recite Mishnah so that I may be called 'master,' I will study so that I may be designated an elder and have a seat in the academy." Rather, study out of love, and honor will come in the end.

R. Eleazar ben R. Zadok said: Do good deeds for the doing's sake, and speak of words of Torah for their own sake. Do not use them as a crown to magnify yourself with, or as a spade to hoe with. The foregoing may be confirmed by inference: if Belshazzar, who made use of the sacred vessels only after they had been profaned, was rooted out of the world, how much more so by far he who turns to his own use the crown of Torah, the crown whose holiness abides and endures forever.[3]

111. R. Zadok said: Make them not a crown to magnify yourself with, nor a spade to dig with. Even so Hillel was wont to say, "He who makes [unworthy] use of the crown of Torah shall perish." Hence, you are to conclude: anyone who derives benefit from words of Torah removes his life from the world.[4]

112. R. Meir said: He who occupies himself with Torah for its own sake acquires many boons. More: the entire world is under obligation to him. He is called [God's] companion, [God's] beloved, one who loves Him who is everywhere, one who loves his fellow men, one who gladdens Him who is everywhere, one who gladdens his fellow men. The Torah clothes him with humility and fear of God, and fits him to be virtuous and devout, upright and faithful. It keeps him far from sin and draws him near to the doing of good deeds. Men are aided by his counsel, sagacity, understanding, and strength. It gives him a regal appearance, a manner that commands respect, and the capacity to be searching in judgment. Secret meanings of the Torah are revealed to him, and he becomes a fountain that never ceases and a stream that gathers strength. With it, he is modest, long suffering, and forgiving of personal slight. The Torah makes him great and exalts him above all of God's works.[5]

113. R. Alexandri said: He who studies Torah for its own sake makes peace in the household above and in the household below. Rav said: It is as though he built the Temple above and the Temple below. R. Yohanan said: He shields the whole world, all of it, [from the consequences of sin]. Levi said: He also brings redemption nearer.[6]

114. R. Jeremiah said in the name of R. Eleazar: When two disciples of the wise sharpen each other['s wit] through discussion of Halakhah, the Holy One gives them success, for Scripture says, "In thy majesty [va-hadarekha] be successful" (Ps. 45:5). Read not va-hadarekha, but va-hadadekha, "thy sharpening."

Moreover, they rise to greatness, as is said, they "ride on prosperously" (Ps. 45:5). One might have supposed that this is so even when the discussion in Halakhah is not for its own sake. Therefore the verse goes on to say, "In behalf of truth" (ibid.). One might have supposed that this is so even if the disciple of the wise becomes arrogant. Therefore the verse goes on to speak of "meekness and righteousness" (ibid.).[7]

115. We have been taught that R. Banaah used to say: He who occupies himself with Torah for its own sake—the Torah he masters becomes an elixir of life for him. But he who occupies himself with Torah not for its own sake—the Torah becomes for him a deadly poison.[8]

116. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: A man should in any case occupy himself with Torah and its precepts, even if it be not for their own sake, for as he occupies himself with them not for their own sake, he will end up occupying himself with them for their own sake.[9]

They Who Teach Torah and the Ways of Study

117. R. Ishmael said: He who studies in order to teach is afforded adequate means both to study and to teach.[10]

118. R. Yohanan said: He who studies Torah but does not teach it is like a myrtle in the wilderness [from which no one benefits]. Some report the saying as follows: He who studies Torah and teaches it in a place where there are no disciples of the wise[11] is like a myrtle in the wilderness, which is particularly precious, because whoever wishes to take instruction from him can do so.[12]

---

1. B. Ber 48b.
2. B. Suk 49b.
3. B. Ned 62a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. Avot 4:5.
5. Avot 6:1.
6. B. Sanh 99b.
7. B. Shab 63a.
8. B. Ta 7a.
9. B. Naz 23b.
10. Avot 4:5.
11. That is, no mature students, but students eager to learn.
12. B. RH 23a.

119. In expounding the verse "Thine ointments have a goodly fragrance" (Song 1:3), R. Nahman son of R. Hisda said: To what may a disciple of the wise be compared? To a flask containing spikenard ointment. When it is opened, its fragrance goes forth; but when it is covered up, its fragrance does not go forth.[1]

120. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Whoever withholds a Halakhah from a disciple is as though he had robbed him of his ancestral heritage, as is said, "Moses commanded us the Torah, which is the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob" (Deut. 33:4). Ever since the six days of creation, it has been the heritage of all Israel.

P. Hana bar Bizna said in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: When a man withholds a Halakhah from a disciple, even fetuses in their mothers' wombs curse him.

And when a man does teach a disciple, what is his reward? He will merit blessings like Joseph's, said R. Sheshet, for it is written, "Blessings shall be upon the head of a mashbir [of him that purveyeth]" (Prov. 11:26). The word mashbir can refer only to Joseph, of whom it is said, "Joseph was ha-mashbir [he that purveyed food] to all the people of the land" (Gen. 42:6).[2]

121. Citing the verse "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand" (Eccles. 11:6), R. Akiva said: If you raised up many disciples when you were young, do not sit back and raise no others when you are grown old. Indeed, this happened to R. Akiva, who when young had three hundred disciples, all of whom died. Had he not raised seven more disciples when he grew old, he would not have left even one disciple spoken of as his.[3]

122. We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: He who studies Torah but does not teach it is one who "despiseth the word of the Lord" (Num. 15:31).[4]

123. "Though wealth and riches [Torah] are in his house, his generosity endureth forever" (Ps. 112:3). R. Huna and R. Hisda differed in their interpretation of this verse. One said: It applies to a man who studies Torah and teaches it to others. The other said: It applies to a man who writes out the Five Books, the Prophets, and the Writings, and lends these scrolls to others.[5]

124. "Such as have none to take their place[6] fear not God" (Ps. 55:20). R. Yohanan and R. Joshua ben Levi differed concerning the implication of this verse. One said: It refers to a man who has no son. The other said: It refers to a man who leaves no disciple.[7]

125. "And thou shalt teach them diligently to thy sons"[8] (Deut. 6:7)—to your disciples. And so you find in ever so many instances that disciples are called "sons," as in "Ye are the sons of the Lord your God" (Deut. 14:1) and in "The sons of the prophets . . . come forth" (2 Kings 2:3). Were these really sons of the prophets? Were they not in fact disciples? Hence it follows that disciples are called "sons." Thus you also find that Hezekiah king of Judah, who taught the entire Torah to Israel, called them "sons," as in "My sons, be not now negligent" (2 Chron. 29:11). And even as disciples are called "sons," so is the teacher called "father," as in "Elisha saw it, and he cried: 'My father, my father' " (2 Kings 2:12) and in "Now Elisha was fallen sick . . . and Joash the king of Israel came down unto him, and wept over him, and said 'My father, my father' " (2 Kings 13:14).[9]

126. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: When a man teaches Torah to his neighbor's son, Scripture speaks of him as though he had begotten him. Thus it says, "These are the generations of Aaron and Moses" (Num. 3:1), and right after that, "These are the names of the sons of Aaron" (Num. 3:3). This tells you that although Aaron begot them, nevertheless, because Moses taught them, they are [also] called after the name of Moses.[10]

127. Where is the proof that he who teaches Torah to his fellow man is deemed as though he had formed him, articulated his limbs, and brought him into the world? The verse "If thou bringest forth the noble out of that which is worthless, thou shalt be as My mouth" (Jer. 15:19).

Whoever brings even one person under the wings of the Presence is deemed as though he had formed him, articulated his limbs, and brought him into the world.[11]

128. R. Joseph bar Honi said: A man envies everyone except his son and his disciple. One's son, as shown by the example of Solomon;[12] and one's disciple, as shown by Elisha's saying to Elijah, "I pray thee, let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me" (2 Kings 2:9); or, if you prefer, Moses' giving of his spirit to Joshua: "He laid his hands upon him, and commissioned him" (Num. 27:23).[13]

129. He who teaches his neighbor's son Torah will earn the merit of sitting in the academy on high, for Jeremiah is told, "If thou wilt cause [Israel] to repent, then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt stand before Me" (Jer. 15:19). And he who teaches Torah to the son of an unlearned man [am ha-aretz]—even if the Holy One has issued an evil decree [against him], He will annul it because of what he is doing, as is said, "If thou bringest forth the noble out of that which is worthless, thou shalt be as My mouth" (ibid.).[14]

---

1. B. AZ 35b.
2. B. Sanh 91b–92a.
3. Tanhuma, Hayye Sarah, §6; Tanhuma B, Hayye Sarah, §8.
4. B. Sanh 99a.
5. B. Ket 50a.
6. JV: "Such as have no changes."
7. B. BB 116a.
8. There is no duty to teach Torah to daughters.
9. Sif Deut., §34.
10. B. Sanh 19b.
11. Tos Hor 2:7.
12. David's servants came to David and said, "God make the name of Solomon better than thy name!" (1 Kings 1:47), and they were not fearful that David might resent it.
13. B. Sanh 105b.
14. B. BM 85a.

130. Be heedful of the children of the unlearned, for out of them Torah proceeds.[1]

131. Once Rav came to a certain place where, though he had decreed a fast, no rain fell. Presently a reader [in the synagogue] stepped down in front of Rav before the Ark and recited, "He causeth the wind to blow," and the wind blew; then, "He causeth the rain to fall," and rain fell. Rav asked him: What is your occupation? He replied: I am a teacher of young children, teaching Scripture to children of the poor as well as to children of the rich. From him who cannot afford it, I take no payment. Besides, I have a fishpond, and I bribe with fish any boy who refuses [to study] until he comes in to study Scripture.[2]

132. Be heedful of the children of the poor, for out of them Torah proceeds.[3]

133. "Behold, I have taught you statutes and ordinances" (Deut. 4:5). Even as I have taught for free, so you are to teach for free. One might think this applies also to Scripture and its Aramaic translation. But Moses speaks of "statutes and ordinances"—you are to teach statutes and ordinances for free, but you are not expected to teach Scripture and its Aramaic translation for free.[4]

134. "Behold, I have taught you statutes and ordinances, even as the Lord my God commanded me" (Deut. 4:5). Even as I teach for free, said R. Judah, citing Rav, so you should teach for free. And the proof that if you do not find someone who will teach for free, you must be ready to pay for being taught? The verse "Buy the truth" (Prov. 23:23). And the proof that one may not say, "Even as I learned the Torah by paying, so shall I teach it for payment"? [The complete verse] "Buy the truth, but do not sell it" (ibid.).[5]

135. Raise up many pupils.

The school of Shammai says: A man is to teach only one who is wise, humble, of good stock, and rich.

But the school of Hillel says: Every man is to be taught. For there were many transgressors in Israel who were attracted to the study of Torah, and out of them sprang righteous, pious, and worthy men. What parable may illustrate the matter? The one of a woman who sets a hen to brood on eggs—out of many eggs, she may hatch only a few chicks; but out of a few eggs, possibly not even one.[6]

136. R. Hanina bar Papa pointed to a [seeming] contradiction between two verses, one saying, "Unto him that is thirsty, bring ye water" (Isa. 21:14), and the other saying, "Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye for water" (Isa. 55:1). The solution is: If the disciple is worthy, "Unto him that is thirsty, bring ye water"; but if he is not, then, "Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye for water."

R. Hanina bar Hama pointed to another [seeming] contradiction between two verses, one saying, "Let thy springs be dispersed abroad" (Prov. 5:16), and the other, "Let them be only thine own" (Prov. 5:17). The solution is: If the disciple is worthy, "Let thy springs be dispersed abroad"; but if he is not, "Let them be thine own."[7]

137. R. Zera said in the name of Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]: When a man teaches a disciple who is unworthy, he is as much of an idolater as one who tosses a pebble on a statue of Mercury, as is said, "As a pebble upon a statue of stones,[8] so is he that giveth honor to a fool" (Prov. 26:8), "honor" here meaning Torah, as in the verse "The wise shall inherit honor" (Prov. 3:35).[9]

138. Our masters taught: Always, while your left hand repulses, make your right hand draw near. Not like Elisha, who repulsed Gehazi with both hands, and not like Joshua ben Perahiah, who repulsed Jesus with both hands.[10]

139. Hillel the Elder said: When scholars keep [the Torah] to themselves, you must disseminate [it]; and when they disseminate [it], you may keep [it] to yourself.[11] When you see that the Torah is beloved by Israel and all rejoice in it, spread it abroad, as is said, "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth" (Prov. 11:24). But when you see that the Torah is forgotten in Israel and that the generality give it no heed, keep it to yourself, as is said, "It is time to work only for the Lord, when they make void Thy Torah" (Ps. 119:126).[12]

140. R. Simeon ben Yohai taught: If you see whole villages of people that have been plucked up from their place in the Land of Israel, know that it is because they failed to provide fees for teachers of Scripture and teachers of Mishnah. And the proof? The words "Wherefore is the Land perished?" (Jer. 9:11), which are followed directly by "Because they have forsaken My Torah" (Jer. 9:12).[13]

141. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: The name of that man, Joshua ben Gamla, should always be mentioned on good occasions. But for him, the Torah would have been forgotten in Israel. Formerly, if a child had a father [living], his father taught him Torah; if he had no father, he did not learn Torah. By what verse did they guide themselves? By the verse "Ye shall teach them to your children" (Deut. 11:19), which they read, "Ye shall teach, even ye,[14] [to your children]. Then it was ordained that

---

1. B. Sanh 96a.
2. B. Ta 24a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. B. Ned 81a.
4. A father is expected to teach the basics to his own son. P. Ned 4:3, 38a.
5. B. Bekh 29a.
6. Avot 1:1; ARN 2; ARNB 4.
7. B. Ta 7a.
8. The word margemah, found only here, has been variously rendered. The Vulgate follows the rabbinic interpretation, namely, that a shrine of Mercury is referred to.
9. B. Hul 133a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. B. Sot 47a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. Do not endeavor to compete.
12. Tos Ber 7:24; B. Ber 63a.
13. P. Hag 1:7, 76c.
14. The word otam ("them") is read attem ("even ye," "you yourselves").

teachers of young children should be set up in Jerusalem. By what verse did they guide themselves? By the verse "The Torah shall go forth out of Zion" (Isa. 2:3). Even so, if a child had a father, the father would take him up to Jerusalem and have him taught; if he had no father, the child would not go up and study. Then it was ordained that teachers of youths be set up in each district and that youths enter school at the age of sixteen or seventeen. But when a teacher was annoyed with one of them, that one would rebel against the teacher and leave school. So Joshua ben Gamla came along and ordained that teachers of little children be set up in each district and in each town, and that children enter school at the age of six or seven.[1]

142. "And they that turn the many to righteousness shall be as the stars" (Dan. 12:3). These are teachers of young children. Such as who, for example? Such, Rav said, as R. Samuel bar Shilat.

Rav once found R. Samuel bar Shilat standing in his garden patch. Rav asked him, "Have you given up the task entrusted to you?" R. Samuel replied, "I have not looked at this patch for thirteen years, and even at this moment my thoughts are with the children."[2]

143. Rav advised R. Samuel ben Shilat: Do not accept a child before the age of six. After that age, accept him, and stuff Torah into him as though he were an ox [to be fattened].

Rav also advised R. Samuel ben Shilat: When you spank a child, use only the thongs of a sandal. He also advised: The bright child who is quick to learn will learn to read quickly [by himself]; and the one who is not quick—seat him next to one who is.[3]

144. Rava said: The maximum number of pupils to be assigned to each teacher of little children is twenty-five. If there are fifty children, two teachers are to be appointed. If there are forty, the teacher should be given an assistant to be paid by the city.

Rava also said: If there is a teacher of children who studies just enough to keep up with them, and there is another who studies more than enough, do not remove the first, lest the second become indolent. Rather, said R. Dimi of Nehardea, if the first were allowed to continue, the second would be likely to exert himself even more, for "the jealousy of scribes increases wisdom."

Rava further said: If there are two teachers, one of whom covers much ground but is not exact, and the other is exact but does not cover much ground, the one who covers ground but is not exact is to be appointed. And the reason? In time, mistakes correct themselves. However, R. Dimi of Nehardea maintained that the one who is exact and does not cover much ground is to be appointed. The reason? A mistake once implanted [in a mind] stays. That this is so can be shown from the following verse: "Joab and all Israel remained until he had cut off every male in Edom" (1 Kings 11:16). When Joab came before David, David asked him: Why have you acted thus [killed only the males]? Joab replied: Because it is written, "Thou shalt cut out the males [zekhar] of Amalek" (Deut. 25:19). David: But we read, "The remembrance [zekher] of Amalek." Joab: I was taught to read zekhar ["male"]. He then went to his teacher and asked: How did you teach me to read it? The teacher: Zekhar ["male"]. At that, Joab seized a sword to kill him. The teacher: Why? Joab: Because it says, "Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord negligently" (Jer. 48:10). The teacher: Let me be. It is enough that I am to be cursed. Joab: But the verse goes on to say, "Cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood" (ibid.). Some say Joab did kill him. Others say that he did not.[4]

145. When you teach your son, teach him from a corrected scroll.[5]

146. Hillel said: An impatient man is not fit to be a teacher.[6]

147. A Persian came to Rav and said, "Teach me the Torah." Rav consented and said to the Persian, "Say alef." The Persian: "Who says this is alef? Perhaps this is not an alef." Rav: "Say bet." The Persian: "Who says this is bet?" At that, Rav scolded him and drove him out in anger. He then went to Samuel and said, "Teach me the Torah." Samuel: "Say alef." The Persian: "Who says this is alef?" Samuel: "Say bet." The Persian: "Who says this is bet?" Samuel then grabbed the Persian's ear. The Persian: "My ear, my ear!" Samuel: "Who says this is your ear?" The Persian: "Everybody knows this is my ear." Samuel: "The same way everybody knows this is alef and that is bet." At that, the Persian kept quiet and accepted the instruction.

Hence, "the patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit" (Eccles. 7:8).[7]

148. Rava said: If you see a student whose studies come as hard to him as iron, it is because his teacher does not encourage him.[8]

149. R. Perida had a pupil to whom he had to repeat his lesson four hundred times before he was able to learn it. One day R. Perida was invited to a religious celebration; that day also R. Perida kept repeating the lesson, but the student did not learn it. R. Perida: "Why are you different today?" The student: "The moment the master was told, 'There is a religious celebration,' my attention wandered, for I kept saying to myself: The master is about to get up and leave, the master is about to get up and leave." R. Perida: "Pay attention now, and I will teach you [once more]." He repeated the lesson another four hundred times, and the student learned it.

---

1. B. BB 21a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. B. BB 8b.
3. B. BB 21a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. B. BB 21a–b.
5. B. Pes 112a.
6. Avot 2:5.
7. Eccles. R. 7:8, §1.
8. B. Ta 7b–8a.

Then a divine voice came forth and said, "Do you prefer that four hundred years be added to your life, or that you and your generation merit life in the world-to-come?" R. Perida: "I prefer that I and my generation merit life in the world-to-come." The Holy One said, "Give him the one and the other as well."[1]

150. "And the Lord spoke to Moses of facet after facet" (Exod. 33:11).[2] According to R. Isaac, the Holy One said to Moses: Moses, both of us—I [to you] and you [to Israel]—are to make clear Halakhah's varying facets. But according to others [who read the verse "face to face"], the Holy One said to Moses: Moses, even as I showed you a cheerful face [to encourage you to study Torah], so you are to show a cheerful face to Israel [to encourage them to study Torah].[3]

151. R. Hanina bar Papa said: The Holy One appeared to Israel with an awe-inspiring face, with an equanimous face, a friendly face, a joyous face. With an awe-inspiring face for Scripture—when a man teaches his son Scripture, he should teach it in the spirit of awe; an equanimous face for Mishnah; a friendly face for Talmud; a joyous face for Aggadah.[4]

152. We have been taught: "Make them known unto thy children and thy children's children" (Deut. 4:9). Directly after that it is said, "The day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb" (Deut. 4:10). Even as at Sinai it was with awe and fear, with trembling and trepidation, so in teaching, it should be with awe and fear, with trembling and trepidation.[5]

153. Before beginning his discourse to the sages, Rabbah used to say something humorous in order to amuse them. After that, he sat down and with awe began to discourse on Halakhah.[6]

154. Once, while R. Akiva was in the teacher's chair expounding Scripture, the assembly became drowsy. Wishing to stir them awake, he said: Why did Esther think she deserved to rule one hundred and twenty-seven provinces? Because, [R. Akiva suggested], Esther, being a descendant of Sarah, who lived one hundred and twenty-seven years, [thought that she] should come and rule one hundred and twenty-seven provinces.[7]

155. As Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] was in the teacher's chair expounding Scripture, the assembly became drowsy. Wishing to stir them awake, he said, "A woman brought forth six hundred thousand in a single birth." There was a certain disciple there, named R. Ishmael son of R. Yose, who asked, "Who can that have been?" Rabbi [Judah] replied, "That was Jochebed, who bore Moses, deemed equal to six hundred thousand of Israel."[8]

156. Our masters taught: What procedure was followed at instruction in the Oral Torah? Moses learned from the mouth of the Almighty. Then Aaron entered, and Moses taught him his lesson. Aaron then moved aside and sat down at Moses' left. Then Aaron's sons entered, and Moses taught them their lesson. The sons then moved aside, Eleazar taking his seat at Moses' right and Ithamar at Aaron's left. Then the elders came in, and Moses taught them their lesson. After the elders moved aside, all the people came in, and Moses taught them their lesson. It follows that Aaron heard the lesson four times, his sons three times, the elders twice, and the people once. At this time Moses left, and Aaron taught them his lesson. Then Aaron left, and his sons taught them their lesson. Then the sons left, and the elders taught them their lesson. It thus follows that everybody heard the lesson four times. From the aforementioned procedure, R. Eliezer inferred: It is a man's duty to repeat a lesson to his pupil four times, a practice that may be deduced by an argument a fortiori: if Aaron, who learned from Moses, and Moses, who learned [directly] from the Almighty, had to have their lesson repeated four times, all the more so by far an ordinary pupil who learns from an ordinary teacher.

But R. Akiva said: How do we know that a man must keep repeating a lesson to his pupil until he has taught it to him? From the verse "And teach thou it to the children of Israel" (Deut. 31:19). And the proof that the lesson must be so put to them that they get a systematic grasp of it? The verse "Put it in their mouths" (ibid.). And the proof that the various facets of meaning must be set forth? The verse "These are the ordinances which thou shalt set forth in the facets of their meaning"[9] (Exod. 21:1). "Thou shalt set before them" (Exod. 21:1)—set these ordinances before them as a table is set, just as Scripture says, "Unto thee it was shown, that thou mightest know" (Deut. 4:35).[10]

157. What purpose was served by the empty spaces that occur from time to time in the written text of Scripture?[11] To give Moses time to reflect between one passage and the next, between one subject and the next. This is a matter that may be inferred a fortiori: if he who hears words from the mouth of the Holy One and himself speaks with the holy spirit requires reflection between one passage and the next, between one subject and the next, how much more by far is reflection required by one who is a mere commoner taught by another commoner.[12]

---

1. B. Er 54b.
2. JV: "face to face." But the implication that God has a face being inadmissible stimulates the two comments that follow.
3. B. Ber 63b.
4. See above, part 1, proem, §19. Tanhuma B, Yitro, §17; Yalkut, Exod., §286.
5. B. Ber 22a.
6. B. Pes 117a.
7. Gen. R. 58:3.
8. Song R. 1:15, §3.
9. JV: "set forth before them [lifnehem]." But lifnehem may also mean facets, or meaning and reasons for the commandments.
10. B. Er 54b and En Yaakov, ad loc; Mek, Mishpatim, Nezikin, 1.
11. Passages that begin at the beginning of a line are called petuhot (open); those beginning in the middle of a line are called setumot (closed). Each such passage is preceded by empty space, which contains only the letter pe for petuhah or the letter samekh for setumah.
12. Sif Lev. 1:1 (ed. Weiss, p. 3c).

158. It is said in the name of R. Meir: A teacher should always teach in as few words as possible. Thus we have been taught that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: It is known and manifest to Him who spoke and the world came into being that unclean animals outnumber those that are clean; therefore Scripture enumerates only the clean. On the other hand, it is known and manifest to Him who spoke and the world came into being that clean birds outnumber those that are unclean; therefore Scripture enumerates only the unclean.[1]

159. Our masters taught: "Ve-shinnantam ['Make them sharp']" (Deut. 6:7)[2]—see to it that words of Torah are sharply and readily articulated in your mouth, so that if a man inquires of you about a certain matter, you will not have to hem and haw before answering him, but you will be able to answer him at once. As is said, "Say unto wisdom: 'Thou art my sister,' and call understanding thine intimate friend" (Prov. 7:4); and, "Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them; they shall not be put to shame, when they speak with their enemies in the gate" (Ps. 127:5).[3]

160. R. Yohanan ben Torta once came before R. Akiva, who said to him, "Stand up and read the portion of the week." R. Yohanan replied, "But I have not yet gone over it." The sages said that he was right to refuse.[4]

161. "And God spoke all these words, saying" (Exod. 20:1). The Torah teaches you: if you are a man of learning, do not be so arrogant as to say something in front of an assembly before you have made the matter clear to yourself by going over it two or three times.

It happened to R. Akiva that the sexton of the synagogue publicly invited him to read the Torah before the congregation, but he refused to go up. His disciples asked him: Our master, did you not teach us: "That is thy life, and the length of thy days" (Deut. 30:20)? Why then did you refuse to go up [to the dais]? R. Akiva replied: By the [Temple] worship, it was not that I refused to read the Torah portion. I did not go up because [I was not prepared for it]. I had not gone over the portion carefully two or three times. For a man is not allowed to read a portion of Scripture in public unless he has made its words thoroughly clear to himself by going over them two or three times. We find this to be so even in the Holy One, who has given the capacity of speech to all mortals and to whom the Torah is as clear as a star [in heaven]. Yet of Him, when He was about to give the Torah to Israel, Scripture says, "Then He did see it, and declare it; He prepared it thoroughly, and searched it out" (Job 28:27). And only after that, Scripture says, "Unto man He said" (Job 28:28). So, too, it is written, "And the Lord spoke all these words" (Exod. 20:1)—spoke them first to Himself; and only after that, "saying" (ibid.) to Israel.[5]

162. R. Abbahu said: What is the proof that a master should not sit on a couch teaching a disciple who sits crouched on the ground? From the verse "But as for thee, do thou stand here by Me" (Deut. 5:28).

Our masters taught: From the days of Moses until Rabban Gamaliel, Torah was studied only while standing. But after Rabban Gamaliel died, feebleness came down upon the world, and they began to study Torah while seated. Indeed, this is what we conclude from the saying "Ever since Rabban Gamaliel died, adequate honor ceased to be given to the Torah."[6]

163. Avtalion said: O sages, be careful with your words, lest you be condemned to exile[7] and be exiled to a place of evil waters,[8] and the disciples who follow you [into exile] drink of them and die [spiritually], with the result that the Name of Heaven will be profaned.[9]

They Who Study Torah and the Ways of Study

164. Resh Lakish said in the name of R. Judah [II] the Patriarch: The world endures only because of the breath of schoolchildren. R. Papa asked Abbaye: what about my breath and yours [the breath of men who have given themselves to Torah]? Abbaye answered: The breath of one who now has sin is not like the breath of one who is still without sin.

Resh Lakish said in the name of R. Judah [II] the Patriarch: One may not neglect schoolchildren even in order to erect the Temple.

Resh Lakish also said to R. Judah [II] the Patriarch: I have a tradition from my forebears (according to some, [Resh Lakish said]: from your forebears) that a city that has no children at school will be destroyed.[10]

165. R. Meir said: When Israel stood before Mount Sinai to receive the Torah, the Holy One said to them: By the [Temple] worship, I am about to give you the Torah. But you must [first] give Me good sureties that you will keep it, and then I will give it to you. They replied: Master of the universe, our patriarchs will be sureties for us, our prophets will be sureties for us. The Holy One: These also require sureties for their own persons. You yourselves must bring Me better sureties, and I will give it to you. Israel: Behold, our children will be surety for us. The Holy One: Certainly these are excellent sureties. On account of them will I give you the Torah.[11]

166. R. Hamnuna said: Jerusalem was destroyed only because teaching children at school had ceased, as is said, "Pour it [God's wrath] out upon the children in the street"

---

1. See Lev. 11 and Deut. 14. B. Hul 63b.
2. JV: "Thou shalt teach them diligently."
3. B. Kid 30a–b.
4. Exod. R. 40:1.
5. Tanhuma, Yitro, §15.
6. B. Meg 21a.
7. By the Sadducees in power.
8. Of heretical teachings—a place such as Alexandria.
9. Avot 1:11.
10. B. Shab 119b.
11. Song R. 1:4, §1.

(Jer. 6:11). Why "Pour it out"? Because "children [are] in the street" and not at school.[1]

167. "And it came to pass [va-yehi][2] in the days of Ahaz the son of Jotham" (Isa. 7:1). What occasion for woe was there in this instance? The answer may be provided by the parable of a king who turned over his son to a tutor, who hated the son. So he said: If I slay him right away, I will forfeit my head to the king. Instead, I will withdraw his wetnurse,[3] and he will presently die naturally. Ahaz said the same thing: If there are no kids, there will be no he-goats. If there are no he-goats, there will be no flocks. If there are no flocks, there will be no shepherd. If there is no shepherd, there will be no world [for people will have no food]. So Ahaz said to himself: If there are no little ones, there will be no disciples. If there are no disciples, there will be no sages. If there are no sages, there will be no elders. If there are no elders, there will be no prophets. If there are no prophets, there will be no holy spirit. If there is no holy spirit, the Holy One will not cause His Presence to rest upon Israel. What did Ahaz do? He sealed up all synagogues and houses of study. This is implied in the words "Bind up the testimony, seal up instruction among My disciples" (Isa. 8:16). When everyone saw that Ahaz had seized [ahaz] synagogues and houses of study, they began crying, "Woe, woe!"[4]

168. R. Abba bar Kahana said: Among the nations of the world there have risen no philosophers like Balaam son of Beor and Oenomaus of Gadara.[5] When all the nations came to them and asked, "Can we take on this nation of Israel in battle?" they replied, "Go out and make the rounds of their synagogues and houses of study. If you come upon children within them, chirping away in their childish voices, you will be unable to take on this nation in battle. For what [Isaac] their father promised to his descendants was this: 'Either the voice of Jacob; or else the hands—the hands of Esau' (Gen. 27:22).[6] As long as the voice of Jacob is heard in synagogues and houses of study, the hands will not be the hands of Esau. But if not, 'the hands will be the hands of Esau,' that is, you will be able to take them on in battle."[7]

169. Every day an angel goes out from the presence of the Holy One to destroy the world and to turn it back to what it used to be. But once the Holy One observes young children in their schools and disciples of the wise in their houses of study, His anger immediately turns into mercy.[8]

170. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: What is meant by "Touch not Mine anointed ones, and do My prophets no harm" (Ps. 105:15)? "Touch not Mine anointed ones"—children in school; "and do My prophets"—disciples of the wise—"no harm."[9]

171. R. Judah son of R. Simon said: Come and see how beloved children are before the Holy One. When the ten tribes were banished, the Presence did not go into exile with them. When Judah and Benjamin were banished, the Presence did not go into exile with them. When the Sanhedrin was banished, the Presence did not go into exile with it. When the priestly watches on duty were banished, the Presence did not go into exile with them. But when schoolchildren were banished, the Presence did go into exile with them. Scripture refers to this in the verse "Her young children are gone into captivity before the adversary" (Lam. 1:5), which is followed at once by "Gone is from fair Zion all her splendor" (Lam. 1:6).[10]

172. "I went down into the garden of nuts" (Song 6:11)—this is the world; "to look at the green plants of the valley" (ibid.)—these are Israel; "to see whether the vine had blossomed" (ibid.)—this is synagogues and houses of study; "and the pomegranates were in flower" (ibid.)—these are young children who sit occupied with Torah and are arrayed in row upon row, like the seeds of a pomegranate.[11]

173. The sages said to R. Joshua ben Levi: Today some young children came to the house of study and told us things[12] the likes of which had not been said even in the days of Joshua son of Nun:

Alef bet means "Learn wisdom (alef binah)."

Gimmel dalet means "Be kind to the poor (gemol dallim)." Why is the foot of the gimmel stretched toward the base of the dalet? Because it is the way of the benevolent to run after the poor [to help them out].

And why is the foot of the dalet stretched toward the gimmel? Because the poor must make himself available to the benevolent.

And why is the face of the dalet averted from the gimmel? Because help must be given in secrecy, so that the poor will not be humiliated by the presence of the giver.

He and vav are two letters that form [part of] the [Ineffable] Name of the Holy One, blessed be He.

Zayin, het, tet, yod, kaf, lamed: If you act thus [as commanded], the Holy One will sustain (zan) you, be gracious (han) to you, show goodness (metiv) to you, give you a heritage (yerushah), and bind a crown (keter) about your head in the world-to-come (le-olam ha-ba).

The open mem and the closed [final] mem signify that one utterance [in Scripture] may be open and another may be closed [esoteric].[13]

---

1. B. Shab 119b.
2. The word va-yehi is taken to suggest an occasion for woe (vay).
3. In the East, children are nursed years longer than in the West.
4. P. Sanh 10:2, 28b; Gen. R. 42:3; Lev. R. 11:7.
5. A cynic philosopher of Gadara in the Land of Israel who lived during the reign of the emperor Hadrian (117–38 C.E.).
6. JV: "The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau."
7. Gen. R. 65:20; Lam. R., proem 2.
8. Ka R. 2.
9. B. Shab 119b.
10. Lam. R. 1:5, §32.
11. Song R. 6:11, §1.
12. About the Hebrew alphabet, which they had just learned.
13. And inquiry into it may be forbidden. See above, part 1, chap. 2, §1–3.

The bent nun and the upright [final] nun mean that he who is faithful (ne'eman) when bent with suffering [in this world] will be made upright [in the world-to-come].

Samekh and ayin stand for "Uphold the poor (semokh aniyyim)." (Others say: The two letters stand for "Devise [aseh] mnemonics [simmanim] in Scripture and thus commit it to memory.")

The bent pe and the [final] open pe signify that there are times when the mouth (peh) should be open and times when it should stay closed.

The bent tzade and the erect [final] tzade signify that while in this world the righteous man (tzaddik) is bent down, in the world-to-come he will be enabled to stand erect.

Kof signifies "holy (kadosh)." Resh signifies "wicked (rasha)."

Why is the face of the kof averted from the resh? Because the Holy One says, "I cannot bear looking at the wicked."

And why is the upper tip on the crown over the kof turned toward the resh? Because the Holy One says: If the wicked (rasha) repents, I will bind a crown over his head like the crown over the kof.

And why is the leg of the kof detached from its upper part? To show that when the wicked man (rasha) repents, he can enter through the opening between the two parts of the kof.

Shin stands for "falsehood (sheker)," and tav for "truth" (emet). Why do the letters of sheker in the alphabet closely follow one another, while the letters of emet are far apart?[1] Because falsehoods follow close upon one another, while truth is encountered only at intervals far apart.

And why does sheker (falsehood) stand on one leg,[2] while emet, (truth) is made up of the letters alef, mem, and tav, which have [solid] bricklike bases?[3] Because truth stands firmly; falsehood does not.[4]

174. R. Assi said: Why are young children started with [Leviticus], the Torah of priests, and not with Genesis? Because the Holy One said: Young children are pure and offerings are pure—let them who are pure engage themselves with matters of purity.[5]

175. Elisha ben Avuyah used to say: When a man learns Torah while young, the words of Torah are absorbed into his very blood and issue from his mouth in explicit form. But when a man learns Torah in his old age, the words of Torah are not absorbed into his blood and do not issue from his mouth in explicit form. Hence the proverb: If you did not long for them in your youth, how do you expect to attain them in your old age?

He also used to say: When a man learns Torah in his youth, what may he be compared to? To ink written on a clean sheet. When a man learns in his old age? To ink written on a sheet from which the original writing has been erased.[6]

176. R. Nehorai used to say: When a man learns Torah in his youth, he may be compared to dough that has been kneaded with warm water.[7] When a man learns Torah during his advanced years, he may be compared to dough that has been kneaded with cold water.[8]

177. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: When a man learns Torah while young, he is like a young man who has married a virgin—she is right for him and he is right for her; she feels passion for him and he feels passion for her. But when a man of advanced years studies Torah, whom may he be compared to? To a man of advanced years who has married a virgin—she may be right for him, but he is not right for her; she may feel passion for him, but he shies away from her.[9]

178. At the age of three, a child is ready for the letters of the alphabet.[10]

179. Judah ben Tema used to say: At the age of five, [a child is ready] for Scripture. At ten, for Mishnah. . . . At fifteen, for Talmud.[11]

180. A pupil who shows no discernible advance in his studies after five years is not likely ever to show it. R. Yose asserted: After three years, for it is said, "To be taught the learning and the language of the Chaldeans . . . they are to be trained three years" (Dan. 1:4–5).[12]

181. "His delight is in the Torah of the Lord" (Ps. 1:2). Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: A man learns well only that part of the Torah which delights him, for the verse implies, "[The part of] the Torah of the Lord a man delights in [becomes his]."

Levi and R. Simeon Berabbi were seated before Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] and were expounding verses of Scripture. When the book they were at was finished, Levi said: Let the book of Proverbs be brought. R. Simeon Berabbi said: Let the book of Psalms be brought. Levi was overruled, and the book of Psalms was brought. When they got to the verse "His delight is in the Torah of the Lord," Rabbi, expounding it, said: A man learns well only that part of the Torah which delights him. At that, Levi said: Master, you have just now given me permission to get up and leave.[13]

---

1. The alef at the beginning, the mem in the middle, and the tav at the end.
2. The long stroke of kof, the second letter of the sheker, extends below the line, so the word looks as if it is standing on one leg.
3. Both the alef and the tav rest on two legs, while the mem has a horizontal bar as its base.
4. B. Shab 104a.
5. Lev. R. 7:3; Yalkut, Tzav, §479.
6. ARN 24; Avot 4:20.
7. And stays together.
8. It does not stay together. ARN 23.
9. Ibid.
10. Midrash cited by Darkhe Moshe on Tur Yoreh Deah, §245. See also Tanhuma, Kedoshim, §14.
11. Avot 5:21.
12. B. Hul 24a.
13. B. AZ 19a.

182. Resh Lakish said: If you see a disciple whose studies are as hard as iron for him, it is because he has not arranged his study in systematic fashion. What is his remedy? To attend the sessions of the sages more regularly.[1]

183. R. Ammi said: What is signified by the verse "It is a pleasant thing if thou keepest them in thy belly; then they will be established altogether upon thy lips" (Prov. 22:18)? When are words of Torah "pleasant"? "When you guard them within your inmost being [in your belly, so to speak]." And when may you be said to keep them within your inmost being? When they are "established altogether upon thy lips."[2]

184. Beruriah [wife of R. Meir] once came upon a disciple who merely whispered the words while studying. She reprimanded him sharply. Is it not said, "If ordered in all parts, then sure" (2 Sam. 23:5)? If what you study is "ordered" [reverberates] in the two hundred and forty-eight parts of your body, "it is sure." If not, it is not sure.

R. Eliezer ben Jacob had a disciple who merely whispered the words while studying. After three years, he forgot his learning.[3]

185. Samuel said to R. Judah: You may be a keen scholar. Nevertheless, when you read Scripture, speak out When you repeat Mishnah, speak out, so that you may retain what you study, for Scripture says, "They are life to those that find them" (Prov. 4:22). Read not, "To those that find them (motz'ehem)," but, "To those that enunciate them clearly with their mouths (motzi'ehem)."[4]

186. R. Yohanan said: As certain as a formal covenant is the assurance that he who studies Aggadah from a book will not soon forget it, for Scripture says, "Thou wilt not forget the things which thine eyes saw" (Deut. 4:9).[5]

187. R. Shefatiah said in the name of R. Yohanan: When a man reads Scripture without its cantillation or recites Mishnah without its tune, [his not singing Scripture or Mishnah with love all but implies, says God, that] "I gave them statutes that they do not find pleasing, and ordinances they will not live by" (Ezek: 20:25).[6]

188. When words of Torah come out from the mouths of those who utter them in the way they should, the words are sweet to those who hear them. But when they come out indistinctly, they are bitter to those who hear them.[7]

189. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: He who utters words of Torah so that they are not sweet to those who hear them would do better not to utter them at all.[8]

190. Rava said: One should always study Torah first, then meditate upon it. For Scripture says, "His delight is in the Torah of the Lord" (Ps. 1:2), and only after that, "And in His law doth he meditate" (ibid.).

Rava also said: A man should keep studying, even though he forgets, even though he does not quite understand what he is studying, for it is said, "My soul breaketh up for the longing that it hath unto Thy ordinances at all times" (Ps. 119:20). The psalm says, "Breaketh up," and not, "Grindeth thoroughly."[9]

191. The systematic arranger of traditions is more highly regarded than the dialectician.[10]

192. R. Judah said: A man should always gather words of Torah in the form of general principles and bring them forth as specific details. For if he gathers them as specific details, they will so weary him that he will find himself helpless. A parable of a man who, when about to go to Caesarea, needed one or two hundred zuz for expenses. If he took them in the form of one-zuz coins, they would so wear him out that he would be helpless. But if he changes the zuz into [large coins]—sela or gold denars—and then, as needed, changes them back into zuz, he can spend them whenever he wishes.[11]

193. R. Hisda said: The Torah can be acquired only by mnemonic signs, for it is said, "Put it (simah) in their mouths" (Deut. 31:19). Read not simah, "put it," but simanah, "its mnemonic signs."[12]

194. "See, and remember" (Num. 15:39). Seeing assures remembering.[13]

195. All words of Torah need one another, for what one word closes, another opens.[14]

196. The sages taught in the name of R. Nehemiah: "She is like the merchant ships; she bringeth her food from afar" (Prov. 31:14). Words of Torah that are meagerly expressed in one passage [are illumined by] a related passage in which their meaning is richly set forth.[15]

---

1. B. Ta 7b–8a.
2. By your clear and systematic utterance of them. B. Er 54a.
3. B. Er 53b–54a.
4. B. Er 54a.
5. P. Ber 5:1, 9a.
6. B. Meg 32a.
7. P. Sanh 10:1, 28a.
8. Exod. R. 41:5.
9. In the verse as construed, the intellect (soul) is compared to a mill and is seen as satisfied by merely breaking up the kernels of grain without turning them into fine flour. B. AZ 19a.
10. P. Hor 3:5, 48c.
11. Sif Deut., §306 (ed. Finkelstein, p. 336).
12. B. Er 54b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
13. B. Men 43b.
14. Tanhuma B, Hukkat, §52.
15. The verse "And the Lord spoke unto Moses and unto Aaron, and gave them a charge unto the children of Israel" (Exod. 7:13) is "meager," because the nature of the charge is not indicated. But this verse, it should be noted, follows another in which Moses is commanded to tell Pharaoh to let the children of Israel go out of servitude. The rich meaning of the "meagerly expressed" passage becomes clear when it is read together with the account of the Judeans who, despite a solemn covenant, brought back into servitude the slaves they had freed (Jer. 34:8–12). This "covenant" is taken to refer to the "charge unto the children of Israel" given by Moses. Thus a "meager" passage is illumined by a related passage "rich" in import. P. RH 3:5, 58d.

197. "As the small rain upon the tender grass" (Deut. 32:2). As the light rain coming down upon tender blades of grass stirs them up so that they do not become wormy, so must you keep stirring the memory of words of Torah, in order not to forget them. Thus R. Jacob son of R. Hanina said to Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]: Come, let us stir up Halakhot, lest our memory of them become rusty.[1]

198. R. Hiyya bar Abba, expounding Scripture in the name of R. Yohanan, said: "Whoso keepeth the fig tree shall eat the fruit thereof" (Prov. 27:18). Why are words of Torah likened to the fig tree? As with the fig tree, the more one tends it, the more figs one finds on it, so with words of Torah: the more one studies them, the more relish one finds in them.[2]

199. He who repeats his chapter one hundred times does not compare to him who repeats it a hundred and one times.[3]

200. R. Joshua ben Korhah said: He who studies Torah and does not go over what he has studied is like a man who sows but does not reap.

R. Joshua also said: He who studies Torah and forgets it is like a woman who bears a child and buries it.

R. Akiva said: Chant it every day, chant it every day![4]

201. R. Dostai bar Yannai said in the name of R. Meir: When a man forgets a single word of what he has studied, Scripture deems it as though he had forfeited his life, for it is said, "Only take heed to thyself and keep thy soul diligently, that thou forget not the things thine eyes saw" (Deut. 4:9). One might have inferred that this is so even when study proves too difficult for him. Hence Scripture goes on to say, "That they be not removed from thy heart all the days of thy life" (ibid.)—a man forfeits his life only if he deliberately removes words of Torah from his heart.[5]

202. Elisha ben Avuyah used to say: A man may study Torah for twenty years and forget it in two. How? If he sits idly for six months without reviewing [what he has learned], he will find himself declaring that which is unclean clean and that which is clean unclean. If he is idle for twelve months without reviewing, he will find himself mixing up the names of the sages. If he is idle for eighteen months without reviewing, he will forget the substance of whole tractates he had studied. If he is idle for twenty-four months without reviewing, he will forget the substance even of individual chapters. Now, since he has declared what was unclean clean and what was clean unclean, mixed up the name of one sage with another, and forgot the substance of whole tractates he studied and the substance of individual chapters he studied, in the end he will be compelled to sit in silence. Of him, Solomon said, "I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding; and lo, it was all grown over with thistles, the face thereof was covered with nettles, and the stone wall thereof was broken down" (Prov. 24:30–31). Once the wall collapses, the entire vineyard, all of it, goes to rack and ruin.[6]

203. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: In the Scroll of the Pious[7] the following was found: "If you leave me [Torah] for one day, I will leave you for two." These words may be illustrated by the parable of two men who set out, one from Tiberias and the other from Sepphoris, and met at an inn. Then, not long after they separated, one had walked a mil [one way] and the other had walked a mil [the other way], so that they found themselves two mil apart from each other. Or by the parable of a woman who was waiting for a man. As long as he intended to wed her, she sat waiting for him. But once his interest in her waned, she went and wed another.[8]

204. "Gold and glass cannot equal it; neither shall the exchange thereof be vessels of fine gold" (Job 28:17). This refers to words of Torah, which are as expensive to acquire as vessels of gold or vessels of fine gold and are as fragile as vessels of glass.[9]

205. Words of Torah are like garments of Milesian wool.[10] Even as garments of Milesian wool are not readily acquired and are easily torn, so words of Torah are not readily acquired and are easily forgotten. Words of folly, on the other hand, are like a garment made of sackcloth: even as a garment of sackcloth is readily acquired but not easily torn, so words of folly are readily acquired but difficult to forget.[11]

206. Why are words of Torah likened to water, wine, and milk? Because just as these three liquids may become unfit for consumption only through inattention,[12] so words of Torah are forgotten only through inattention.[13]

207. It is harder to retain in memory something old than to commit to memory something new; the former is like trying to make [new] cement out of [old] cement.[14]

208. It is said in the name of R. Huna: What is meant by the verse "Wealth gotten in bundles (ḥevel)[15] shall be diminished, but he that gathereth little by little shall in-

1. Sif Deut., §307.
2. B. Er 54a–b.
3. B. Hag 9b.
4. B. Sanh 99a–b.
5. Avot 3:8.
6. ARN 24.
7. Apparently a work no longer extant.
8. P. Ber 9:8, 14d.
9. B. Hag 15a.
10. The city of Miletus used to be a center of trade in wool.
11. ARNB 31.
12. By not covering them.
13. B. Ta 7a–b.
14. It is hard to dissolve it and use it again. B. Yoma 29a.
15. JV: "Wealth gotten by vanity (hevel)." But the word hevel ("vanity") is read as though spelled ḥevel, ("bundle"). "The idea, I suppose, is of studying several biblical books or mishnaic tractates at the same time, instead of taking up one book or tractate at a time, digesting it thoroughly, and only then proceeding to the next" (Leon Nemoy).

crease" (Prov. 13:11)? When a man acquires his Torah bundle by bundle [much at a time], his learning diminishes; but if little by little, it increases. Rava said: The sages are fully aware of this counsel, yet they disregard it. R. Nahman bar Isaac said: I acted in keeping with this counsel, and what I learned stayed with me.

R. Dimi said: He who studies by the right method may be compared to a fowler. If he breaks the wings of each bird as he captures it, his catch is secure. Otherwise, it is not.[1]

209. "For it is no vain thing for you; because it is your life, and through this thing ye shall prolong your days upon the Land" (Deut. 32:47). What you suppose to be a vain thing is in fact your very life. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: There is a parable of two brothers who saved money out of what their father had given them. One, after accumulating small coins adding up to a denar, spent them and found himself with nothing. The other, after accumulating small coins adding up to a denar, set them aside and after a while found himself a rich man. So it is with a disciple of the wise. He studies two or three matters a day, two or three chapters a week, two or three weekly portions a month. After a while he finds himself a "rich" man. To him apply the words "He that gathereth little by little shall become rich" (Prov. 13:11). But he who says, "Am I to study today? I prefer studying tomorrow. Am I to recite Mishnah today? I prefer to do so tomorrow"—such a man finds that he has nothing. To him applies the verse "He who sleepeth during the harvest is an incompetent" (Prov. 10:5).[2]

210. "Whoso keepeth the fig tree shall eat the fruit thereof" (Prov. 27:18). Why is the Torah likened to a fig tree? Because the fruit of most trees, such as the olive tree, the vine, and the date palm, is gathered all at once, while the fig tree's fruit is gathered little by little. So it is with the Torah. One studies a little each day and eventually learns much, because the Torah is not to be learned in one or even two years.[3]

211. "It is to be cleared away as heaps" (Song 5:11).[4] R. Hanin of Sepphoris applied the verse to what is done with a mound of earth. What does one who is slow witted say? "Who," he says, "can ever clear away such a mound?" But what does he who is intelligent say? "I will clear away two basketfuls today and two basketfuls tomorrow, until I have cleared it away entirely." So also he who is slow witted says, "How can I learn the entire Torah—Nezikin with its thirty chapters,[5] Kelim with its thirty chapters?"[6] But what does he who is intelligent say? "I will study two Halakhot today and two Halakhot tomorrow, until I have learned the entire Torah, all of it."

R. Yannai cited: "Wisdom seems unattainable to the fool; hence he is unable to open his mouth in the gate" (Prov. 24:7). A parable of a loaf of bread hanging high up in a house. He who is dull witted will say, "Who can possibly bring down this loaf?" But an intelligent man says, "Did not somebody hang it up? So I will get a ladder or a long stick and bring it down." So, too, a dull-witted man says, "Who can possibly learn the Torah that is in the heart of a sage?" But an intelligent man says, "Did not the sage also learn it from another person? So I will study two Halakhot today and two tomorrow, until I learn the entire Torah, all of it.

R. Levi said: There is a parable of a feed bag with a hole in it, and its owner hires workmen to fill it with water. The dull-witted worker will say, "Of what avail is my labor? If I put water in at this end, it will flow out of the other." But the intelligent worker says, "Do I not get paid for each and every jug of water I pick up?" So, too, the dull-witted man will say, "Of what avail is my labor? If I do study Torah, I will only forget it." But the intelligent man says, "Does not the Holy One give me a reward for each and every effort I make?"

The sages said: The foolish man enters a synagogue, and when he sees people there engaged in Torah, he asks, "How does a man begin to learn Torah?" They tell him: First a man reads from a [beginners'] scroll, then he reads from one of the Five Books, then from the Prophets, then from the Writings. After he finishes Scripture, he studies Talmud, then Halakhot, then Aggadot. Upon hearing such a list, the dull-witted man says, "When can I learn all of this?" and departs from the gate of the synagogue. Such is the thrust of "He openeth not his mouth in the gate" (Prov. 24:7).[7]

212. "Better is a handful of quietness, than both the hands full of labor and striving after wind" (Eccles. 4:6). R. Isaac said: Better is he who studies two divisions of Mishnah and is familiar with them than he who studies Halakhot and is not familiar with them.[8]

Better is he who leases one field, manures it, and hoes it than he who leases many fields and leaves them untilled.[9]

213. R. Sheshet used to go over his studies every thirty days. Then he would stand up, lean upon the bar of the doorway, and say, "Rejoice, O my soul, rejoice, O my soul! For your sake I have read Scripture, for your sake I have studied Mishnah.[10]

---

1. B. Er 54b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. Sif Deut., §48.
3. Num. R. 21:15.
4. JV: "His locks are curled." The word kevutzotav ("his locks") is construed as a nominal form of ktzh ("to clear away") and taltalim ("curls") as another form of telulit, ("heap" or "mound").
5. At one time the three tractates Bava Kamma, Bava Metzia, and Bava Batra which are now separate tractates, comprised one tractate known as Nezikin.
6. The first tractate in the division of Toharot, the sixth division of the Mishnah.
7. Lev. R. 19:2; Deut. R. 8:3; Song R. 5:11, §2.
8. Perhaps the laws in the six divisions of the Mishnah, So Etz Yosef.
9. Lev. R. 3:1; Yalkut, Eccles., §971.
10. Being blind, R. Sheshet was under no obligation to perform any commandments. Hence his study of Torah qualified him for no reward. Accordingly, he said: Not to seek reward, but for Torah's own sake—for the sake of his soul—did he persist in his studies. So Hayyim Zundel Makkaby as quoted in Hyman, Toledot Tannaim ve-Amoraim 3:1232. B. Pes 68b.

214. R. Tanhum said: He who thinks through what he studies will not quickly forget it. And the proof? The verse "Thou wilt not forget the things which thine eyes saw" (Deut. 4:9).[1]

215. Pause and consider that the way of the Holy One is not at all like the way of flesh and blood. The way of flesh and blood: something may be put into an empty vessel, but nothing can be put into a full vessel. But with the Holy One it is not so. More may be put into a full vessel, but nothing may be put into an empty vessel. For it is said, "If hearkening, thou wilt hearken" (Exod. 15:26). If you hearken [to learning], you will continue to hearken. But if not, you will be unable to hearken.

Another explanation: If you hearken to the old,[2] you will continue to be able to hearken to what is new. But if your heart turns away, you will not be able to hearken again.[3]

216. R. Nahman bar Isaac said: Study of Halakhot requires clarity of mind as [perfect as the clarity of light on] a day when the north wind blows.

Abbaye said: Even if my [foster] mother had said to me no more than "Bring me the kuttah (porridge)," I would have been rendered unable to study.[4]

Rava said: If a louse bit me, I would have been rendered unable to study.

Seven garments, one for each of the seven days of the week, were made for Mar[5] son of Ravina by his mother.[6]

217. A disciple was seated before R. Yose, who was explaining a matter that the disciple could not comprehend. Finally R. Yose asked him, "Why can't you grasp the matter?" The disciple: "Because I am away from my home." R. Yose: "Where do you come from?" "From Gobat-Shammai." "What is its climate?" "When a child is born, we crush juicy grapes and smear them on his head so that mosquitoes will not eat him up." R. Yose: "Blessed be He who inspires the inhabitants of a place with love for it."[7]

218. R. Hiyya bar Adda was seated before Rav, who was explaining a matter to him, but he could not comprehend it. Finally, Rav asked him, "Why can't you grasp the matter?" The disciple replied, "Because my she-ass is about to foal, and I am afraid that she may catch cold and die."[8]

219. Hillel said: A bashful person is not apt to learn.[9]

220. R. Giddol said in the name of Rav: When a disciple of the wise sits before his master, and his lips do not tremble in anxiety and awe[10]—those lips deserve to be scorched.[11]

221. Is a lesson in Gemara to be recited merely as a singsong?[12]

222. When Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] is engaged with one tractate, you are not to question him about another.[13]

223. Happy is the disciple whose master concedes that he is right.[14]

224. R. Judah said, "The night was created only for sleep." "Still," R. Simeon ben Lakish rejoined, "moonlight was created only for study."

When R. Zera was told, "The traditions you report are stated immaculately," he would reply, "They are the result of daytime study."

When R. Hisda's daughter asked her father, "Don't you wish to take a short nap?" he would reply, "Soon days that are both long and short[15] will come, and I shall have ample time to sleep."

R. Nahman bar Isaac said: We are meant to be daytime workers.

When R. Aha bar Jacob had to borrow [time ordinarily devoted to study during the day], he repaid [it during the night].[16]

225. Resh Lakish said: When a man occupies himself with Torah in the night, the Holy One extends to him a thread of grace during the day, as is said, "By day the Lord will command His loving-kindness, and in the night His song shall be with me" (Ps. 42:9). Why will "the Lord command His loving-kindness by day"? Because "His song is with me in the night."[17]

226. R. Zera said: If a man dozes off in the house of study, his knowledge will become raggedy,[18] for it is said, "Drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags" (Prov. 23:21).[19]

227. There are four types of disciples: quick to learn and quick to forget—his gain is dissipated in his loss; slow to comprehend and slow to forget—his loss is offset by his gain; quick to comprehend and slow to forget—that

---

1. P. Ber 5:1. 9a.
2. If you keep on going over it.
3. B. Ber 40a.
4. He found the least distraction disturbing.
5. Mar was usually used as a title of honor: "Sir, master"; it is not clear whether it was used also as a proper name (cf. Jastrow, p. 834).
6. So that he would feel completely clean and thus be induced to study. B. Er 65a.
7. Gen. R. 34:15.
8. Gen. R. 20:6.
9. One must have the determination to ask questions. Avot 2:5.
10. Literally, "drop bitterness."
11. B. Shab 30b; B. Pes 117a.
12. Whether or not correct. B. Betz 24a.
13. B. Shab 3b.
14. B. Ber 32a.
15. Long in quantity, but short in quality, since one cannot study in the grave.
16. B. Er 65a.
17. B. AZ 3b.
18. He will forget much of it.
19. B. Sanh 21a.

is a good portion; slow to comprehend and quick to forget—that is a bad portion.[1]

228. There are four types of those who sit before the sages: a sponge, a funnel, a strainer, and a sieve. The sponge absorbs everything. The funnel lets in at one end and lets out at the other. The strainer lets out the wine and retains the lees. The sieve lets out the powdery stuff and retains the good flour.[2]

229. Be like a deep pit, which holds its water; like a cylinder lined with pitch, which preserves the wine in it; and like a sponge, which absorbs everything.[3]

230. R. Judah said: Be careful in study, for an inadvertent error in study amounts to deliberate wrong.[4]

231. "This stumbling block is under thy hand" (Isa. 3:6). A man does not fully understand words of Torah until he has stumbled over them.[5]

232. "But the Lord hath not given you a heart to know . . . until this day" (Deut. 29:3). Rabbah said: From this verse it follows that it may take forty years before one truly knows the mind of one's master.[6]

233. "My doctrine shall drop as the rain" (Deut. 32:2). Even as the same rain falling upon various trees gives to each a special savor in keeping with its species—to the vine the savor of grapes, to the olive tree the savor of olives, to the fig tree the savor of figs—so the words of Torah are the same, yet within them are Scripture, Mishnah, and Midrash of Halakhot and Aggadot.

"Like droplets of rain upon the tender grass" (Deut. 32:2). Even as droplets of rain come down upon tender blades of grass and cause them to rise up—some green, some red, some black, and some white—so do words of Torah affect human beings. Some become savants, some men of worth, some sages, some righteous men, and some saintly men.[7]

234. Lest you say, "I will read a difficult portion and set the easy one aside," Scripture declares, "It is no vain thing for you" (Deut. 32:47). Lest you say, "I studied Halakhot and that is enough for me," Scripture declares, "Ye shall be mindful of this entire commandment" (Deut. 11:22). You are to study Midrash of both Halakhot and Aggadot.[8]

235. Our masters taught: Those who occupy themselves with Scripture earn merit in one respect and none in another;[9] with Mishnah, earn merit and receive reward for it; with Talmud—no merit is greater. Nevertheless, run to Mishnah more than to Talmud.[10]

236. "With bundles[11] thou shalt make thy war" (Prov. 24:6). R. Assi said in the name of R. Yohanan: In whom will you find [skill to prevail in] the "war" of Torah? In him who has many bundles of Mishnah.[12]

237. "Neither is there any peace for him that goes out or comes in" (Zech. 8:10). Rav said: When a man goes out of the realm of Halakhah into the realm of Scripture, he no longer has peace. Samuel said: The verse refers to one who leaves Talmud for Mishnah.[13] R. Yohanan said: It applies even to one who leaves one Talmud for the other.[14]

238. R. Banaah said: A man should always immerse himself in the study of all of Mishnah, for when he knocks, it will open [the door] to Talmud for him, if he wishes to study Talmud; or to Haggadah, if he wishes to study Haggadah. But, as R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi, the massive pier of iron [upon which all else rests] is Mishnah.[15]

239. "It is good that thou shouldst take hold of the one" (Eccles. 7:18)—that is, Scripture. "Yea, also from the other withdraw not thy hand" (ibid.)—that is, Mishnah.[16]

240. "Prepare thy work without" (Prov. 24:27)—that is, Scripture. "And make it ready for thee in the field" (ibid.)—that is, Mishnah. "And afterward build thine house" (ibid.)—that is, Talmud.[17]

241. R. Safra said in the name of R. Joshua ben Hananiah: A man should divide his daily study into three parts—a third for Scripture, a third for Mishnah, and a third for Talmud.[18]

242. R. Isaac ben Phinehas said: He who has command of Midrash [Aggadah] but not of Halakhot has not savored the taste of wisdom. He who has command of Halakhot but not of Midrash [Aggadah] has not savored the taste of revulsion from sin.

He also used to say: He who has command of Midrash but not of Halakhot is strong [in fear of Heaven], but without weapons [in meeting controversy]. He who has command of Halakhot but not of Midrash is weak [in fear of Heaven], but has the weapons [to meet controversy].

---

1. Avot 5:12.
2. Avot 5:15.
3. DEZ 1.
4. Avot 4:13.
5. B. Git 43a.
6. Moses was with Israel in the wilderness forty years. B. AZ 5b.
7. Sif Deut., §307; Yalkut, Haazinu, §942.
8. Sif Deut., §48 (ed. Finkelstein, p. 113).
9. Because Scripture cannot be understood without exposition.
10. For when a man has no command of the details set forth in Mishnah, he is incapable of participating in talmudic discussion. B. BM 33a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. JV: "With wise advice (tahbulot)." But the word may be associated with havilah ("bundle").
12. B. Sanh 42a.
13. The study of Talmud, which explains obscure or contradictory Mishnayyot, is also required for the proper understanding of Scripture.
14. The Palestinian for the Babylonian, or vice versa. B. Hag 10a.
15. Lev. R. 21:5.
16. Eccles. R. 7:18, §1.
17. B. Sot 44a.
18. B. Kid 30a.

He who has command of both the one and the other is strong and is also provided with proper weapons.[1]

243. Our masters taught: Rich in possessions and rich in popular acclaim—such is the master of Haggadot. Rich in money and rich in oil[2]—such is the master of dialectics.[3] Rich in products and rich in stores—such is the master traditions. All, however, are dependent on the master of wheat, that is, of Talmud.

R. Zera said in the name of Rav: The verse "All the days of the poor are evil" (Prov. 15:15) applies to the master of Gemara.[4] "But he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast" (ibid.) applies to the master of Mishnah.[5]

Rava reversed the applications of the verse, as R. Mesharsheya, quoting another verse, stated in Rava's name: "Whoso quarrieth stones shall be hurt therewith" (Eccles. 10:9) applies to masters of Mishnah. "And he that cleaveth wood is warmed thereby" (ibid.) applies to masters of Gemara.[6]

244. R. Isaac bar Judah used to attend Rami bar Hama's sessions, but then left him to attend R. Sheshet's sessions. One day Rami bar Hama met R. Isaac and said, "When the noble has taken you by the hand, do you suppose that the scent has been transferred into your hand? Because you went to R. Sheshet's sessions, do you think you will come to have a reputation like that of R. Sheshet?" R. Isaac replied, "That was not the reason. When I used to ask you a question, you would give me an answer based on logic. Then, when I found a Mishnah[7] [that taught contrariwise], your answer was refuted. But when I ask a question of R. Sheshet, he answers it with a [tannaitic] teaching, so that even if I find another passage in Mishnah that contradicts it, it is one [tannaitic] teaching against another.[8]

245. We have been taught that R. Ishmael said: He who wishes to be wise should occupy himself with the laws that concern disputes about money—no branch of Torah surpasses them, since they are like an ever-flowing fountain of instruction.[9]

246. "He meteth out the waters [of Torah] by measure" (Job 28:25). R. Yudan said in the name of R. Samuel: Even words of Torah—Scripture, Mishnah, Talmud, Halakhot and Aggadah—although given from above, were meted out only by measure. Thus, one man may have a capacity only for Scripture, another only for Mishnah, another only for Talmud, and still another only for Aggadah. Yet now and then there is one man who has the capacity for all of Torah.[10]

247. "One man among a thousand have I found" (Eccles. 7:28). In the way of the world, when a thousand men take up the study of Scripture, a hundred of them go on to Mishnah, ten of the hundred to Talmud, and one of the ten to decisions on questions of law. With regard to this, Scripture says, "One man among a thousand have I found."[11]

Teacher and Companion: Attending Upon [Sages in] Torah[12]

248. Rabban Gamaliel used to say: Provide yourself with a teacher, and thus remove yourself from doubt.[13]

249. A man who studies on his own is no match for one who studies with a teacher.[14]

250. R. Yohanan said: The verse "The lips of a priest keep knowledge—Torah should be sought from his mouth, if he is an angel of the Lord of hosts" (Mal. 2:7) means that if the teacher is like an angel of the Lord of hosts [if he dreads sin], Torah should be sought from his mouth; but if not, Torah should not be sought from his mouth.[15]

251. R. Yose bar Judah of Kefar ha-Bavli said: To whom is he who learns from the young to be compared? To one who eats unripe grapes or drinks new wine fresh from his vat. And to whom is he who learns from the old to be compared? To one who eats ripe grapes or drinks aged wine.

Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch][16] differed: Look not at the container, but at what is in it. A new container may be full of aged wine, while an old container may be empty even of new wine.[17]

252. "And he shall be like a tree transplanted by streams of water" (Ps. 1:3). Sages said in the name of the school of R. Yannai: The psalm speaks of "a tree transplanted,"

---

1. ARN 29.
2. Literally, "rich in sela and rich in [that which comes from] Tekoa."
3. "Who by his creative powers is continually able to establish new points and evolve new principles, thus making his knowledge as continually productive as the possession of money and choicest oils" (Isidore Epstein in BB, Soncino, p. 627, n. 6).
4. "Who is often in difficulty in finding his way through the maze of the involved and difficult argumentation" (Isidore Epstein in BB, Soncino, p. 672, n. 12).
5. Where teachings are clear and precise.
6. "The study of the Gemara affords a sensible appreciation of the principles of the teaching of the Mishnah, and thus enables the students to make practical applications of the Mishnah" (Isidore Epstein in BB, Soncino, p. 627, n. 18). B. BB 145b.
7. Or a Baraita.
8. A controversy, and I may choose to follow the first tannaitic teaching. B. Zev 96b.
9. B. Ber 63b; B. BB 175b.
10. Lev. R. 15:2.
11. Eccles. R. 7:28, §1.
12. "Personal attendance on scholars, constituting apprenticeship to them" (Avot, Soncino, p. 84, n. 11).
13. A scholar should seek out a greater authority, whom he is to consult in the event of doubt. Avot 1:16.
14. B. Ket 111a.
15. B. MK 17a.
16. "R. Meir" in BR is an error. It should read Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch].
17. Avot 4:27.

not of a tree planted in only one place, implying that he who learns from only one teacher will never see a sign of blessing.[1]

R. Hisda said to his [young] students, "I am about to tell you something, even though I fear that as a result you may leave me and go elsewhere: he who studies under only one teacher will never see a sign of blessing." His students did leave him and went to sit before Rabbah, who, however, explained to them that the saying applies only to matters requiring analysis. But as to matters that are to be committed to memory, it is better to learn them from only one teacher, lest the student be confused by differing versions taught by his several teachers.[2]

253. R. Meir used to say: To whom may he who learns Torah from only one teacher be compared? To a man who had a field, part of which he sowed with wheat, another part with barley; a third part he planted with olive trees, and a fourth part with trees bearing no edible fruit. That man will have an overflow of well-being and plenty. But when a man learns from two or three teachers, he may be compared to a man who has several fields, one sowed with wheat, another sowed with barley, a third planted with olive trees, and a fourth planted with trees bearing no edible fruit. This man, spread out in several areas, will have neither well-being nor plenty.[3]

254. R. Eliezer said: He who utters something he has not heard from his teacher causes the Presence to depart from Israel.[4]

255. A man must cite the exact language of his teacher.[5]

256. When a man cites a tradition in the name of the person who uttered it, he must speak as if that person were standing right before him.[6]

257. Joshua ben Perahiah said: Provide yourself with a teacher and get yourself a companion [to study with].

"Provide yourself with a teacher." For what reason? The saying implies that a man should provide himself with a single[7] teacher and study Scripture, Mishnah, and Midrash, Halakhot and Aggadot, with him. Then the interpretation the teacher neglected to tell him while studying Scripture, he will presently tell him while studying Mishnah; the interpretation he neglected to tell him while studying Mishnah, he will presently tell him while studying Midrash; the interpretation he neglected to tell him while studying Midrash, he will presently tell him while studying Halakhot; the interpretation he neglected to tell him while studying Halakhot, he will presently tell him while studying Aggadah.

"Get yourself a companion [to study with]." For what reason? This saying implies that a man is to get himself a companion who will eat with him, drink with him, read Scripture with him, study Mishnah with him, sleep next to him, and disclose all his secrets to him—secrets of Torah and secrets of worldly matters. Thus, when the two sit and occupy themselves with Torah, if one errs in Halakhah or in the substance of a chapter, or says of what is unclean that it is clean or of what is clean that it is unclean, of what is prohibited that it is permitted and of what is permitted that it is prohibited, his companion will bring him back [to right thinking], as is said, "Two are better than one, in that they have greater benefit from their labor" (Eccles. 4:9).[8]

258. R. Nehorai said: Go as a [voluntary] exile to a place of Torah, and do not suppose that the Torah will seek you out, for it is only your companions in study who can make it your permanent possession. And as for your own understanding, don't depend on it.[9]

259. "Attend (hasket), and you will understand" (Deut. 27:9). The word hasket is to be read as a composite of asu kittot kittot, "Form yourselves into many groups" and occupy yourselves with Torah, since its knowledge can be acquired only in companionship with others. Indeed, this is what R. Yose ben R. Hanina said: What is meant by "A sword is upon the boasters (baddim), and they shall become fools" (Jer. 50:36)? A sword—may such things happen to the enemies of the disciples of the wise—is upon those disciples of the wise who sit separately (bad be-vad) while studying Torah. What is more, they become dull witted, as is said, "And they shall become fools."[10]

260. R. Hama son of R. Hanina said: What is implied in the verse "Iron sharpeneth iron" (Prov. 27:17)? It tells you that just as one piece of iron sharpens another, so two scholars sharpen each other's mind by discussion of Halakhah.

Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said: Why are words of Torah likened to fire, as in the verse "Is not My word like as fire? saith the Lord" (Jer. 23:29)? To teach you that just as fire does not ignite of itself, so words of Torah do not abide in him who studies by himself.[11]

261. R. Nahman bar Isaac said: Why are words of Torah likened to a tree, as in the verse "She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her" (Prov. 3:18)? To teach you that just as a small tree may set a big tree on fire, so lesser scholars sharpen the minds of greater scholars. This agrees with what R. Hanina said: I have learned much from my teachers, and from my companions more than from my teachers, but from my disciples even more than from all the others.[12]

---

1. Will not achieve outstanding success.
2. B. AZ 19a–b.
3. Because he cannot provide proper care for each of his fields. ARN 8.
4. B. Ber 27b.
5. Ed 1:3.
6. B. Shek 7b.
7. Literally, "fixed, permanent."
8. Avot 1:6; ARN 8.
9. Avot 4:15.
10. B. Ber 63b.
11. B. Ta 7a.
12. Ibid.

262. A knife can be sharpened only on the side of another knife.[1]

263. Jealousy among scribes increases wisdom.[2]

264. "They shall not be ashamed when they speak with their enemies in the gate" (Ps. 127:5). What is meant by "With their enemies in the gate"? R. Hiyya bar Abba said: Even father and son or teacher and disciple occupied with Torah in the same gate [of the house of study] become "enemies" [as they dispute] with each other, yet they do not stir from there until they come to love each other.[3]

265. R. Samuel bar Nahmani asked R. Jonathan son of R. Eleazar, who was standing in a marketplace, "Teach me one chapter." R. Jonathan: "Go to the house of study and I will teach you there." R. Samuel: "But our master, did you not teach us, 'Wisdom crieth aloud in the street, she uttereth her voice in the broad places' (Prov. 1:20)?" R. Jonathan: "You may have read this verse, but you didn't understand it. What do you think is meant by 'Wisdom crieth aloud in the street'? It means, in the street of Torah. After all, where is a precious pearl sold? Is it not sold in its own street [of jewelers]? So it is with Torah, for Torah is to be taught in a street of its very own. What do you think 'She uttereth her voice in the broad places' means? It means in a place where room is made for her. And where is such room made for her? In synagogues and houses of study."[4]

266. We have been taught: If a disciple has to go into banishment,[5] his teacher should be banished with him, as is said, "That fleeing into one of those cities he might live" (Deut. 4:42). This means: Provide him with whatever he needs to live [including needs of the spirit]. R. Ze'era remarked: For this very reason it is said that a man should not teach a disciple who is unworthy.

R. Yohanan went even further: If a teacher is banished, his entire house of study should be banished with him.[6]

267. "The sluggard saith: 'There is a lion in the way' " (Prov. 26:13). When a sluggard is told, "Your teacher is in the city nearby; go and learn Torah from him," he replies, "But I fear the lion in the way—'There is a lion in the way.' " When he is told, "Your teacher is within your township; bestir yourself and go to him," he replies, "I fear that the lion may be in the streets—'Yea, a lion is in the streets' " (ibid.). When he is told, "Behold, your teacher is in his house," he replies, "If I go to his house, I am certain to find the door bolted." Then he is told, "But it is open; 'the door is turning upon its hinges' " (Prov. 26:14). At that point, when he is at a loss to reply, he says, "Whether the door is open or bolted, I want to sleep just a little longer." Hence: " 'How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard?' . . . Still the sluggard replies: 'Yet a little sleep' " (Prov. 6:9–10).[7]

268. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: A disciple's attending upon a sage in Torah is more valuable than the sage's direct teaching. For Scripture says, "Here is Elisha, the son of Shaphat, who poured water on the hands of Elijah" (2 Kings 3:11). The text does not say, "Who studied," but, "Who poured water." It thus implies that a disciple's attending upon a sage is more valuable than the sage's direct teaching.[8]

269. Yose ben Joezer of Tzeredah used to say: Make your house a meeting place for sages, be willing to be covered by the dust of their feet,[9] and drink in their words thirstily.[10]

270. Warm yourself before the fire of sages. But beware of their glowing coals, that you may not be singed. For their bite is the bite of a fox, their sting is the sting of a scorpion, their hiss is the hiss of a serpent, and all their words are like coals of fire.[11]

271. The Torah is all fire. It was given out of fire and it is like fire. What is the way of fire? When a man comes too close to it, he is scorched; when too far from it, he is chilled. So, too, a man should make certain that he is no more than warmed by the fire of the sages.[12]

272. If a man reads Scripture but does not study Oral Law, he is still standing outside [Torah's inner mysteries]; if he studies Oral Law but does not read Scripture, he is still standing outside; if he reads Scripture and studies Oral Law but does not attend upon the sages, he is like one from whom the inner mysteries of Torah remain hidden.[13]

Honoring Torah and Those Who Study It

273. R. Yose said: Whoever honors the Torah is himself held in honor by men, and whoever dishonors the Torah is himself held in dishonor by men.[14]

274. He who learns from his companion a single chapter, a single Halakhah, a single verse, a single expression, or even a single letter[15] should treat him with respect. For we find that although David, king of Israel, learned only two things from Ahithophel, yet he called him master—guide and teacher: "Thee, my guide and my teacher,

---

1. Gen. R. 69:2.
2. B. BB 21a.
3. B. Kid 30b.
4. Tanhuma, Be-hukkotai, §3; Tanhuma B, Be-hukkotai, §3.
5. For manslaughter.
6. B. Mak 10a.
7. Deut. R. 8:6; Yalkut, Prov., §961.
8. B. Ber 7b.
9. Either (1) follow them closely or (2) sit on the ground while they teach.
10. Avot 1:4.
11. Avot 2:10.
12. Tanhuma, Yitro, §12.
13. Lev. R. 3:7.
14. Avot 4:6.
15. Whether a word is to be spelled with an alef or ayin. See Ka 7.

though a commoner, I call my equal" (Ps. 55:14).[1] And is there not in this matter an inference a fortiori? if David, king of Israel, who had learned only two things from Ahithophel, called him master, guide, and teacher, how much more should one pay honor to one's companion from whom one has learned a single chapter, a single Halakhah, a single verse, a single expression, even a single letter.[2]

275. If one finds a lost article belonging to his father and a lost article belonging to his teacher, the teacher's article must be returned first, because his father brought him into this world, whereas his teacher, who instructed him in wisdom, is bringing him to life in the world-to-come. But if his father is a sage, his father's article takes precedence. If his father and his teacher are [each] carrying a burden, he must [first] assist his teacher to lay the burden down and then assist his father. If his father and his teacher are in captivity, he must redeem his teacher [first] and then his father. But if his father is a sage, he must [first] redeem his father and then his teacher.

Our masters taught: The teacher referred to above is the one who has instructed him in the wisdom [of Gemara], not the one who has taught him Scripture and Mishnah. Such is R. Meir's view. But R. Judah said: The teacher is the one from whom he derived the greater part of his knowledge [in any area of learning]. Whereas R. Yose said: Even if the teacher has illuminated the meaning[3] of but one Mishnah, he is his teacher.[4]

276. Our masters taught: A sage takes precedence over a king of Israel,[5] for when a sage dies, there is none to replace him, but when a king of Israel dies, all Israel are fit for kingship. A king takes precedence over a high priest, a high priest over a prophet, a prophet over the high priest anointed for service in war only, a high priest anointed for service in war only over a deputy high priest, a deputy high priest over a priest who has charge of the keys and vessels of the Temple, a priest who has such charge over a Temple treasurer, a Temple treasurer over the chief of the weekly watch of priests, a chief of the weekly watch of priests over the chief of the men of the daily watch, a chief of the men of the daily watch over a common priest, a priest over a Levite, a Levite over a lay Israelite, a lay Israelite over a bastard, a bastard over a Nathin,[6] a Nathin over a proselyte, a proselyte over an emancipated slave. When is this order of precedence to be followed? When all of them are equal. If, however, a bastard is a disciple of the wise and the high priest is an unlearned man, the learned bastard takes precedence over the unlearned high priest.[7]

277. R. Eleazar ben Shammua said: Let the honor of your disciple be as dear to you as your own, the honor of your companion as great as the awe you feel for your teacher, and the awe for your teacher as great as your fear of Heaven.[8]

278. We have been taught that Simeon Imsoni[9] (others say: Nehemiah Imsoni) used to expound every et[10] in the Torah as implying some extension of meaning. But when he came to "Thou shalt fear (et) the Lord thy God" (Deut. 6:13 and 10:20), he desisted.[11] His disciples said to him: Master, what will now happen to all the *et*s you have interpreted [to indicate extension]? He replied: Just as I received reward for interpreting them, so will I now receive reward for desisting. Subsequently, R. Akiva came and expounded: The word et in "Thou shalt fear (et) the Lord thy God" extends the obligation to fearing the disciples of the wise.[12]

279. It is said in the name of R. Hisda: If a father renounces the honor due him, it is renounced; but if a teacher renounces the honor due him, it is not renounced. R. Joseph said: Even if a teacher renounces the honor due him, it is renounced, for Scripture says, "The Lord went before them by day" (Exod. 13:21).[13]

280. R. Hisda said: When a man contends against [the ruling of] his teacher, it is as though he contended against the Presence, for [of Korah and his followers, who strove only against Moses], Scripture says, "When they strove against the Lord" (Num. 26:9). R. Hama bar Hanina said: When a man quarrels with his teacher, it is as if he quarreled with the Presence, as is said, "This is the water of Meribah; because the children of Israel strove with the Lord[14] (Num. 20:13).

R. Hanina bar Papa said: When a man expresses resentment against his teacher, it is as though he expressed it against the Presence, as is said, "Your murmurings are not against us, but against the Lord" (Exod. 16:8). R. Abbahu said: When a man speaks evil of his teacher, it is as though he spoke evil of the Presence, as is said, "And the people spoke against God when [they spoke] against Moses" (Num. 21:5).[15]

---

1. JV: "It was thou, a man mine equal, my companion, and my familiar friend." But enosh ("man") often means "ordinary man," hence, "commoner"; aluf ("companion") is here derived from the verb 'lf ("to train, to direct"), hence, "my guide"; and by a slight change in vocalization, meyudda'i ("my familiar friend") is read meyadde'i ("one who conveys knowledge to me"), hence, "my teacher."
2. Avot 6:3.
3. Literally, "enlightened his eyes."
4. B. BM 33a.
5. With regard to saving of life, restoration of lost property, or redemption from captivity.
6. A descendant of the Gibeonites who deceived Joshua. See Josh. 9:3ff.
7. B. Hor 13a; Num. R. 6:1.
8. Avot 4:12.
9. Possibly from Amasia in Pontus. So Jastrow.
10. The Hebrew particle that precedes the direct object of a verb. The sages often interpreted it as evidence of additional objects which are not specified.
11. He could not accept the idea that such supreme fear should extend to anyone other than God. And so he concluded that even as the et in this verse cannot signify extension, it may not signify extension elsewhere.
12. B. Pes 22b.
13. Thus God, renouncing the honor due Him, condescended to act as a guide for Israel. B. Kid 32a.
14. But in the narrative they are said to strive only with Moses.
15. B. Sanh 110a.

281. R. Joshua ben Levi said: In twenty-four instances we find that the High Court imposed the ban for an insult to a teacher, and they are all recorded in our Mishnah. R. Eleazar asked him: Where? He replied: See if you can find them. R. Eleazar went to search [in the Mishnah] and found only three instances: one of a person who belittled the requirement of washing the hands, another of a person who made disparaging remarks over the biers of disciples of the wise, and a third of a person who acted arrogantly toward the One above.[1]

282. R. Judah stated: Jerusalem was destroyed only because disciples of the wise were despised there, as is said, "They mocked the messengers of God, and despised His words, and scoffed at His prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against His people, till there was no remedy" (2 Chron. 36:16). What does "Till there was no remedy" suggest? That for the illness of him who despises disciples of the wise, so said R. Judah in the name of Rav, there is no remedy.[2]

283. R. Joshua ben Levi said to his children: Take care to respect an old man who through unavoidable circumstances has forgotten what he knew, for Scripture says that both the whole Tablets and the shattered Tablets were placed in the Ark.[3]

284. We have been taught: If three men walk together on a road, the teacher should be in the middle, the elder of the other two on his right, and the younger on his left.[4]

285. A disciple taking leave of his teacher should not turn around and walk away, but must turn sideways to depart. We find that R. Eleazar walked this way when he took leave of [his teacher] R. Yohanan. If R. Yohanan was about to leave first, R. Eleazar, head bowed down, would remain standing in his place until R. Yohanan disappeared from sight. If R. Eleazar wanted to leave first, he would walk backward until R. Yohanan disappeared from sight.

When Rava took leave of R. Joseph [his teacher], he walked backward until his heels struck the threshold so sharply that it was stained with his blood. When R. Joseph was told[5] that Rava acted thus, he said: May it be [God's] will that your head be raised above the entire city.[6]

286. When R. Zera grew too weak to study, he used to go and sit by the door of R. Nathan ben Tobi's house, saying to himself: When the sages pass by, I will stand up and receive a reward [for it in the world-to-come].[7]

287. Rava said: How stupid are those people who stand up for a Torah scroll but do not stand up for a distinguished personage. They should realize that even though in the Torah scroll it is said, "Forty stripes he may give him" (Deut. 25:3), the sages came and [through interpretation] reduced the number of stripes by one.[8]

288. R. Eleazar said: A disciple of the wise who does not rise before his teacher is called wicked. He will not live long and will forget his studies, for Scripture says, "It shall not go well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow, because he feareth not before God" (Eccles. 8:13). But I do not know what is meant here by "fear." Since it says, "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head . . . and fear thy God" (Lev. 19:32), I conclude that here "fear" is shown by rising up.

R. Aibu said in the name of R. Yannai: A disciple of the wise is allowed to rise before his teacher only [twice], morning and evening, so that the deference shown to him may not exceed the deference shown to Heaven.[9]

289. R. Abba the Priest bar Papa said: When I used to see a group of people [sitting together], I would turn off to another road so as not to inconvenience them, for were they to notice me, they would feel impelled to rise before me. When I told R. Yose bar Zevida what I did, he said: You should pass before them, so that they may see you and rise for you, and you will thus lead them to fear of Heaven, as Scripture says, "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head . . . and then thou shalt fear thy God" (Lev. 19:32).[10]

290. We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: One who places himself behind his teacher while praying,[11] one who gives a perfunctory greeting to his teacher or responds with lack of deference to his teacher's greeting,[12] one who disputes a decision arrived at in the academy of his teacher, and one who says something in the name of his teacher that he has not actually heard from his teacher—all such cause the Presence to depart from Israel.[13]

291. Resh Lakish said: One who coughs up phlegm and spits in the presence of his teacher deserves an untimely death, as is said, "All that hate Me love death" (Prov. 8:36). Read not, "That hate Me," but, "That cause Me to be hated."[14]

292. R. Hiyya bar Ammi said in the name of Ulla: A man should always live in the same town as his teacher. For as long as Shimei son of Gera was alive, Solomon did not dare marry Pharaoh's daughter. When does this rule

---

1. B. Ber 19a.
2. B. Shab 119b.
3. See above, part 1, chap. 5, §83. B. Ber 8b.
4. B. Er 54b.
5. R. Joseph was blind.
6. The prayer was fulfilled. Rava became head of the academies of Sura and Pumbedita. B. Yoma 53a.
7. B. Ber 28a.
8. B. Mak 22b.
9. One rises before God in prayer only twice a day, morning and evening. B. Kid 33b.
10. Tanhuma B, Be-haalotekha, §20.
11. It would seem as though he were directing his prayer to his teacher (Tosafot on B. Ber 27b).
12. He says, "Shalom," without adding, "My master."
13. B. Ber 27b.
14. The disciples' manners bring Torah into disrepute. B. Er 99a, and En Yaakov, ad loc.

apply? When a person is submissive to his teacher; but if he is not submissive, he should not dwell there.[1]

293. When the words of the teacher and the words of a pupil clash, whose words are to be followed?[2]

294. Our masters taught: When our masters entered the vineyard[3] at Yavneh, among them were R. Judah, R. Yose, R. Nehemiah, and R. Eliezer the son of R. Yose the Galilean. In appreciation of the hospitality shown them, they began their discourses by expounding [relevant] texts. R. Judah, who was the one delegated to speak first on all occasions,[4] began his discourse on the honor due to Torah by expounding the text "Now Moses used to take the Tent [of Meeting] and pitch it without the camp" (Exod. 33:7). Have we not here, he said, an argument a fortiori? The Ark of the Lord was never more than twelve mil distant [from the Israelite encampment], yet the Torah speaks of those who went out as "everyone that sought the Lord went out unto the Tent of Meeting" (ibid.). How much more [is the title "they who seek the Lord" applicable to] disciples of the wise, who go from city to city and from province to province to learn Torah!

R. Judah, speaking further on the honor due to Torah, expounded another text: "Attend and hear, O Israel: this day thou art become a people unto the Lord thy God" (Deut. 27:9). Now, was it on this day that the Torah was given to Israel? Was not this day in fact forty years after Sinai? However, use of "this day" in the verse is meant to teach you that the Torah is as beloved every day by those who study it as on the day when it was given from Mount Sinai.

R. Nehemiah began his discourse, in appreciation of the hospitality shown them, by expounding the text "And Saul said unto the Kenites, Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them; for ye showed kindness to all the children of Israel when they came up out of Egypt" (1 Sam. 15:6). Have we not here an argument a fortiori? If such was the reward of Jethro [the father of the Kenites], who befriended Moses only for his own benefit, how much greater by far will it be for one who entertains a disciple of the wise in his house, gives him food and drink, and supports him with his possessions!

R. Yose began his discourse, in appreciation of the hospitality shown them, by expounding the text "[Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, for he is thy brother]; thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian, because thou wast a stranger in his land" (Deut. 23:8). Have we not here an argument a fortiori? If such was the reward of the Egyptians, who befriended the Israelites only for their own purposes, as Pharaoh had declared: "And if thou knowest any able men among them, then make them rulers over my cattle" (Gen. 47:6), how much greater by far will be the reward of one who entertains a disciple of the wise in his house, gives him food and drink, and supports him with his possessions!

R. Eliezer the son of R. Yose the Galilean began his discourse, in appreciation of the hospitality shown them, by expounding the text "And the Lord blessed Obed-edom and all his house . . . because of the Ark of God" (2 Sam. 6:12). Have we not here an argument a fortiori? If such was the reward for attending to the Ark, which required neither food nor drink, but before which Obed-edom merely swept and laid the dust, how much greater by far will it be for one who entertains a disciple of the wise in his house, gives him food and drink, and supports him with his possessions![5]

295. At the end of Hadrian's persecution,[6] when our masters—R. Judah, R. Nehemiah, R. Meir, R. Yose, R. Simeon ben Yohai, R. Eliezer the son of R. Yose the Galilean, and R. Eliezer ben Jacob—gathered at Usha, they sent word to the elders of Galilee, saying, "Whoever has studied, let him come and teach; and whoever has not studied, let him come and learn." After they came together and studied, they decreed sundry measures that were necessary.[7] When the time came for them to depart, they said, "We cannot leave a place where we have been received so well without a word of blessing." They gave R. Judah the honor of speaking first, not because he was the most learned among them, but because his home was in Usha, and the place in which a man lives gives him certain privileges. So R. Judah came forward and took as his text "Now Moses used to take the tent and pitch it without the camp, afar off (harhek) from the camp" (Exod. 33:7). The word "afar off" (harhek) is used here, and in another place Scripture says, "Yet there shall be a space (rahok) between you and it, about two thousand cubits by measure" (Josh. 3:4). Just as the word rahok in Joshua means two thousand cubits, so harhek in Exodus must mean two thousand cubits. The verse in Exodus continues, "And it came to pass, that everyone that sought,"—not everyone that sought Moses, but "everyone that sought the Lord."[8] From this we learn that welcoming companions in Torah is like welcoming the Presence. As for you, our brethren, our masters, who are distinguished in knowledge of Torah, since some of you have taken the trouble to come ten mil, some twenty mil, and some thirty mil, and some even forty mil to hear words of Torah, you may all the more rest assured that the Holy One will not withhold your reward in this world and in the next!

R. Nehemiah then came forward and expounded the text "An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter the assembly of the Lord" (Deut. 23:4). He began by saying: We have been taught: Two great nations were excluded from marrying into the assembly of the Lord. Why? "Because they met you not with bread and with water" (Deut. 23:5). Now, at that time did Israel require bread and water? During all the forty years that Israel were in the wilderness, did not the manna descend for them and the well come

---

1. So as to avoid confrontations with his teacher outside of study hours. B. Ber 8a.
2. Clearly those of the teacher. B. Kid 42b.
3. That is, sat in formal session, in rows, like rows of vines in a vineyard.
4. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §225.
5. B. Ber 63b.
6. After the war of Bar Kozeva, 135 C.E.
7. "The havoc caused by the wars had rendered a number of new enactments urgently necessary; these were now decided upon and promulgated" (Song R., Soncino, p. 106, n. 3).
8. Though in actual fact the man would visit Moses.

up for them; were not quails provided for them; did not clouds of glory surround them and the pillar of cloud journey before them? And yet you say [as the reason for excluding Ammonites and Moabites], "Because they did not meet them with bread and water"? However, as R. Eleazar explained, courtesy requires that one who comes from a journey is to be welcomed with food and drink. Come and see how God punished these two nations [for their discourtesy toward Israel]—of them it is written in Scripture, "An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter the assembly of the Lord." But as for you, men of Usha, who have welcomed our masters with your food, your drink, and your couches to recline on, the Holy One will surely requite you with a good reward.

R. Meir then came forward and took as his text "Now there dwelt an old prophet in Bethel" (1 Kings 13:11). Who was that prophet? Amaziah the Priest of Bethel.[1] R. Yose interrupted: Meir, you are confusing matters.[2] Who [you just asked] was that prophet? He was Jonathan the son of Gershom the son of Moses. As a matter of fact, in the verse "Jonathan, the son of Gershom, the son of Manasseh" (Judg. 18:30), the letter nun in the name Manasseh is suspended, to intimate that if virtuous, Jonathan would be accounted a descendant of Moses; and if not, a descendant of Manasseh.[3]

[Be that as it may, whether the old prophet was Amaziah or Jonathan, R. Meir went on to quote]: "And the old prophet said unto [the man of God]: 'I also am a prophet as thou art' . . . [but in fact] he lied (kihesh) unto him" (1 Kings 13:18). But how can you say that he lied unto him? [He was a prophet, was he not? Yes], but have kihesh means: He deceived him. How did he deceive him? He deceived the man of God into believing that he was allowed to eat the food proffered to him.[4] Nevertheless, in the same passage it is written, "And it came to pass, as they sat at the table, that the word of the Lord came unto the old prophet that brought him back [by deceit]" (1 Kings 13:20). Does it not then stand to reason: If the old prophet, who deceived the man of God into believing he was allowed to eat the food proffered, was yet privileged to have the holy spirit rest upon him, you, our brethren, men of Usha, who welcomed our masters with food that is not deceitful, with drink, and with couches to recline on—the Holy One will surely requite you with a good reward!

R. Yose then came forward and took as his text "And the Ark of the Lord remained in the house of Obed-edom the Gittite. . . . And it was told King David, saying: 'The Lord hath blessed the house of Obed-edom and all that pertaineth unto him' " (2 Sam. 6:11–12). For what merit? "Because of [service to] the Ark of God" (ibid.). Now, it stands to reason: the Ark of God neither eats nor drinks nor speaks, but merely contains two Tablets of stone, and yet, merely because Obed-edom kindled one lamp in front of it, he was blessed for honoring it. How much more and more will you, our brethren, men of Usha, be blessed!

R. Simeon ben Yohai then came forward and took as his text "And it fell on a day, that Elisha passed to Shunem, where a wealthy woman lived, and she constrained him to eat bread" (2 Kings 4:8). This Shunammite woman, because she gave Elisha a cordial welcome and ministered to him, merited having her son brought back to life. How much more and more will you, our brethren, men of Usha, who treated us with such kindness, be blessed!

R. Eliezer the son of R. Yose the Galilean then came forward and took as his text "And Saul said unto the Kenites: 'Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them; for ye showed kindness to all the children of Israel, when they came up out of Egypt' " (1 Sam. 15:6). Now, did Jethro show kindness to all Israel? Surely it was only to Moses that he showed kindness! This text, however, teaches you that if anyone shows kindness to one of Israel's great men, it is accounted to him as if he had shown it to all Israel. How much more and more, then, does this apply to you, our brethren, men of Usha!

Finally R. Eliezer ben Jacob came forward and took as his text "Moses and the Levitical priests spoke unto all Israel, saying: 'Be silent, and hear, O Israel: this day thou art become a people' " (Deut. 27:9). Was it on this day that they received the Torah? Had they not already received the Torah forty years before this day? Yet you say, "On this day"? However, the text teaches that since Moses repeated to them the Torah and they received it gladly, it was accounted to them as if they had received it that very day on Mount Sinai. Therefore it is said, "On this day thou art become a people unto the Lord thy God." To you, then, our brethren, men of Usha, who have received us so gladly, how much more and more does this apply.[5]

296. R. Yose son of R. Hanina said in the name of R. Eliezer ben Jacob: When a man entertains a disciple of the wise in his home and supports him with what he possesses, Scripture accounts it to him as if he were bringing the daily offerings.[6]

297. "There came a man from Baal-shalishah, and brought the man of God bread of the firstfruits," etc. (2 Kings 4:42). But was Elisha [who was not a priest] entitled to eat firstfruits? The verse, however, tells you that he who brings a gift to a disciple of the wise [is doing as good a deed] as if he were offering firstfruits.[7]

298. R. Eleazar said: Whoever does not support disciples of the wise out of his possessions will never see a sign of blessing.[8]

299. Rava said: He who loves sages will have sons who are sages. He who honors sages will have sons-in-law who are sages. He who stands in awe of sages will himself

---

1. Mentioned in Amos 7:10.
2. You are mixing up two different people. Literally, "there are broken eggs here."
3. The infamous king of Judah who spread idolatry. See above, part 1, chap. 6, §170–73.
4. Which in fact he was not, having been instructed by God "to eat no bread nor drink water there" (1 Kings 13:9).
5. Song R. 2:5, §3; Lev. R. 34:8.
6. B. Ber 10b.
7. B. Ket 105b.
8. B. Sanh 92a.

become a disciple of the wise. But if he is not fit for such study, his words will be heeded as though he were a disciple of the wise.[1]

300. Rava said: Merit, I pray, will be mine, for whenever a disciple appears before me in a lawsuit, I do not place my head on the pillow before I consider arguments in his favor.[2]

Mar bar R. Ashi said: I am not fit to judge in a sage's lawsuit. Why not? Because he is as dear to me as my own person, and a man is not likely to find fault with himself.[3]

301. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: Many specific boons were promised by all the prophets only to him who weds his daughter to a disciple of the wise, who conducts business on behalf of a disciple of the wise, or who provides for a disciple of the wise out of his possessions. But as for the disciples of the wise themselves, "Eye hath not seen, O God, beside Thee, what Thou wilt do," etc. (Isa. 64:3).[4]

The Disciple of the Wise and the Unlearned Person

302. R. Yohanan said: The builders—these are disciples of the wise who throughout their days are occupied with building up the world.[5]

303. R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hanina: Disciples of the wise increase peace in the world, as is said, "Because of all thy children who are taught by the Lord, great shall be the peace of thy children" (Isa. 54:13).[6]

304. "Gone is from fair Zion all her splendor" (Lam. 1:6). These are disciples of the wise, with regard to whom it is said, "Thou shalt regard the person of a sage as splendid" (Lev. 19:32).[7]

305. "The commandment is a lamp, and the teaching is light" (Prov. 6:23). A parable of one who stands in a dark place. No sooner does he start walking than he stumbles over a stone or comes to a gutter and falls into it, striking the ground with his face. Why does this happen? Because he has no lamp in his hand. So, too, is the unlearned man who possesses no Torah. When he comes upon a transgression, he stumbles into it and dies. But they who study Torah give light wherever they are. A parable of one who stands in the dark with a lamp in his hand. When he comes upon a stone, he does not stumble [over it]; when he comes upon a gutter, he does not fall into it. Why not? Because he has a lamp in his hand, as Scripture says, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path" (Ps. 119:105).[8]

306. We have been taught: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God" (Deut. 6:4), so that the Name of Heaven may come to be loved because of you.[9] When a man reads Scripture, studies Mishnah, ministers to the needs of disciples of the wise, is honest in his business dealings, speaks gently to people—what do people say of him? Happy is So-and-so who has studied Torah! Happy is his father who had him taught Torah! Happy is his teacher who taught him Torah! Alas for people who have not studied Torah. So-and-so who has studied Torah—mark how pleasant are his ways, how perfect his deeds! To him apply the words "Thou art My servant Israel, in whom I will be glorified" (Isa. 49:3). On the other hand, he who reads Scripture, studies Mishnah, and ministers to the needs of disciples of the wise, but is not honest in his business dealings and not gentle in his speech with people—what do people say of him? Alas for So-and-so who has studied Torah! Alas for his father who had him taught Torah! Alas for his teacher who taught him Torah! So-and-so who has studied Torah—mark how vile his deeds, how ugly his ways! To him apply the words "They profaned My holy Name, in that men said of them: These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of His land" (Ezek. 36:20).[10]

307. Fifteen characteristics are mentioned of a disciple of the wise. He is pleasant when he comes in and pleasant when he departs. He is unassuming in his academy, resourceful in bringing about fear of God, prudent in awareness, wise in his ways. He collects [words of Torah] and remembers them well, takes pains to reply properly, makes his questions relevant and his replies to the point, listens carefully before replying, adds something novel of his own to each and every chapter, goes to a sage [to minister to him], and studies in order to teach and to practice.[11]

308. He who is a disciple of the wise does not eat standing up, does not lick his fingers, does not belch in the presence of his companion; he is not given to much talk, much laughter, much sleep, much indulgence, and much saying [carelessly], "Yes, yes," or, "No, no."[12]

309. A disciple of the wise should be modest at eating, at drinking, at bathing, at anointing himself, at putting on his sandals; in his walking, in dress, in the sound of his voice, in the disposal of his spittle, even in his good deeds. A bride, while still in her father's house, acts so modestly that when she leaves it her very presence proclaims:

---

1. B. Shab 23b.
2. Because of his great respect for scholars, Rava was certain that the scholar in the lawsuit sought what was right. So Samuel Edels.
3. B. Shab 119a.
4. To reward the disciples of the wise themselves. B. Ber 34b.
5. B. Shab 114a.
6. B. Ber 64a.
7. JV: "Thou shalt . . . honor (hadarta) the face of the old man (zaken)." But hadarta literally means "regard as splendid," and zaken is frequently understood as an acronym for zeh she-kanah hokhmah ("he who has acquired wisdom"). Lam R. 1:6, §33.
8. Exod. R. 36:3.
9. Ve-ahavta ("thou shalt love") is read ve-ehavta ("thou shalt cause to be loved").
10. B. Yoma 86a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. DEZ 3.
12. He makes few promises. DEZ 5.

"Whoever knows of anything to be testified against me, let him come and testify." Likewise, a disciple of the wise should be so modest in his actions that his ways proclaim what he is.[1]

310. The way of a disciple of the wise: humble, meek, eager, full of goodwill, submissive to discourtesy, loved by all people, undemanding even with the people in his own house, fearful of sin, appraising each person according to his deeds, ever saying, "All that is in this world I have no desire for, because this world is not mine." He keeps studying and is ever ready to throw his robe on the ground and sit on it at the feet of other disciples of the wise. And no man ever espies in him anything evil.[2]

311. There are seven characteristics in a boor and seven in a sage. A sage will not speak in the presence of one greater than he in wisdom,[3] does not interrupt his companion, does not hasten to answer, asks questions that are relevant, and replies to the point; he speaks first of the first point raised and last of the last point raised; concerning that which he has not heard, he says, "I have not heard this"; and he acknowledges the truth.[4] The opposites of these characteristics are true of a person who is a boor.[5]

312. Disciples of the wise may be recognized by four characteristics: their out-of-purse spending, tippling, temper, and attire. Some say, also by their speech.[6]

313. From the way a man phrases his benedictions, it may be recognized whether or not he is a disciple of the wise.[7]

314. From the way you curve your lips when you speak, one can tell that you [pronounce the words correctly and therefore] are a disciple of the wise.[8]

315. It was said in the name of Rav: Whence do we learn that even the everyday conversation of disciples of the wise requires study? From the verse "Even his leaf doth not wither" (Ps. 1:3).[9]

316. He who undertakes to be an associate scholar (haver)[10] will not sell to "the unlearned" (am ha-aretz) produce that is moist or dry[11] and will not buy from him produce that is moist.[12] He will not be a guest in the home of an unlearned person, nor will he have him in his home as a guest as long as he continues to wear his own [unclean] garment.[13] R. Judah said: Nor should he raise small cattle[14] or be lavish in making vows or in jesting. R. Judah was told: What you mention are not [among the obligations of an associate scholar], not being within the scope of precautions against uncleanness.[15]

317. R. Hanina of Hoza[16] said: One may presume that an associate scholar (haver) will not sell[17] produce that is untithed.[18]

318. Rava said: A young disciple of the wise is like a seed under a hard clod of earth: once he sprouts, he grows fast.[19]

319. "Within and without thou shalt overlay it [with gold]" (Exod. 25:11). Rava said: Any disciple of the wise who is not on the inside what he appears to be on the outside is no true disciple of the wise.[20]

320. R. Akiva: When a disciple of the wise exalts himself because of his mastery of words of Torah, to what may he be likened? To a carcass thrown on the road. Every passerby clamps his hand over his nose and walks speedily away from it, as is said, "When exalting thyself, thou becomest like a carcass" (Prov. 30:32).[21]

321. If a disciple of the wise lacks common sense, a carcass is better than he.[22]

322. R. Abba said in the name of R. Simeon ben Lakish: Even if a disciple of the wise is vengeful and malicious like a serpent, gird him about your loins.[23] But if a man is unlearned, even if he should be pious, do not dwell in his neighborhood.[24]

323. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Jehozadak: Any disciple of the wise who is not vengeful and malicious like a serpent [toward violators of Torah] is no genuine disciple of the wise.[25]

---

1. DEZ 7.
2. DEZ 1.
3. "Or in years" is omitted, as in many editions.
4. He accepts defeat gracefully.
5. Avot 5:7.
6. DEZ 5.
7. B. Ber 50a.
8. B. Me 17b.
9. B. Suk 21b; B. AZ 19b.
10. To be scrupulous in the observance of regulations concerning ritual purity.
11. Since through his lax observance of the regulations of cleanness, the unlearned may make unclean not only the moist produce but also the dry.
12. Since the "unlearned" is always ritually unclean, he inevitably conveys uncleanness to moist produce, which is susceptible to uncleanness. On the other hand, dry produce is not susceptible to uncleanness, and the "unlearned" may be trusted if he says that it has not become unclean.
13. The garments "the unlearned" wear cause ritual defilement.
14. Being given to grazing in other people's fields, such small cattle make one guilty of misappropriation.
15. Dem 2:3.
16. A province of southwestern Iran, now known as Khuzistan.
17. Literally, "will not let out of his hand."
18. B. Er 32a; B. Pes 9a.
19. B. Ta 4a.
20. B. Yoma 72b.
21. JV: "If thou hast done foolishly (navalta) in lifting up thyself." R. Akiva associates navalta with nevelah ("carcass"). ARN 11.
22. Lev. R. 1:15.
23. You will benefit from his learning.
24. His piety is sure to be tainted by his ignorance. B. Shab 63a.
25. B. Yoma 23a.

324. Rava said: If a disciple of the wise is boiling with rage, it is the Torah that brings him to such a boil, as is said, "Is not My word like as fire? saith the Lord" (Jer. 23:29).

R. Ashi said: A disciple of the wise who is not as hard as iron is no genuine disciple of the wise, for it is said, "Is not My word . . . like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" (Jer. 23:29). Nevertheless, said Ravina, a man should train himself to be gentle, for it is said, "Remove anger from thy heart" (Eccles. 11:10).[1]

325. R. Hiyya bar Ashi said in the name of Rav: A disciple of the wise should have an eighth of an eighth of pride; which, said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua, crowns him as the awn crowns a stalk of wheat. Rava said: [A disciple of the wise who possesses such pride] deserves being placed under a ban, and one who does not, also deserves being placed under a ban. R. Nahman bar Isaac said: He should not possess it at all, not even a smidgin of it. Is what has been written about pride a trifling matter? Namely, "Everyone that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord" (Prov. 16:5).[2]

326. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: Any disciple of the wise on whose garment a grease spot is found deserves death, for it is said, "All they that despise Me (mesane'ai) love [merit] death" (Prov. 8:36). Read not mesane'ai, "that despise Me," but masni'ai, "that cause Me to be despised."[3]

327. Issi ben Judah said: Why do [some] disciples of the wise die before their time? Because they despise themselves.[4]

328. Our masters taught: Six things are unbecoming for a disciple of the wise. He should not go out into the marketplace scented; he should not go out in patched sandals; he should not go out alone at night; he should not chat with a woman in the marketplace; he should not be the last to enter the house of study; he should not recline for a meal in a company of the unlearned. Some say: He should not take long strides or walk with a stiff posture.[5]

329. R. Yohanan asked R. Banaah: How long should the undergarment of a disciple of the wise be? So long that no part of his flesh is visible below it. How long should the upper garment of a disciple of the wise be? So long that no more than a handbreadth of his undergarment is visible below it. How long should the table of a disciple of the wise be? Two-thirds should be covered with a cloth and the other third be left bare for dishes and greens to be put on. The ring [by which the tabletop is hung when not in use] should be on the outside edge of the tabletop.[6] The table of the unlearned is like a hearth with pots all around.[7] What is special about the bed of a disciple of the wise? That under it nothing is kept except for sandals during summer and shoes during winter. But that of an unlearned person is like a crowded storeroom.[8]

330. R. Yohanan said: What disciple of the wise has a lost garment returned to him on his mere say-so?[9] The one who takes care to turn even his undershirt inside out [to see whether there is any spot on it].[10]

331. Disciples of the wise are pleasant when they are together in a company. The unlearned are not pleasant when they are in a company.[11]

332. R. Avin the Levite said: If one shares in a meal at which a disciple of the wise is present, it is as though he feasted amid the splendor of the Presence, for Scripture says, "Aaron came and all the elders of Israel to eat bread with Moses' father-in-law before God" (Exod. 18:12). Was it before God that they ate? Did they not eat before Moses? However, the verse informs you that if one shares a meal at which a disciple of the wise is present, it is as if he feasted amid the splendor of the Presence.[12]

333. We have been taught that R. Simeon said: A disciple of the wise is not allowed to share in a feast that is not associated with a religious act.[13]

334. Our masters taught: Every disciple of the wise who feasts much everywhere ends up by destroying his home, widowing his wife, and orphaning his young. Eventually, his learning will be forgotten; he will be involved in many disputes; nobody will listen to what he says; he will profane the Name of Heaven, the name of his father, and the name of his teacher; and he will bring an evil name upon himself, his children, and his children's children, to the end of time.

How will his son come to be known? He will be called "Son of him who warms himself at every oven," said Abbaye. "Son of the tavern dancer," said Rava. "Son of the plate licker," said R. Papa. "Son of the folder-of-garments-to-sleep-on-anywhere," said R. Shemaiah.[14]

335. "As the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon" (Song 1:5). Like tents of Kedar, which from the outside look unsightly, sooty, and tattered, but inside contain precious stones and pearls, so are disciples of the wise: they appear to be ungainly and sooty, but within them is Torah—Scripture, Mishnah, Midrashim, Halakhot, Talmud, Toseftas, and Aggadot.[15]

---

1. B. Ta 4a.
2. B. Sot 5a.
3. B. Shab 114a.
4. By neglecting their appearance. ARN 29.
5. B. Ber 43b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. If it were in its middle, it would interfere with the diners.
7. Because the bread and the cloth are in the middle, and the dishes are all around.
8. B. BB 57b–58a.
9. He is not required to identify it. See above, part 3, chap. 2, §117.
10. If he is so meticulous, it may be presumed that he will recognize his shirt by a mere glance. B. Shab 114a.
11. DEZ 4.
12. B. Ber 64a.
13. B. Pes 49a.
14. Ibid.
15. Song R. 1:5, §1.

336. R. Judah son of R. Ilai expounded: What is meant by "Declare unto My people their transgression, and to the house of Jacob their sins" (Isa. 58:1)? "Declare unto My people their transgressions"—to the disciples of the wise, whose unwitting errors are held against them as presumptuous transgressions; "and to the house of Jacob their sins"—to the unlearned, whose presumptuous transgressions are accounted against them as mere unwitting sins.[1]

337. Resh Lakish said: A disciple of the wise who has sinned is not to be put to shame in public, for Scripture says, "Therefore when thou stumblest in the day, and the prophet also stumbleth with thee, then as the night" (Hos. 4:5). That is, cover the prophet's stumbling as with the darkness of night.[2]

338. "Gold and glass cannot equal it" (Job 28:17). R. Akiva said: Just as vessels of gold and vessels of silver, though they are broken, may be mended, so a disciple of the wise, though he has sinned, may be mended.[3]

339. Sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: If you see a disciple of the wise commit a sin during the night, do not think ill of him the next day, for perhaps he has already turned penitent.

You say, "Perhaps"?

No, he has certainly turned penitent!

This applies only to carnal offenses. But if [he has misappropriated money, you may continue to criticize him] until you know that he has returned the money to its owner.[4]

340. Rava expounded: What is meant by "I went down into the garden of nuts, to look at the green plants of the valley" (Song 6:11)? Why are disciples of the wise likened to the nut? To tell you: As with a nut, even though dirtied in mud and offal, what is within it is not rejected, so it is with a disciple of the wise—even though he has sinned, the Torah within him is not to be rejected.[5]

341. "That which is crooked, cannot be made straight" (Eccles. 1:15). R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Only he can be called "crooked" who was straight at first and then became crooked. Thus we are told not, "Inspect a camel, inspect a pig," but, "Inspect a lamb [to determine whether it is fit as an offering]." Who, accordingly, is referred to as "crooked"? A disciple of the wise who forsakes the Torah. R. Judah ben Lakish said: Any disciple of the wise who forsakes the Torah, Scripture says of him, "As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place" (Prov. 27:8).[6]

342. R. Jeremiah bar Abba said in the name of Resh Lakish: A disciple of the wise may not afflict himself by fasting, because thereby he diminishes his capacity for the work of Heaven.

R. Sheshet said: The disciple who would afflict himself by fasting—may a dog devour the meal [that is to break his fast]![7]

343. "Unto you, O men[8] of might, I call" (Prov. 8:4). R. Berekhiah said: These are disciples of the wise, whose strength appears to be like that of women but who do mighty deeds like men.[9]

344. "Wonderful is His counsel, and great is His tushiyyah"[10] (Isa. 28:29). Why is Torah called tushiyyah, "depleter"? asked R. Hanan. Because it depletes (matteshet) a man's strength.[11]

345. Rabban Gamaliel had in his household a man who could pick up a basket containing forty seah [of flour] and carry it to the baker. Rabban Gamaliel said to him, "Your strength is so great, yet you do not occupy yourself with Torah?" Once the man began to occupy himself with Torah, he found himself able to pick up a basket only of thirty, then of twenty, then of twelve, and then of only eight seah. After he finished studying Sifra [the commentary on Leviticus], he could not carry a basket containing even one seah. Some say he could not even stand the weight of the head cover that fell over his shoulders. In fact, others had to remove it from his head, since he was unable to do so.[12]

346. "And he carried away all Jerusalem . . . all the mighty men of valor . . . all of them strong and apt for war" (2 Kings 24:14–16). Now, what mighty acts are men capable of performing if they are carried off into exile? And what war are men apt for if they are bound by fetters and weighted down with chains? These can have been no other than the acts of men mighty in the warfare of Torah.[13]

347. R. Yohanan said: What sort of disciple of the wise is appointed leader of a community? One who is asked a Halakhah in any area of study and can state it.[14]

348. R. Yohanan also said: What sort of disciple of the wise is he whose townspeople are required to perform his work for him? The one who sets aside his own interests and engages in the interests of Heaven.[15]

349. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Anyone who flaunts himself in the cloak of a disciple of the wise but

---

1. B. BM 33b.
2. B. Men 99b.
3. B. Hag 15a.
4. B. Ber 19a.
5. B. Hag 15b.
6. B. Hag 9a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. B. Ta 11b.
8. "Ishim, used instead of anashim, the usual plural for men, is taken as a plural common both to ish ('man') and to ishah ('woman')" (Brother Caedmon Holmes).
9. B. Yoma 71a.
10. JV: "wisdom."
11. B. Sanh 26b.
12. Song R. 5:14, §3.
13. Sif Deut., §321 (ed. Finkelstein, p. 370); Tanhuma, Noah, §3.
14. B. Shah 114a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
15. Ibid.

is not truly a disciple of the wise will not be admitted within the precinct of the Holy One.[1]

350. R. Berekhiah said: He who sees that Torah is running thin in his family should wed the daughter of a disciple of the wise, for Scripture says, "Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground; yet through the scent of water it will bud" (Job 14:8–9).[2]

351. R. Parnakh said in the name of R. Yohanan: When a man is himself a disciple of the wise, and his son is a disciple of the wise, and his son's son is a disciple of the wise, Torah will never run thin in his seed, as is said, "As for Me, this is My covenant with them . . . : When My words . . . do not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever" (Isa. 59:21). What is implied by "saith the Lord"? That the Holy One said, "I am surety to you in this matter." And what is meant by "henceforth and forever"? That from then on, said R. Jeremiah, the Torah will keep returning to the lodging it has become accustomed to.[3]

352. Why is it not common for sages to sire sages? R. Joseph suggested: That it not be said: Torah is a legacy for them. R. Shisha son of R. Idi said: That they should not lord it over the community. Mar Zutra said: [On the contrary], because they do lord it over the community. R. Ashi said: [Indeed], because they call ordinary people "asses."[4]

353. R. Hama said: What is meant by "In the heart of him that hath understanding wisdom resteth quietly, but among fools it seeketh to be known" (Prov. 14:33)? "In the heart of him that hath understanding wisdom resteth quietly" refers to a disciple of the wise who is the son of a disciple of the wise. And "among fools it seeketh to be known" refers to a disciple of the wise who is the son of an unlearned father. As Ulla, quoting a popular adage, put it: "A single coin in a bottle goes clink-clink."[5]

354. The unlearned who are getting on in years—the older they get, the more addled their minds become, as is said, "He taketh away the sense of the aged" (Job 12:20). But with disciples of the wise who are on in years, it is not so. The older they get, the more composed their minds become, as is said, "With learned men there is greater wisdom and more understanding in length of days" (Job 12:12).[6]

355. There are four things commonly used in the world, for each of which, when lost, a substitute is available: "There is a mine for silver, and a place for gold which they refine. Iron is taken out of the dust, and brass is molten out of the stone" (Job 28:1–2). Each of these metals, when lost, has a substitute. But when a disciple of the wise dies, who can provide us with a substitute for him? Who can provide us with an alternate for him? "Whence shall wisdom come, and where is the place of understanding? Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living" (Job 28:21).[7]

356. R. Hiyya bar Ashi said in the name of Rav: Disciples of the wise have no rest either in this world or in the world-to-come, for it is said, "They go from strength to strength, every one of them that appeareth before God in Zion" (Ps. 84:8).[8]

357. R. Judah quoted in the name of Rav: "Let me dwell in Thy tent forever" (Ps. 61:5). Could the thought have come into David's mind that he might live forever? Rather, it means that David prayed to the Holy One: Master of the universe, may words heard from my mouth be uttered forever in this world. For, as R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Jehozadak: When a word heard from the mouth of a disciple of the wise is uttered in this world in his name, the lips of that disciple move and give utterance in the grave. R. Isaac ben Ze'era said: Where do we learn such a thing? From "The speech of thy mouth is like the best wine . . . moving the lips of those that are asleep" (Song 7:10). Just as a mass of heated grapes gives forth its juice as soon as a man puts his finger on it, so, too, the lips of disciples of the wise, as soon as a word once heard from their mouth is uttered in this world in their name, give utterance in the grave.[9]

358. R. Judah said: Every day a man should say the blessing, "Blessed be He who has not made me a boor," for an unlearned man does not fear sin. By what parable may the matter be illustrated? By the one of a king of flesh and blood who asks his servant to cook him a dish. Since that servant has never before in his life cooked a dish, he is sure to burn it and incense his master.[10]

359. A boor [who does not know what sin is] is incapable of fearing sin; and an unlearned person is incapable of being truly pious.[11]

360. We have been taught: Who is an am ha-aretz, an "unlearned person"? He who does not eat profane [non-sacred] food in ritual cleanness. So said R. Meir. But the sages say: Anyone who does not tithe his produce in the proper way.

Our masters taught: Who is an am ha-aretz? He who does not read the Shema morning and evening—such is the opinion of R. Eliezer. R. Joshua said: Anyone who

---

1. B. BB 98a.
2. Water means Torah (see above in this chapter, §220). B. Yoma 71a.
3. B. BM 85a.
4. B. Ned 81a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. B. BM 85b.
6. Kin 3:6; B. Shab 152a.
7. P. Ber 2:8, 5c.
8. Eager as they are to advance their understanding of Torah. B. Ber 64a.
9. B. Yev 96b–97a; B. Sanh 90b.
10. Tos Ber 7:18.
11. He is incapable of looking beyond the letter of the law into its spirit. Avot 2:5.

does not put on tefillin. Ben Azzai said: Anyone who has no tzitzit attached to his garments. R. Nathan said: Anyone who has no mezuzah at his doorway. R. Nathan ben Joseph said: Anyone who has sons but does not bring them up to the study of Torah. Others say: Even if he has read Scripture and studied Mishnah but has not attended upon disciples of the wise [mixing with them and thereby learning the explication of Scripture and Mishnah], he is an am ha-aretz.[1]

361. Anyone who is versed in Scripture and Mishnah and has a gainful occupation will not readily sin, for Scripture says, "A threefold cord is not readily broken" (Eccles. 4:12). But anyone who has no Scripture, no Mishnah, and no gainful occupation does not belong to orderly society.

Bar Kappara expounded: If anyone has neither Scripture nor Mishnah nor gainful occupation, make a vow not to benefit from him, as is said, "Nor sitteth in the seat of scoffers" (Ps. 1:1). When such a one [who has nothing else to do] is in his seat, it is a seat of scoffers.[2]

362. R. Eleazar said: How is a disciple of the wise regarded by an am ha-aretz? At first, as a golden ladle. After the disciple of the wise has chatted with him, as a silver ladle. After the disciple of the wise has benefited from him, as a clay ladle, which once broken cannot be mended.[3]

363. Our masters taught: Six things were enjoined concerning the am ha-aretz: we may not ask him to act as a witness; we may not accept testimony from him; we may not reveal a secret to him; we may not appoint him as a guardian for orphans; we may not appoint him supervisor of charity funds; and we may not attach ourselves to him on the road.[4]

364. It is told that a certain company of rogues in Kefar Hittim used to eat and drink at the synagogue every Friday before sunset. As they were eating, they would take up the bones and throw them at the teacher's assistant. When one of them was about to die and he was asked, "To whose charge will you commit the guardianship of your son?" he replied, "To the teacher's assistant." He had so many friends, yet he said, "To the teacher's assistant." The reason was that he knew the ways of his companions as well as the ways of the teacher's assistant and knew well who was good [for his son].[5]

365. Our masters taught: One should always sell all that he has in order to marry the daughter of a disciple of the wise, for should he die or be exiled, he will be assured that his sons will turn out to be disciples of the wise. He should not marry the daughter of an am ha-aretz, for should he die or be exiled, his sons will turn out to be unlearned.

One should always sell all that he has in order to marry the daughter of a disciple of the wise. For this is like mingling grapes of one vine with grapes of another, a proper and acceptable procedure. And let him not marry the daughter of an am ha-aretz. For this is like mingling grapes of a vine with berries of a thornbush, an improper and unacceptable procedure.

One should accordingly be ever willing to sell all he has in order to marry the daughter of a disciple of the wise. If he cannot find the daughter of a disciple of the wise, let him marry the daughter of one of the notables of the generation. If he cannot find the daughter of one of the notables of the generation, let him marry the daughter of the head of a synagogue. If he cannot find the daughter of the head of a synagogue, let him marry the daughter of a collector of charity funds. If he cannot find the daughter of a collector of charity funds, let him marry the daughter of a teacher of young children—just so he does not marry the daughter of an am ha-aretz, because such men are detestable, their wives are vermin, and of their daughters it is said, "Cursed be he that lieth with any manner of beast" (Deut. 27:21).[6]

We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: He who weds his daughter to an am ha-aretz is as though he had bound her and laid her down before a lion: just as a lion first rips apart and then devours, and feels no shame, so an am ha-aretz first beats his wife [into submission] and then copulates with her, and feels no shame.[7]

366. Greater is the hatred the amme ha-aretz[8] feel for a disciple of the wise than the hatred heathens feel for Israel. Their women hate even more fiercely than the man. It is further taught: He who has studied Torah and then given up his study hates disciples of the wise even more fiercely than all the aforegoing.

We have been taught that R. Akiva declared, "When I was an am ha-aretz, I used to say: Would that I had a disciple of the wise before me, so I could bite him as an ass bites." His disciples said to him, "Master, you mean as a dog bites." "No," he replied. "When the ass bites, he breaks bones; when the dog bites, he does not break bones."

We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: But for our being needed by them for the give-and-take of trade, they would kill us.

R. Eleazar said: A man should not attach himself to an am ha-aretz on the road, because it is said, "[The Torah] is thy life, and the length of thy days" (Deut. 30:20). If [by abandoning the study of Torah] the am ha-aretz shows that he has no concern for his own life, how much less so for the life of his fellow man.

R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Yohanan: One may rip an am ha-aretz apart [down his front] as one does a fish. And down his back as well,[9] R. Samuel bar Isaac added.

R. Eleazar said: It is permitted to stab an am ha-aretz on a Day of Atonement that falls on the Sabbath. His

---

1. B. Ber 47b.
2. B. Kid 40b–41a.
3. B. Sanh 52b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. B. Pes 49b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. Gen. R. 65:16.
6. Lacking as they do a moral sense and intellectual perception.
7. B. Pes 49a–b.
8. The plural of am ha-aretz.
9. Which is more painful.

disciples said to him: You mean to slaughter him? No, he replied, slaughtering requires a blessing; stabbing does not.[1]

367. R. Eleazar said: The amme ha-aretz will not be brought back to life. R. Yohanan argued: It is not acceptable to their Master that you should speak of them thus. R. Eleazar rejoined: I do no more than expound the verse that asserts, "When thy dew is as the dew of light, the earth shall bring to life the dead" (Isa. 26:19). When a man makes use of Torah's light, Torah's light will bring him back to life; but he who does not make use of Torah's light, Torah's light will not bring him back to life. Still, when R. Eleazar noticed that R. Yohanan was deeply troubled, he added: My master, I have found a remedy for them in the Torah: "Ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God are alive, every one of you this day" (Deut. 4:4). But is it possible to cleave to the Presence, of which it is said, "The Lord thy God is a devouring fire" (Deut. 4:24)? Rather, what the verse means is that when a man weds his daughter to a disciple of the wise, or carries on trade in behalf of disciples of the wise, or supports disciples of the wise out of what he possesses, Scripture accounts it to him as though he were cleaving to the Presence.[2]

368. A favorite saying of the sages of Yavneh: I am God's creature, and my fellow man is God's creature. I—my work is in the city; he—his work is in the field. I rise early for my work, even as he rises early for his work. Just as he does not encroach on my work, so I do not encroach on his work. Lest you say, "I do much [in study of Torah], while he does little," we have been taught: One may may do much and another may do little. What is important is that he direct his heart to Heaven.[3]

369. R. Judah son of Ilai expounded the verse "Your brethren [that, is the amme ha-aretz] who spurn you" (Isa. 66:5). Lest you suppose their expectation [for future life] is gone, their hope for it has ceased, the verse goes on: "We will see your joy" (ibid.).[4]

370. A man should not adopt the rule: Love the sages, . . . love disciples of the wise, and hate the amme ha-aretz. You should love all of them.[5]

371. R. Ammi said: We learn from the words of R. Yose[6] that even if a man studies but one chapter in the morning and one chapter in the evening, he fulfills the precept "This book of Torah shall not depart out of thy mouth" (Josh. 1:8). R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Jehozadak: Even if a man merely recites the Shema in the morning and in the evening, he fulfills the precept "This book of Torah shall not depart," etc. It is forbidden, however, to say such a thing in the presence of amme ha-aretz.[7] But Rava said: On the contrary, it is a mitzvah [a religious duty] to say this in the presence of amme ha-aretz.[8]

372. R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hanina: Let not the blessing of a common man seem trivial in your eyes.

R. Eleazar also said in the name of R. Hanina: Let not the curse of a common man seem trivial in your eyes.[9]

The Oral Torah

373. Moses received the Torah at Sinai and handed it on to Joshua, Joshua to the elders, the elders to the prophets, and the prophets to the Men of the Great Assembly.[10]

374. R. Eleazar said: The greater portion of the Torah is found in the written text,[11] and only the smaller portion in the Oral Torah, for Scripture says, "I wrote for him the major portion of [the precepts of] My Torah" (Hos. 8:12). But R. Yohanan maintained: The greater part was given orally, and only the smaller part is in the written text, for Scripture says, "By the mouth of these words" (Exod. 34:27).

R. Judah bar Nahmani, the interpreter of R. Simeon ben Lakish, said: Scripture asserts, "Write thou these words" (Exod. 34:27), and also asserts, "According to the mouth whereby these words [were uttered]" (ibid.). How are both assertions to be maintained? You are not allowed to say orally [but only to read from a scroll] the words that are written; and you are not allowed to set down in writing the words that were uttered by word of mouth.

Sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: Scripture says, "These"—"these" you may write down, but you are not to write down Halakhot [which were given orally].

R. Yohanan said: God made a covenant with Israel only for the sake of matters that were given by word of mouth, for Scripture says, "By the mouth of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel" (Exod. 34:27).[12]

375. The Holy One foresaw that the nations of the world would get to translate the Torah and, reading it in Greek, would declare, "We are Israel." And to this day the scales appear to be evenly balanced between both claims. But then the Holy One will say to the nations of the world, "You claim you are My children? I have no way of knowing other than that My children are those who possess My

---

1. B. Pes 49a–b.
2. B. Ket 111b.
3. B. Ber 17a.
4. All of us will be together in the joy to come. B. BM 33b.
5. ARN 16.
6. Who ruled that if the old shewbread remains on the table for a while in the morning and the new for some time in the evening, the prescription "continually" is deemed to be observed.
7. Lest they conceive the erroneous idea that neither they nor their children need study Torah.
8. They may conclude that if, merely for recitation of the Shema, Scripture promises, "Then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success," how much greater by far is the reward of those who devote themselves to Torah. B. Men 99b.
9. B. Meg 15a.
10. Avot 1:1.
11. Explicitly or implicitly.
12. B. Git 60b.

secret lore." What secret lore? Mishnah, which was given by word of mouth.

"And the Lord said to Moses: 'Write thou these words' " (Exod. 34:27). When the Holy One came to give the Torah to Israel, he uttered it to Moses in its order, Scripture and Mishnah, Talmud and Aggadah, as is said, "The Lord spoke all these words" (Exod. 20:1). Even what a faithful student was someday to ask his teacher, the Holy One uttered to Moses at that time. After Moses had learned the Torah, the Holy One said: Go and teach it to My children. Moses replied: Master of the universe, write it down for Your children. The Holy One then said: What do you wish? That the Mishnah also be in written form? Then what would be the difference between Israel and the nations of the world? With regard to this response, Scripture quotes God as saying, "Had I written the full abundance[1] of My law for him" (Hos. 8:12)—had I indeed done such a thing, "the children of Israel would by now have been accounted as strangers [the same as the nations of the world]" (ibid.). Therefore give them Scripture in writing and Mishnah by word of mouth. "Write thou these words"—Scripture. Then: "By these words uttered with the mouth I have made a covenant with thee" (ibid.)—these words being Mishnah and Talmud, which make it possible to tell Israel and the nations of the world apart.[2]

376. The sages taught: Some time ago Rome's wicked government sent two military officers to the sages of Israel with the request: Teach us your Torah. They read it through once, a second time, and a third time. When they were about to take their leave, they said: We scrutinized your entire Torah, and it is true, except for one thing. You say, "An ox belonging to an Israelite that gores an ox belonging to a Gentile is exempt from paying damages; but if a Gentile's ox gores an Israelite's ox, whether for the first time or the third time, the Gentile owner must pay full damages."[3] There are only two alternatives here: if the term "another's" (Exod. 21:35) excludes anyone who is not a Jew, then a Gentile's ox that gores an Israelite's ox should also be free of paying damages; if on the other hand the term "another's" is not exclusive, then the Israelite's ox that gores the Gentile's ox should also be liable. But we will not divulge this inconsistency to the government.[4]

377. Elijah said: Once, as I was walking along a road, a man accosted me. He came at me aggressively with the sort of argument that leads to heresy. It turned out that the man had Scripture but no Mishnah. He asserted: Scripture was given us from Mount Sinai, but not Mishnah. I replied: My son, were not both Scripture and Mishnah given by the Almighty? Does the fact that they are different from each other mean that both cannot have been given by Him? By what parable may the question be elucidated? By the one of a mortal king who had two servants, whom he loved with perfect love. To one he gave a measure of wheat, and to the other he gave a measure of wheat; to one a bundle of flax, and to the other a bundle of flax. What did the clever one of the two do? He took the flax and wove it into a napkin. He took the wheat and made it into fine flour by sifting the grain and grinding it. Then he kneaded the dough and baked it, set the loaf of bread on the table, spread the napkin over the bread, and left it to await the coming of the king.

But the foolish one of the two did not do anything at all.

After a while the king came into his house and said to the two servants: My sons, bring me what I gave you. One brought out the table with the loaf of bread baked of fine flour on it, and with the napkin spread over the bread. The other brought out his wheat in a basket with a bundle of flax over the wheat grains.

What a shame! What a disgrace!

So, too, when the Holy One gave the Torah to Israel, He gave it as wheat to be turned into fine flour and as flax to be turned into cloth for garments.[5]

378. Our masters taught: A story of R. Yohanan ben Beroka and R. Eleazar ben Hisma who went to Pekiin[6] to pay their respects to R. Joshua in his old age. He asked them, "What new teaching was there in the academy this time?" They replied, "Master, we are your disciples and drink only of your water." R. Joshua: "Even so, it is impossible for a session in the academy to take place without at least one interpretation that is new. Whose Sabbath was it?"[7] "It was the Sabbath of R. Eleazar ben Azariah." "And what did the haggadic exposition deal with that day?" "With the portion 'Assemble' (Deut. 31:12)." "How did he expound it?" " 'Assemble the people, the men and the women and the little ones'—the men, to be sure, came to learn, and the women to listen. But why did the little ones have to come? In order to bestow reward upon those who brought them." R. Joshua: "[There you are!] You had a precious jewel in your hands and were about to deprive me of it!"

R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar went on to say, "R. Eleazar ben Azariah also expounded the verse 'The words of the wise are as goads, as nails planted by masters of assemblies; they are given from one Shepherd' [Eccles. 12:11]. Why are words of Torah likened to goads? To tell you that even as a goad directs the heifer along her furrows to bring life to the world, so words of Torah direct the hearts of those who study them from ways of death to ways of life. The words are spoken of as 'planted': even as a planted tree bears fruit and multiplies, so words of Torah bear fruit and multiply. 'Masters of assemblies'—these are disciples of the wise who sit in many assemblies and occupy themselves with Torah. Some declare 'unclean' and others declare 'clean.' Some prohibit and others permit. Some declare 'unfit' and others declare 'fit.' Lest a man say, "How, then, can I possibly learn Torah?" Scripture

---

1. Mishnah as well as Scripture.
2. Tanhuma B, Ki Tissa, §17; Tanhuma, Ki Tissa, §60; Exod. R. 47:1.
3. An ox belonging to a Jew that does injury for the first time incurs payment for only half the damage.
4. B. BK 38a.
5. TdEZ 2 (JPS, pp. 407–8).
6. A southern town in the Land of Israel between Lydda and Yavneh.
7. Rabban Gamaliel used to lecture on two Sabbaths and R. Eleazar on the third Sabbath. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §75.

asserts, 'They are given from one Shepherd.' One God gave and one leader uttered all of them at the command of the Lord of all works, blessed be He, as is said, 'And God spoke all these words, saying' [Exod. 20:1]. It is up to you to make your ear like a hopper and get yourself a perceptive heart to understand the intent of those who declare 'clean' and those who declare 'unclean,' of those who prohibit and those who permit, of those who declare 'unfit' and those who declare 'fit.' "

When he heard this interpretation, R. Joshua said, "It is no orphaned generation in whose midst R. Eleazar ben Azariah lives."[1]

379. "They are given from one shepherd" (Eccles. 12:11). The Holy One said: If you hear a word of Torah that pleases you from a lowly one in Israel, regard it not as something you heard from such a lowly one, but as though you had heard it from a man of note—indeed, not merely from a man of note, but as though you had heard it from a sage; indeed, not merely from a sage, but as though you heard it from a prophet; indeed, not merely from a prophet, but as though you had heard it from the shepherd, the shepherd being none other than Moses.[2]

380. R. Yannai said: Had the Torah been given in the form of clear-cut decisions, Israel would have had no leg to stand on. And the proof? After "the Lord spoke to Moses," Moses asked: Master of the universe, let me have the clear-cut rule. God replied: The majority is to be followed.[3] When a majority acquits, acquit. When a majority condemns, condemn. Therefore [to allow the possibility of differering opinions], the Torah may be expounded with forty-nine arguments by which something may be declared unclean and forty-nine other arguments by which the same thing may be declared clean.[4]

381. Once, while Rabban Gamaliel and the elders were reclining in an upper chamber in Jericho, dates[5] were brought in. They ate them, and Rabban Gamaliel gave permission to R. Akiva to say grace. R. Akiva quickly said the one blessing that is a summary of three. Rabban Gamaliel said to him: Akiva, how long will you stick your head into a quarrel [not of your making and decide against my opinion]? R. Akiva replied: Our master, you, to be sure, say one thing, and your colleagues say another. Nevertheless, you yourself taught us that when an individual differs from the majority, the Halakhah is decided with the majority.[6]

382. "The words of the wise are ka-dorbonot" (Eccles. 12:11)—as a ball (kaddur) of children (banot). Just as a ball children play with is tossed from hand to hand but never falls on the ground, so Moses received the Torah at Sinai and handed it on to Joshua, Joshua to the elders, the elders to the prophets, and the prophets to the Men of the Great Assembly, etc.[7]

383. "Thy cheeks are comely with circlets (torim)" (Song 1:10)—with two Torahs, the one in writing and the one by word of mouth.[8]

384. The Torah in writing is made up of general rules; the Torah by word of mouth is made up of specific details.[9]

385. [The rules concerning] release from vows, which have no basis in Scripture, hover in the air. The laws concerning the Sabbath, festal offerings, and acts of trespass[10] are as mountains hanging by a hair, for they have scant proof from Scripture but many Halakhot. The laws concerning civil cases, the offering of sacrifices, ritual cleanness and uncleanness, and forbidden sexual relations (Lev. 18:6ff.) have their basis in Scripture. Nevertheless, both kinds of laws are essentials of the Torah.[11]

386. "Kevutzotav taltallim" (Song 5:11).[12] R. Hisda said in the name of Mar Ukba: The verse shows that on every single stroke (kotz ve-kotz) [over the letters of Torah], there are mounds upon mounds (tille tillim) of Halakhot.[13]

387. Hananiah son of R. Joshua's brother said: Between each commandment and the next [on the Tablets] were written the related portions of Torah and the minutiae derived from them.

When R. Yohanan, while studying Scripture, came to the verse "In the hands [of God] was something resembling waves (gelile) as radiant as gold, [the troughs between them] filled with Tarshish" (Song 5:14),[14] he would say: The son of R. Joshua's brother has instructed me well. Just as in the sea there are small waves (gallim) between one large wave and another, so the related portions of Torah and the minutiae derived from them were written between one commandment and the next on the Tablets, for in going on to say, "[The troughs between them] filled with Tarshish," Scripture means that these were filled with Talmud, which is like the Great Sea.[15]

---

1. B. Hag 3a and En Yaakov, ad loc.; ARN 18.
2. P. Sanh 10:1, 28a; Sif Deut., §41.
3. Exod. 23:2.
4. P. Sanh 4:2, 22a.
5. One of the seven species listed in Deut. 8:8 as "honey." For these, Rabban Gamaliel maintained, the full-length—not a summary—grace should be said.
6. B. Ber 37a.
7. Eccles R. 12:11, §1.
8. Song R. 1:10, §1.
9. E.g., the general prohibition in Scripture of work on the Sabbath and the specification in rabbinic tradition of the thirty-nine kinds of prohibited work. Tanhuma, Noah, §3.
10. Misappropriation of holy things to secular use. See Lev. 5:14–16.
11. B. Hag 10a.
12. "His locks are curled."
13. B. Er 21b.
14. JV: "His hands are rods of gold set with beryl." But gelile ("rods") can also mean "waves"; memullaim ("set" or "studded") can also mean "filled"; and the meaning of "Tarshish," variously rendered "beryl," "jacinth," or "topaz," is uncertain. In saying that "Jonah rose up to flee to Tarshish" (Jon. 1:3), it is suggested as Targum Jonathan makes clear, that Jonah sought to flee to the Great Sea from the Presence of the Lord.
15. Song R. 5:14, §2; P. Shek 6:1, 49d.

388. R. Meir had a disciple whose name was Symmachus. If anything was ritually unclean, he could supply forty-eight reasons to prove its uncleanness, and if anything was ritually clean, he could supply forty-eight reasons to prove its cleanness.[1]

389. "His legs are as pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold" (Song 5:15). A pillar that does not have a capital above and a pedestal beneath does not strike one as handsome. Thus, there is no section in Torah that does not have a capital before it and a pedestal after it.[2]

390. The sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: "As a hammer may be shattered by a rock" (Jer. 23:29). Just as a hammer that strikes a rock may itself be shattered into many fragments, so may a verse [encountering the scrutiny of a keen mind] yield many meanings.[3]

391. "And the smell of thine ointment because of all manner of spices" (Song 4:10). R. Samuel bar Nahman said: Of itself, oil is without scent, but when you perfume it with spices, it gives forth all kinds of fragrance. So, too, as you expound a verse, you find in it all kinds of rich meaning.[4]

392. R. Kahana said: By the time I was eighteen I had studied all six divisions of the Mishnah, yet until today I did not know that a verse cannot depart from its plain meaning.[5]

393. The sages of former generations were called soferim ["scribes"], because they counted (soferim) all the letters in the Torah.

Or: Soferim, because they arranged the laws in the Torah by numbers.[6]

394. "Black as a raven" (Song 5:11). R. Alexandrai bar Haggai said in the name of R. Alexandrai the Hymn Writer: If all the inhabitants of the world were to gather and try to turn one wing of a raven white, they would be unable to do so. So, too, if all the inhabitants of the world were to gather and try to remove a yod, the smallest letter in the Torah, they would be unable to do so.[7]

395. The words "Because he hath despised the word of the Lord" (Num. 15:31) refer to an epikoros [Epicurean], "one irreverent toward religion."

Or, the words refer to one who maintains that the Torah is not from Heaven. Even if he says that the entire Torah is from Heaven, except for one verse that [he contends] was not said by the Holy One but was said by Moses on his own, he is included in "He that despised the word of the Lord." Even if he says, "The entire Torah, all of it, is from Heaven, except for this fine point, except for this a fortiori argument, except for this inference from analogy, he is included in "He that despised the word of the Lord." A parable of a heap of stones: when only one of them is disturbed, all of them are disturbed.[8]

396. What kind of person is meant by epikoros? R. Joseph said: The kind who jeers: "What use have the sages been to us? They read Scripture for their own benefit and study Mishnah for their own benefit."

Rava said: People like the family of Benjamin the Physician, who say: "What use have the sages been to us? They could never allow us [to eat] the raven or forbid us to eat the dove."[9] R. Papa said: Like one who says, "Oh, those sages!"[10]

397. He who ridicules the words of the sages will be punished with boiling excrement.[11]

398. R. Yudan said: At one time Mordecai went around among all the nursing women, but just then he could not find one for [the infant] Esther. So he himself gave her suck, for, as R. Berekhiah and R. Abbahu declared in the name of R. Eliezer, milk came to him and he was able to give her suck. When R. Abbahu cited this tradition before an assembly, the assembly laughed derisively at what he had to say. But he asked: Does not a Mishnah affirm this? "R. Simeon ben Eleazar says: Milk of a male is ritually clean" (Makh 6:7).[12]

399. Polemon asked Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], "He who has two heads—which head should he put tefillin on?" R. Judah replied, "Either leave [the house of study] or consider yourself under the ban." Just then a man came in and said, "A child with two heads has been born to me. How much am I to give the priest for his redemption?"[13]

400. The ordinances of Torah need no additional strengthening; but the ordinances of the scribes do need such strengthening.[14]

401. Resh Lakish said: There are times when the nullifying of the Torah may lead to the establishing of it. Thus it is said, "Which (asher) thou didst break" (Exod. 34:1; Deut. 10:2), by which the Holy One meant: You did well (yishar) to break the Tablets.[15]

---

1. B. Er 13b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. What precedes and what follows each lesson help to explain its meaning. Tanhuma B, Be-har, §2.
3. B. Sanh 34a.
4. Song R. 4:10, §1.
5. "In the narrative and poetical passages" [Shab, Soncino, p. 296, n. 5]. B. Shab 63a.
6. Such as four kinds of injury (BK 1:1) and thirty-nine kinds of work prohibited on the Sabbath (Shab 7:1). B. Kid 30a; P. Shek 5:1.
7. Lev. R. 19:2; Song R. 5:11, §3.
8. B. Sanh 99a; P. Sanh 10:1, 27b.
9. Bound as they are by what is written in the Torah.
10. B. Sanh 99b–100a.
11. B. Er 21b.
12. Gen. R. 30:8.
13. The fixed sum for one firstborn was five shekels (see Num. 18:16). B. Men 37a.
14. B. Ta 17b.
15. B. Men 99a–b.

402. R. Yohanan and Resh Lakish used to look into a book of Aggadah[1] on Sabbaths and, citing the verse "When work is to be done for the Lord, [one ordinance of] Thy Torah may be violated" (Ps. 119:126), expounded it thus: It is better that a single letter in the Torah be uprooted, so that the [entire] Torah may not be forgotten in Israel.[2]

Holy Writings and Other Books

403. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Banaah: The Torah was given in separate scrolls, for David declared, "Then I said, I, who am alluded to in a scroll in the book of Torah, am come" (Ps. 40:8).[3] But R. Simeon ben Lakish said: The Torah was given as [one] sealed [book], for it is said, "[When Moses had finished writing the words of this Torah in a book, to the very end, Moses commanded the Levites], 'Take this book of Torah' " (Deut. 31:26).[4]

404. "Write thou" (Exod. 34:27). The ministering angels began to say to the Holy One: Are You giving permission to Moses to write down anything he wishes? He may well say to Israel, "I gave you the Torah—it is I who wrote and gave it to you." The Holy One replied: No, Moses would never do such a thing! But no matter what he does, he is trusted, as is said, "Not so with my servant Moses; he is trusted in all My house" (Num. 12:7).[5]

405. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: In the Temple Court were found three Torah scrolls: The scroll of maon, the scroll of zaatute, and the scroll of hu. In one scroll they found written, "The eternal God is a dwelling place (maon)" (Deut. 33:27), but in two other scrolls the word for dwelling place was given as meonah. So the sages discarded the one and kept the two. In one scroll it was written, "And he sent the young men (zaatute) of the children of Israel" (Exod. 24:5), but in two other scrolls the word for "young men" was naare. So they discarded the one and kept the two. In one scroll they found the word for "she" represented eleven times by the masculine form hu, "he," but in two others they found the word for "she" represented eleven times by the word hi, "she." So they discarded the one scroll and kept the two.[6]

406. "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but the things that are revealed belong to us and to our children forever" (Deut. 29:28). Each of the letters that spell out the words "to us and to our children" and the first letter in the word "forever" have a dot over them. Why? Because Ezra said: If the prophet Elijah comes and asks me, "Why did you write it thus?" I will reply, "But I did put dots over the letters [to indicate my uncertainty about the text]." If, however, he says to me, "You wrote out the text accurately," I will remove the dots.[7]

407. Our masters taught: "And it came to pass when the Ark set forward that Moses said," etc. (Num. 10:35). For this section the Holy One provided signs to precede it and signs to follow it,[8] in order to indicate that the section is not in its proper place.[9] But Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: This is not the real reason. The signs indicate that the section is to be regarded as a separate book in itself.

Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: The section is destined to be moved from its present place and put where it belongs. Why then was it put here to begin with? In order to provide a break between the account of one calamity and the account of another calamity that immediately followed.[10]

408. Many sections in Scripture are placed next to each other even though they are as distant from each other as the east is from the west.[11]

409. "The enemy said: 'I will pursue,' " etc. (Exod. 15:19). This was really the beginning of the section. Why then was it written here [in the middle of the section]? Because no strict order of "earlier" and "later" is observed in Scripture.

A similar instance: "And it came to pass on the eighth day, that Moses called Aaron and his sons," etc. (Lev. 9:1). This was really the beginning of the section. Why then was it written here [in the middle of the section]? Because no strict order of "earlier" and "later" is observed in Scripture.

A similar instance: "In the year that King Uzziah died," etc. (Isa. 6:1). This was really the beginning of the book. Why then was it written here? Becuse no strict order of "earlier" and "later" is observed in Scripture.

A similar instance: "Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak with thee" (Ezek. 2:1)—some say it is: "Son of man, put forth a riddle" (Ezek. 17:2)—was really the beginning of the book. Why then was it written here? Because no strict order of "earlier" and "later" is observed in Scripture.

A similar instance: "Go, and cry in the ears of Jerusalem" (Jer. 2:2). This was really the beginning of the book. Why then was it written here? Because no strict order of "earlier" and "later" is observed in Scripture.

---

1. Even though the writing down of Aggadah was prohibited.
2. B. Tem 14b.
3. JV: "Lo, I am come with the roll of a book which is prescribed for me." The allusion to David is said to be found in Gen. 19:15, where the clause "The two daughters that are found" is read "The two daughters who are finds"; and the word "finds" is construed as an adumbration of God's saying in later years, "I regard David as a 'find' " (Ps. 89:21).
4. B. Git 60a.
5. Exod. R. 47:9.
6. Sof 6; Sif Deut., §356.
7. ARN 34.
8. The letter nun upside down precedes and follows the section.
9. It properly belongs to Num. 2, where Israel's disposition according to the banners of the tribes is set forth.
10. The three days' journey from the mount of the Lord (Num. 10:33), which is construed as a departure from God, and the account of the murmurers who spoke evil (Num. 11:1). B. Shab 115b–116a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. Sif Num., §131.

A similar instance: "Israel was a luxuriant vine" (Hos. 10:1). This was really the beginning of the book. Why then was it written here? Because no strict order of "earlier" and "later" is observed in Scripture.

A similar instance: "I, Koheleth, have been king over Israel in Jerusalem" (Eccles. 1:12). This was really the beginning of the book. Why then was it written here? Because no strict order of "earlier" and "later" is observed in Scripture.[1]

410. "Man knoweth not the order thereof" (Job 28:13). R. Eleazar taught: The sections in Scripture are not given in sequential order.[2]

411. "And Jacob vowed a vow" (Gen. 28:20). R. Abbahu and R. Jonathan differed. One maintained that the narrative is in scrambled order, but the other said that it follows the order in which the events took place. He who says that the account is in scrambled order [bases himself on the argument that since] God had already promised, "And behold, I am with thee" (Gen. 28:15), why should Jacob now be saying, "If God will be with me" (Gen. 28:20)? But how does he who maintains that the narrative is in order explain Jacob's saying, "If God will be with me"? Because Jacob declared: If the conditions [namely, my refraining from sin] are fulfilled, so that God will [find it possible to] be with me and to protect me, then I will fulfill my vow.[3]

412. Our masters taught: The order of the Prophets is: Joshua and Judges, Samuel and Kings, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, Isaiah and the Twelve [Minor Prophets].

The order of the Writings is: Ruth and the book of Psalms and Job and Proverbs; Ecclesiastes, Song of Songs, and Lamentations; Daniel and the Scroll of Esther; Ezra[4] and Chronicles.

Moses wrote his own book, as well as the oracles of Balaam (Num. 23–24), and Job. Joshua wrote the book that bears his name and the last eight verses of the Five Books. Samuel wrote the book that bears his name, as well as Judges and Ruth. David wrote the book of Psalms, including in it the work of ten elders. Jeremiah wrote the book that bears his name, the book of Kings, and Lamentations. Hezekiah and his colleagues published Isaiah, Proverbs, Song of Songs, and Ecclesiastes. The Men of the Great Assembly published Ezekiel and the Twelve [Minor Prophets], Daniel and the Scroll of Esther. Ezra wrote the book that bears his own name and the genealogies in the book of Chronicles up to his own time.

David wrote the book of Psalms, including in it the work of ten elders: Adam, Melchizedek, Abraham, Moses, Heman, Jeduthun, Asaph, and the three sons of Korah.[5]

413. R. Huna said in the name of R. Assi: Though certain psalms bear the name of one of the ten authors, the book as a whole bears the name of David, king of Israel. As a parable tells us, there was a company of musicians who sought to sing a hymn to the king. The king said to them: To be sure, all of you are skilled musicians, all of you are devout, all of you are worthy of taking part in the singing of a hymn before me, yet let the hymn be sung by So-and-so only, on behalf of all of you. Why? Because his voice is sweetest.

Similarly, when ten righteous men sought to sing the book of Psalms, the Holy One said to them: To be sure, all of you are skilled musicians, devout, and worthy of taking part in the singing of hymns to Me, yet let the hymn be sung by David in behalf of all of you. Why? Because his voice is the sweetest, as is said, "The saying of David the son of Jesse . . . the sweet singer of the psalms of Israel" (2 Sam. 23:1). Who, therefore, makes the psalms of Israel sweet? David son of Jesse.[6]

414. R. Simon said: Be'eri[7] uttered only two verses in prophecy, and since these were not sufficient to make up a separate book, they were attached to the book of Isaiah. The two verses were "And when they shall say," etc. (Isa. 8:19) and the verse that follows it.[8]

415. A certain sage who was sitting before R. Samuel bar Nahmani said: Job never was and never existed—he is no more than a paradigm. R. Samuel replied: To confound such as you, Scripture says, "There was a man in the land of Uz, Job was his name" (Job 1:1).

The sage retorted: If it is as you say, what of the verse "The poor man had nothing, save one little ewe lamb, which he had bought and reared," etc. (2 Sam. 12:3)? Did such a thing really happen? Was not the tale a paradigm? So, too, Job was a paradigm.

R. Samuel: But if so, why are his name and the name of his land mentioned?[9]

416. Resh Lakish said: Job [as described in Scripture] never was and never existed. What did Resh Lakish mean by saying Job never was and never existed? He meant only that the unbelievable sufferings Job underwent according to Scripture [never took place]. Why then were they set down about him? Because if they had come upon him, he would have been able to withstand them.

R. Hanina said: Job was a Gentile. For, R. Hiyya taught, the Holy One said: One righteous Gentile rose up for Me among the nations. so I gave him [his extraordinary] reward [in this world] and let him go. Who was He? Job.[10]

417. We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: The dead whom Ezekiel had brought back to life stood up on their feet, uttered song, and died again at once. What song did

---

1. Mek, Be-shallah, Shirata, 7; Yalkut, Be-shallah, §249.
2. MTeh 3:2.
3. Gen. R. 70:4; Yalkut, Va-yetze, §122.
4. Ezra and Nehemiah were originally one book.
5. The verses beginning "Thine eyes did see mine unformed substance" (Ps. 139:16 and Ps. 92) are ascribed to Adam; Ps. 110 to Melchizedek; Ps. 90 to Moses; Ps. 89 to Ethan the Ezrahite, who is identified as Abraham. B. BB 14b–15a.
6. Song R. 4:1, §1; Eccles. R. 7:19, §4.
7. The father of Hosea. See Hos. 1:1.
8. Lev. R. 6:6.
9. B. BB 15a.
10. See Job 42:10–17. Unlike Jews, whose reward is in the world-to-come, Job was given a greater reward in this world. Gen. R. 57:4.

they utter? The Lord slayeth in righteousness and bringeth back to life in mercy. R. Joshua said, The song they sang was: "The Lord killeth and maketh alive; He bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up" (1 Sam. 2:6). R. Judah said: It was truth—it was parable. R. Nehemiah asked him: If it was truth, how can you speak of it as a parable? And if it was a parable, how can you say it was truth? Say, then: In truth it was parable.

R. Eliezer son of R. Yose the Galilean said: The dead whom Ezekiel had brought back to life went up to the Land of Israel, wed wives, and begot sons and daughters. R. Judah ben Betera stood up on his feet and said: I am one of their descendants, and these are the tefillin my dear father's father left me [as a keepsake] from them.[1]

418. R. Simon said in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi, and R. Hama the father of R. Hoshaiah in the name of Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]: The book of Chronicles was given for no other purpose than that the meaning underlying it be expounded.[2]

419. R. Simeon ben Pazzi said: When my dear father Pazzi began a discourse on the book of Chronicles, he would speak to the book and say: All that is set down in you is baffling. Still, we know how to bring forth the inner meaning that is yours.[3]

420. R. Simlai came before R. Yohanan and said, "Let my master teach me the Book of Genealogies."[4] R. Yohanan: "Where are you from?" "From Lydda."[5] "And where do you live?" "In Nehardea." R. Yohanan: "We do not teach it to people of Lydda or of Nehardea, much less to a native of Lydda who lives in Nehardea." But R. Simlai kept urging R. Yohanan until he consented. Next R. Simlai asked, "Will you teach it to me in three months?" R. Yohanan picked up a pebble and tossed it at R. Simlai as he said, "Beruriah, wife of R. Meir, daughter of R. Hanina ben Teradion, who could master three hundred Halakhot a day, was nevertheless unable to discharge in three years what she had taken upon herself to do in the study of this book. Yet you speak of doing it in three months!"[6]

421. Rami bar R. Yuda said in the name of Rav: Ever since the Book of Genealogies was suppressed, the strength of the sages has been depleted and the light of their eyes dimmed.[7]

Mar Zutra said: The words between "Azel" and "Azel" were laden with so many exegetical interpretations that, if set down, they would have required four hundred camels to carry them.[8]

422. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: Were a man to tell me that in Babylonia there is a Midrash on Chronicles, I would go and bring it. But as things stand, even if all our masters were to gather, they would not have the strength to bring it from there.[9]

423. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Truly, there is a man whose name should be remembered for blessing. He is Hananiah ben Hezekiah. But for him, the book of Ezekiel would have been suppressed,[10] for its words contradicted the Torah.[11] What did he do? He had three hundred kegs of oil taken up to him and sat in an upper chamber until he so expounded them [that the contradictions were reconciled].

R. Judah son of R. Samuel bar Shilat said in the name of Rav: The sages wished to suppress the book of Ecclesiastes, because its words contradicted one another.[12] Why did they not suppress it? Because its beginning is religious teaching, and its end religious teaching.[13]

They also wished to suppress the book of Proverbs, because its statements contradicted one another.[14] And why did they not suppress it? Because they said: Did we not examine the book of Ecclesiastes and discover reasons for not suppressing it? Let us also examine the book of Proverbs more diligently.[15]

424. Formerly they used to say, "Proverbs, Song of Songs, and Ecclesiastes should be suppressed," because these books spoke in parables that could not be understood and should therefore not be included in the Writings. Indeed, these books were suppressed. But then the Men of the Great Assembly came along and interpreted them.[16]

425. R. Isaac ben Levi said: The sages were about to suppress the Book of Ecclesiastes, having found in it ideas that savored of heresy. They said: Should Solomon have given utterance to advice such as "Rejoice, O young man, in thy childhood; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth" (Eccles. 11:9)? Even though Moses had said, "Go not about after your own heart and your own eyes" (Num. 15:39), Solomon said, "Walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes" (Eccles. 11:9), as though all restraint were removed and there were neither [ultimate] justice nor [Supreme] Judge. But since Solomon went on to say, "But know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment" (ibid.), [the sages decided that] Solomon had spoken well after all.[17]

---

1. B. Sanh 92a.
2. Lev. R. 1:3; Ruth R. 2:1.
3. B. Meg 13a and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Yalkut, 1 Chron., §674.
4. A commentary on Chronicles.
5. Southern Palestine.
6. B. Pes 62b.
7. It contained reasons for the commandments. So Rashi, ad loc.
8. So enormous was the number of interpretations in the passage beginning "And Azel had six sons" (1 Chron. 8:38) and ending with "And Azel had six sons" (1 Chron. 9:44). B. Pes 62b.
9. P. Sanh 10:1, 28a.
10. Excluded from the biblical canon.
11. E.g., Ezek. 44:31, where dietary regulations differ; and 45:20, where an unheard-of festival is described.
12. "I said . . . of mirth: 'What doth it accomplish?' " (Eccles. 2:2) and "I commended mirth" (Eccles. 8:15).
13. "For what profit hath he that worketh in that he laboreth (Eccles. 3:9) and "Fear God, and keep His commandments" (Eccles. 12:13).
14. Such as: "Answer not a fool according to his folly" (Prov. 26:4), and "Answer a fool according to his folly" (Prov. 26:5).
15. B. Shab 13b and 30b.
16. ARN 1.
17. Lev. R. 28:1.

426. All the holy writings make the hands unclean.[1] Song of Songs and Ecclesiastes make the hands unclean. R. Judah said: Song of Songs does make the hands unclean, but there is a difference of opinion concerning Ecclesiastes. R. Yose said: Ecclesiastes does not make the hands unclean,[2] but there is a difference of opinion concerning Song of Songs.

R. Simeon said: [The ruling about] Ecclesiastes is one of the [few] leniencies of the school of Shammai and one of the [few] stringencies of the school of Hillel.[3]

R. Simeon ben Azzai said: I have a tradition from the seventy-two elders[4] that on the day R. Eleazar ben Azariah was appointed to be head of the academy,[5] a decision was made that Song of Songs and Ecclesiastes were declared to make the hands unclean.

R. Akiva said: God forbid! No man in Israel differed concerning Song of Songs and maintained that it does not make the hands unclean, for the whole world is not as worthy as the day on which Song of Songs was given to Israel. For while all songs in Scripture are holy, Song of Songs is the holiest of the holy. Accordingly, if there was a difference of opinion, it concerned only Ecclesiastes.[6]

427. The Aramaic parts of Ezra and Daniel make the hands unclean. If an Aramaic section is translated into Hebrew, or a Hebrew section is translated into Aramaic or is written in the ancient Hebrew script, it does not make the hands unlcean. A part of Scripture never makes the hands unclean until it is written in Assyrian script, on hide, and in ink.[7]

428. "Add thou not unto His words" (Prov. 30:6). We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: Esther was composed by inspiration of the holy spirit, for Scripture states, "And Haman said in his heart" (Esther 6:6).[8] R. Akiva said: Esther was composed by inspiration of the holy spirit, for Scripture states, "And Esther obtained favor in the eyes of all that looked upon her" (Esther 2:15). R. Meir said: Esther was composed by inspiration of the holy spirit, for Scripture states, "And the thing became known unto Mordecai" (Esther 2:22).[9] R. Yose ben Durmaskit said: Esther was composed by inspiration of the holy spirit, for Scripture states, "But on the spoil they laid not their hands" (Esther 9:10).[10]

Samuel said: If I had been there [among the Tannaim], I would have provided proof superior to all the verses they cited. In saying, "They confirmed what they took upon them" (Esther 9:27), Scripture implies that they confirmed in heaven above what the Jews took upon themselves on the earth below. R. Joseph said: [The matter can be proved] from here—from the verse "These days of Purim shall not fail from among the Jews" (Esther 9:28). R. Nahman bar Isaac said: It can be proved from here—from the latter part of that verse: "Nor the memorial of them perish from their seed" (ibid.).[11]

429. [Queen] Esther sent word to the sages: Set my book down in writing for the generations [to come, as one of the books of Scripture]. They replied, "Have I not written for thee three parts?" (Prov. 22:20)[12]—three parts [the Five Books, the Prophets, and the Writings], not four. They finally found support for what she requested in the verse "Write this [the war against Amalek] a memorial in a scroll" (Exod. 17:14).

R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: The Scroll of Esther does not make the hands unclean. But did not Samuel say that Esther was composed by inspiration of the holy spirit? Composed to be read as Holy Writ; but its written text is not regarded as Holy Writ.[13]

430. R. Ze'era said: This Scroll [of Ruth] contains no rules concerning ritual uncleanness and cleanness or what is prohibited and what is permitted. Why then was it written? To teach you how adamant is the reward for those who practice loving-kindness.[14]

431. "And it came to pass at that time that Judah went down," etc. (Gen. 38:1). Surely Scripture should [not have interrupted the narrative about Joseph, but] should have continued with, "Joseph was brought down to Egypt" (Gen. 39:1). So, too, in the passage "They were not ashamed. Now the serpent was more subtle" (Gen. 2:25 and 3:1), Scripture [should not have brought in the serpent, but] should have continued with "The Lord God made for Adam and for his wife garments of skins" (Gen. 3:21). So, too, the passage in which Nebuchadnezzar says, "Those that walk in pride He is able to abase" (Dan. 4:34), is followed by reference to "Belshazzar the king" (Dan. 5:1) and to "Darius the Mede" (Dan. 6:1). But where is Evil-merodach [who followed Nebuchadnezzar and preceded Belshazzar]? So, too, the passage "In that night Belshazzar the Chaldean

---

1. Jews deemed the holy writings so sacred that they stored them with heave-offering (terumah) produce, which was also holy. However, mice seeking out such produce often chewed up the parchment of the writings. As a result, the sages declared that picking up these writings made the hands unclean. The hope was that this decree would cause Jews to think twice before storing them alongside terumah, which would contract uncleanness from contact with such hands. Thus the writings would be saved from destruction.
2. Being excluded from the canon.
3. According to the former, Ecclesiastes did not convey uncleanness to the hands; according to the latter, it did.
4. The usual number in the Great Sanhedrin is seventy-one. J. Z. Lauterbach says that since on that day both Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eleazar ben Azariab were included, the total reached seventy-two. See JE, s.v. "Sanhedrin."
5. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §75.
6. Yad 3:5.
7. Yad 4:5.
8. How could the author have known this except through the holy spirit?
9. How, except through the holy spirit, could Mordecai have come to know what the king's chamberlains were plotting?
10. Again, how, except through the holy spirit, would the author have known that all the Jews were so scrupulous?
11. B. Meg 7a.
12. JV: "Have I not written unto thee excellent things (shalishim)." But shalishim also means "threefold," hence three parts.
13. B. Meg 7a.
14. Yalkut, Ruth, §601.

king was slain. And Darius the Mede received the kingdom" (Dan. 5:30–6:1). But where is the passage "In the third year of King Belshazzar" (Dan. 8:1) [which should certainly have preceded the account of his death]? However, R. Huna said: [This apparent disarray in Daniel exists] so that it should not be said, "These are merely fiction," and to make it known that the text was composed by inspiration of the holy spirit. The sages said: Daniel's vision, which occurred in the third year of Belshazzar's reign, is mentioned after the account of his death in order to combine the entire book of Daniel as a work framed by inspiration of the holy spirit.[1]

432. "And he gave straw and provender for the camels" (Gen. 24:32). R. Aha said: The ordinary conversation of servants in the households of the patriarchs is deemed more important than the Torah given to their descendants. Thus the section dealing with Eliezer covers two or three columns, and what he has to say is not only recorded but repeated. On the other hand, the uncleanness of a creeping creature is one of the essentials of Torah, yet we learn the rule that its blood as well as its flesh defiles[2] only from a particle in Scripture whose meaning has been extended by interpretation.

"And water to wash his feet" (Gen. 24:32). R. Aha said: The washing of the feet of the servants in the households of the patriarchs is more important than the Torah given to their descendants, so that even the washing of their feet must be recorded.[3]

433. R. Adda son of R. Hanina said: Had Israel not sinned, only the Five Books and the book of Joshua, which contains the boundaries of the Land of Israel, would have been given them. And the proof? The verse "Much wisdom, much provocation" (Eccles. 1:18).[4]

434. "And of more than these (me-hemmah), my son, beware: of making many books there is no end" (Eccles. 12:12). The word me-hemmah is to be read mehummah, meaning that confusion (mehummah) would overcome you. For he who brings into his house any books other than the twenty-four books of Scripture—books such as Ben Sira [meaning Ecclesiasticus] or the Book of Ben Tagla—brings confusion (mehummah) into his house.[5]

435. R. Akiva said: He who reads apocryphal books, such as the books of Ben Sira and the books of Ben Laanah, has no portion in the world-to-come.[6] As for the books of Homer and all other books that have been written since—he who reads them is like one who reads a letter. As is said, "And of more than these, my son, beware: of making many books there is no end, and much study is a weariness of the flesh" (Eccles. 12:12). The other books are intended for light reading—not for wearying oneself with them.[7]

436. Keep your children from light reading.[8]

437. R. Meir said: When I came to R. Ishmael [to study Torah], he asked me, "My son, what is your occupation?" I replied, "I am a scribe." He said, "My son, be careful in your work, for your work is sacred. Should you omit or add a single letter, you will find yourself destroying the entire world, all of it."[9]

438. In the Torah scroll of R. Meir there was found written not "And behold, it was very (meod) good" (Gen. 1:31), but "And behold, death (mot) was good"; not "And He made for Adam and for his wife garments of skin ('or)" (Gen. 3:21), but "Garments of light (or)"; not "The sons of Dan: Hushim" (Gen. 46:23), but "The son of Dan: Hushim."[10]

439. In the scroll of R. Meir they found written, instead of "The burden of Dumah" (Isa. 21:11), "The burden of Roma [Rome]."[11]

440. A scroll of a book of Scripture that has not been corrected, R. Ammi said, may be kept for thirty days. From then on, it is forbidden to keep it, for Scripture says, "Let not wrong dwell in thy tents" (Job 11:14).[12]

441. R. Joshua ben Levi said: The Men of the Great Assembly observed twenty-four fasts in behalf of those who write scrolls, tefillin, and mezuzot, praying that they should not grow rich, for were they to become rich, they would cease to write them.[13]

442. "Wealth and riches [of Torah] may be in a man's house, but his merit can endure forever" (Ps. 112:3) if he copies out the Five Books, the Prophets, and the Writings, and then lends them to others.[14]

443. Books may not be thrown about from one place to another, nor may they be treated disrespectfully.

A man is required to have a scroll of Torah written with good ink, a good quill, by competent scribes, on good sheets of parchment made out of the hides of deer. He is then to wrap it in beautiful silks, in keeping with "This my God, and I will glorify Him" (Exod. 15:2).[15]

444. All sacred writings make the hands unclean.

The Sadducees declared: We protest against you, O Pharisees, because you say that sacred writings make the hands unclean, while the writings of Homer do not make

---

1. Gen. R. 85:2.
2. If either is equal in bulk to a lentil.
3. Gen. R. 60:8.
4. B. Ned 22b.
5. Eccles. R. 12:12, §7.
6. Because heretical matter had crept into them.
7. P. Sanh 10:1, 28a.
8. B. Ber 28b.
9. The omission of the letter alef in emet ("truth") one of God's names, would change the word to met ("dead"); the addition of a final vav to va-yedabber ("God spoke") would change the word to va-yedabberu ("the gods spoke"). Such changes would be blasphemy. B. Er 13a.
10. Gen. R. 9:5, 20:2, and 94:9.
11. P. Ta 1:1, 64a.
12. B. Ket 19b.
13. B. Pes 50b.
14. B. Ket 50a.
15. Sof 3.

them unclean. R. Yohanan ben Zakkai replied: Is this all we have against the Pharisees? Look, they say that the bones of an ass are clean, while the bones of Yohanan the High Priest[1] are unclean. The Sadducees replied: Their susceptibility to uncleanness is in keeping with the love cherished for them, lest anyone make [ornamental] spoons out of the bones of his father and mother. R. Yohanan: So, too, the sacred writings—their susceptibility to uncleanness is in keeping with the love cherished for them. But the books of Homer, which are not cherished, are not unclean.[2]

445. All sacred writings, whether used for public reading [on the Sabbath] or not, must be saved from a fire [even on the Sabbath].[3]

Sacred writings, even if written in another language, must be put away properly [when they become unfit for use]. Why are translations of sacred writings not used for public reading [on the Sabbath]? Because such reading would lead to disuse of rabbinic exposition in the houses of study. Whether translated into Coptic, Median, Trans[-Euphratean][4] Aramaic, Elamitic, or Greek, such sacred writings, even though not used for public reading, must be saved from a fire [even on the Sabbath].

Whether translated into Aramaic or into any other language, sacred writings must, as just stated, be saved [even on the Sabbath] from a fire. However, R. Yose said: They need not be saved from a fire. And R. Yose went on: It once happened that my dear father Halafta, while visiting Rabban Gamaliel Berabbi [II] in Tiberias, found him seated at the table of Yohanan ben ha-Nazuf with an Aramaic translation of the book of Job in his hand, which he was reading. My father said to him: I remember that your grandfather Rabban Gamaliel the Elder was sitting on a rise of the Temple Mount[5] when an Aramaic translation of the book of Job was brought to him, and he said to the builder, "Bury it under a course of bricks." On hearing this story, Rabban Gamaliel Berabbi [II] ordered that the same be done to his copy. So it was put away in a genizah.[6]

The Language of Torah and [the Aramaic] Targum

446. When the Holy One came to give the Torah to Israel, He spoke to them in a language they knew and understood.

"I (anokhi) am the Lord thy God" (Exod. 20:2). R. Nehemiah said: What kind of word is anokhi?[7] It is an Egyptian word. In Egypt, when a man wishes to say to a friend "I (ani)," he says anokh. How may God's need to use an Egyptian word for "I" be explained? By the story of a mortal king whose son had been captured. The son spent a long time among his captors and learned their language. Finally the king wreaked vengeance on his enemies and brought his son back. But when he tried to talk with his son in his own language, the son did not understand. What did the king do? He began to speak with him in the language of the captors. The Holy One had to do the same thing with Israel. During all the years Israel spent in Egypt, they learned the Egyptian speech. Finally, when the Holy One redeemed them and came to give them the Torah, they could not understand it. So the Holy One said: I will speak to them in the Egyptian tongue. Thus the Holy One inaugurated the giving of Torah by using the word anokhi, which is a form of the Egyptian anokh.[8]

447. "The Lord came from Sinai," etc. (Deut. 33:2). When the Holy One revealed Himself to give the Torah to Israel, He revealed Himself not in only one language but in four languages: "The Lord came from Sinai"—Hebrew; "and rose from Seir [Edom] unto them" (ibid.)—Latin; "He shined forth from Mount Paran" (ibid.)—Arabic; "and He came[9] from Meribat in Kadesh" (ibid.)—Aramaic.[10]

448. "Thus shalt thou say" (Exod. 19:3). You shall speak to My children in the tongue in which I speak to you—the holy tongue.[11]

449. Mar Zutra (or, as some say, Mar Ukba) said: Originally the Torah was given to Israel in Hebrew characters and in the holy tongue. Then it was given to them again in the time of Ezra in the [square] Ashur script and in the Aramaic tongue. Finally Israel chose for themselves the Ashur script and the holy tongue, leaving the Hebrew characters and the Aramaic tongue to vulgarians.

Who are the vulgarians? The Cutheans, said R. Hisda.[12]

450. What is meant by Hebrew characters? R. Hisda said: The Libbunaah script [the script of the inhabitants of the Lebanon region, that is, the Phoenicians].

We have been taught that R. Yose said: Ezra would have been worthy of having the Torah given to Israel by his hand, had not Moses preceded him. Of Moses it is written, "And the Lord commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments" (Deut. 4:14); and of Ezra it is asserted, "For Ezra had prepared his heart to expound the Torah of the Lord, and to practice it, and to

---

1. He seems to be referring to the Yohanan who after eighty years of service became a Sadducee. See above, part 1, chap. 9, §28, and B. Ber 29a.
2. Yad 4:6.
3. Even if it means moving them from one domain to another, which is otherwise forbidden.
4. Ancient Persian (Leon Nemoy).
5. To supervise repairs of the Temple, which was a duty of the patriarch. See Lieberman, TKF 5:204.
6. Because, during the second century C.E., written translations of books of Scripture other than those of the Pentateuch were not to be used. B. Shab 115a; Tos Shab 14:2.
7. The word anokhi for "I" is found only in the older parts of Scripture. In rabbinic times, anokhi was not used at all. Hence R. Nehemiah's attempt to discern the word's special significance in this verse.
8. Tanhuma B, Yitro, §16; PR 21:12 (YJS 1:435); Yalkut, Yitro, §286.
9. See Deut. 32:51. The proof may be derived from the use of atah, an Aramaic word for the usual Hebrew word ba ("came").
10. Sif Deut., §343.
11. Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 9.
12. B. Sanh 21b.

teach Israel statutes and judgments" (Ezra 7:10). Still, even though the Torah was not given through him, its script was changed through him.

Why is this script called Ashurit? Because it came with them from Ashur.[1]

We have been taught that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: Originally the Torah was given to Israel in the [Assyrian] script. But when they sinned, it was turned for them into roetz ["broken, rugged script"].[2] After they repented [in the days of Ezra], the Ashurit characters were restored to them. Why is it called Ashurit? Because its script is meushar, "square, upright." But R. Simeon ben Eleazar said in the name of R. Eleazar ben Perata, who said it in the name of R. Eleazar of Modim: The script of the Torah was never essentially changed, for Scripture records, "The vavs [hooks] of the pillars" (Exod. 27:10), which implies that their [letter] vav was [even then] upright like a pillar. And Scriptures says, "Unto the Jews, according to their writing and language" (Esther 8:9); even as their language had not changed, so their writing had not changed.[3]

451. Our masters taught: How did the Israelites inscribe the Torah? According to R. Judah, they inscribed it on stones, as is said, "Then thou shalt write upon stones all the words of this Torah," etc. (Deut. 27:8) [which they had been told to then "coat . . . with plaster" (Deut. 27:2)]. That is, after writing out the words, they coated them with plaster. R. Simeon asked: But according to your account, how could the nations of that time have learned the Torah? R. Judah replied: The Holy One endowed them with exceptional intelligence, and they sent their scribes to peel off the plaster and carry away [a copy of the words inscribed on the stones]. It is for this reason that the decree against those nations to go down into the pit of destruction was sealed, for they could have learned, but did not. R. Simeon said: The Israelites inscribed the words of Torah over the plaster, and on the bottom line they wrote "[You must proscribe . . . the Canaanites] lest they mislead you into doing all the abhorrent things they have done" (Deut. 20:18). From this you may infer that if the Canaanites and the others had turned in penitence, they would have been received.[4]

452. It is related that five elders wrote the Torah in Greek for King Ptolemy. And that day was as intolerable for Israel as the day the golden calf was made, for the Torah cannot be translated adequately.[5]

453. We have been taught: It is related that King Ptolemy gathered seventy-two elders, put them in seventy-two houses, and did not tell them why he had gathered them. He then visited each of the elders and said to him: "Write for me the Torah of Moses your teacher." The Holy One put in the heart of each and every one of the elders good counsel, so that with one accord they wrote the following: "God created in the beginning" (Gen. 11:1);[6] "I shall make man in image and likeness" (Gen. 1:26);[7] "And He finished on the sixth day,[8] and rested on the seventh day" (Gen. 2:2); "Male and female created He him"[9] (Gen. 1:27); "Come, let me [not "us"] go down, and there confound their language" (Gen. 11:7); "And Sarah laughed among her kinswomen" (Gen. 18:12);[10] "In their anger they slew an ox,[11] and in their self-will they digged up a stall" (Gen. 49:6); "And Moses took his wife and his sons and had them ride a carrier of men"[12] (Exod. 4:20); "Now the time that the children of Israel dwelt in Egypt and in other lands was four hundred and thirty years"[13] (Exod. 12:40); "And he sent young men[14] of the children of Israel" (Exod. 24:5), and "Against the young men[15] of the children of Israel He sent not forth His hand" (Exod. 24:11); "I have not taken one valuable[16] of theirs" (Num. 16:15); "Which the Lord thy God hath allotted to give light to all the peoples"[17] (Deut. 4:19); "And he went and served other gods . . . which I have commanded should not be served"[18] (Deut. 17:3). They also wrote for King Ptolemy: "The creature with small legs" (Lev. 11:6). They did not write, "The hare," Ptolemy's wife's name being "Hare,"[19] lest Ptolemy say, "By putting my wife's name in the Torah [the way they did], they meant to jibe at me."[20]

454. There is no difference between scrolls of Torah, on the one hand, and tefillin and mezuzot, on the other, except

---

1. "Assyria stands here for Babylon. Cf. Jer. 2:18, Ezra 6:22" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 120, n. 4).
2. The writing of the Samaritans. So Jastrow, s.v.
3. B. Sanh 21a–b; Tos Sanh 4:5.
4. And the command "Thou shalt proscribe them" would not have been carried out. B. Sot 35b.
5. Sof 1.
6. Instead of "In the beginning God created" (literally, "In the beginning created God"), which might be misunderstood as "[A god named] In-the-Beginning created God," suggesting dual divinity.
7. Instead of "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness."
8. Instead of "And He finished on the seventh day," which might lead to the notion that God worked on the Sabbath.
9. Instead of "them," which might indicate that He created them separately from the first.
10. Instead of "And Sarah laughed within herself." Since she laughed openly, God took umbrage at her, but not at Abraham who laughed within himself.
11. "Ox" instead of "man," to save the reputations of Jacob's sons.
12. Instead of "ass," which might be taken to imply that Moses owned neither horse nor camel.
13. Adding "and in other lands" because, in Egypt alone, Israel lived two hundred ten years at the utmost.
14. Possibly, Nadab and Abihu. It should be noted that the translation of Exod. 24:5 and 24:11 quoted here is omitted in parallels.
15. JV's "nobles" might seem puzzling, because no nobles have been mentioned previously.
16. As though the text read hemed, instead of hamor ("ass"), to avoid giving the impression that, while Moses abstained from taking an ass, he did not hesitate to take valuables.
17. They added the words "to give light to all the peoples" to avoid giving the impression that the peoples of the world were meant to worship the heavenly bodies.
18. They added "should not be served." Had the translation read simply, "Which I have commanded not [to come into being]," it would seem that the heavenly bodies brought themselves into being and were thus deities on their own.
19. "In fact, it was Ptolemy's father who was named 'Hare' (Lagos)" (Meg, Soncino, p. 50, n. 9).
20. B. Meg 9a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

that scrolls of Torah may be written in any language [and script], whereas tefillin and mezuzot may be written only [in Hebrew and] in the square Ashurit script. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said that scrolls of Torah also may be written in no foreign language [or script] other than Greek.

R. Yohanan said: What is R. Simeon ben Gamaliel's proof? The verse "God enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem" (Gen. 9:27), that is, the words of Japheth may reside in the tents of Shem, which Bar Kappara took to imply that the words of Shem may be translated into the language of Japheth.[1] R. Yuda said: From this verse it follows that in the Torah itself translation into Aramaic is permitted. With regard to such permission, Scripture says, "And they read in the book, in the Torah of God, what was made explicit" (Neh. 8:8)—"in the Torah of God" in the Hebrew original; "what was made explicit" by translation into Aramaic.

R. Judah said: Even when our masters allowed the use of Greek, they allowed it only for the scroll of Torah, and that came about because of the action taken by King Ptolemy.[2]

455. Aquila translated the Torah [into Greek] in the presence of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua, and they applauded him, saying, "Through Grecian grace you are making its beauty known among men" (Ps. 45:3).[3]

456. The Aramaic Targum of the Five Books was composed by Onkelos the Proselyte under the guidance of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua. The Aramaic Targum of the Prophets was composed by Jonathan ben Uzziel under the guidance of Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi.[4] When he finished it, the Land of Israel was shaken over an area of four hundred parasangs by four hundred parasangs. A divine voice went forth and asked, "Who is he that revealed My secrets to mortals?"[5] Jonathan stood up and said, "I am he who revealed Your secrets to mortals. It is known and manifest to You that I did it not for my own honor nor for the honor of my father's house, but for Your honor, so that controversies [about the meaning of passages] should not abound in the Land."

He was about to reveal through an [Aramaic] Targum the inner meaning of the Writings. But a divine voice went forth and said, "What you have done is enough."

What was the reason? Because in the Writings the exact time of the Messiah's coming is foretold.[6]

457. Scripture stimulates the need for translation, and translation stimulates the need for Mishnah.[7]

458. R. Simeon ben Pazzi said: What is the proof that he who translates Scripture [in public] is not permitted to raise his voice above that of the reader? From the words "Moses spoke, and God answered him by a voice" (Exod. 19:19). What does Scripture imply in [the apparently unnecessary] "by a voice"? That God answered by a voice [no louder than that] of Moses. Thus we are taught in a Baraita: He who translates Scripture [in public] is not permitted to raise his voice above that of the reader. If, however, he who does the translating is unable to read as loudly as the reader, the reader should lower his voice as he reads.[8]

459. We have been taught that R. Judah said: He who translates a verse literally is a liar, and he who adds [his own words] to it is a blasphemer and reviler.[9]

460. The Torah uses the ordinary language of men.[10]

461. The Torah makes use of hyperbole.[11]

462. The language of Torah is distinctly its own, even as the language of the sages is distinctly their own.[12]

Study and Practice

463. We have been taught that R. Menahem son of R. Yose expounded the verse "The commandment is a lamp and Torah is light" (Prov. 6:23) as follows: Scripture associates a commandment with a lamp, and the Torah with light. A commandment with a lamp, in order to tell you that even as a lamp gives light only for a while, so performance of a commandment shields only for a while. The Torah with light, in order to tell you that even as light always lights up the world, so study of Torah always shields the world. For Scripture says, "When thou walkest, it shall lead thee," etc. (Prov. 6:22). "When thou walkest, it shall lead thee" in this world; "when thou liest down, it shall watch over thee" (ibid.) in death; "and when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee" (ibid.) in the time-to-come. A parable of a man who, walking at dead of night, during its darkest part, is fearful of thorns, thistles, and pits, of wild beasts and robbers, and besides does not know what road to take. Were he to come upon a lighted torch, he would be able to keep clear of thorns, thistles, and pits, but he would remain fearful of wild beasts and robbers, and would still not know what road to take. When dawn breaks, he is saved from wild beasts and robbers, but he still does not know what road to take. When he

---

1. Shem is the ancestor of Israel, and Japheth [Yephet] the ancestor of the Greeks (Yavan). See Gen. 10:2 and 21.
2. B. Meg 8b–9a; Gen. R. 36:8; Deut. R. 1:1.
3. The Hebrew yaphyaphita ("Thou art fairer") is read as two words: yaphita ("you made beauty known") and yaphet (Japheth), the son of Noah and forebear of Yavan, the Hebrew name for Greece (Gen. 10:2). JV: "Thou art fairer than the children of men." P. Meg 1:9, 71c.
4. Since Jonathan ben Uzziel was actually a contemporary of Hillel's, Samuel Edels suggests that he made use of traditions handed down from these three prophets.
5. The Targum is paraphrastic and applies many verses to the days of the Messiah.
6. B. Meg 3a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. Sif Deut., §161.
8. B. Ber 45a.
9. He should reproduce the total sense of the verse. B. Kid 49a.
10. B. Ber 31b.
11. Such as "The cities are great and fortified up to heaven" (Deut. 1:28). B. Tam 29a.
12. B. Hul 137b.

finally reaches a crossroads, he is saved from all these fears.[1]

Another explanation: A transgression snuffs out [the merit of] a commandment, but no transgression can snuff out [the merit of] Torah, for it is said, "The mightiest of waters cannot snuff out love" (Song 8:1).[2]

464. R. Tarfon and some elders were reclining in an upper chamber in the house of Nitzah in Lydda[3] when this question was raised before them: Which is greater—study or practice? R. Tarfon spoke up and said: Practice is greater. R. Akiva spoke up and said: Study is greater. [In agreement with him], all spoke up and said: Study is greater, for it leads to practice."[4]

465. R. Abbahu sent his son R. Hanina to study Torah in Tiberias. People came back and reported to R. Abbahu that his son was busy attending the dead. So he wrote to his son, "Did I send you to Tiberias because there are no graves in Caesarea? In an upper chamber in the house of [Nitzah], a tenant farmer[5] in Lydda, the sages voted and decided that study takes precedence over practice." Our masters in Caesarea added: This was said only about a time when there is someone else to engage in the practice required. But if there is no one else to do so, then practice takes precedence.[6]

466. "If ye study in My statutes . . . and practice them" (Lev. 26:3). R. Hiyya taught: This verse speaks of one who studies in order to practice, not of one who studies without intending to practice. As for him who studies without intending to practice, it were better if he had not been created.

R. Yohanan said: He who studies without intending to practice—it were better for him if the caul in which he lay [as a fetus] had been turned over his face and he had not come out into the air of the world.[7]

467. R. Hanina ben Dosa used to say: When a man's good deeds exceed his learning, his learning will endure; but when his learning exceeds his good deeds, his learning will not endure.

R. Eleazar ben Azariah used to say: To what may he whose learning exceeds his good deeds be compared? To a tree whose branches are many and roots few, so that when a wind comes, it uproots the tree and turns it flat on its face. On the other hand, to what may he whose good deeds exceed his learning be compared? To a tree whose branches are few and whose roots are many, so that even if all the winds in the world come and blow at it, they will not move it from its place.[8]

468. Elisha ben Avuyah used to say: To whom may a man who has good deeds and has studied much Torah be compared? To a man who in building [lays] stones first [for a foundation] and then lays bricks [over them], so that however much water may collect at the side of the building, it will not wash it away. Contrariwise, he who has no good deeds even though he has studied much Torah—to whom may he be compared? To a man who in building lays bricks first and then heaps stones over them, so that even if a little water collects, it at once undermines the structure.

He used to say: A man who has good deeds and has studied much Torah—to what may he be compared? To plaster coated over a structure of stones, so that however many rains fall upon it, they will not budge it from its place. On the other hand, a man who has no good deeds even though he has studied much Torah—to what may he be compared? To plaster coated over a structure of bricks, so that, however little rain falls upon it, it immediately softens and crumbles away.[9]

469. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: He whose good deeds exceed his learning—to whom may he be compared? To the rider of a horse that is bridled; he can turn the horse whichever way he wishes. Contrariwise, he whose learning exceeds his good deeds—to whom may he be compared? To the rider of a horse that is not bridled, for when he rides it, he is likely to fall and break his neck.[10]

470. "To observe to do all His commandments" (Deut. 28:1). R. Simeon ben Halafta said: When a man learns the precepts of Torah but does not fulfill them, his punishment is more severe than that of him who has not studied at all. To what may his situation be compared? To one where a king had an orchard into which he brought two tenants, one of whom planted trees and cut them down, while the other neither planted any nor cut down any. With whom is the king likely to be angry? Surely with the one who planted trees and cut them down. So, too, when a man learns precepts of Torah but does not fulfill them, his punishment is more severe than that of him who has not studied at all.[11]

471. There are four types of attendance at a house of study. One attends but does not practice—at least the reward for attending is his. Another practices but does not attend—at least the reward of practice is his. Another attends and practices, and is a pious man. Another neither attends nor practices, and is a wicked man.[12]

472. There is a man who expounds well and acts well. There is another who acts well but does not expound well.

---

1. The commandment is a torch, Torah the dawn, and death the crossroads.
2. B. Sot 21a, and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. The gathering may have taken place during the Hadrianic persecutions.
4. Since both study and observance were prohibited, the question was for which of the two life should be risked. B. Kid 40b.
5. The Hebrew "arim" is probably a corruption of aris ("tenant farmer") (Leon Nemoy). The rabbis were in such a humble abode so as not to arouse the suspicion of the Roman authorities.
6. P. Pes 3:7, 30b.
7. P. Ber 1:5, 3b; Lev. R. 35:7.
8. Avot 3:9, 17.
9. ARN 24.
10. ARNB 34.
11. Deut. R. 7:4.
12. Avot 5:14.

There is still another who expounds well but does not act well.[1]

473. R. Eliezer son of R. Yose the Galilean said: "Prepare thy work without" (Prov. 24:27)—Scripture, Mishnah, and Talmud; "and make it ready for thee in the field" (ibid.)—good deeds; "and afterward build thy house" (ibid.)—seek the inner meaning of Torah and receive reward.[2]

474. R. Ishmael son of R. Yohanan ben Beroka said: He who learns in order to teach will be afforded means to learn and to teach. He who learns in order to practice will be afforded means to learn and to teach as well as to observe and to practice.[3]

475. R. Huna said: He who occupies himself only with studying Torah acts as if he had no God.[4]

476. He who says that he is interested only in the study of Torah has no reward even for the study of Torah. And the proof? The verse, said R. Papa, "That ye may learn them . . . to do them" (Deut. 5:1): He who is engaged in "doing" the commandments is regarded as engaged in learning them; but he who is not engaged in "doing" them is not regarded as engaged in learning them.[5]

477. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: The verse "Of what avail are the fool's means to acquire learning, when there is no [reverent] heart" (Prov. 17:16) says: Woe to those disciples of the wise who occupy themselves with Torah but have no fear of Heaven.[6]

478. Rabbah bar R. Huna said: He who has Torah but no fear of Heaven is like a treasurer who is entrusted with the inner keys but not with the outer keys. How is he to enter?

R. Yannai cried out: Alas for him who has no courtyard, yet makes a gate for it![7]

479. R. Hoshaia said: Anyone who has knowledge but has no fear of sin really has nothing, just as a carpenter without his tools is no carpenter. Why [is such a one's knowledge worthless]? Because the diadems of Torah are acquired through fear of sin, as Scripture says, "The fear of the Lord is His treasure" (Isa. 33:6).[8]

480. R. Alexandri was once calling out, "Who wants life?" All kinds of people gathered around him, saying, "Give us life." At that, he cited, "Who is the man that desireth life? . . . Keep thy tongue from evil" (Ps. 34:13–14). So that a man should not say, "Since I kept my mouth from evil and my lips from speaking deceit, I will freely indulge in idle living," the psalm goes on to say, "Depart from evil and do good" (Ps. 34:15). By "good" here is meant Torah, of which it is said, "I have given you a doctrine that is good—forsake ye not My Torah" (Prov. 4:2).[9]

481. Rava had a favorite saying: The purpose of learning is repentance and good deeds. A man should not read Scripture and study Mishnah, and then rebel against his father, his mother, his teacher, and anyone else who surpasses him in learning and in years, as is said, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of learning; a good understanding have they that act accordingly" (Ps. 111:10). Not "who study accordingly," but "who act accordingly"—act out of fear of God, not out of no such fear.[10]

482. Not study, but action, is the essence of the matter.[11]

The Precepts of Torah

483. R. Hananiah ben Akashia said: The Holy One, desiring to bestow upon Israel abundant merit, made Torah and precepts abundant for them, as is said, "The Lord desireth Israel's merit—hence He made Torah [and its precepts] abundant and numerous" (Isa. 42:21).[12]

484. "Thine ointments have a goodly fragrance" (Song 1:3). To the first forefathers You gave the fragrance of a few precepts—one precept to Adam, six precepts to Noah and his sons. But we—when we came to Sinai, "Thy Name is as ointment poured forth" (Song 1:3). Like a man who pours out of an amphora, so did You pour out upon us all the precepts—two hundred and forty-eight positive precepts and three hundred and sixty-five negative precepts.[13]

485. The sons of Noah were enjoined concerning seven matters: idolatry, unchastity, bloodshed, blasphemy, maintenance of civil courts, robbery, and taking flesh cut from a living animal. R. Hanina ben Gamaliel said: Also concerning blood from a living animal. R. Eliezer said: Also concerning planting diverse seeds. R. Simeon ben Yohai: Also concerning witchcraft. R. Yohanan ben Beroka: Also concerning castration. R. Assi added: The sons of Noah were enjoined concerning all the abominations specified in the passage that begins, "There shall not be found among you anyone that maketh his son or daughter to pass through the fire" (Deut. 18:10), and ends, "Because of these abominations the Lord thy God is driving them out from before thee" (Deut. 18:12).[14]

---

1. B. Yev 63b.
2. B. Sot 44a.
3. B. Avot 4:5.
4. B. AZ 17b.
5. B. Yev 109b.
6. B. Yoma 72b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. Through learning one enters the court of piety. B. Shab 31b.
8. Exod. R. 40:1.
9. B. AZ 19b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. B. Ber 17a.
11. Avot 1:17.
12. JV: "The Lord was pleased for His righteousness' sake to make the teaching great and glorious." B. Mak 23b.
13. Tanhuma, Yitro, §3; Song R. 1:3, §1.
14. Gen. R. 34:8.

486. R. Judah son of R. Simon stated: Adam deserved to have the Torah given through him, for the Holy One said: Shall I not give it to the one I formed with My own hands? But then the Holy One retracted, saying: If now, when I have given him six precepts, he showed himself unable to cope with them, how can I give him six hundred and thirteen precepts—two hundred and forty-eight positive precepts and three hundred and sixty-five negative precepts? So I shall not give the Torah to Adam but to his children: "This book is for the generations of Adam" (Gen. 5:1).[1]

487. R. Yose bar Aibu said in the name of R. Yohanan: Adam, who was not permitted the eating of flesh, was not enjoined concerning flesh cut from a living animal. But the sons of Noah, to whom the eating of flesh was permitted, were enjoined concerning flesh cut from a living animal.[2]

488. "He declareth His word unto Jacob" (Ps. 147:19). R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yose son of R. Hanina: The verse will be understood by the parable of a king who had an orchard in which he planted all kinds of trees, which he alone entered, because he was its keeper. When his children came of age, he said to them, "My children, hitherto I have guarded this orchard, not allowing anyone to enter it. Now I want you to look after it as I have." So, too, God said to Israel, "Before I created this world, I prepared the Torah, which I did not give to any one of the nations, only to Israel." As soon as Israel rose up and said, "All that the Lord hath spoken will we do, and obey" (Exod. 24:7), they were given the Torah. Hence, "He declareth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His ordinances unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation" (Ps. 147:19–20). Except with which? Except with [the nation of] Jacob, whom He chose from all other nations. To those others He gave only some [of the commandments]. Thus to Adam [father of all nations] He gave six commandments, to Noah [father of all nations] one more, to Abraham [father of many nations] an eighth, and to Jacob [during his lifetime] a ninth. But to Israel He gave all.

R. Simon said in the name of R. Hanina: What God did may be illustrated by the parable of a king who had before him a table set out with all kinds of dishes. When his first servant entered, he gave him a slice [of meat]; to the second he gave an egg, to the third some vegetables, and likewise to each of the others. But when his son came in, he gave him all that was on the table before him, saying to him, "To the others I gave only single portions; to you I put all that is here at your disposal." So also the Holy One gave to the nations only some commandments, but when Israel arose, He said to them, "Behold, the whole Torah is yours," as Scripture affirms: "He hath not dealt so with any nation" (Ps. 147:20).

"He kisseth me with the kisses of His mouth" (Song 1:2). God gave the nations of the world precepts in a raw state, so that they might work out the relevant details on their own. Nor did he elaborate for them the precise distinctions between ritual uncleanness and cleanness. But when Israel came, He made the details of the precepts explicit, for each the punishment [for its violation] and the reward [for its observance]. Hence, "His statutes and His ordinances for Israel."[3]

489. Israel are surety for one another to the Holy One. How did they come to be surety? When God sought to give the Torah, no nation other than Israel would accept it. What happened may be illustrated by the parable of a king who had a field that he wished to turn over to tenants. When the king called the first of them and asked, "Will you accept care of this field?" he replied, "I have no strength. Such work is too hard for me." And so, too, the second, the third, the fourth—not one would accept the care of the field. The king then called the fifth and asked him, "Will you accept the care of this field?" The man replied, "Yes." "With the understanding that you will till it?" "Yes." But when that tenant entered the field, he let it lie fallow. With whom is the king angry? With those who declared, "We cannot accept the care of it," or with the one who accepted its care but, upon coming to the field, let it lie fallow? Is it not with the one who accepted the responsibility? Similarly, when God revealed Himself on Sinai, there was not a nation at whose doors He had not knocked, but not one would accept it. But when He came to Israel, they exclaimed, "All that the Lord hath spoken will we do, and obey" (Exod. 24:7). Therefore it is proper that you all should obey. And if not, you will all be punished as surety for one another.[4]

490. "Now these are the ordinances" (Exod. 21:1). The nations of the world have judges, and Israel have judges, and you do not know the difference between them. The answer is suggested in the parable of a sick man whose physician came to visit him and then said to his family, "Give him to eat whatever he asks for." But when the physician came to another sick man, he said to the family, "Take care not to let him each such-and-such a food." The physician was asked, "About the first, you said that he might eat whatever he wished; but about the second, you said that he must not eat certain food." He replied, "The first had no chance to remain alive, and so I allowed him to eat whatever he likes; but the second will live, and therefore I ordered strict care in his diet." Similarly of the nations of the world who are separated from the Torah [from the hope of life] Scripture says, "I gave them statutes that were not good, and ordinances by which they could not live" (Ezek. 20:25). But with regard to the commandments [given to Israel], Scripture says, "Which if a man do, he shall live by them" (Lev. 18:5).[5]

491. R. Abba said: In the Torah there are two hundred and forty-eight positive commands, as many as the parts of the human body. Each and every one of these parts

---

1. Gen. R. 24:5.
2. See Gen. 1:29 and 9:3. Gen. R. 34:13; B. Sanh 59b.
3. Exod. R. 30:9.
4. Exod. R. 27:9.
5. Exod. R. 30:22.

cries out to the man, saying: Perform through me the command that applies to me, so that by its merit you will stay alive and your days will be long. And three hundred and sixty-five negative precepts, as many as the days in the solar year. Every day that the sun shines, and until it sets, the sun cries out, saying to the man: I decree upon you in the name of Him who has brought your days to this day, do not commit a transgression during my span of hours, lest you tilt the scale for yourself and the entire world, all of it, toward the side of guilt.

Thus you come to a total of six hundred and thirteen commandments.[1]

492. "Take heed of the heavens" (Deut. 32:1). The Holy One said to Moses: Say to them, to Israel: Gaze at the heavens, which I created to serve you. Have they perhaps changed their ways? Does the orb of the sun perchance not rise out of the east and light up the entire world, all of it? The fact is: the sun rejoices in its commission to do My will, for Scripture says, "The sun . . . is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run his course" (Ps. 19:6).

"And let the earth be heard" (Deut. 32:1). Gaze at the earth, which I created to serve you. Has it perhaps changed its ways? Have you perchance sown seed and it has not sprouted? Or have you sown wheat and it brought forth barley? Or did the heifer perhaps say, "I will not plow," "I will not thresh"? Or did the ass say, "I will bear no burden," "I will not move"?

Likewise, the sea. "I . . . have placed the sand for the bound of the sea" (Jer. 5:22). Has it perhaps changed its ways and, rising, flooded the world? Is this not a matter to be argued a fortiori? The heavens, the earth, and the sea were created to receive neither reward nor penalty. If they earn merit, they receive no reward; if they go astray, they are subjected to no penalty. They need not be concerned about their sons and daughters. Yet they have not changed their ways. You—who receive reward when you earn merit and receive punishment when you sin, who are concerned about your sons and daughters—how much more and more by far should you not change your ways.[2]

493. "That ye may look upon it, and remember" (Num. 15:38). Looking leads to remembering, and remembering leads to doing, as is said, "That ye may remember and do" (Num. 15:40).[3]

494. We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: Why is blue different from all other colors? Because blue is similar to the color of the sea; the color of the sea is similar to the color of the firmament; the color of the firmament is similar to the color of sapphire; and the color of sapphire is similar to the color of the throne of glory, as is said, "There was under His feet the like of paved work of sapphire stone, and the like of the very heaven for clearness" (Exod. 24:10); and also, "The semblance of a throne in appearance like sapphire" (Ezek. 1:26).[4]

495. "Thy glory upon their children" (Ps. 90:16). R. Hezekiah taught: When the children of Israel are wrapped in their prayer shawls, let them not think that they are clothed merely in [ordinary] blue.[5] Rather let the children of Israel look upon the prayer shawls as though the glory of the Presence were covering them.[6]

496. "All the peoples of the earth shall see that the Name of the Lord can be read upon thee" (Deut. 28:10). We have been taught that R. Eliezer the Elder said: These words refer to tefillin worn on the head.[7]

497. Our masters taught: Beloved are Israel, whom the Holy One encompassed with commandments [that are testimonies of the fear of God]: tefillin on their heads, tefillin on their arms, four knotted fringes on their garments, mezuzots on their doorposts. Of these David said, "Seven times a day do I praise Thee by heeding Thy righteous ordinances" (Ps. 119:164). When David went into a bathhouse and saw himself standing naked, he exclaimed, "Woe is me, that I stand naked without a commandment [that is a testimony of the fear of God]." But when he noticed the circumcision in his flesh, his mind was set at rest. And when he came out, he composed a psalm concerning it: "For the Leader; concerning the Sheminith (the eighth), a Psalm of David" (Ps. 12:1)—concerning circumcision, ordained for the eighth day [of the newborn male child's life].[8]

498. R. Ishmael said: Great is the precept of circumcision, for "covenant" is mentioned in connection with it thirteen times.[9] R. Yose said: Great is circumcision, for it even sets aside the rigor of the Sabbath.[10] R. Meir said: Great is circumcision, for notwithstanding all the precepts that our father Abraham had performed, he was not called "perfect" until he circumcised himself, as is said, "Walk before Me as hitherto, and in addition be thou perfect" (Gen. 17:1).

Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: Great is circumcision, for it is equal in importance to all precepts in the Torah.[11]

499. "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect (Gen. 17:1). R. Levi said: The verse will be understood by the parable of a Roman noblewoman to whom the emperor said, "Walk before me." As she walked before him, her face turned pale, for she thought: Who knows but that the emperor

---

1. Tanhuma B, Ki Tetze, §2; Tanhuma, Ki Tetze, §2.
2. Sif Deut., §307; Yalkut, Isa., §387.
3. Tanhuma B, Shelah, §30.
4. B. Sot 17a; P. Ber 1:5, 3a.
5. The threads fastened to the four corners of the tallit, or prayer shawl, originally had a cord of blue entwined in them. The blue cord was dyed with the blood of the hilazon snail, which was said to appear only once in seventy years and was scarce even in mishnaic times. The authorities therefore agreed that the blue cord might be dispensed with and white threads alone be used. See Men 4:1 and JE, s.v. "Fringes."
6. MTeh 90:18.
7. B. Sot 17a.
8. B. Men 43b and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Sif Deut, §36.
9. In Gen. 17.
10. If the eighth day of the infant boy's life falls on a Sabbath, circumcision may be performed on that day, even though it involves what is considered "work of labor."
11. B. Ned 31b–32a and En Yaakov, ad loc.

has found some defect in me? But the emperor said, "You have no defect other than that the nail of your little finger is a bit too long. Pare it, and the defect will be gone." So, too, the Holy One said to our father Abraham, "You have no defect other than this foreskin. Remove it, and you will be free of imperfection. 'Walk before me, and be thou perfect, as soon as I set [the mark of] My covenant between thee and Me' " (Gen. 17:2).[1]

500. A Caesar said to R. Tanhum, "Come, let us all be one people." "Very well," he answered, "but we who are circumcised cannot possibly [go back and] become like you. So you go and circumcise yourselves, and become like us." Caesar: "Well spoken. But he who prevails over the emperor is thrown into the wild animal pen [at the arena]." Accordingly, R. Tanhum was thrown into the pen, but the animals did not eat him. A certain heretic said, "The only reason the animals did not eat him is because they were not hungry." At that, he himself was thrown in, and the animals devoured him.[2]

501. A pagan philosopher asked R. Hoshaia: If circumcision is so beloved [of God], why was it not prescribed for Adam at his creation? R. Hosaia replied: According to your reasoning, why should a man like you shave the hair of his head [with which he was born] but at the same time leave the hair of his adult beard intact?[3] The pagan philosopher replied: Because the hair on my head has grown with me since the days of my foolish childhood. R. Hoshaia retorted: If so, [to be consistent] you should blind your eyes, lop off your hands, and break your legs, which have also grown along with you since the days of your foolish childhood. The pagan philosopher exclaimed: Have we come down to such drivel? R. Hoshaia replied: I cannot let you go without a proper answer. And so observe that everything that was created during the six days of creation needs finishing: mustard needs sweetening, vetch needs sweetening, wheat needs grinding, and even man needs finishing.[4]

502. "The mighty in strength that fulfill His word" (Ps. 103:20). To whom does Scripture refer? R. Isaac said: To those who are willing to observe the Year of Release.[5] In the way of the world, a man may be willing to observe a commandment for a day, a week, a month,[6] but is he likely to continue to do so through the remaining days of the year? But [throughout that year] this [mighty] man sees his field declared ownerless, his trees declared ownerless, his fences broken down, and his produce consumed by others, yet he continues to give up his produce without saying a word. Can you conceive a person mightier than such as he?[7]

503. R. Judah ben Pedaiah expounded: O that someone would remove the dust from your eyes, Adam! You could not observe a command [not to eat of the tree of knowledge] even for one hour, yet your children wait three years for orlah, "uncircumcision."[8] When Bar Kappara heard of R. Judah's exposition, he said: Nephew, you spoke well.[9]

504. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: Be as careful with a light precept as with a weighty one, for you do not know the exact reward for the various precepts. Reckon the loss sustained through the performance of a precept against the reward earned by its observance; and the profit of a transgression against the loss it will entail.[10]

505. R. Aha said in the name of R. Isaac: It is written, "In all that is to be observed, guard thy heart, for in each such observance are the wellsprings of life" (Prov. 4:23).[11] Be observant with regard to all that is prescribed for you in Torah, for you do not know out of which precept life issues for you.

In this regard, R. Abba bar Kahana said: Scripture puts the easiest of commandments on the same level as the most difficult of observances. The easiest of commandments—letting a mother bird go;[12] and the most difficult of commandments—honoring father and mother. And with regard to each, it is written, "That your days may be long."[13]

506. Let an easy precept be as dear to you as a difficult precept.[14]

507. Once a man violates a minor precept, he will end up by violating a major one.[15]

508. Ben Azzai said: Run to perform even a minor precept,[16] and flee from transgression, for one good deed leads to another, and one transgression leads to another. The recompense for doing a good deed is another good deed [to be done], and the recompense for a transgression is another transgression.[17]

509. The "dry bones" (Ezek. 37:4) are men in whom there is no marrow of good deeds.[18]

510. "That ye may remember and do all My commandments" (Num. 15:40). This verse may be illustrated by

1. Gen. R. 46:4; Yalkut, Lekh Lekha, §81.
2. B. Sanh 39a.
3. "Pagan philosophers in Roman times often cut the hair of their head very short but let their beard grow long" (Brother Caedmon Holmes).
4. Gen. R. 11:6; PR 23:4.
5. See Exod. 23:10–11 and Lev. 25:2ff.
6. Sabbath for a day, sukkah and lulav for a week, and mourning for a month.
7. Lev. R. 1:1; Tanhuma, Va-yikra, §1.
8. The law that the fruit of trees within three years after planting is considered orlah ("uncircumcised") and entirely forbidden. Lev. 19:23 and 19:25.
9. Gen. R. 21:7.
10. Avot 2:1.
11. JV: "Above all that thou guardest, keep thy heart; for out of it are the issues of life."
12. Deut. 22:6–7.
13. P. Pe 1:1, 14d.
14. Sif Deut., §79, 115.
15. Sif Deut., §186–7.
16. The words "as a major one" in BR are omitted.
17. Avot 4:2.
18. B. Sanh 92b.

the parable of a person thrown into the water, to whom the pilot throws a rope, saying, "Hold on to this rope and do not let go of it. If you let go, you will lose your life." So, too, the Holy One said to Israel, "As long as you hold on to the precepts, the words 'But you who held to the Lord your God are alive all of you this day' [Deut. 4:4] apply to you."[1]

511. "The spirit of man is the lamp of the Lord" (Prov. 20:27). The Holy One said: Let My Lamp be in your hand, and your lamp will be in My hand. What is the Holy One's lamp? The Torah, of which it is said, "The commandment is a lamp, and Torah is light" (Prov. 6:23). What is implied by "The commandment is a lamp?" That he who performs a commandment is accounted as if he had kindled a lamp before the Holy One, and thereby he quickens his own spirit, which is called a "lamp," as in the verse "The spirit of man is the lamp of the Lord."[2]

512. Bar Kappara said: Both the spirit of man and the Torah are said to be like a lamp. The spirit—"The spirit of man is the lamp of the Lord" (Prov. 20:27); and Torah—"The commandment is a lamp, and Torah is light" (Prov. 6:23). The Holy One said to man: My lamp is in your hand, and your lamp is in My hand. My lamp—the Torah—is in your hand; and your lamp—the spirit of life—is in My hand. If you keep My lamp lit, I will keep your lamp lit. But if you extinguish My lamp, I will extinguish your lamp.[3]

513. R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar both said: The Torah was given in forty days, and the soul is formed in forty days.[4] He who keeps the Torah—his soul is kept. He who does not keep the Torah—his soul is not kept.

Sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: The matter may be illustrated by the parable of a man who entrusted a swallow to his servant and said to him: Do you think that if you allow her to perish, I will take from you no more than an issar[5] as her value? I will take your very soul from you.[6]

514. A proverb says: The door that will not open for a good deed will have to open wide for the doctor.[7]

515. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: A loaf of bread and a rod came down from heaven wrapped together. The Holy One said to Israel: If you obey the Torah, here is a loaf to eat; but if not, here is a rod to smite you with.[8]

516. R. Eliezer said: The book and the sword came down from heaven wrapped together. The Holy One said to Israel: If you obey what is written in the book, you will be saved from the sword. But if not, you will be smitten by it.

R. Meir said: When a man performs one precept, he is given one angel; two precepts, he is given two angels; many precepts, he is given many angels, as is said, "For He will give His angels charge over thee" (Ps. 91:11). Why? To protect the man from demons, as is said, "A thousand shall fall [in] at thy side" (Ps. 91:7).[9]

517. R. Eleazar said: They who are sent to perform a precept come to no harm, either in their going or in their returning.[10]

518. Rav was asked: Young scholars who live in the valley outside the town—what about their walking morning and evening to your house?[11] He replied: Let them come. [I take the responsibility] upon myself and upon my neck.[12]

519. R. Judah said: It happened that a certain inspector was examining the validity of mezuzot in the upper market of Sepphoris when a quaestor found him and extorted one thousand zuz from him.[13] But did not R. Eleazar say, "They who are sent to perform a precept come to no harm"? Yes, but where danger is certain, the rule is different, for it is written, "And Samuel said: 'How can I go? If Saul hear it, he will kill me' " (1 Sam. 16:2).[14]

520. The precepts were given to Israel for no reason other than for Israel to stay alive, for it is said of the precepts, "Which if a man do, he shall live by them" (Lev. 18:5)—live by them and not die by them. Therefore, when there is danger to life, no precept is to be insisted on except those prohibiting idolatry, unchastity, and murder. When does the rule apply? Not in a time of religious persecution. But during a time of religious persecution, a man must be willing to give up his life even for the least demanding of precepts, as is said, "You shall not profane My Holy Name—I am to be hallowed among the children of Israel" (Lev. 22:32).[15]

521. To affect healing, one may violate any precept except those prohibiting idolatry, unchastity, and murder.

What is the proof that one may not violate the prohibition against murder? If a man were told, "Go slay this person and you will be healed," he may not follow such advice, for it is written, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed" (Gen. 9:6). Now, since a man who sheds blood must have his own blood shed, how can one who is sick be healed by the shedding of blood?

What is the proof that one may not resort to an act of unchastity? If a man is told, "Engage in an act of

---

1. Num. R. 17:6; Tanhuma, Shelah, §15.
2. Exod. R. 36:3.
3. Deut. R. 4:4.
4. The soul is planted in the embryo forty days after conception.
5. A small coin.
6. B. Men 99b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. Even a miser will become generous when he falls ill. So Meir Friedmann, ad loc. PR 11:2 (YJS 1:201); Song R. 6:11, §1.
8. Sif Deut., §40.
9. Tanhuma, Va-yetze, §3; En Yaakov on B. Shab 119b.
10. B. Pes 8b.
11. Even though they run the risk of being attacked by robbers.
12. B. Pes 8b.
13. For violating the interdiction against observance of Torah.
14. B. Yoma 11a.
15. Tos Shab 16:17.

unchastity and you will be healed," he may not do so, for everyone is forbidden to engage himself in unchastity. In the Torah, you will find two sections right next to each other: the section on the Nazirite and the section on the woman suspected of infidelity.[1] When the Nazirite vows not to drink wine, the Holy One says to him, "You have just vowed not to drink wine. So do not say, 'I will continue to eat grapes, and no sin will befall me.' " Hence Scripture: "He shall abstain from wine and ale, neither shall he eat anything in which grapes have been steeped, nor eat grapes fresh or dried" (Num. 6:3–4). Thus, once the Nazirite has vowed not to drink wine, he may not eat grapes, fresh or dried, nor drink anything in which grapes have been steeped or anything that is obtained from the grapevine. Now a woman, too, is called "vine," for Scripture says, "Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine" (Ps. 128:3). So, with regard to a woman who is not your wife, do not say, "To be sure, I may have no sexual intercourse with her, but I may take hold of her and it will be no sin, or embrace her and it will be no sin, or kiss her and it will be no sin." The fact is that one is forbidden to have any contact at all with such a woman. For whoever touches a woman other than his own wife brings death upon himself, for Scripture says, "She hath cast down many wounded; yea, many a man she has slain" (Prov. 7:26). Now, since such a woman has all these characteristics, how can she give new life to one who is sick?

What is the proof that one may not resort to idolatry? If an ailing Jew is advised, "Approach such-and-such an idol and you will be healed," he is forbidden to approach it, for we are told, "He that sacrificeth to a god other than the Lord shall be proscribed" (Exod. 22:19). Since he who worships other gods is proscribed, it is better for him to die of his illness in this world than bring such proscription upon himself. Not only is idolatry itself forbidden to be used in healing the sick, but so are all things connected with idolatry. For instance, if a man is told, "Take some of the incense offered up to the idol or a piece of wood from the idol's grove and make a charm of it, and thereby be healed," he may not take either of these, for Scripture says, "Let nothing that has been doomed stick to thy hand" (Deut. 13:18). Why not? Because there is no substance in them, and they are of no avail whatsoever, as Scripture says, "Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil, neither is it in them to do good" (Jer. 10:5).

The Holy One said: Since an idol is like a mute stone and has no substance, and it must be guarded by others to prevent it from being stolen, how can it possibly give new life to one who is sick?[2]

522. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Every precept, such as abstention from idolatry and observance of circumcision, for which Israel were willing to die during Hadrian's persecution is still held on to firmly. On the other hand, every precept, such as use of tefillin, for which Israel were not willing to die during Hadrian's persecution continues to be weakly observed.

When the Roman government decreed that any man who wore tefillin would have a nail hammered into his skull, Elisha continued to wear his tefillin as he went out into the marketplace. A quaestor spotted him, and he ran off, with the quaestor running after him. Just as the quaestor caught up with Elisha, he removed the tefillin from his head and held them in his hand. "What's that in your hand?" the quaestor asked. "The wings of a dove." Elisha opened his hand, and the wings of a dove were in it. After that, he was dubbed "Elisha, the man of wings."

Why did Elisha say to the quaestor, "The wings of a dove," and not the wings of some other bird? Because the congregation of Israel is likened to a dove, as is said, "The wings of the dove are covered with silver, and her pinions with the shimmer of gold" (Ps. 68:14). Just as a dove is protected by her wings, so Israel are protected by precepts.[3]

523. R. Abba bar Zemina did tailoring in the home of a heathen in Rome. [At mealtime] meat of a forbidden animal was served to him, and the heathen said, "Eat." R. Abba answered, "I cannot eat." The heathen: "Eat, for if you do not, I will slay you." R. Abba: "If you wish to slay me, do so, but I cannot eat forbidden meat." The heathen: "How did you know that if you had eaten it, I would have slain you? For a Jew should act like a Jew, even as a heathen should act like a heathen."

R. Mana said: Had R. Abba bar Zemina heeded the words of the sages, he would have eaten.[4]

524. R. Hiyya bar Abba said: If someone told me, "Give up your life for the hallowing of the Name of the Holy One," I would give it up, provided I were put to death at once. But I could not endure the tortures of the generation of [Hadrian's] persecution.

What was done [to people] during that generation? Iron balls would be brought, heated white in fire, then wedged into their armpits until they gave up their souls. Or sharpened reeds were brought and driven in under their fingernails until they gave up their souls. Of such torture, David said, "Unto Thee, O Lord, do I lift up (essa) my soul" (Ps. 25:1). It is actually written assi, "I give up," indicating that they gave up their souls for the hallowing of the Holy One's Name.[5]

525. During Hadrian's persecution, two of R. Joshua's disciples gave up wearing garments [that identified them as Jews]. A certain [Roman] officer, an apostate, met them and said to them: If you are Torah's children, be willing to give up your lives for her sake; and if you are not Torah's children, why be willing to be slain for her sake?[6] They replied: We are her children and are willing to be slain for her sake, but it is not human nature to commit suicide.[7]

---

1. Num. 5:11–12, which deals with such a woman, is followed by 6:1ff., which sets forth the proper conduct for the Nazirite.
2. Exod. R. 16:2.
3. B. Shab 130a; Yalkut, Ps., §795.
4. P. Shev 4:2, 35a–b.
5. Song R. 2:7, §1.
6. Give up your faith.
7. Gen. R. 82:8; Yalkut, Va-yishlah, §35; Yalkut, Isa., §396.

526. Once, while Rabbah bar Bar Hanah was traveling with a caravan, he had a meal and forgot to say grace. He said to himself: What shall I do? If I say to my fellow companions, "I forgot to say grace," they will say, "Say it here,[1] for wherever you utter a blessing, you are saying it to the Holy One." I had better tell them I forgot a golden dove. So, saying, "Wait for me, I forgot a golden dove," he went back, said grace, and actually found a golden dove.

Why a dove? Because the congregation of Israel is said to be like a dove.[2]

527. R. Nathan said: The words "Of them that love Me and keep My precepts" (Exod. 20:6) apply to Jews who dwell in the Land of Israel and are willing to give up their lives for the sake of the precepts. Why are you led out to be decapitated?" "Because I circumcised my son." "Why are you led out to be burned?" "Because I read Scripture." "Why are you led out to be crucified?" "Because I ate unleavened bread." "Why are you lashed with the whip?" "Because I took up the lulav cluster." " 'Because I was wounded in the house of Him that causes me to be loved' [Zech. 13:6]—these wounds cause me to be loved by my Father in heaven."[3]

528. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: Every precept Israel accepted with joy—such as circumcision, of which it is said, "I rejoice at Thy [first] utterance [of the precept][4] as one that findeth great spoil" (Ps. 119:162)—they still continue to observe with joy. On the other hand, every precept Israel accepted in the midst of disaffection—such as the commandments concerning forbidden unions, of which it is said, "Moses heard the people weeping with regard to family relations" (Num. 11:10), that is, weeping on account of the sexual constraints put upon them in family relations—they continue to observe in disaffection. Thus, there is no marriage contract that does not involve [disagreement and] disaffection.[5]

529. "As for God, His word is purifying" (Ps. 18:31). Rav said: Precepts were given only so that mortals might be purified by them. For of what concern can it be to the Holy One whether, in [preparing his meat], a man slaughters an animal at the windpipe or at the gullet? Or of what concern is it to Him whether a man eats animals that are unclean or animals that are clean? Hence, precepts were given only so that mortals might be purified by them.[6]

530. "Thou hast established harmony" (Ps. 99:4). R. Alexandri said: Two ass drivers who hated each other were walking on a road when the ass of one lay down under its burden. His companion saw it, and at first he passed on. But then he reflected: Is it not written in the Torah, "If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying prostrate under its burden . . . thou shalt surely release it with him" (Exod. 23:5)? So he returned, lent a hand, and helped his enemy in loading and unloading. He began talking to his enemy: "Release a bit here, pull up over there, unload over here." Thus peace came about between them, so that the driver of the overloaded ass said, "Did I not suppose that he hated me? But look how compassionate he was with me." By and by, the two entered an inn, ate and drank together, and became fast friends. What caused them to make peace and to become fast friends? Because one of them kept what is written in the Torah. Hence: "Thou hast established harmony."[7]

531. If one's friend requires unloading, and one's enemy loading, one's first obligation is toward the enemy, in order to subdue the impulse to evil.[8]

532. Our masters taught: "Mine ordinances[9] ye shall do" (Lev. 18:4), matters that, had they not been set down in Scripture, should have been set down—matters such as the prohibition of idolatry, of unchastity, of shedding blood, of robbery, and of blasphemy. "And My statutes shall ye keep" (ibid.)—matters that Satan and the nations of the world challenge [as having no rational justification], such as not eating swine's flesh, not wearing cloth made of wool and linen (Deut. 22:11), the rite of halitzah performed by a widowed sister-in-law (Deut. 25:5ff.), the purification of a leper, the he-goat to be sent away, and the Red Heifer. Lest you think these are vain things, Scripture says, "I am the Lord" (Lev. 18:4): I, the Lord, set them down as statutes, and you have no right to question them.[10]

533. A heathen said to Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai: "The things you Jews do appear to be a kind of sorcery. A heifer is brought, is burned up, and is pounded [into ashes] and its ashes are gathered up. Then, when one of you gets defiled by contact with a corpse, two or three drops of water mixed with these ashes are sprinkled upon him, and he is told, 'You are now cleansed!' "

Rabban Yohanan asked the heathen, "Has the spirit of madness ever possessed you?" He replied, "No." "Have you ever seen anyone possessed by the spirit of madness? The heathen replied, "Yes." "And have you seen what you people do to the man?" "Roots are brought, they are made to smoke under him, and water is splashed on him, until the spirit flees."

Rabban Yohanan then said, "Do not your ears hear what your mouth is saying? A man defiled is like a man possessed by a spirit. This spirit is a spirit of uncleanness. When water of lustration is splashed on it, it flees."

After the heathen left, Rabban Yohanan's disciples said, "Our master, you thrust off that heathen with a mere reed of an answer, but what reply will you give us?"

---

1. But grace should be said at the place where one eats.
2. B. Ber 53b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 6; Lev. R. 32:1.
4. Circumcision was the first precept given to Abraham.
5. B. Shab 130a.
6. Gen. R. 44:1; Tanhuma, Shemini, §8.
7. Tanhuma, Mishpatim, §1; Tanhuma B, Mishpatim, §1; MTeh 99:3.
8. B. BM 32b.
9. The Hebrew for "ordinance," mishpat, means a law or a norm whose rightness stands to reason.
10. B. Yoma 67b and En Yaakov, ad loc; Yalkut, Ahare Mot, §587.

Rabban Yohanan answered, "As you live, the corpse does not defile, nor does the [mixture of ashes and] water cleanse. The truth is that the rite of the Red Heifer is a decree of the King who is King of kings. The Holy One said: I have set down a statute, I have issued a decree. You are not permitted to transgress My decree. 'This is a statute of the Torah' " (Num. 19:2).

Why are male animals specified for all [communal] sacrifices, whereas a female is specified for the rite of the Red Heifer? R. Aibu said: Consider this parable: There was a maidservant's child who polluted the king's palace. The king said, "Let his mother come and wipe up the excrement." In the same way the Holy One said, "Let the mother of a calf come and atone for the misdeed of the [golden] calf."[1]

534. R. Isaac said: Why were the reasons for [some of] the commandments in the Torah not revealed? Because in two verses reasons were revealed, and yet the greatest man in the world [Solomon] stumbled over them. One verse stated, "A king . . . shall not multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away" (Deut. 17:17). Now, Solomon said: I will multiply wives and not turn away. But then we read, "When Solomon was old, his wives turned away his heart" (1 Kings 11:4). Another verse stated, "A king shall not multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt" (Deut. 17:16). Now, Solomon said: I will multiply horses and not cause [Israel] to return [to Egypt]. But then we read, "A chariot imported from Egypt [cost six hundred shekels of silver]" (1 Kings 10:29).[2]

535. Elijah said: Once, while I was traveling from one place to another, a man learned in Scripture but not in Mishnah came and sat down opposite me. He said to me, "Master, according to the Torah, the eating of human blood is not prohibited." I asked him, "My son, what makes you think so?" He replied, "My master, Scripture says, 'Ye shall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast' (Lev. 7:26)—no mention of human blood here." I said, "My son, may not the matter be resolved by inference? If eating [the blood of] cattle, beast, and fowl—all customarily regarded as edible—is forbidden to us, surely the blood of man, who is customarily not regarded as edible—should be forbidden to us. Besides, Scripture says, 'Only be steadfast in not eating the blood; for the blood is the life' " (Deut. 12:23).[3]

536. Yalta once said to [her husband] R. Nahman: For everything that the Torah has forbidden us, it has permitted us its equivalent. Thus, it has forbidden us blood, so it has permitted us liver;[4] it has forbidden us certain fat of cattle, so it has permitted us the fat of wild beasts; it has forbidden us swine's flesh, so it has permitted us the brain of the shibbuta;[5] it has forbidden us the gorit,[6] so it has permitted us tongue of fish;[7] it has forbidden us the married woman, so it has permitted us the divorcee even if her former husband is still living; it has forbidden us the brother's wife, so it has permitted us levirate marriage (Deut. 25:5ff.). Now, I wish to eat flesh seethed in milk. [What is its counterpart?] R. Nahman said to the butchers: Roast some udders for her.[8]

537. A favorite saying of Rava's: It were better not to have been born than to perform [a precept] for a purpose that is reprehensible.[9]

538. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Yohanan: The verse "The ways of the Lord are right, and the just do walk in them, but transgressors do stumble therein" (Hos. 14:10) may be illustrated by the parable of two men who roast their paschal lambs: one eats it with the intention of fulfilling the precept, while the other eats it merely to stuff himself. To the one who eats it to fulfill the precept apply the words "The just do walk in them"; and to the one who eats it merely to stuff himself apply the words "But transgressors do stumble therein."[10]

539. R. Nahman bar Isaac said: A transgression performed with a good motive is better than a precept performed for an ulterior motive.

R. Judah said in the name of Rav: A man should always occupy himself with Torah and its precepts, even if it be for an ulterior motive, for out of occupying himself with them for an ulterior motive, he will come to occupy himself with them for the right motive.[11]

540. Precepts do not need to be performed with deliberate intention.[12]

541. The one who performs numerous precepts and the one who performs only a few have equal merit, provided the heart is directed toward Heaven.[13]

542. The Holy One requires the heart, for Scripture says, "The Lord looketh at what is in the heart" (1 Sam. 16:7).[14]

---

1. Tanhuma B, Hakkut, §26; PR 14:14; Num. R. 19:8.
2. Implying that merchants went to and from Egypt. B. Sanh 21b; Yalkut, Shofetim, §913.
3. "There is no interdict of cannibalism in Jewish law. Neither is there any law prohibiting sexual contact with one's own child. I suppose the answer is that even this far back in the history of Jewish civilization, such acts were regarded as impossible even on the part of otherwise utterly degraded individuals, and no laws to interdict them were thought necessary" (Leon Nemoy). TdE, p. 73 (JPS, p. 204).
4. Because liver is brownish red, Leon Nemoy suggests, it may have a vague similarity to dried blood.
5. According to some, it is the mullet; according to others, the sturgeon.
6. Said to be the moorhen.
7. Said to have the taste of the gorit.
8. B. Hul 109b.
9. B. Ber 17a.
10. B. Naz 23a.
11. B. Naz 23b.
12. B. RH 28b.
13. B. Ber 5b.
14. B. Sanh 106b.

543. A story is told of a certain pious man who forgot a sheaf of grain in his field.[1] So he said to his son, "Go and offer [in thanksgiving] on my behalf a bullock as a burnt offering and another bullock as a peace offering." The son asked, "Father, what makes you rejoice at the performance of this precept more than at any of the other precepts in the Torah?" The pious man replied, "He who is everywhere has given us all other precepts in the Torah to be performed consciously, but this one cannot be performed consciously. For if we had knowingly acted on it before Him who is everywhere, the performance of this precept would have been beyond our power. Note that Scripture says, 'When thou reapest thy harvest in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field' " (Deut. 24:19).[2]

544. "Verily, the word is very nigh unto thee, when it is in thy mouth and in thy heart to do it" (Deut. 30:14). R. Isaac said: When is it very nigh unto you? When readiness to do it is in your mouth as well as in your heart.[3]

545. R. Isaac said: The Torah teaches you a rule of good conduct, namely, that when a man performs a precept, he should do so with a cheerful heart. Had Reuben, for example, known that the Holy One would cause it to be written of him, "Reuben heard it, and delivered him out of their hand" (Gen. 37:21), he would have put Joseph on his shoulder and carried him to his father. And had Boaz known that the Holy One would cause it to be written of him that "he handed her roasted grain" (Ruth 2:14), he would have given Ruth fatted calves to eat.[4]

546. "I went down into the garden of nuts" (Song 6:11). R. Levi said: There are three kinds of nuts: Perekh[5] nuts, whose shell is soft; those whose shell is moderately hard; and those whose shell is very hard. The nut with a soft shell bursts open of itself; the nut with a moderately hard shell will crack open when you strike it; the nut with a hard shell [is too hard to be cracked, so that] when you strike it with a stone, you shatter it, and then you do not get the good of it. So, too, the Israelites: there are some among them who do good of their own accord; there are some among them who, when you ask them to give charity, will give at once; and there are those among them from whom, no matter how hard you press them, nothing good ever comes.[6]

547. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Greater is he who acts from love than he who acts from fear.[7]

548. Precious is a precept performed at the time it should be performed.[8]

549. "Ye shall observe [the feast of] unleavened bread (ha-matzot)" (Exod. 12:17). R. Josiah said: Do not read it so; read rather, "Ye shall observe the precepts (ha-mitzvot)."[9] Just as one should not be slow in making the matzah, lest it leaven, so should one not be slow to perform a mitzvah. When a mitzvah comes your way, do it at once.[10]

550. R. Joshua ben Korhah said: A man should always be as alert as possible to perform a mitzvah.[11]

551. The zealous are prompt in performance of precepts.[12]

552. Judah ben Tema said: Be bold as a leopard, light as an eagle, swift as a hart, and strong as a lion to do the will of your Father in heaven.[13]

553. R. Hama bar Hanina said: When someone begins to perform a precept without finishing it, and someone else comes along and finishes it, Scripture imputes it to the one who finishes it, as though he had performed it from beginning to end.

R. Huna said in the name of R. Eliezer son of R. Yose the Galilean: When a man begins a good deed but does not finish it, and another person comes and finishes it, it is credit wholly to the other. Thus it is written, "The bones of Joseph which the children of Israel brought up out of Egypt" (Josh. 24:32). But did not Moses bring them up, as is said, "And Moses took the bones of Joseph with him" (Exod. 13:19)? However, since it was decreed that Moses was not to enter the Land, so that others had to take charge of the bones, the others were given credit for the deed.[14]

554. He who begins doing a good deed should be told, "Finish it."[15]

555. R. Yose the Galilean used to say: He who is occupied with the performance of a precept is [at that time] exempt from the performance of any other precept.[16]

556. We have been taught: "This is my God, and I will beautify Him" (Exod. 15:2). Beautify yourself before Him

---

1. Thus enabling a poor man to pick it up. It is one of the ways by which a farmer benefits the poor.
2. Deliberate leaving of a sheaf in the field would not have been proper fulfillment of the precept, which requires that forgotten sheaves be made available to the poor. It would have been merely an act of charity. Forgetting is not a conscious act. Tos Pe 3:8.
3. B. Er 54a.
4. Lev. R. 34:8.
5. Nuts from Perekh, the modern Ferka, near Samaria, were noted for their soft shells. See Or 3:7.
6. PR 11:2 (YJS 1:200–201); Yalkut, Song, §992; Song R. 6:11, §1.
7. B. Sot 31a.
8. B. Pes 68b.
9. The word is spelled the same and may be vocalized either way.
10. Mek, Bo, Pis'ha, 9.
11. B. Naz 23b.
12. B. Pes 4a.
13. Avot 5:20.
14. B. Sot 13b; Gen. R. 85:3.
15. P. RH 1:10, 57c.
16. B. Suk 26a.

with the performance of precepts. In His honor make a beautiful sukkah, a beautiful lulav cluster, a beautiful shofar, beautiful fringes, a beautiful scroll of Torah and have it written in His name by a skilled scribe with beautiful ink and a beautiful reed pen, and wrap it in beautiful silks.[1]

557. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: Not for the world's need was gold created. Why was gold created? For the sake of the Tabernacle and for the sake of the Temple.

R. Hanina said: Not for the world's need were cedars created. Why were cedars created? For the sake of the Tabernacle and for the sake of the Temple.[2]

558. R. Zera said: To make the performance of a precept more beautiful, a man should spend up to one-third [beyond the cost ordinarily incurred].[3]

559. It once happened that Rabban Gamaliel, R. Joshua, R. Eleazar ben Azariah, and R. Akiva were traveling on a ship [during Sukkot]. Rabban Gamaliel alone had a lulav, which he bought for one thousand zuz. Rabban Gamaliel used it to fulfill his obligation and then gave it as a gift [to R. Joshua, who took it, fulfilled his own obligation with it, and in turn gave it as a gift] to R. Eleazar ben Azariah. R. Eleazar ben Azariah took it, discharged his obligation, and gave it as a gift to R. Akiva. R. Akiva took it, discharged his obligation, and returned it to Rabban Gamaliel.

Why was it necessary to mention that Rabban Gamaliel had bought it for one thousand zuz?

In order to let you know how precious to them was an opportunity to perform the precepts.[4]

560. The adornment of a precept is modesty.[5]

561. R. Eleazar ben Azariah declared: A man should not say, "I do not like swine's meat, I do not like wearing linsey-woolsey." He should say, "I like both. But what can I do? My Father in heaven decreed for me not to."[6]

562. R. Hanina said: He who is commanded and fulfills [the precept] is greater than he who fulfills it though not commanded.[7]

563. Hezekiah said: He who is exempt from the obligation to perform a precept and performs it nevertheless is called ignorant.[8]

564. He who, wishing to be stringent with himself, follows the stringencies of the school of Shammai as well as the stringencies of the school of Hillel—the words "The fool walketh in darkness" (Eccles. 2:14) apply to him. On the other hand, he who takes advantage of the leniencies of the school of Shammai as well as the leniencies of the school of Hillel is a wicked man. Rather, one must live either in full accordance with the opinions of the school of Shammai, with both its leniencies and its stringencies; or in full accordance with the opinions of the school of Hillel, with both its leniencies and its stringencies.[9]

565. R. Yohanan said: What is meant by "Among the dead [I am] free" (Ps. 88:6)? That once a man is dead, he is exempt from the Torah and its precepts.[10]

566. R. Joseph said: In the time-to-come, the precepts will be abolished.[11]

567. R. Simlai expounded: Six hundred and thirteen commandments were revealed to Moses: three hundred and sixty-five negative commandments, corresponding to the days in the solar year, and two hundred and forty-eight positive commandments, corresponding to the parts of the body.

When David came, he summed up the six hundred and thirteen commandments in eleven principles, for he said, "Lord, who shall abide in Thy Tabernacle? Who shall dwell in Thy holy hill? [1] He that walketh uprightly, and [2] worketh righteousness, and [3] speaketh the truth from his heart; [4] he that hath used no deceit in his tongue, [5] nor done evil to his neighbor, and [6] hath not endured a reproach against his kinsman; [7] in whose eyes a vile person is despised; [8] but he honoreth them that fear the Lord; [9] he that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not; [10] he that hath not given out his money upon usury, [11] nor taken reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved" (Ps. 15). Now, "He that walketh uprightly" applies to Abraham, who was told, "Walk before Me, and be thou upright" (Gen. 17:1). "Worketh righteousness" applies to such as Abba Hilkiah.[12] Speaketh the truth from his heart" applies to such as R. Safra.[13] "He that hath used no deceit in his tongue" applies to Jacob, who said, "My father peradventure will feel me" (Gen. 27:12).[14] "Nor done evil to his neighbor" applies to a man who does not set himself in trade to compete with

---

1. B. Shab 133b.
2. Exod. R. 35:1; MTeh 104:13.
3. B. BK 9b.
4. B. Suk 41b.
5. A man should not boast of his piety. DEZ 5.
6. Sif Lev. 93d.
7. "The idea underlying this principle is the contrast between the Autonomy of the Will and the Law of God as the Authority to Man. The moral act finds its sure basis only when it is conceived as prompted by the command of God. When man acts in obedience thereto, the merit is greater" (Isidore Epstein, who quotes M. Lazarus, in AZ Soncino, p. 6, n. 1). B. Kid 31a.
8. Since in a way he ignores God's command, however laudable his intention. P. Ber 2:9, 5d; P. Shab 1:1, 3a.
9. Tos Yev 1:13.
10. B. Shab 30a.
11. B. Nid 61b.
12. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §8.
13. An eminent scholar who lived in Caesarea, where he carried on an extensive trade. One day, while R. Safra was reading the Shema, someone offered him a sum of money for an article in his possession. Though willing to sell, R. Safra would not speak during the reading of the Shema. The would-be purchaser, interpreting R. Safra's silence as refusal, kept increasing the offer. After R. Safra finished the Shema, he explained the reason for his silence and indicated his willingness to sell the article at the price originally suggested (see Samuel ben Meir [Rashbam] on B. BB 88a; also B. Hul 94b).
14. Jacob was a reluctant partner in the deception perpetrated upon Isaac. Had Isaac put the question directly to Jacob's real identity, Jacob would have undeceived him immediately.

his neighbor. Hath not endured a reproach against his kinsman" applies to one who has befriended his kinsmen. "In whose eyes a vile person is despised" refers to Hezekiah, king of Judah, who ordered his own father's bones to be dragged along on a pallet of ropes.[1] "But he honoreth them that fear the Lord" refers to Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, who, whenever he saw a disciple of the wise, would rise from his throne, embrace him, kiss him, and call him "My father, my father! My teacher, my teacher! My master, my master!"[2] "He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not" applies to such as R. Yohanan, who used to say, "I shall continue fasting until I have read the allotted portion in Mishnah and the weekly portion of Scripture."[3] "He that hath not given out his money upon usury" applies to a man who does not lend out his money usuriously even to a heathen.[4] "Nor taken a reward against the innocent" applies to such as R. Ishmael ben R. Yose.[5] Hence Scripture says, "He that doeth these things shall never be moved."

Whenever Rabban Gamaliel reached this verse, he would burst into tears and ask: Does this mean that only he who does all these things shall not be moved, but that he who does only one of them shall be moved?

R. Akiva replied: According to your reasoning, the words "Defile not yourselves in all these things" (Lev. 18:24) would mean that for a man to be defiled, he would have to touch all these creeping things, whereas if he touched only one of them, he would not be defiled. Yet the truth is that "in all these things" means that if a man touches a single creeping thing, it is as though he touched all creeping things. Here, too, in the psalm, "He that doeth these things" means that if he does any one of them [it is as though he had done them all].

When Isaiah came, he summed up the six hundred and thirteen commandments in six principles, for Isaiah said, "[1] He that walketh in righteousness and [2] speaketh peaceably; [3] he that despiseth profit from fraudulent dealings, [4] that waveth away a bribe instead of grasping it, [5] that stoppeth his ears from hearing of infamy, and [6] shutteth his eyes from looking upon evil. Such a one shall dwell in lofty security" (Isa. 33:15–16). "He that walketh in righteousness" refers to Abraham, of whom God said, "I have singled him out to instruct . . . by doing what is just and right" (Gen. 18:19). "Speaketh peaceably" refers to a man who does not provoke his fellow [with his words] in public. "He that despiseth profit from fraudulent dealings" refers to such as R. Ishmael ben Elisha.[6] "That waveth away a bribe instead of grasping it" refers to such as R. Ishmael ben R. Yose.[7] "That stoppeth his ears from hearing of infamy" refers to such as R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon,[8] who would not hear defamation of a disciple of the wise and remain silent. "Shutteth his eyes from looking upon evil" is to be construed as R. Hiyya bar Abba construed it. For R. Hiyya bar Abba said: These words refer to a man who will not gaze at women when they are doing the wash.[9]

Of each of the aforementioned, Isaiah said, "Such a one shall dwell in lofty security, with inaccessible cliffs for his stronghold, with his food supplied and his drink assured" (Isa. 35:16).

When Micah came, he summed up the six hundred and thirteen commandments in three principles, for he said, "It hath been told thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord doth require of thee: [1] only to do justly, and [2] to love mercy, and [3] to walk modestly with thy God" (Mic. 6:8). "To do justly" refers to the maintaining of justice; "to love mercy" refers to the doing of deeds of mercy; and "to walk modestly with thy God" applies even to dowering a bride or providing shrouds for the dead. Now, if in commandments that are customarily not done in private [and thus do not require modesty], the Torah commands, "Walk modestly with thy God," how much more strongly does this precept apply to commandments that have to be done in private.

Upon further consideration, Isaiah summed up the six hundred and thirteen commandments in two principles when he said, "Thus saith the Lord: [1] keep justice and [2] do righteousness" (Isa. 56:1).

When Habakkuk came, he summed up the six hundred and thirteen commandments in one principle, for he said, "The righteous shall live by his faith" (Hab. 2:4).[10]

---

1. He thus deprived his father, the vile Ahaz, of royal burial. Cf. 2 Chron. 28:27.
2. See 2 Chron. 19:4ff. and B. Ket 103b.
3. "Until I have read the allotted portion in Mishnah and in Scripture": parallel in P. Ned 8:1, 40d; BR: "until I come home."
4. According to Scripture, usury from a heathen is not prohibited. See Deut. 23:21 and B. BM 70b–71a.
5. R. Ishmael ben R. Yose was a judge. Upon learning that his tenant gardener was to appear before him in a lawsuit, he refused to accept the regular basket of fruit the tenant brought a day earlier than was his custom. R. Ishmael also disqualified himself from the lawsuit. As he went about getting another judge to act as his substitute, he caught himself unwittingly arguing in behalf of his tenant and thus became more aware than ever of a bribe's insidious effect upon a judge. Cf. B. Ket 105b (Ket, Soncino, p. 677). Also see above, part 2, chap. 1, §233.
6. R. Ishmael ben Elisha was both priest and judge. One day a man brought him the first of the fleece as a priest's gift (see Deut. 18:4). R. Ishmael asked whether there was no priest in the man's own neighborhood to whom he might have given the first of the fleece; the man replied that there was indeed a priest in his neighborhood, but since he—the man—was on the way to attend a lawsuit, he thought that he might as well dispose of the fleece on his way. Upon hearing this, R. Ishmael refused to accept the proffered fleece. He also disqualified himself from the lawsuit. As he went about getting another judge to act as his substitute, he caught himself arguing unwittingly in behalf of the man who had offered him the fleece. See B. Ket 105b and above, part 2, chap. 1, §112.
7. Who similarly refused the bribe of his tenant.
8. After his death, his body was kept for years in an upper chamber and was not infested with worms. However, one day, when his wife saw a worm issue from his ear, she was greatly grieved. But then he appeared to her in a dream and said, "This happened because I once heard a disciple of the wise defamed and did not protest as I should have done." Clearly he offended in this regard only once. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §229–33.
9. Presumably because, as the women lean over toward the water, they expose parts of their bodies.
10. B. Mak 23b–24a; B. Sanh 81a.

A Fence around the Torah

568. "Assure the safety of My charge (Lev. 18:30)[1]—provide a safeguard for My charge."[2]

569. The Men of the Great Assembly used to say: Make a fence for the Torah.[3]

570. "Enter not into the path of the wicked. . . . Avoid it, pass not by it; turn from it, and pass on" (Prov. 4:14–15). R. Ashi said: The verse may be illustrated by the parable of a man who guards an orchard. If he guards it from without, the entire orchard is protected; but if he guards it from within, only the part in front of him is protected, while the part behind him is not protected.[4]

571. Once the wall of a vineyard collapses, the vineyard is as good as destroyed.[5]

572. We have been taught: The sages made a fence for their words, so that a man returning home from a field in the evening should not say, "I will go home, eat a little, drink a little, sleep a little. Then I will recite the Shema and the Tefillah."[6] For sleep is likely to overpower him, and he will sleep through the entire night. Rather, a man coming home from the field in the evening should first go into the synagogue. If he is accustomed to read Scripture, he should read Scripture; if he is accustomed to recite Mishnah, he should recite Mishnah. Then he should recite the Shema and the Tefillah, eat his meal, and say grace.[7]

573. R. Avira expounded: The ministering angels said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, it is written in your Torah, "Who regardeth not persons" (Deut. 10:17). But You—do You not regard the people of Israel, as Scripture says, "The Lord regardeth thee" (Num. 6:26)? He replied: And shall I not regard Israel, seeing that I wrote for them in the Torah, "And thou shalt eat and be satisfied, and bless the Lord" (Deut. 8:10), and they make sure to say the blessing of grace, even when the quantity [they consume] is only the bulk of an olive or the bulk of an egg?[8]

574. One may not read on the Sabbath by the light of a lamp, lest he tilt it. R. Ishmael ben Elisha said: I will read and not tilt. But once, while reading, he caught himself about to tilt it and he exclaimed: How great are the words of the sages, who used to say, "One may not read by the light of a lamp." According to R. Nathan, R. Ishmael actually did tilt the lamp while reading, and he wrote in his notebook, "I, Ishmael ben Elisha, did tilt a lamp while reading on the Sabbath. When the Temple is rebuilt, I will bring a plump sin offering."[9]

575. R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: I have heard that [when necessary] a court may—even without scriptural authority—impose flogging or even the death penalty, not, however, intending to contravene the Torah, but rather [to safeguard it by] making a fence around it. It once happened in the days of the Greeks that a man rode a horse on the Sabbath. When brought before the court, he was sentenced to be stoned, not because he incurred such a penalty [according to Scripture],[10] but because the exigencies of the time made it necessary.[11]

576. Rava expounded: What is implied in the verse "And furthermore, my son, take care . . . of making many books there is no end" (Eccles. 12:12)? Take greater care [to observe] the ordinances of the scribes than the ordinances of Torah, for in the ordinances of Torah there are [varying penalties for transgressing] positive and negative commandments. But as to the ordinances of the scribes, whoever transgresses any of them incurs the penalty of death. Lest you say, "If there is such substance in them, why were they not written down?" Because "of making many books there is no end."[12]

577. To a Nazirite we say: Go round and round, but not near a vineyard.[13]

578. Rava said: Sanctify yourself even in that which is permitted you.[14]

579. "Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy" (Lev. 20:7). R. Avin said: The verse may be understood by the parable of a king who had a cellar full of wine. The king set watchmen over it, some of them Nazirites and some tipplers. In the evening, when he came to give them their pay, he gave the tipplers a double wage and the Nazirites only a single wage. The Nazirites asked, "Our lord king, have we not all watched alike? Why give a double wage to these, and only a single wage to us?" He replied, "These are tipplers and are in the habit of guzzling wine. [As a reward for having abstained] I gave them a double wage. But to you [who have no such weakness], I give a single wage." So it is with the beings above. Since the impulse to evil is not present in them, one command to be holy is sufficient. But the beings below—the impulse to evil overcomes them. O that they would resist it after being twice bidden to be holy! Such is the implication in "Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy."[15]

---

1. JV: "Therefore shall ye keep My charge."
2. B. MK 5a.
3. Avot 1:1.
4. B. Yev 21a.
5. ARN 24.
6. The Eighteen Benedictions, at one time said twice, now three times, daily.
7. B. Ber 4b.
8. B. Ber 20b.
9. B. Shab 12b.
10. Riding a horse on the Sabbath is forbidden only by a rabbinic prohibition.
11. B. Yev 90b; B. Sanh 46a.
12. B. Er 21b.
13. A Nazirite may eat no grapes and drink no wine. B. Shab 13a.
14. B. Yev 20a.
15. Lev. R. 24:8.

580. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Whenever the sages forbid anything for appearance' sake, it is forbidden even in one's innermost chambers.[1]

581. We have been taught: On the Sabbath one may beat up wine and oil for a sick person. However, R. Simeon ben Eleazar said in the name of R. Meir: One may beat up wine and oil for a sick person on the Sabbath. Nevertheless, R. Simeon ben Eleazar went on to tell: Once [on a Sabbath] R. Meir had pain in his stomach, and as we were about to beat up wine and oil for him, he would not permit us. We asked him, "Shall your ruling be made null and void in your own lifetime?" He replied, "I, to be sure, rule one way, but my colleagues rule another way, and I have never presumed to disregard the rulings of my colleagues."[2]

582. "Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it" (Gen. 3:3). In connection with Eve's adding "neither shall ye touch it" to God's words, Scripture warns, "Never add to His words, lest He prove you to be falsifying" (Prov. 30:6). R. Hiyya commented: Do not make the fence taller than what is fenced in, lest it fall down and crush the saplings. Thus, too, after the Holy One said, "In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2:17), Eve did not quote Him accurately, saying instead, "God hath said, 'Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die.' " Later, when the serpent saw her pass in front of the tree, he took hold of her, pushed her against the tree, and said, "You see, you did not die. Even as you did not die by touching it, so you will not die by eating its fruit."[3]

583. There were certain rulings that all the sages agreed upon in the upper chamber of Hananiah ben Hezekiah ben Gorion.[4] However, one day, when going up to visit him, they took a vote on a matter. Finding that the school of Shammai outnumbered the school of Hillel, they issued eighteen rulings [not universally agreed upon]. That day was as calamitous for Israel[5] as the day the golden calf was made.

[In approval of what had been done], R. Eliezer said: On that day [in issuing rulings that were necessary] they made the measure full to the brim. Differing, R. Joshua said: On that day they in fact made the measure deficient, for when a measure is full to the brim, whatever extra a man puts into it will inevitably cause what is in it to spill out.

The sages taught: By what parable may R. Eliezer's view be illustrated? By the parable of a basket full of cucumbers and gourds. When a man pours mustard seeds into it, it holds the contents more firmly. By what parable may R. Joshua's view be illustrated? By the parable of a tub full of honey. When a man puts pomegranates and walnuts into it, the tub overflows.[6]

584. Hezekiah said: How do we know that he who adds to the word of God subtracts from it? From the verse "God hath said: Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it" (Gen. 3:3). But R. Mesharsheya maintained: We derive it from a single word in the verse "Ammatayim [two cubits] and a half shall be the length thereof" (Exod. 25:10);[7] while R. Ashi said: We drive it from two words in the verse "Ashte esreh [eleven] curtains" (Exod. 26:7).[8]

585. R. Yose said: Better [a fence of] ten handbreadths that stands firm than one of a hundred handbreadths that is sure to fall down.[9]

586. A fence that [though rickety] still stands should be repaired, but one that is clearly deteriorating should be demolished.[10]

587. A restriction should not be imposed on a community unless the majority is able to stand it.[11]

588. A restriction issued by a court but not accepted by the majority of the community is not a valid restriction.[12]

589. R. Tarfon said: One may not light [the Sabbath lamp] with any oil [other than] olive oil. Hearing this, R. Yohanan ben Nuri rose to his feet and exclaimed. What shall the Babylonians do, who have only sesame oil? What shall the Medians do, who have only walnut oil? And what shall the people of Alexandria do, who have only radish oil? And what shall the people of Cappadocia do, who have neither the one nor the other, but only naphtha? Accordingly, you must conclude that oils other than those listed by the sages as not to be used for lamps [are not to be added to the prohibited list].[13]

590. If the interpretation of a law is varying in the courts, and you do not know which interpretation is to be preferred, note how the local people apply this law and act accordingly.[14]

591. Our masters taught: On one occasion, the fourteenth of Nisan fell on a Sabbath, and the Bene Betera forgot the law, so that they did not know whether offering the paschal lamb does or does not override the Sabbath. They asked, "Is there anyone at all who knows whether or not the paschal lamb overrides the Sabbath?" They were told, "There is a certain man who has come up from Babylonia—he is known as Hillel the Babylonian. Since he ministered

---

1. B. Shab 64b.
2. B. Shab 134a.
3. Gen. R. 19:3.
4. Concerning him, see above in this chapter, §423.
5. Because not reasoning but the sheer plurality of numbers prevailed.
6. B. Shab 153b; Tos Shab 1:16.
7. Had the word read ma'tayim ("two hundred") and the scribe wrongly added an alef in front, making it read ammatayim ("two cubits"), God's word would have been diminished.
8. Had the words read shete esreh, ("twelve") and the scribe wrongly added an ayin, making it read ashte esreh ("eleven"), God's word would have been diminished. B. Sanh 29a.
9. ARN 1.
10. Tanhuma B, Va'yeshev, §14.
11. B. BK 79b.
12. P. Shab 1:4, 3d.
13. B. Shab 26a.
14. P. M Sh 5:2, 56b.

to the two notables of the generation, Shemaiah and Avtalion, he must know whether or not offering the paschal lamb overrides the Sabbath." So they sent for him and asked, "Do you know whether or not the paschal lamb overrides the Sabbath?" He replied, "Have we only one lamb—the lamb offered on Passover—that might override the Sabbath? Have we not in fact more than two hundred so-called paschal lambs during the year that override the Sabbath?"[1] The Bene Betera, taken aback, asked, "How can you make such a statement?' He replied, "In connection with the paschal lamb, Scripture prescribes that it be offered 'in its appointed time' [Num. 9:2], and in connection with [its analogue] the daily lamb, Scripture likewise prescribes that it be offered 'in its appointed time' [Num. 28:2]. Just as 'its appointed time' said in connection with the daily lamb involves overriding the Sabbath, so 'its appointed time' said in connection with the paschal lamb involves overriding the Sabbath. Besides, there is an argument a fortiori: if the daily lamb, whose omission is not punished by excision, overrides the Sabbath, then should not the paschal lamb, whose neglect is punished by excision, without question override the Sabbath?" Immediately Hillel was placed foremost in the house of study and appointed patriarch over them, and the rest of the entire day he sat and lectured concerning the laws of Passover. In the course of his remarks, he was moved to chide the people of Jerusalem, saying, "Who brought it about that I have come from Babylonia and have been made patriarch over you? It was your own indolence—you did not minister to the two notables of the generation, Shemaiah and Avtalion, who dwelled in your very midst." No sooner did he rebuke them than the answer to a question in Halakhah was hidden from him, so that when they asked him, "Master, what is the rule if a man forgot to bring in a knife on the eve of the Sabbath?" he had to reply, "I have heard the answer to this question but forgotten it. But depend on the people of Israel: if they themselves are not prophets, they are the children of prophets!" Indeed, the next day, one whose Passover offering was a lamb stuck the knife in its wool; one whose Passover offering was a goat tied the knife between its horns.[2] When Hillel saw what was being done, he recollected the Halakhah and said, "What these men are doing is in line with the tradition I received from the mouths of Shemaiah and Avtalion."[3]

592. Custom set aside a rabbinic ruling.[4]

593. All practices must follow the custom of the city.[5]

594. Where the custom is to work on the eve of Passover until midday, one may work. Where the custom is not to work,[6] one may not work. When a man goes from a place where work is done to a place where work is not done, or from a place where work is not done to a place where work is done, both the restrictions of the place he left and the restrictions of the place he went to are imposed on him. [However, if he goes from a place where work is not done to a place where it is done], he need not change his ways out of fear of stirring up controversy.[7]

595. R. Hinena said: All kinds of practices depend on custom. Thus in Migdal Tzabbayim there were acacia trees, and R. Hanina, the associate of scholars, was asked, "May these now be used for secular purposes?"[8] He replied, "Since your fathers regarded such use as prohibited, do not change the practice of your fathers, may they rest in peace."

R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Avun: When a man is not sure whether a certain practice is permitted and he errs in regarding it as prohibited, he may come to the scholars for absolution and they may release him from the prohibition he imposed on himself. But if he knows that a practice is permitted and he nevertheless chooses to regard it as prohibited, then if he seeks absolution from the scholars, they may choose not to give it to him.

One may sit on the [merchandise] bench of a heathen on the Sabbath.[9] It happened that Rabban Gamaliel sat on the [merchandise] bench of a heathen in Acco on the Sabbath. He was told, "Our custom is not to sit on the [merchandise] bench of a heathen on the Sabbath." But since he did not wish to tell them that it was permitted, he [obediently] rose and went his way.

A story is told of Judah and Hillel, the sons of Rabban Gamaliel, who went to bathe in a bathhouse in Cabul. They were told, "It is not our custom to have two brothers bathe together."[10] But since they did not wish to say that such a practice was permitted, they [obediently] went in one after the other. More: When the two brothers came out for a walk on the Sabbath wearing golden shoes, they were told, "It is not our custom to wear golden shoes on the Sabbath."[11] But since they did not wish to say that it was permitted, they [obediently] sent the shoes back home with their servants.

The people of Mesha had taken it upon themselves not to set sail in the Great [Mediterranean] Sea [three days before the Sabbath]. They came and said to Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], "Our fathers followed the custom not to set sail in the Great Sea—we, what should we do?" He replied, "Since your fathers regarded such a practice as prohibited, do not change the custom of your fathers, may they rest in peace."[12]

596. Our masters taught: In R. Eliezer's locality they used to cut timber to make charcoal for forging iron on

---

1. The lamb offered in the morning and evening of fifty Sabbaths during the year, plus the two additional daily offerings on a Sabbath, add up to two hundred during a year.
2. And thus avoided having to carry it on the Sabbath.
3. B. Pes 66a and En Yaakov, ad loc.; P. Pes 6:1, 33a.
4. P. Yev 12:1, 12c.
5. B. Suk 38a.
6. So that people may have ample time to prepare for Passover.
7. Because those who see him not working will assume that he has no work or is not well enough to work. Pes 4:1.
8. Even though when the Temple stood they were used in its structure.
9. And not worry that he may be suspected of engaging in business on the Sabbath.
10. Because of fear of homosexual intercourse.
11. Out of fear that they may be removed to be shown and the prohibition of carrying on the Sabbath thus be violated.
12. P. Pes 4:1, 30d.

the Sabbath.[1] In the locality of R. Yose the Galilean, they used to eat the flesh of fowl with milk.

Levi visited the home of Joseph the Fowler and was offered the head of a peacock in milk, which he did not eat. When he came to Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], Rabbi asked him, "Why did you not place Joseph under a ban?" Levi replied, "It was in the locality of R. Judah ben Betera, and so I thought: perhaps Joseph the Fowler understood the law in accordance with the interpretation of R. Yose the Galilean."[2]

597. Every river has its own course.[3]

Torah's Mysteries

598. The chapter on creation (Gen. 1) may not be expounded in the presence of two persons, nor the chapters on the chariot (Ezek. 1 and 10; Isa. 6) in the presence of even one person, unless he is a sage who is capable of understanding on his own.

When a man speculates upon four things—what is above [the celestial creatures] and what is beneath them, what preceded creation and what will happen thereafter—it were better for him if he had not come into the world. And anyone who is not delicate about the honor of his Creator—it were better for him if he had not come into the world.[4]

599. The Torah may be likened to two paths, one of fire and one of snow. If one turns too close to the first, he will die in the fire; too close to the second, he will die in the snow. What should he do? He should walk in the middle.[5]

600. Four men entered the "Garden,"[6] namely, Ben Azzai, Ben Zoma, Aher,[7] and R. Akiva. R. Akiva said to them: When you arrive at the slabs of pure marble, do not say, "Water, water!" for Scripture says, "He that speaketh falsehood shall not be established before Mine eyes" (Ps. 101:7). Ben Azzai cast one look [at the Garden] and died; of him, Scripture says, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints" (Ps. 116:15). Ben Zoma looked and became demented; of him, Scripture says; "Hast thou found honey? Eat so much as is sufficient for thee, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it" (Prov. 25:16). Aher fell into heresy.[8] R. Akiva came down unharmed. Of him, Scripture says, "Draw Me, I will run after thee" (Song 1:4). The ministering angels sought to thrust even R. Akiva away, but the Holy One said: Let this venerable elder be. He deserves to make use of My glory.[9]

601. Once, R. Joshua ben Hananiah was standing on a step on the Temple Mount when Ben Zoma walked toward him but, after coming close to him, did not salute him.[10] R. Joshua asked, "Whence and whither, Ben Zoma?" Ben Zoma: "I have been meditating on the work of creation, and found that between the upper and the lower waters there is no more than the space of three fingerbreadths, as is said, 'The spirit of God hovered upon the face of the water' [Gen. 1:2], like a dove hovering over its young, touching them and not touching them." At that, R. Joshua said to his disciples, "Ben Zoma is already outside."[11] Not many days passed, and Ben Zoma departed this life.[12]

602. Our masters taught: There was once a child who was reading in the book of Ezekiel at his teacher's house, and he kept speculating about the meaning of hashmal [electrum] (Ezek. 1:4). When a fire went forth from the hashmal and consumed him, the sages sought to suppress the book of Ezekiel. Hananiah ben Hezekiah objected: "This child, to be sure, was a sage. But do you suppose it likely that all other children will be sages like him [and similarly endangered]?"[13]

603. R. Simeon ben Jehozadak inquired of R. Samuel bar Nahman: "Since I hear that you are a master of Aggadah, tell me how light was created?" R. Samuel bar Nahman replied, "The Holy One covered Himself with a white garment, and the radiance of His majesty illuminated the world from one end to the other." But since R. Samuel bar Nahman gave his reply in a whisper, R. Simeon ben Jehozadak pressed him further: "Is this not stated explicitly in the verse 'Who coverest Thyself with light as with a garment' [Ps. 104:2]? Why do you tell it in a whisper?" R. Samuel bar Nahman said to him, "As I received this tradition in a whisper, so I answered you in a whisper."[14]

604. "This is My Name" (Exod. 3:15). But it is also written, "And this is My appellation" (ibid.), by which the Holy One implied: I am not to be called by My Name as written: My Name is written yod he, but my appellation is to be alef dalet.[15]

Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Yohanan: The sages confide the exact pronunciation of the Tetragrammaton to their disciples only once in a seven-year cycle. Some say: Twice in a seven-year cycle.

---

1. To make a knife for circumcision.
2. B. Shab 130a.
3. B. Hul 18b.
4. B. Hag 11b.
5. P. Hag 2:1, 77a.
6. A figurative expression for the mystical realm of theosophy. So Jastrow and Goldschmidt.
7. Elisha ben Avuyah, R. Meir's teacher. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §191.
8. Literally, "mutilated the shoots [of true faith]."
9. B. Hag 14b and 15b, and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. He was lost in thought and failed to show a disciple's respect to his master.
11. Engaged in gnostic speculations, which were heretical.
12. B. Hag 15a; Tos Hag 2:6.
13. B. Hag 13a.
14. Gen. R. 3:4; MTeh 104:4.
15. The Tetragrammaton, Yod He Vav He, is read adonai (alef dalet nun yod). But even this name was apparently pronounced Ad (alef dalet). See J. Z. Lauterbach, "Substitutes for the Tetragrammaton," Proceedings of the American Academy for Jewish Research 2 (1930–31): 43.

Our masters taught: At first the twelve-letter Name used to be entrusted to all people. After the indiscreet became numerous, it was entrusted only to the discreet ones in the priesthood. During the chanting [of the Tetragrammaton] by their brother priests, they pronounced it indistinctly.

We have been taught that R. Tarfon said: One time I ascended the [priests'] dais after my mother's brother, and I inclined my ear to the high priest, who pronounced that [twelve-letter] Name indistinctly during the chanting [of the Tetragrammaton] by his brother priests.

R. Judah said in the name of Rav: The forty-two-letter Name is entrusted only to one who is discreet and meek, in his middle years, free from bad temper, not given to drink, and not insistent on his rights. And he who knows it and is careful about it, taking care to utter it only when he is ritually clean, is beloved above and cherished below, is held in awe by his fellows, and inherits two worlds—this world and the world-to-come.[1]

605. Our masters taught: Once, when on a journey, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai was riding an ass, with R. Eleazar ben Arakh driving the ass from behind. R. Eleazar said, "Master, teach me a chapter of the Work of the Chariot." He answered, "My son, have I not instructed you that the Work [of the Chariot] is not to be taught in the presence of even one person, unless he is a sage and able to draw inferences on his own?" R. Eleazar then said, "Master, permit me to say something before you."[2] He answered, "Say it!"

Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai dismounted from the ass, wrapped himself in his robe, and sat down on a stone beneath an olive tree. R. Eleazar said to him, "Master, why did you dismount from the ass?" Rabban Yohanan answered, "Since you are about to expound the Work of the Chariot, the Divine Presence will be with us, and the ministering angels may be accompanying us—is it proper that I should continue riding the ass?" As R. Eleazar ben Arakh began his exposition of the Work of the Chariot, fire came down from heaven and lapped all the trees of the field, and they all began to utter song. What was the song they uttered? "Praise the Lord from the earth, ye sea monsters, and all deeps . . . fruitful trees and all cedars. . . . Hallelujah" (Ps. 148:7, 148:9, and 148:14).

An angel also was heard from the fire saying, "Of a certainty, this is the very Work of the Chariot."

Then Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai rose, kissed R. Eleazar on his head, and said, "Blessed be the Lord, the God of Israel, that has given to Abraham our father a son who knows how to speculate upon, to examine, and to expound the Work of the Chariot. There are some who expound well but do not practice well, and some who practice well but do not expound well; but you both expound well and practice well. Happy are you, O Abraham our father, that Eleazar ben Arakh has come forth from your loins."

When these things were told to R. Joshua, while he and R. Yose the Priest were on a journey, the two sages said: Let us also engage in speculations about the Work of the Chariot. After R. Joshua had begun his discourse, even though that day was the summer solstice, the heavens nevertheless became overcast with clouds, a kind of rainbow appeared in the cloud (Ezek. 1:28), and the ministering angels assembled as they came to listen, like people who assemble and come to watch the entertainment for a groom and a bride.

R. Yose the Priest went and told Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai what had happened. Rabban Yohanan said: "Blessed are you, and blessed are the mothers who bore you. Blessed are my eyes, which saw that it was so. Moreover, in my dream the two of you and I were reclining on Mount Sinai, and a divine voice from heaven was vouchsafed to us: 'Ascend hither! Ascent hither! Here large banqueting chambers are prepared for you, and beautiful dining couches are laid out for you. You, your disciples, and the disciples of your disciples are designated to the third company of the upright.' "[3]

---

1. B. Kid 71a.

2. The words "that you taught me" are omitted, as in parallels in the Palestinian Talmud.

3. Seven such companies are admitted after death into God's presence (see MTeh 11:6). B. Hag 14b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

CHAPTER EIGHT

WISDOM, PROPHECY, AND SONG

Wisdom

1. The spirit conceived and gave birth to wisdom.[1]

2. R. Ammi said: So great is knowledge [of Torah] that the prayer for it was placed at the beginning of the weekday blessings.[2]

R. Ammi also said: So great is knowledge [of Torah] that it was placed between two of God's Names: "For a God of knowledge is the Lord" (1 Sam. 2:3).

R. Eleazar said: When a man has [Torah] knowledge, it is as though the Sanctuary were built in his days. For just as knowledge was placed between two of God's Names, so the Sanctuary was placed between two of God's Names: "Thou hast made, O LORD, the Sanctuary, O LORD" (Exod. 15:17).

R. Eleazar also said: A man who has [Torah] knowledge will eventually become wealthy, for it is said, "By knowledge are all chambers filled with precious and pleasant riches" (Prov. 24:4).

R. Eleazar also said: When a man lacks [Torah] knowledge, one may have no mercy on him, for it is said, "It is a people that have no understanding [of Torah], therefore He that made them will not have mercy upon them" (Isa. 27:11).

R. Eleazar also said: He who gives his bread to one who has no [Torah] knowledge will be assailed by suffering, for it is said, "They in whom there is no understanding that eat thy bread lay a wound[3] under thee" (Obad. 1:7).

R. Eleazar also said: A man who has no [Torah] knowledge will eventually be exiled, as is said, "Therefore My people are gone into exile, for want of knowledge" (Isa. 5:13).[4]

3. If a disciple of the wise lacks a sense [of propriety], an animal is better than he is.

If a disciple of the wise lacks a sense [of propriety], a carcass is better than he is.[5]

4. The adornment of knowledge is wisdom, the adornment of wisdom is humility.[6]

5. The Torah was not given to fools.[7]

6. "In want of all things" (Deut. 28:48). R. Nahman said: This means: without knowledge.

Abbaye said: We have a tradition that "poor" means poor in [Torah] knowledge. In the west [the Land of Israel], there is a proverb: He who has this has everything; he who lacks this—what has he?[8]

7. R. Tanhuma began his discourse with the verse "There is gold, and a multitude of rubies; but the lips of knowledge are a precious jewel" (Prov. 20:15). It is the way of the world that if a man has gold and silver, priceless gems and pearls, and all kinds of precious vessels in the world, but lacks knowledge, of what worth is what he owns? The proverb says, "If it's knowledge you've got, what do you lack? If it's knowledge you lack, what have you got?"[9]

8. "Ask what I shall give thee" (1 Kings 3:5, 2 Chron. 1:7). R. Simon said in the name of R. Simeon ben Halafta: Solomon at that time was like a counselor who was held in great esteem at the king's court. When the king said to him, "Ask for what I shall give you," the counselor thought: If I ask for silver and gold, that is all I shall be given. If I ask for precious stones and pearls, that is all I shall be given. So he decided: I will ask for the king's daughter, and that will include everything else. So, too, Solomon said: If I ask for silver and gold, precious stones and pearls, that is all I shall be given. What I will ask for is wisdom, and that will include everything else.[10]

9. R. Isaac said: He who desires to become wise, let him turn to the south [when praying]; and he who desires to become rich, let him turn to the north [when praying]. The mnemonic [by which this may be remembered] is that the table [in the Tabernacle] was to the north of the altar and the lampstand to the south (Exod. 26:35).[11]

R. Joshua ben Levi, however, said: One should always turn south, because by obtaining wisdom, he will obtain wealth, as it says, "Length of days are in [wisdom's] right hand; in her left hand are riches and honor" (Prov. 3:16).[12]

10. R. Yohanan said: The Holy One grants wisdom only to one who already has wisdom, for Scripture says, "He giveth wisdom to the wise, and intelligence to the intelligent" (Deut. 2:21). When R. Tahalifa of the West heard it and repeated it to R. Abbahu. R. Abbahu said to him: You infer it from that verse, while we infer it from this one: "In the heart of all that are wise-hearted I have put wisdom" (Exod. 31:6).[13]

---

1. Exod. R. 15:22.
2. See Hertz APB, p. 137.
3. JV: "snare."
4. B. Ber 33a; B. Sanh 92a and En Yakov, ad loc.
5. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 33; Lev. R. 1:15.
6. DEZ 5.
7. Lekah Tov on Gen. 49:4 (ed. Buber, p. 232).
8. B. Ned 41a.
9. Lev. R. 1:6; Yalkut, Va-yikra, §428.
10. Song R. 1:1, §9.
11. The table symbolizing plenty, and the lampstand wisdom—"the commandment is a lamp" (Prov. 6:23).
12. B. BB 25b.
13. B. Ber 55a.

11. "And beyond wisdom, I have filled him with the spirit of God" (Exod. 31:3). Take the shopkeeper as an example. When a man comes to buy wine from him, or honey, or oil, or fish brine, the shopkeeper, if he is knowledgeable, first smells the buyer's vessel. If it had been used for wine, he puts wine into it; so, too, if the vessel had been used for oil, for honey, or for fish brine. Likewise the Holy One, when He sees that there is the aroma of wisdom in a man fills him with more. Hence, "I have filled him with the spirit," implying that the spirit of wisdom had already been in him.[1]

12. A [Roman] noblewoman challenged R. Yose ben Halafta, saying to him, "What sense is conveyed by 'He giveth wisdom to the wise' [Dan. 2:21]? Should the verse not have read, 'He giveth wisdom to fools'?" R. Yose replied, "Have you any jewelry?" She said, "Yes." R. Yose: "If two persons, one rich and the other poor, should come to you to borrow your jewelry, to which would you lend it?" The noblewoman: "To the one who is rich." "Why?" "Because the one who is rich has the means to repay should he lose it; but the one who is poor—how is he to repay?" R. Yose: "Let your ears hear what your mouth is saying. You would lend your jewelry only to a person who is rich. Shall the Holy One, then, give wisdom to fools?"[2]

13. "But wisdom, where shall it be found?" (Job 28:12). The verse implies that Solomon was endeavoring to determine where in man's body wisdom is to be found. R. Eliezer said: [Solomon concluded that it was] in the head. But R. Joshua said: In the heart, for Scripture says, "Thou hast put gladness in my heart" (Ps. 4:8), and with regard to gladness, Scripture says elsewhere, "My son, be wise, and make my heart glad" (Prov. 27:11).[3]

14. "All the streams run into the sea" (Eccles. 1:7). All of man's wisdom is nowhere other than in the heart. "Yet the sea is not full" (ibid.)—the heart is never filled to capacity. You might suppose that when a man lets his wisdom go forth from his heart,[4] it will never flow back to him. Hence Scripture says, "Yet the streams flow back again" (ibid.).[5]

15. The Alexandrians asked R. Joshua ben Hananiah: What should a man do to become wise? He replied: Let him sit long in the academy and engage very little in business. They objected: But many did so, and it did not avail them. [So he suggested]: Let him beseech mercy of Him to whom wisdom belongs, as is said, "For the Lord giveth wisdom, out of His mouth cometh knowledge and discernment" (Prov. 2:6).

R. Hiyya taught: What God does may be understood by the parable of a king who prepared a public feast, but he sent [choice tidbits] to his favorites from what was set before his own person.

R. Isaac taught: The verse may be understood by the parable of a king who was sucking a lozenge. When his son came in, he took the lozenge out of his own mouth and gave it to his son. Thus "the Lord giveth wisdom" to all; but "out of His mouth cometh knowledge and discernment" for Israel.[6]

16. A [Roman] noblewoman said to R. Judah: A teacher and a drunkard?[7] He replied: By my faith! I taste no wine but that of Kiddush, Havdalah,[8] and the four obligatory cups on Passover. The latter make me feel as though I had a tight cord around my head from Passover to Pentecost. No; rather, "a man's wisdom maketh his face to shine" (Eccles. 8:1).[9]

17. If there is [no Torah] knowledge, whence the capacity to make distinctions?[10]

18. Who is wise? He who foresees what is about to happen.[11]

19. "A wise man has his eyes in his head" (Eccles. 2:14). Are then a fool's eyes in his feet? No; what the verse means is that when the wise man is at the "head" of a thing, he already foresees what the end will be.

R. Meir used to call the end of a matter its "head."[12]

20. Ben Zoma said: Who is wise? He who learns from everyone, as is said, "Because everyone has been my teacher, I have gained understanding" (Ps. 119:99).[13]

21. "Understanding in matters" (1 Sam. 16:18)—understanding how to infer one matter from another.[14]

22. R. Eleazar ben Azariah said: If there is no wisdom, there is no fear [of God]; if there is no fear [of God], there is no wisdom. If there is no knowledge, there is no understanding; if there is no understanding, there is no knowledge.[15]

23. What is the difference between a man whose understanding is deep and a man who is merely clever? The man who is merely clever is like a small-time moneychanger—when a [gold] denar is brought to him to be examined [for genuineness], he examines it; when no denar is brought to him, he sits in idleness. The man whose understanding is deep is like a prosperous moneychanger—when a [gold] denar is brought to him to be examined [for genuineness], he examines it; when no denar is brought to him, he takes out one of his own and examines it, [thus continuing] to refine his knowledge.[16]

---

1. Tanhuma, Va-yak'hel, §2.
2. Tanhuma B, Mi-ketz, §9; Yalkut, Job, §919.
3. Midrash Prov., ed. Buber, p. 41.
4. When he teaches.
5. Eccles. R. 1:7, §4.
6. B. Nid 70b; Yalkut, Prov., §932; Yalkut, Song, §981; Exod. R. 41:3.
7. Since his face was always shining, he gave that impression.
8. For the blessing at the outgoing of Sabbath.
9. B. Ned 49b.
10. P. Ber 5:2, 9b.
11. B. Tam 32a.
12. P. Sot 8:10, 23a; Eccles. R. 2:14, §1.
13. Avot 4:1.
14. B. Sanh 93b.
15. Avot 3:17.
16. Sif Deut., §13; Yalkut, Devarim, §802.

24. "Get wisdom, get understanding" (Prov. 4:5). He who has wisdom but no understanding is like a man with bread in his hand but nothing to eat with it. And he who has understanding but no wisdom is like a man with a savory dish in his hand but no bread to eat with it. But he who has both wisdom and understanding is like a man who has in his hand bread and a savory dish—he eats both and is fed full.[1]

25. Silence is a [protective] fence for wisdom.[2]

26. R. Hanina ben Dosa said: He whose fear of sin takes precedence over his wisdom—his wisdom will endure. But he whose wisdom takes precedence over his fear of sin—his wisdom will not endure.

He used to say: He whose [good] works exceed his wisdom—his wisdom will endure; but he whose wisdom exceeds his [good] works—his wisdom will not endure.[3]

27. "To understand wisdom and self-restraint" (Prov. 1:2). If wisdom, why self-restraint? And if self-restraint, why wisdom? If a man has wisdom, he will learn self-restraint. But if he has no wisdom, he is incapable of learning self-restraint.[4]

28. Ben Azzai said: If one's mind is serene because of his learning, it is a good sign for him. But if his mind is not serene because of his learning, it is a bad sign for him.[5]

29. He used to say: It is a good sign for a man when his body suffers because of [his concern for] his knowledge [of Torah]. It is a bad sign for a man when his knowledge of Torah suffers because of [his concern for] his body.

He also used to say: It is a good sign for a man when his mind is upset out of concern for his knowledge of Torah. But it is a bad sign for a man when his knowledge of Torah is upset out of concern for his mind.[6]

30. Hillel used to say: The more schooling, the more wisdom; the more counsel, the more understanding.[7]

31. R. Ishmael said: He who would become wise should engage in the study of civil laws, for there is no branch of the Torah more extensive than civil laws; they are like a welling fountain.[8]

32. Rabban Gamaliel, the son R. Judah the Patriarch, used to say: Not everyone who is engaged overmuch in commerce gains wisdom.[9]

33. "Surely business[10] turneth a wise man into a fool" (Eccles. 7:7). When a wise man busies himself with many matters, his wisdom becomes confused.[11]

34. R. Joshua ben Levi said in the name of Bar Kappara: When a man knows how to calculate the cycles and planetary courses but does not calculate them, Scripture says of those like him, "They regard not the work of the Lord, nor take note of His designs" (Isa. 5:12).

R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: What is the proof that to calculate the cycles and the courses of the planets is a religious duty? The verse "This is your wisdom and understanding in the sight of the peoples" (Deut. 4:6). What wisdom and understanding are plainly in the sight of the peoples? It is the calculating of cycles and the courses of the planets.[12]

35. Our masters taught: He who sees sages of Israel should say: Blessed be He who has imparted His wisdom to those who fear Him. He who sees sages of the peoples of the world should say: Blessed be He who has imparted of His wisdom to His creatures.[13]

36. Should someone tell you, "There is wisdom among the nations," believe him. Should he say to you, "There is Torah among the nations," do not believe him."[14]

37. "And he sent and called for all the magicians of Egypt and all the sages thereof" (Gen. 41:8). The verse informs you that every nation that exists in the world appoints five[15] wise counselors to serve it. More: the Holy One endows each nation with wisdom, understanding, and strength. And when the Holy One punishes the world, He takes each of these capacities away from each nation, as is said, "In that day I will destroy the sages of Edom and understanding out of Mount Esau; thy mighty men, O Teman, shall be dismayed" (Obad. 1:8–9).[16]

38. A sage has precedence over a king of Israel. For when a sage dies, we have none like him; but when a king of Israel dies—all Jews are worthy of kingship.[17]

---

1. MTeh 119:24.
2. Avot 3:13.
3. Avot 3:9.
4. Midrash Prov., ed. Buber, p. 42.
5. ARN 25.
6. Tos Ber 3:4.
7. Avot 2:7.
8. B. BB 175b.
9. Avot 2:5.
10. Reading not oshek ("oppression") but osek ("business").
11. Exod R. 6:2.
12. The reckoning of cycles and planetary courses, which show order and regularity in the universe, would, it was hoped, undermine belief in astrology (Samuel Edels).

    Or, the scientific expertise shown in connection with the Jewish calendar would impress the people of the world with the logic of Jewish thought and belief (Josiah Pinto, as quoted by Adin Steinstaltz in his edition of Shab [Jerusalem, 1968], 1:314). B. Shab 75a; Yalkut, Isa., §402.
13. B. Ber 58a.
14. Lam. R. 2:13.
15. The number five may be derived in the following manner: the plural "sages" is taken to denote two; the repetition of the word "all," two more; and the repetition of the particle et before "magicians" and "sages," one more.
16. Gen. R. 89:6.
17. B. Hor 13a.

39. "I, wisdom, have made subtlety my dwelling" (Prov. 8:12). When wisdom enters a man, subtlety enters with it.[1]

40. The rivalry of scribes increases wisdom.[2]

41. No man loves a rival in his craft, but a sage loves a rival.[3]

42. "Even during a walk, the fool shows lack of sense, for he calls everyone else a fool (Eccles. 10:3)[4]—the fool thinks that all men are fools.[5]

43. For a wise man, a gentle hint; for a fool, a fist.[6]

44. One must not take leave of a friend in the midst of chitchat, in the midst of joking, in the midst of trivial talk, or in midst of irreverent discussion, but only while in the midst of words of Halakhah.[7]

45. When a sage dies, all are his kin [and should mourn for him].[8]

46. "Wisdom is good with an inheritance" (Eccles. 7:11). Wisdom is good when it is joined with an inheritance.

Another version: Wisdom is good when the merit of ancestors accompanies it. Happy is the man whose fathers' merit continually lights the way for him.[9]

47. R. Ammi said: At a study session, give precedence to wisdom; at a feast, give precedence to age.[10]

48. R. Avdimi of Haifa said: Though prophecy has been taken from the prophets since the day the Temple was destroyed, it has not been taken from the sages.

Amemar said: A sage is superior to a prophet, for Scripture says, "And a prophet[11] hath a heart of wisdom" (Ps. 90:12). Who is generally compared with whom? Is it not the smaller with the greater?[12]

49. "And Bezalel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, made all that the Lord commanded Moses" (Exod. 38:22). Here Scripture says not, "What the Lord commanded Moses," but, "All that the Lord commanded Moses," implying that even in matters he had not heard from his master, his mind coincided with what had been told to Moses on Sinai.[13]

50. R. Huna said in the name of Rav: "The law of truth was in his mouth" (Mal. 2:6) refers to matters he heard from his master. "And nothing untoward was found on his lips" (ibid.) refers to matters [he did not utter] because he had not heard them from his master.

The sages said: "The Lord will be with thy folly"[14] (Prov. 3:26). Even in matters wherein you are foolish, God "will keep thy foot from being caught" (ibid.).[15]

51. "According to the law which they shall teach thee" (Deut. 17:11). A prophet and a sage—by what parable may their functions be illustrated? By the parable of a king who sent two of his emissaries to a province. About one, he wrote [to its inhabitants]: "If he does not show you my ring and seal, do not believe him." About the second, he wrote: "Even if he does not show you my ring, believe him without ring and without seal." So, too, of the prophet, Scripture says, "And he give thee a sign or a wonder" (Deut. 13:2). But concerning the sage, Scripture says, "According to the law which they shall teach thee."[16]

Prophecy and the Holy Spirit

52. R. Phinehas ben Yair used to say: Torah leads to strictness, strictness to zeal [in avoiding sin], zeal [in avoiding sin] to cleanliness, cleanliness to purity, purity to abstinence, abstinence to holiness, holiness to humility, humility to fear of sin, fear of sin to saintliness, saintliness to [possession of] the holy spirit, and the holy spirit to ability to revive the dead.[17]

53. The Presence rests only on one who is wise, strong, wealthy, tall in stature, yet unassuming.[18]

54. R. Yohanan said: All the prophets were wealthy. And the proof? From Moses and Samuel, from Amos and Jonah [as will be shown in what follows].

Moses, because he is quoted as saying, "I have not taken one ass from them" (Num. 16:15)—even as a fee.[19] But perhaps it was because of his poverty?[20] On the contrary, that Moses was wealthy is inferred from the verse "Hew for thyself" (Exod. 34:1)—the chips of the broken Tablets are to be yours [and will make you rich].

Samuel, because he is quoted as saying, "Here I am; witness against me before the Lord, and before His anointed; whose ox have I taken, or whose ass have I

---

1. B. Sot 21b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. B. BB 21a.
3. Gen. R. 32:2.
4. JV: "Yea, also, when a fool walketh by the way, his understanding faileth him, and he saith to everyone that he is a fool."
5. Eccles R. 10:3, §1.
6. Midrash Prov. 22 (ed. Buber, p. 91).
7. B. Ber 31a.
8. B. Shab 105b.
9. Eccles R. 7:11, §1.
10. B. BB 120a.
11. The word navi ("that we may get us") is taken in the sense of "prophet."
12. B. BB 12a. "When A is compared with B, A is usually smaller than B. Since, in the verse just cited, prophet is first (A) and wisdom is second (B), the former must be smaller than the latter" (Leon Nemoy).
13. P. Pe 1:1, 15b.
14. The word kislekha ("thy confidence") is here taken to mean "thy folly."
15. P. Pe 1:1, 15b; Yalkut, Mal, §588.
16. P. Ber 1:7, 3b; Song R. 1:2, §2.
17. JV: "I will put My spirit in you, and ye shall live" (Ezek. 37:14). Sot 9:9; B. AZ 20b. See Adolf Büchler, Types of Jewish Palestinian Piety (London, 1922), pp. 42–67.
18. B. Shab 92a; B. Ned 38a.
19. He had so many asses that he had no need to hire one.
20. He had so few possessions that he had no need for an ass.

taken?" (1 Sam. 12:2)—even as a fee. But perhaps it was because of his poverty? On the contrary, that Samuel was wealthy is inferred from the verse "And his return was to Ramah [even though, wherever he went there was his home"] (1 Sam. 7:17), which Rava interpreted as meaning that he had his household with him wherever he went.

Amos, because he is quoted as saying, "I am no prophet, neither am I a prophet's son, but I am the owner of herds, and a tender of sycamore figs" (Amos 7:14).

Jonah, because it is written, "[He found a ship going to Tarshish], and he paid the hire thereof" (Jon. 1:3)—the hire of the whole ship, said R. Yohanan, which, according to R. Romanus, came to four thousand gold denars.[1]

55. Wherever "To David, a Psalm"[2] occurs, it denotes that the Presence first rested on him, and then he uttered that psalm. Wherever "A Psalm of David"[3] occurs, it denotes that he first uttered that psalm, and then the Presence rested on him. This is to teach you that the Presence does not come to rest on a man in the midst of idleness or despair or laughter or frivolity or chitchat or idle talk, but only in the midst of joyous obedience to [divine] commands. [Thus, after Elisha became angry at the king of Israel (2 Kings 3:13–14), his power of prophecy left him. But when he overcame anger, he found joy] "in the playing of the instrument. It was only then that the hand of the Lord [the power of prophecy] came back to him" (2 Kings 3:15).[4]

56. Elijah [the Prophet] said: I call heaven and earth to witness that whether it be a Jew or a heathen, whether it be a man or a woman, a manservant or a maidservant, the holy spirit will suffuse each of them in keeping with the deeds he [or she] performs.[5]

57. R. Hanina bar Isi said: At times the world and its fullness cannot contain the glory of His Godhead, and at other times He speaks to a man out of [a space as tiny as] that between the hairs of his head.[6]

58. R. Yudan said: Very wise in the power of language are the prophets, who [in order to make the children of Israel aware of God's Presence] speak of the form of the Almighty as though it were like the form of a man.[7]

59. R. Isaac ben Eleazar said: The prophets, knowing that their God was truthful, did not wish to flatter Him.[8]

60. R. Yose ben Zimra said: Just as a woman is not ashamed to demand the requirements of her household from her husband, so prophets are not ashamed to demand bluntly the requirements of Israel from the Holy One.[9]

1. B. Ned 38a.
2. E.g., Ps. 24:1, in the Hebrew.
3. E.g., Ps. 23:1.
4. See Kimhi, ad loc. B. Pes 117a; B. Shab 30b.
5. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 48.
6. Gen. R. 4:4.
7. Gen. R. 27:1.
8. P. Ber 7:4, 11c.
9. PRKM 12:1.

61. There were three types of prophets. One insisted on the honor due the Father as well as the honor due the son;[10] one insisted upon the honor due the Father without insisting upon the honor due the son; and one insisted upon the honor due the son without insisting upon the honor due the Father. Jeremiah insisted upon both the honor due the Father and the honor due the son, for he said, "We have transgressed and rebelled; and Thou hast not pardoned [as Thou shouldst have done]" (Lam. 3:42). Therefore his prophecy was doubled, as is said, "And there were added besides unto them many like words" (Jer. 36:32). Elijah insisted upon the honor due the Father but did not insist upon the honor due the son, as is said, "I have been very jealous for the Lord, the God of hosts" (1 Kings 19:10). Consequently, what was he told? "Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus . . . and Elisha the son of Shaphat . . . shalt thou anoint to succeed thee as prophet" (1 Kings 19:15–16)—because I am displeased with your prophecy. Jonah insisted upon the honor due the son but did not insist upon the honor due the Father, as is said, "But Jonah rose up to flee into Tarshish from the presence of the Lord" (Jon. 1:3). What is written about him? "The word of the Lord came to Jonah a second time" (Jon. 3:1)—He spoke to him a second time, but not a third.[11]

R. Jonathan said: Jonah embarked upon his voyage only in order to drown himself in the sea, for Scripture says, "And he said unto them: 'Take me up and cast me forth into the sea' " (Jon. 1:12).

And so you find that the patriarchs as well as the prophets offered their lives in behalf of Israel. As to Moses, what is he quoted as saying? "And yet, if Thou wouldst only forgive their sin! If not, blot me, I pray Thee, out of the book which Thou hast written" (Exod. 32:32) And David,[12] what did he say? "Lo, I have sinned, and I have done iniquitously; but these sheep, what have they done? Let Thy hand, I pray Thee, be against me, and against my father's house" (2 Sam. 24:17). Thus you see that everywhere patriarchs as well as prophets offered their lives for Israel.[13]

62. "And he said, I have been very jealous for the Lord, the God of hosts; for the children of Israel have forsaken Thy covenant" (1 Kings 19:14). The Holy one replied to Elijah: "This is My covenant. Is it yours?" Elijah: "Thrown down Thine altars." The Holy One: "These are My altars. Are they yours?" (ibid.). Elijah: "And slain Thy prophets with the sword" (ibid.). The Holy One: "They are My prophets. What concern is it of yours?" Elijah: "And I, even I only am left, and they seek my life, to take it away" (ibid.). See what is written in that context: "And he looked, and behold, there was at his head a cake baked on the hot stones (retzaphim)" (1 Kings, 19:6). What is meant by retzaphim? R. Samuel bar Nahman said: Retz peh,

10. God is the Father and Israel the son.
11. Since Scripture does not say "again," the phrase "a second time" is taken to exclude a third time.
12. In MTeh 18:8, David is likened to Abraham, a patriarch.
13. Mek, Bo, Pis'ha, 1.

"silence[1] the mouth"—silence the mouth of him who spoke calumny of My children.

"Look not upon me that I am swarthy" (Song 1:6). R. Simon began his discourse with the verse "Slander not a servant unto his Master" (Prov. 30:10). Israel are called servants, as Scripture says, "For unto Me the children of Israel are servants" (Lev. 25:55). The prophets are also called servants, as Scripture says, "But He revealeth His counsel unto His servants the prophets" (Amos 3:7). Hence Israel responded to the prophets: Do not look [contemptuously] upon me because of my swarthiness. There was no one who cherished us more than Moses, yet because he said, "Hear now, ye rebels" (Num. 20:10), it was decreed against him that he should not enter the Promised Land.

Another version of Israel's response to the prophets: No one rejoiced in us more than Isaiah, yet because he said, "And I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips" (Isa. 6:5), the Holy One said to him, "Isaiah, of your own self you may say, 'Because I am a man of unclean lips' [ibid.]. That I will abide. But will you dare say, 'I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips'?" Come see what is written in that passage: "Then flew unto me one of the seraphim, with a glowing stone (ritzpah) in his hand" (Isa. 6:6). R. Samuel said: The word ritzpah means rotz peh, silence the mouth" of him who spoke calumny of My children.[2]

63. "A voice! my Beloved knocketh" (Song 5:2)—by means of the prophets.[3]

64. "I will bring them into the land of their enemies" (Lev. 26:41). This is a good dispensation for Israel, so that they would not say, "Inasmuch as we are exiled among the peoples of the world, we may as well act like them." I will see to it that they do not act that way; I will raise prophets over them who will lead them back to the right place under My wings. And the proof? The verse "And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all; in that ye say: We will be as the nations, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone" (Ezek. 20:32). But "as I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with an outstretched arm, and with fury poured out, will I be King over you" (Ezek. 20:33). Against your will, like it or not, I will impose My kingship over you.[4]

65. "And the Lord spoke unto Moses . . . that he say" (Exod. 12:1). R. Akiva taught: "That he say" means: "[Moses], go say to them that it was only because of their merit that He spoke with me." For during all the thirty-eight years in which He was angry with Israel, He did not speak with Moses, as is said, "So it came to pass, when all the men of war were consumed and dead from among the people, that the Lord spoke unto me, to say" (Deut. 2:16–17). R. Simeon ben Azzai stated: I am not arguing against the words of my teacher, but would merely add to what he taught: It was not with Moses alone that God spoke solely because of Israel's merit, but also with the other prophets—all of them—He spoke solely because of Israel's merit, as is said, "And I remained there appalled[5] among them seven days" (Ezek. 3:15). And after that it is written, "And it came to pass at the end of seven days, that the word of the Lord came unto me, to say" (Ezek. 3:16).[6] And similarly, "And it came to pass after ten days, that the word of the Lord came again unto Jeremiah" (Jer. 42:7).[7] In the account of Baruch the son of Neriah, you will also find that he was complaining to Him who is everywhere, so that God had to tell Baruch, "Thou didst say: Woe is me now! for the Lord hath added sorrow to my pain" (Jer. 45:3). [You said], "Why was I treated differently from other disciples of the prophets? Joshua ministered to Moses, and the holy spirit rested upon him. Elisha ministered to Elijah, and the holy spirit rested upon him. Why then was I treated differently from other disciples of the prophets? 'I am weary with my groaning and I find no rest' " (ibid.). The word "rest" here must mean "prophecy," as in the verse "And the spirit rested upon them . . . and they prophesied in the camp" (Num. 11:26) and in the verse "And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him" (Isa. 11:2). Note how He who is everywhere told Jeremiah to answer Baruch: "Thus shalt thou say unto him: 'Thus saith the Lord: Behold, that which I have built I am about to break down. . . . And seekest thou great things for thyself?' " (Jer. 45:4–5). "Great things" here must mean "prophecy," as in the verse "Tell me, I pray thee, all the great things that Elisha hath done" (2 Kings 8:4) and in the verse "Call unto Me, and I will answer thee, and will tell thee great things, and hidden, which thou knowest not" (Jer. 33:3). God went on, "Baruch son of Neriah! If there is no vineyard, what need for a fence? If there is no flock, what need for a shepherd?"[8] Why should there be? "Hence, when I bring evil upon all flesh, saith the Lord, in all places whither thou goest, thy life will be granted thee [but not prophecy]" (Jer. 45:5).

Thus, in each of the foregoing instances you see that the prophets prophesy only because of Israel's merit.[9]

66. Ulla said: Wherever a man's name is given along with that of his father as the author of a prophecy, we know that he was a prophet as well as the son of a prophet. Where his own name is given alone, without that of his father, we know that he was a prophet but not the son of a prophet. Where his name and the name of his hometown are stated, we know that he came from that town. Where

---

1. Literally, "break" or "smash." See Rashi on Isa. 6:6.
2. Song R. 1:6, §1.
3. Yalkut, Song, §988.
4. Sif Lev., ed. Weiss, p. 112b.
5. "Desolate" or "appalled" is taken to mean being without divine communication (see Zeh Yenahemenu and Malbim).
6. "The passage is interpreted to mean that Ezekiel had been without communication from God. But after he dwelled among the people for seven days, the word of God came to him for the sake of the people" (Mek, Bo Pis'ha 1 [La's note, ad loc.]).
7. The passage is understood to mean that the word of God came to Jeremiah only because the people, led by Yohanan and Jezaniah, asked for a divine message (Jer. 42:1–3) (Mek, Bo Pis'ha 1 [La's note, ad loc.]).
8. Synonym for prophet.
9. Mek, Bo, Pis'ha 1 (La 1:13–15).

his name is given but not the name of his town, we know that he was from Jerusalem.[1]

67. If a prophet's father's name is stated, we know that the father also was a prophet. But if a prophet's father's name is not stated, he was definitely not a prophet, except for Amos, whose father was a prophet, even though his name is not stated. For Scripture says, "Amos answered Amaziah: 'I am not a prophet, and I am not a prophet's son' " (Amos 7:14). Even as Amos was a prophet, though he said, "I am not a prophet," so Amos's father was a prophet, though he said, "I am not a prophet's son."

If a prophet's home city is stated, we know he came from that city. If a prophet's city is not stated, we know he came from Jerusalem, for the majority of both prophets and sages came from Jerusalem, which Scripture describes as [a city] "full of justice, righteousness lodgeth in her" (Isa. 1:21), implying that they who lodge in her are "sovereigns [prophets, sages] of righteousness.[2]

68. Prophets were called by ten names: envoy, man of faith, servant, messenger, visionary, sentinel, seer, angel, prophet, man of God.[3]

The holy spirit is known by ten names: parable, metaphor, riddle, speech, saying, call, command, pronouncement, prophecy, vision.[4]

69. Prophecy is known by ten names, six gentle and four stern: prophecy, seeing, watching, parable, metaphor, and holy spirit[5] are gentle; vision, pronouncement, preaching,[6] and riddle are stern.

God spoke with the patriarchs through seeing, prophecy, and vision. With Moses our teacher, through prophecy, seeing, and the holy spirit. With the other prophets, He communicated through most or some of these means.

Note: Instruction, speech, command, and saying are no more than explanatory terms for prophecy. In only one instance—"A deep sleep fell upon Abram" (Gen. 15:12)—does deep sleep mean prophecy.

Prophetic speech is to be understood as relevant to the immediate need as well as beyond the immediate need, as in the verse "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect' (Gen. 17:1) and in "Let it not be grievous in thy sight because of the lad . . . [for in Isaac shall seed be called unto thee]" (Gen. 21:12). On the other hand, speech that is not prophetic is to be understood as bearing only on the immediate need, as in the verse "Behold, thou shalt die, because of the woman" (Gen. 20:3) and in "Take heed to thyself that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad" (Gen. 31:29).

A dream that is not prophetic—he who had it has to ask for its interpretation, as with Pharaoh's dream, Nebuchadnezzar's dream, and the Midianite's dream.[7] But a dream that is prophetic, even if its matter is enigmatic—he who had it need not ask for its interpretation, as with Daniel and his companions.[8]

As for the patriarchs, when the Holy One appeared to them to speak with them, He did not reveal Himself through the celestial creatures, through the chariot, or through other aspects of [God's] glory. For the Presence rested directly upon the patriarchs.

R. Simeon said: The patriarchs themselves are the chariot, for it is said of Jacob, "And God [Himself] went up from him" (Gen. 35:13). But as for the other prophets, God revealed Himself to each of them through aspects of His glory, in keeping with each one's capacity.

When the Holy One spoke to the patriarchs, He revealed Himself to them neither through lightning nor through thunder, neither through terrifying sounds nor through quakes, because they knew full well His strength, His might, His greatness, and His majesty. As for the other prophets—He had to reveal Himself to them in terrifying sounds, in thunderclaps, and in flashes of fire, in keeping with the needs of the people of their generation. Why? Because without such terrifying sounds and lightnings, the people of their generation would not have become aware of the overwhelming might of the Holy One, and even then the other prophets hoped against hope that the people of their generation would submit.

When the Holy One revealed Himself to the patriarchs to give them commands, He did not make stipulations with them, such as "if you walk in My statutes" or "if you spurn My statutes." Why not? Because they knew the reward of the righteous and the punishment of the wicked, and therefore there was no need to make stipulations with them. But with the other prophets, He had no choice but to make the reward of the righteous and the punishment of the wicked explicit for them time after time, in the hope that the people of their generation would submit.

When the Holy One spoke to the patriarchs, His voice did not shake the world, but [He spoke] in a whisper, because there was no need to make the people of their generations hear. As for the other prophets, when the Holy One spoke to them, He shook the world, as is said, "The voice of the Lord breaketh cedars" (Ps. 29:5). When was it so? Until the Tabernacle was set up. But after the Tabernacle was set up, there was a place set aside for God's speech, and He no longer shook the world.

When the Holy One told the patriarchs to move from land to land, He gave no assurances about what He would do for them. Why not? Because they were men of faith. As for the other prophets, how many assurances he had to give in the hope that the people of their generation would believe them! How much did He promise our forebears in Egypt—"unto a land flowing with milk and honey" (Exod. 33:3)! And likewise in the wilderness. Neverthe-

---

1. B. Meg 15a.
2. Mishnat R. Eliezer 6 (ed. Hyman Enelow [New York, 1933], pp. 118–19).
3. The sources in Scripture: Obad. 1:1, Num. 12:7, Isa. 49:5, Isa. 6:8, Amos 7:12, Ezek. 3:17, 1 Sam. 9:9, Hag. 1:13, Jer. 1:5, Ps. 90:1.
4. The sources: Mic. 2:4; Hab. 2:6; Ezek. 17:2; Jer. 5:13, Gen. R. 5:1; Sif Lev., ed. Weiss, p. 3a; Gen. R. 20:2; Isa. 17:1; 2 Chron. 15:8; Joel 3:1. See ARN 34; Gen. R. 44:6.
5. Ps. 51:13.
6. Amos 7:16.
7. Gen. 41, Dan. 2, and Judg. 7:13.
8. Dan. 7.

less, they remained in doubt. How much did He promise us also! "Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear" (Isa. 54:1); "Arise, shine, for thy light is come" (Isa. 60:1); "Comfort ye, comfort ye My people" (Isa. 40:1); "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion" (Zech. 9:9); "Behold, the day of the Lord cometh" (Zech. 14:1); and "Behold, I send My messenger" (Mal. 3:1). Nevertheless, we are dissolved in doubt.

There was no need to make the Name explicit for the patriarchs. As for the other prophets, God's Name had to be made explicit for them, for the people of their generation required it. Proof for this assertion is that Moses our teacher said, "When they shall say to me: What is His Name? What shall I say unto them? And God said unto Moses: 'I am that I am' " (Exod. 3:13–14). [As for His not having previously made the Name explicit], the Holy One said to Moses, "I appeared unto Abraham . . . but by My Name YHVH I did not need to make Myself known to them" (Exod. 6:3) as I had to make Myself known to you.

For five hundred and two years the Holy One communicated with the patriarchs, and in all those years He voiced to the three of them no more than fifteen utterances, since for them there was no need to keep setting down matters at all times. But as for the other prophets, how very many utterances at all times—because of the people of their generation! And Moses our teacher had the greatest number of such communications. You can see for yourself that it was so. In a single day the Holy One spoke to him fifteen times. What day was it? The day the Tabernacle was set up.[1]

70. "He maketh [specific] weight for the spirit" (Job 28:25). R. Aha said: Even the holy spirit, which rests on the prophets, does so by specific weight—one prophet uttering one book of prophecy; and another, two.

R. Simon said: Beeri uttered two verses as a prophet, and because there was not enough to make a book, they were included in the book of Isaiah. The two verses are "And when they shall say unto you: 'Seek unto the ghosts and the familiar spirits' " (Isa. 8:19) and its companion verse.

"He maketh [specific] weight for the spirit." Each and every prophet had the holy spirit set within him, each according to his capacity.[2]

71. R. Isaac said: Several prophets treated the same theme, yet no two prophets prophesied on that theme [in identical language].[3]

72. "When I spoke unto the prophets, I multiplied visions" (Hos. 12:11). The Holy One said: It is true that "I spoke unto the prophets," but "I multiplied visions," for among all of them, the experience in prophecy of one is not like the experience in prophecy of another. Amos saw Me standing.[4] Micaiah saw Me seated.[5] Moses saw Me as a mighty man.[6] Daniel saw Me as an ancient of days. Therefore it is written, "By the ministry of the prophets have I used similitudes" (ibid.).[7]

73. Some, such as Ezekiel, prophesied through seeing; "I saw visions of God" (Ezek. 1:1); Habakkuk, through hearing: "I have heard that which Thou hast made heard" (Hab. 3:2); Jeremiah, through the mouth: "The Lord touched my mouth. . . . 'Behold, I have put My words in thy mouth' " (Jer. 1:9). Some, through the nose; "And spirit entered into me" (Ezek. 2:2). Some, through the hand: "By the hand of the prophets have I used similitudes" (Hos. 12:11). Some prophesied in enigmas, and some in enigmas within enigmas.[8]

74. "Behold, this I have found, saith (amerah) Koheleth" (Eccles. 7:27); the verb amerah is feminine. Elsewhere it is written, "Saith (amar) Koheleth" (Eccles. 1:2); the verb amar is masculine. R. Jeremiah explained: The two forms of the verb allude to the holy spirit, which sometimes speaks using a masculine form and at other times a feminine form. Thus one verse reads, "Thou art my help [ezri, masculine] and my deliverer" (Ps. 70:6), while another verse reads, "Thou art my help [ezrati, feminine] and my deliverer" (Ps. 40:18). One verse reads, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of the messenger of good tidings [mevasser, masculine]" (Isa. 52:7), while another verse reads, "O thou that tellest good tidings [mevasseret, feminine] to Zion, get thee up into the high mountain" (Isa. 40:9).[9]

75. R. Eleazar taught in the name of R. Yose ben Zimra: As they uttered their prophecies, none of the prophets knew what they were prophesying, except Moses and Joshua, who did know. R. Joshua bar Nehemiah maintained that Elijah also prophesied and knew what he was prophesying.

R. Eleazar further taught in the name of R. Yose ben Zimra: Samuel, the master of prophets, did not know what he was prophesying while uttering his prophecy, as is said, "And the Lord sent Jerubbaal, and Bedan, and Jephthah, and Samuel" (1 Sam. 12:11). Samuel did not say, "The Lord sent . . . me," but, "The Lord sent . . . Samuel," for he did not know what he was prophesying.[10]

76. "And there hath not arisen a prophet in Israel since like unto Moses" (Deut. 34:10). What is the difference between Moses and all the other prophets? R. Judah son of R. Ilai and the sages differed in their explanations. R. Judah said: The prophets beheld prophetic visions through nine lenses. This is intimated in the verse "And the appearance of the vision which I saw was like the vision that I saw when I came to destroy the city; and the visions were like the vision that I saw by the river Chebar; and I

---

1. Mishnat R. Eliezer 6.
2. Lev. R. 15:2; Yalkut, Job, §916.
3. B. Sanh 89a.
4. Amos 9:1.
5. 2 Chron. 18:18.
6. Exod. 15:3.
7. Dan. 7:9 Aggadat Bereshit 14 (ed. Buber [Cracow, 1902], p. 30).
8. Yalkut Hadash (Warsaw, 1879), Noah.
9. Eccles. R. 7:27, §1; Yalkut, Eccles., §977.
10. MTeh 90:4; Yalkut, Ps., §841.

fell upon my face" (Ezek. 43:3)[1]—thus nine visions. Likewise, it is said of Daniel, "And he gave heed to the word, and had understanding of the vision. . . . I lifted up mine eyes and saw . . . his face as the appearance of lightning. . . . And I, Daniel, alone saw the vision; for the men that were with me saw not the vision. . . . So I was left alone, and saw this great vision" (Dan. 10:1 and 10:5–8)—thus again nine visions. But Moses our teacher saw through only one lens, as is said, "With him do I speak in one vision, not in riddles" (Num. 12:8).

However, the sages said: All other prophets saw [prophetic visions] through a blurred lens, as is said, "I have multiplied visions; and by the ministry of the prophets have I used similitudes" (Hos. 12:11). But Moses saw [prophetic visions] through a polished lens, as is said, "The similitude of the Lord doth he behold" (Num. 12:8). All the other prophets heard the voice only in keeping with their capacity, as is said, "The voice of the Lord, according to a man's capacity" (Ps. 29:4). But Moses our teacher heard it in full, as is said, "And he heard the voice" (Num. 7:89)—the voice as it is.[2]

77. R. Jonah said in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: Every prophet who arose repeated the prophecy of his predecessor. Why did he repeat the prophecy of his predecessor? To make the predecessor's prophecy quite clear.

But R. Joshua ben Levi said: Every prophet was fully engaged with his own prophecy, except for Moses, who uttered all the prophecies of the other prophets as well as his own, with the result that whoever prophesied later drew from the prophecy of Moses.[3]

78. Rav and Samuel both said: Fifty gates of understanding were created in the world, and all of them but one were opened for Moses at Sinai, as is said, "Thou hast made him [Moses] but little lower than God" (Ps. 8:6).[4]

79. R. Yose bar Hanina said: Our teacher Moses pronounced four adverse decrees against Israel, but four [subsequent] prophets came and nullified them. Moses said, "Israel dwelleth in safety, alone,[5] in Jacob's abode" (Deut. 33:28). But Amos came and nullified it when he prayed to God, "Refrain! How will Jacob survive [alone]? He is so small" (Amos 7:5). We are told in the next verse, "The Lord relented concerning this" (Amos 7:6). Moses said, "Among those nations you shall find no peace" (Deut. 28:65). But Jeremiah came and said, "The people that were left of the sword . . . Israel . . . I go to give him peace" (Jer. 31:1). Moses said, "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children" (Exod. 34:7). But Ezekiel came and nullified it: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18:20). Moses said, "Ye shall be lost [perish] among the nations" (Lev. 26:38). But Isaiah came and said, "It shall come to pass on that day, that a great horn shall be blown, and they shall come that were lost," etc. (Isa. 27:13).[6]

80. R. Simon said: The face of Phinehas, when the holy spirit rested on him, glowed like torches.[7]

81. "The spirit of the Lord began to ring within him" (Judg. 13:25). R. Nahman said: Samson—when the spirit of the Lord rested upon him, the hairs on his head stood up and clanged against one another as in a bell.[8]

82. "He wakeneth me morning by morning, He wakeneth mine ear to hear what a disciple should hear" (Isa. 50:4). Isaiah said: As I walked about in my house of study, "I heard the voice of the Lord, saying: 'Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?' etc. [Isa. 6:8]. When I sent Micaiah,[9] they smote him on the cheek.[10] When I sent Amos,[11] they mockingly called him 'tongue-heavy.' Now 'whom shall I send, and who will go for us?' "

[Isaiah replied], "Here am I; send me" (Isa. 6:8). The Holy One warned him: "Isaiah, My children are obstinate, troublesome. If you are willing to suffer insults and be smitten by them, you may go on My mission, but if not, you may not go." Isaiah replied, "Even if such be my portion, 'I am ready to give my body to the smiters, and my cheek to them that pluck off the hair' [Isa. 50:6]. But I am unworthy of going to Your children on a mission of Yours." The Holy One answered, "Isaiah, 'thou hast loved righteousness' [Ps. 45:8], you have loved to make out My children to be righteous; 'and hated wickedness' [ibid.], hated to make them out wicked. 'Therefore [I], God, thy God, have Myself anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows' " (ibid.). What is meant by "above thy fellows"? In using these words, the Holy One meant: As you live, each of the prophets [who prophesied before you] received his prophetic mission from another prophet. As Scripture relates, [the spirit of Moses rested on the seventy elders]: "The Lord . . . took of the spirit that was on him, and put it upon the seventy elders" (Num. 11:25); "The spirit of Elijah rested on Elisha" (2 Kings 2:15). But you alone will prophesy directly from the mouth of the Divine Power, so that you can say, "The spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me" (Isa. 61:1). More: By your life, all the other prophets who prophesied used single terms in their prophecies. But you will prophesy in double terms [revealing that you prophesy with a double portion of the Divine Power]: "Awake, awake" (Isa. 51:9); "Rouse thee, rouse thee" (Isa. 51:17); "Rejoicing, I will rejoice" (Isa. 61:10); "I, even I, am He that comforteth you" (Isa. 51:12); "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people" (Isa. 40:1).[12]

---

1. "Eight derivations [i.e., forms] of the verb ra'ah (to see) occur in this verse, one of these, 'visions,' being plural, so that it stands for at least two; hence altogether nine specularia" (Lev. R., Soncino, p. 17, n. 2).
2. Lev. R. 1:14; Mishnat R. Eliezer 6.
3. Exod. R. 42:8.
4. B. Ned 38a.
5. In isolation, not among the nations.
6. B. Mak 24a.
7. Lev. R. 1:1.
8. Lev. R. 8:2.
9. See 1 Kings 22:24.
10. Apparently the commentator construes Micaiah as Muccaiah [mukkeh] ("one who is smitten on the cheek").
11. "Amos" [amus] can mean "tongue-heavy."
12. Lev. R. 10:2.

83. Rava said: All that Ezekiel saw, Isaiah saw.[1] Whom does Ezekiel resemble? A villager who saw the king.[2] Whom does Isaiah resemble? A city dweller who saw the king.[3]

84. "Before I formed thee in the belly, I knew thee" (Jer. 1:5). That is, even before I formed you in the belly of your mother, I designated you to prophesy to My people. In answer, Jeremiah spoke right up to the Holy One: Master of the universe, I cannot prophesy to them. What prophet ever came before them whom they did not seek to slay? When You set up Moses and Aaron over them to act in their behalf, did they not wish to stone them? When You set up the curly-haired Elijah over them to act in their behalf, they mocked and ridiculed him, saying, "Look how he frizzes his locks, this fancy-haired fellow." And when You set up Elisha over them to act in their behalf, they said derisively to him, "Go away, baldhead! go away, baldhead!" (2 Kings 2:23). Besides, I cannot venture forth in Israel's behalf, because "I don't know how to speak, for I am still a child" (Jer. 1:6). The divine spirit replied, "Is it not because you are a child that I love you?" For Jeremiah had not as yet tasted the savor of sin.[4]

85. "Take this cup of wine—of wrath—from My hand" (Jer. 25:15). Take this cup of wrath and make the nations drink. Jeremiah took the cup and asked, "Whom shall I make drink first?" God replied, "Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah" (Jer. 25:18), for they are the chief of all [earthly] kingdoms." When Jeremiah heard this command, he opened his mouth and cursed the day he was born.

Jeremiah then said, "With whom may I be compared? With a priest who was chosen by lot to give [a woman suspected of adultery] 'the water of bitterness' to drink." They brought the woman to the priest. He bared her head, disarrayed her hair, held out the cup for her to drink—and as he looked closely at her, he saw that she was his mother! Then he began to cry out, saying, 'Woe is me! Mother, I sought ever to honor you, but now behold me abasing you!" Even so, Jeremiah said, "Woe unto me because of you, Mother Zion! I thought I was to prophesy good things and consolations for you, and lo, I prophesy for you inflictions of punishment!"[5]

86. "Who would not fear Thee, O King of the nations?" (Jer. 10:7). The Holy One asked Jeremiah: [You call Me King of the nations], but I am not King of Israel? Jeremiah replied: Because You said to me, "I have appointed thee a prophet to the nations" (Jer. 1:5), therefore I call You also King of the nations.[6]

87. "Who would not fear Thee, O King of the nations?" (Jer. 10:7). The other prophets asked Jeremiah: Why do you see fit to call Him King of the nations? All the other prophets call Him King of Israel, yet you call Him King of the nations. Jeremiah replied: I heard Him say to me, "I have appointed thee a prophet to the nations" (Jer. 1:5), and therefore I say, King of the nations.[7]

88. Jeremiah was one of three prophets who prophesied in that generation—Jeremiah, Zephaniah, and the prophetess Huldah. Jeremiah prophesied in the city squares, Zephaniah [in the Temple and] in synagogues, and Huldah among the women.[8]

89. But if Jeremiah was there, how could Huldah prophesy? In the school of Rav, sages said in Rav's name: Huldah was a kinswoman of Jeremiah, and so he did not object.[9]

90. Although all the prophets begin their books with recitals of Israel's guilt, they end them with words of comfort.[10]

91. "And this is the blessing" (Deut. 33:1). Because at the beginning Moses spoke harsh words to Israel, he then changed and spoke words of comfort to them. And the other prophets learned from him, for at the beginning they spoke harsh words to Israel, but then they changed and spoke words of comfort to them.[11]

92. "And there hath not arisen a prophet since in Israel" (Deut. 34:10). There had not arisen one like him in Israel; but among the nations of the world, one like him did arise. This was done in order that the nations of the world might have no excuse to say, "If we had had a prophet like Moses, we would have worshiped the Holy One." Who was the prophet like Moses they had? Balaam son of Beor. However, there was a difference between the prophecy of Moses and the prophecy of Balaam, in that Moses had three qualities Balaam did not have: when God spoke with Moses, Moses was able to stand on his feet, whereas when God spoke with Balaam, he fell prone on the ground; He spoke with Moses mouth to mouth, whereas He did not speak mouth to mouth with Balaam; He spoke with Moses in plain terms, whereas He spoke with Balaam only in parables. On the other hand, there were three qualities Balaam had that Moses did not have: Moses did not know who was speaking to him, whereas Balaam knew who was speaking to him; Moses did not know when the Holy One would speak to him, whereas Balaam knew when the Holy One would speak to him (Balaam's knowledge in these two respects may be explained by the parable of a king's cook, who knew what fare the king would have on his table and how much money would be spent by the king for this

1. Even though Isaiah, unlike Ezekiel, gave no elaborate description of what he had seen.
2. To convince his audience that he has actually beheld such marvels, he is constrained to give a detailed description of them. So Tosafot, ad loc.
3. To him, the king is a familiar sight. So Rashi. B. Hag 13b.
4. PR 26:1/2 (YJS 2:526–27).
5. Ibid.
6. MTeh 93:1.
7. Exod. R. 29:9.
8. PR 26:1/2 (YJS 2:528).
9. B. Meg 14b.
10. MTeh 4:12; P. Ber 5:1, 8d.
11. Sif Deut., §342.

purpose); Moses could not speak with God whenever he wished, whereas Balaam spoke with Him whenever he pleased, as Scripture says, "Fallen down—his eyes are opened" (Num. 24:4), which implies that whenever he prostrated himself on his face, at once his eyes were opened [to anything that he inquired about].[1]

93. "Balaam also the son of Beor, the soothsayer" (Josh. 13:22). A soothsayer? But he was a prophet! At first, said R. Yohanan, he was a prophet, but subsequently [he became] a mere soothsayer.[2]

94. The Holy One raised up Moses for Israel and raised up Balaam for the nations of the world. Observe the difference between the prophets of Israel and the prophets of the nations of the world! The prophets of Israel warn Israel against transgressions. Thus Ezekiel: "I have appointed thee a watchman unto the House of Israel . . . and thou shalt give them warning" (Ezek. 3:17). But the one prophet who rose up among the nations made a breach in the moral order through his desire to cause human beings to perish from the world.[3] More! All the prophets had a measure of compassion for Israel as well as for the nations of the world. Thus Isaiah said, "Wherefore my heart moaneth for Moab like a harp" (Isa. 16:11). Likewise, Ezekiel said, "Take up a lamentation for Tyre" (Ezek. 27:2). But this one, a cruel man, rose up to root out an entire people for no fault whatsoever.[4]

95. R. Isaac said: Until the Tabernacle was set up, prophecy was also found among the nations of the world; after the Tabernacle was set up, it departed from among them, as Israel said, "I held it [the holy spirit] and will not let it go" (Song 3:4). The sages retorted to R. Isaac: But Balaam did prophesy [after the Tabernacle was set up]! He replied: Yes, but he prophesied for the good of Israel, e.g., 'Who hath counted the dust of Jacob?" (Num. 23:10); "None hath beheld iniquity in Jacob" (Num. 23:21); "There is no augury in Jacob" (Num. 23:23); "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob" (Num. 24:5); "There shall step forth a star out of Jacob" (Num. 24:17); and "Out of Jacob shall one have dominion" (Num. 24:19).[5]

96. Seven prophets prophesied to the peoples of the world: Balaam and his father, and Job, Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, Zophar the Naamathite, and Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite.[6]

97. What is the difference between the prophets of Israel and the prophets of the nations of the world? R. Hama the son of R. Hanina said: To the prophets of the nations of the world, the Holy One appears with half-speech only; but to the prophets of Israel, with complete speech, clear speech, affectionate speech, in the language of purity, in the language of holiness, in the same language in which the ministering angels chant praise to Him.

R. Yose said: The Holy One appears to the prophets of the nations of the world only [at night] when human beings generally take leave from one another, as Eliphaz said: "A word was secretly brought to me . . . at the time of leave-taking,[7] from the visions of the night, when deep sleep falleth on men" (Job 4:12–13).

R. Hanina bar Papa said: The matter may be illustrated by the parable of a king placed with his friend in a chamber where a curtain was between them. Whenever the king wished to speak to his friend, he would raise the curtain by folding it upward until he saw his friend face to face and then speak to him. But for the nations of the world, God does not fold up the curtain—He speaks to them from behind the curtain.

R. Simon said: The matter may be illustrated by the parable of a king who has a wife and a concubine. To his wife he goes openly, but to his concubine he goes secretly. So, too, the Holy One reveals Himself to the nations of the world only at night, but to the prophets of Israel by day.[8]

98. The prophets of Israel do not know when the Holy One will speak to them, but the prophets of the nations of the world do know when the Holy One will speak to them. Thus it is said of Balaam, "The saying of him who [knows when he is about to] hear the words of God" (Num. 24:4). The prophets of Israel do not know how many utterances He will articulate for them. But the prophets of the nations of the world do know how many utterances He will articulate for them. Thus it is said of Balaam, "Who knoweth the knowledge of the Most High" (Num. 24:16).

Are the prophets of the nations of the world then greater than the prophets of Israel? Not at all. In fact, the prophets of Israel are greater than the prophets of the nations of the world. A parable will explain what the matter resembles. The king's cooks know in advance exactly what expenditures they have to make, what ingredients they have to prepare, because their charge has definite limits. But the king's governors do not know in advance what expenditures they have to make and what items they have to prepare, because their charge has no definite limit.

R. Issachar said: With the prophets of the nations of the world, God speaks only in half-speech. Thus Scripture says, "The Lord called [va-yikkar, without the letter alef at the end] unto Balaam" (Num. 23:4). But with the prophets of Israel, [He speaks] in full speech, as for example, "The Lord called [va-yikra, with the letter alef at the end] unto Moses" (Exod. 19:20), a mode of locution the ministering angels use to praise Him, as is said, "And one called (kara) unto another, and said" (Isa. 6:6).[9]

99. R. Levi said: The prophecy of the nations of the world is ambiguous, so that they do not know whether they

---

1. Num. R. 14:20; Yalkut, Berakhah, §966; Sif Deut., §357.
2. B. Sanh 106a.
3. Israel's giving themselves to fornication, set forth in Num. 25, is attributed to Balaam's devising.
4. Tanhuma B, Balak, §1; Num. R. 20:1.
5. Lev. R. 1:12.
6. B. BB 15b.
7. "Lit. 'at the divisions'—when people separate from each other. This derives se'ippim from se'if, a branch—when people branch away. EV: 'in thoughts' " (Gen. R., Soncino, p. 454, n. 3).
8. Gen. R. 52:5 and 74:7; Lev. R. 1:13; Yalkut, Job, §897.
9. Mishnat R. Eliezer 6.

are told to slay or told to be slain. A parable of one who, while on a journey, grew tired toward evening. So he said: O that I had just one ass! A Roman, whose she-ass had just then foaled, passed by and said to him: Take this [newborn] foal and carry it on your back. So he said: I see that my prayer has been answered, but I did not put it properly—whether to ride or be ridden upon.

Another parable, of a man who set sail on the Great [Mediterranean] Sea. When a violent storm blew up and was about to sink his vessel, he said: If this crushing wind will moderate, I will bring a calf. When the wind did moderate, he said: I promised nothing.[1]

Such is the prophetic utterance of the nations of the world: "That they should be ready against that day" (Esther 3:14), whether to slay or to be slain. As for Israel, their prophetic utterance is clear: "Should be ready against that day to avenge themselves on their enemies" (Esther 8:13).[2]

100. R. Yohanan said: "The poor useth entreaties" (Prov. 18:23)—the prophets of Israel [when pleading to God]. "But the rich speak out impudently" (ibid.)—the prophets of the nations of the world [when they address God].[3]

101. The Holy One said to the prophets: What do you suppose—if you refuse to go on a mission of Mine, I have no other emissary? "With the superfluities of the earth, with all" (Eccles. 5:8)—I can have My mission carried out with all, even by means of a serpent, even by means of a scorpion, even by means of a frog.[4]

102. Before the Land of Israel had been chosen, all lands were suitable for divine revelations; after the Land of Israel had been chosen, all other lands were eliminated. Before the Temple had been singled out, all of Jerusalem was suitable for the abiding of the Presence; after the Temple had been singled out, the rest of Jerusalem was eliminated.

You might say, "I can cite instances of prophets with whom God spoke outside the Land." True, He did speak to them outside the Land, but only because of the merit of the fathers did He speak with them. And even though, because of the merit of the fathers, He did speak with them outside the Land, He spoke with them only at a spot that was pure, being near water, as Daniel said, "I was by the stream Ulai" (Dan. 8:2); and again, "I was by the side of the great river, which is Tigris" (Dan. 10:4); and elsewhere, Scripture says, "The word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel the Priest the son of Buzi . . . by the river Chebar" (Ezek. 1:3).

R. Eleazar ben Zadok added: Note that Scripture says, "Arise, go forth into the plain" (Ezek. 3:22), asserting that a plain was suitable for divine revelation.[5]

You can see for yourself that the Presence does not reveal itself outside the Land. Scripture says, "But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the Presence of the Lord" (Jon. 1:3). Could he really have thought that it was possible to flee from the Lord? Had it not been already said, "Whither shall I go from Thy spirit? Or whither shall I flee from Thy Presence?" (Ps. 139:7)? But Jonah thought: In order not to incriminate the Jews, for Gentiles are more prone to repent, I will go outside the Land, where the Presence does not reveal itself. A parable will illustrate his folly. A priest's servant who fled from his master said: I will go to the cemetery, a place where my master cannot follow me.[6] His master told him, "I have other flunkeys just like you." So, too, when Jonah said, "I will go outside the Land to a place where the Presence does not reveal itself," the Holy One replied, "I have other emissaries like you, as is said, 'The Lord hurled a great wind into the sea' " (Jon. 1:4).[7]

103. When R. Huna died, R. Abba began the eulogy by saying: Our master was worthy of having the Presence rest on him, but his residing in Babylonia prevented it.[8]

104. Many prophets rose up for Israel, twice as many as the number of Israelites who went out of Egypt. But only prophecy required by subsequent generations was set down in writing, while prophecy not required by subsequent generations was not set down.[9]

105. R. Derosa said in the name of R. Samuel bar Isaac: Sixty myriads of prophets rose up for Israel in the days of Elijah. Why was their prophecy not made public? Because it was not required for subsequent generations. Hence you may conclude that any prophecy that had meaning for the time and was also required for subsequent generations was made public, while any prophecy that had meaning for the time but was not required for subsequent generations was not made public. In the time-to-come, however, the Holy One will bring these prophets back and make public their prophecies, as is said, "The Lord my God shall come, and all the holy ones with thee" (Zech. 14:5).

R. Berekhiah said in the name of R. Helbo: Even as sixty myriads of prophets rose up for Israel, so sixty myriads of prophetesses rose up for them, and Solomon came along and made the fact public when he said, "Thy lips also, O My bride, drop honey" (Song 4:11).[10]

106. Our masters taught: After the early prophets died, the Urim and Tummim[11] ceased.[12]

107. After the last prophets—Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi—died, the holy spirit departed from Israel, who

---

1. Since I did not specify whether I would bring a calf as an offering or to my table.
2. Midrash Panim Aherim A, pp. 50–51.
3. Deut. R. 2:4.
4. Exod. R. 10:1; Lev. R. 22:3.
5. Since a plain is uninhabited and therefore undefiled by human or animal uncleanness,
6. A priest is not allowed to enter a cemetery.
7. Mek, Bo, Pis'ha 1 (La 1:4–8); Yalkut, Ezek., §336.
8. B. MK 25a.
9. B. Meg 14a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. The verb tittofnah ("drop") is taken to mean "preach in prophecy" (cf. Mic. 2:6). Song R. 4:11, §1; Ruth R., proem 2.
11. See Exod. 28:30.
12. Ceased to have power to indicate God's will. Sot 9:12.

nevertheless were able to avail themselves of the divine voice.[1]

108. R. Avdimi of Haifa said: Ever since the Temple was destroyed, prophecy was taken from the prophets and given to the sages.

R. Yohanan said: Ever since the Temple was destroyed, prophecy was taken from the prophets and given to fools and children.[2]

109. The dream is an unripe form of prophecy.[3]

110. R. Yohanan said: When a man rises early and a verse comes to his mouth,[4] it is a kind of minor prophecy.[5]

111. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Whoever is boastful—if he is a sage, his wisdom departs from him; if he is a prophet, his prophecy departs from him.

Resh Lakish said: Whoever is prone to anger—if he is a sage, his wisdom departs from him; if he is a prophet, his prophecy departs from him.[6]

112. "These are the commandments" (Lev. 27:34) implies that henceforth no prophet may introduce innovations.[7]

113. Our masters taught: Forty-eight prophets and seven prophetesses prophesied to Israel, but they neither diminished from nor added to anything that is written in the Torah, other than the reading of the Megillah.[8]

How did they [who introduced the reading of the Megillah] infer it [from the Torah]? R. Hiyya bar Avin said in the name of R. Joshua ben Korhah: If we hymn praise for being delivered from slavery into freedom, should we not do so all the more for being delivered from death to life?[9]

114. The false prophet who prophesies what he has not heard or what he has not been told—his death shall be at the hands of man. But he who suppresses his prophecy[10] or disregards the words of another prophet[11] or the prophet who transgresses his own words[12]—his death shall be at the hands of Heaven.

He who prophesies in the name of an alien god and says, "Thus saith the alien god," is liable to death by strangling, even if he follows the Halakhah in declaring unclean what is unclean and clean what is clean.[13]

115. R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan: In every matter, if a prophet tells you, "Transgress the commands of Torah,"[14] listen to him, except in the matter of idolatry: then, even if the prophet should cause the sun to stand still in midheaven [as proof of divine inspiration], do not listen to him.

We have been taught that R. Yose the Galilean said: Because the Torah understood thoroughly the power of idolatry, it gave as an example:[15] If he [who would lure you to idolatry] should have the sun stand still in midheaven,[16] even then you must not listen to him.

R. Akiva said: Far be it from the Holy One to have the sun stand still at the behest of those who transgress His will! But [the Torah refers here to such] as Hananiah son of Azur, who at first was a true prophet and only subsequently became a false prophet.[17]

116. He who shouts loudly during the Tefillah is among the false prophets.[18]

Song

117. Rav said: The world was created only for the sake of David.[19] Samuel said: For the sake of Moses. And R. Yohanan said: For the sake of the Messiah.[20]

118. The Holy One said: I will open the tongue of all flesh and blood, that they may hymn praise before Me every day and proclaim Me King in the four corners of the world, because I would not have created my world but for the song and music that they intone for Me daily. And the proof that the Holy One created the world only for the sake of song and music? The verse "Glory and majesty are before Him; strength and beauty are in His Sanctuary" (Ps. 96:6). "Glory and majesty before Him" in heaven, and "strength and beauty in His Sanctuary" on earth. The precise meaning of these words is spelled out in "His glory covereth the heavens, even as the earth is full of his praise" (Hab. 3:3). And the proof that the Holy One created heaven to have it engage in song? The verse "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth His handiwork" (Ps. 19:1). And the proof that ever since the Holy One created the earth, it hymns song to Him? The verse "From the uttermost parts of the earth have we heard songs: 'Glory to the Righteous' " (Isa. 24:16), the Righteous here being the Holy One, of whom it is said, "The Lord is righteous in all His ways" (Ps. 145:17). And the proof

1. B. Sanh 11a.
2. B. BB 12a–b.
3. Gen. R. 17:5.
4. Either he utters it spontaneously or hears a child recite it.
5. B. Ber 55b.
6. B. Pes 66b.
7. B. Shab 104a.
8. The Scroll of Esther on Purim.
9. B. Meg 14a.
10. Jon. 1:3.
11. 1 Kings 20:35.
12. 1 Kings 13:26.
13. Sanh 11:6.
14. As did Elijah, who ordered that sacrifices be brought on Mount Carmel (see 1 Kings 18).
15. Reading mashelah ("example") instead of memshalah ("power"). So Goldschmidt.
16. "Since Scripture says, 'And giveth thee a sign and a wonder' [Deut. 13:2–3], it follows that the false prophet must have been endowed with such powers" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 599, n. 4).
17. "The 'sign' being given during his first phase, and he supported himself thereon in his second" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 599, n. 5). B. Sanh 90a.
18. Who, it is said, "shouted louder" (1 Kings 18:28). B. Ber 24b.
19. That he might sing the praises of God.
20. That he might bring redemption. B. Sanh 98b.

that seas and rivers also intone song? The verse "Above the voices of many waters" (Ps. 93:4). And the proof that mountains and hills also intone song? The verse "Mountains and all hills . . . let them praise the Name of the Lord, for His Name alone is exalted" (Ps. 148:9, 13). And the proof that all orders of creation intone song? The verse "From the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof, the Lord's Name is to be praised" (Ps. 113:3). And the proof that Adam also opened his mouth with song? The verse "A Psalm. A Song. For the Sabbath day. It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto Thy Name, O Most High" (Ps. 92:1–2. "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord" on the earth, in the midst of mankind, "and to sing praises to Thy Name, O Most High" in the heights of heaven, among the ministering angels.[1]

119. "Thine is the day, Thine also the night" (Ps. 74:16). The day praises You and the night praises You. It is right to sing praise to You during the day and right to sing praise to You during the night.[2]

120. At the beginning of the world's creation, the praise of the Holy One ascended only from the water, as is said, "From the voices of many waters" (Ps. 93:4). And what did they proclaim? "The Lord on high is mighty" (ibid.). The Holy One said: If these, which have neither mouth nor the capacity of utterance or speech, praise Me, how much more and more when Adam will be created![3]

121. "From the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof, the Lord's Name is praised" (Ps. 113:3). From the time the sun begins to rise until it sets, the praise of the Holy One does not cease from its mouth. Thus you find that when Joshua rose up in Gibeon and sought to silence the sun, he did not say, "Sun in Gibeon, stop," but "Sun in Gibeon, be still" (Josh. 10:12). For as long as the sun moves, it praises the Holy One, and as long as it praises Him thus, it has the strength to move. Once it grows silent, it stops. Therefore Joshua said to the sun, "Be still."

The sun replied, "Do you presume to tell me to be still?" Joshua: "Yes." The sun: "But if I grow still, who will hymn the praise of the Holy One?" Joshua: "Be still, and I will hymn song, as is said, 'Then spoke Joshua to the Lord' " (Josh. 10:12). Here the word "then," as in "Then sang Moses" (Exod. 15:1), suggests song.[4]

122. R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: How do we know that the indispensability of song is to be inferred from the Torah? From the verse "Then shall he minister with the Name of the Lord his God" (Deut. 18:7). Now, which ministry is performed with the Lord's Name? You must admit that it is in the ministry of song.

R. Mattenah said: It is inferred from the verse "Because thou didst not serve the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart" (Deut. 28:47). Now, which service is "with joyfulness and with gladness of heart"? You must admit that it is song.[5]

123. We have been taught: Until the Israelites entered the Land of Israel, all lands were deemed fit places to chant a hymn of praise [for miracles done in them]. After they had entered the Land, other lands were not deemed fit places to chant a hymn of praise [for miracles done in them]. After Israel went into exile, other lands were again deemed fit as at first.[6]

124. R. Simon said: Not everyone who wishes to hymn a song may hymn it. But he for whom a miracle has been performed and who does hymn a song—it is well known that all his iniquities are forgiven him and he becomes a new creature.[7]

125. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Yohanan: How do we know that a song of praise is sung only over wine? Because Scripture says, "And the vine said unto them: Should I leave my wine, which cheereth God and man?" (Judg. 9:13). If wine cheers man, how does it cheer God? [By the song that accompanies it.] From this we learn that a song of praise is sung only over wine.[8]

126. Ten songs are mentioned in Scripture. The first, which was sung in Egypt; "Ye shall have a song, as in the night [of the first Passover] when a feast was hallowed" (Isa. 30:29). The second, which was sung at the Red Sea: "Then sang Moses" (Exod. 15:1). The third, which was chanted at the well: "Then sang Israel" (Num. 21:17). The fourth, which Moses uttered: "So Moses wrote this song" (Deut. 31:22). The fifth, which Joshua recited: "Then spoke Joshua to the Lord" (Josh. 10:12). The sixth, which Deborah and Barak uttered: "Then sang Deborah and Barak the son of Abinoam" (Judg. 5:1). The seventh, which David recited: "And David spoke unto the Lord the words of this song" (2 Sam. 22:1). The eighth, which Solomon recited: "Then spoke Solomon" (2 Chron. 6:1). The ninth, which Jehoshaphat uttered: "And when he had taken counsel with the people, he appointed them that should sing unto the Lord, and praise to the beauty of holiness," etc. (2 Chron. 20:21). The tenth song will be recited in the time-to-come: "Sing unto the Lord a new song, and His praise from the end of the earth" (Isa. 42:10).[9]

127. "Thine ointments have a goodly fragrance" (Song 1:3). R. Yannai ben R. Simeon son of R. Yannai said: The former generations uttered only the fragrance of song before You, but when we came to the Red Sea we did not leave out one song of praise with which to praise Your Name. ["Thy Name is as ointment poured forth" (ibid.).][10]

---

1. Alphabet of R. Akiva (BhM 3: 12–13).
2. Gen. R. 6:2.
3. Gen. R. 5:1.
4. Tanhuma, Ahare Mot, §9; Yalkut, Josh., §22.
5. B. Ar 11a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. B. Meg 14a.
7. See Rashi on Judg. 6:1. Yalkut, Be-shallah, §254.
8. B. Ber 35a.
9. Mek, Be-shallah, Shirata, 1; Yalkut, Be-shallah, §242.
10. Tanhuma, Yitro, §3.

128. "Then sang Moses and the children of Israel" (Exod. 15:1). When uttering this song, Moses was equal to all of Israel, and Israel equal to Moses.[1]

Another interpretation: "Moses and the children of Israel." This declares that Moses led the song before Israel [which responded in antiphony].[2]

129. R. Akiva expounded: When Israel came up from the Red Sea, the holy spirit rested on them, and they sought to utter song. How did they utter their song? In the manner of an adult who leads in reciting the Hallel in the synagogue, while the congregation responds by repeating each verse of each psalm. Thus Moses said, "I will sing unto the Lord." (Exod. 15:1), and Israel responded, "I will sing unto the Lord." Moses said, "The Lord is my strength and song" (Exod. 15:2), and Israel responded, "I will sing unto the Lord."

R. Eliezer son of R. Yose the Galilean said: They uttered their song in the manner of a child who chants the Hallel in his school. Moses said, "I will sing unto the Lord," and they repeated, "I will sing unto the Lord." Moses said, "The Lord is my strength and song," and they repeated, "The Lord is my strength and song."

R. Nehemiah said: They uttered their song in the manner of people who recite the Shema in the synagogue. Moses opened with a verse of praise, and Israel completed it in response. Moses said, "Then sang Israel" (Exod. 5:1), and Israel responded, "I will sing unto the Lord, for He is highly exalted" (ibid.). Moses said, "The Lord is my strength and song" (Exod. 15:2), and Israel responded, "This is my God, and I will glorify Him" (ibid.).[3]

130. R. Avin the Levite said: When Israel stood up to utter the song of the Red Sea, Moses did not allow them to say it by themselves, but even as when a disciple is young, his teacher recites his lesson with him, so also Moses recited it with them: "Then sang Moses and the children of Israel," just like a disciple responding after his teacher. Forty years later, when Israel had mastered their lesson, they proceeded to sing the Song of the Well by themselves, as is said, "Then sang Israel" (Num. 21:17). For they said: Master of the universe, it is up to You to perform miracles in our behalf, and it is up to us to utter song, as is said, "It is for the Lord to deliver us, and for us to sing songs with stringed instruments" (Isa. 38:20).[4]

131. "And one approached not the other all night" (Exod. 14:20).[5] In that instant, when the ministering angels sought to utter song before the Holy One, He rebuked them, saying, "The works of My hands are drowning in the sea, and you would utter song in My presence!"[6]

132. "Barak said unto her: 'If thou wilt join me, then I will go' " (Judg. 4:8). According to R. Nehemiah, this means that Barak said to Deborah: If you are willing to join me [in a lesser role] in song [praising God], I will go with you [as a subordinate] into battle, but if you are unwilling to join me [in a lesser role] in song, I will not go with you into battle. "She replied, 'I will certainly go with thee, but desist [from setting conditions]. The glory [of the song] shall not be thine' " (Judg. 4:9),[7] by which, according to R. Reuben, she meant: "What do you suppose—that [the major role in] the song will be given to you for your glory alone?" [As it turned out], "Deborah sang, and [in a lesser role], Barak the son of Abinoam" (Judg. 5:1).[8]

133. King David dwelled in five worlds and composed a song for each one of them. When he abode in his mother's womb, he uttered the song "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all within which I am, bless His holy Name" (Ps. 103:1). When he came out into the air of the world and beheld the stars and planets, he uttered a song, "Bless the Lord, ye His angels. . . . Bless the Lord, all ye His hosts" (Ps. 103:20–21). When, as he sucked milk from his mother's breasts and beheld her nipples, he uttered a song, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all those weaned [from their mother's milk]"[9] (Ps. 103:2). When he saw the downfall of the wicked, he uttered a song, "The sinners are consumed out of the earth, and the wicked are no more. Bless the Lord, O my soul. Hallelujah" (Ps. 104:35). When he reflected on the day of death, he uttered a song, "Bless the Lord, O my soul; O Lord my God, Thou art very great; Thou art clothed with glory and majesty. . . . Thou hidest Thy face, they vanish; Thou withdrawest their breath, they perish" (Ps. 104:1 and 104:29).[10]

134. "At midnight I will rise to give praise unto Thee" (Ps. 119:62). R. Aha bar Bizna said in the name of R. Simeon Hasida: A harp used to hang above David's bed. When midnight arrived, a wind would come up from the north and blow across the strings of the harp, so that it played of itself. He would immediately arise and occupy himself with Torah.

R. Ashi said: Up to midnight he used to occupy himself with Torah. From then on, with songs and praises.[11]

135. It is reported of King David that when he finished the book of Psalms, he became boastful, saying to the

---

1. Otherwise, why should Moses have been singled out?
2. Hence the name of Moses was put first. Mek, Be-shallah, Shirata, 1.
3. Tos Sot 6:1; Yalkut, Be-shallah, §241.
4. Yalkut, Hukkat, §764.
5. These words are usually taken to mean that neither army could approach the other during that night. However, the Hebrew zeh el zeh ("one to the other") need not necessarily refer to armies. Moreover, the only other instance where this phrase occurs is Isa. 6:3, where we are told that "one seraphim called unto another and said: Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts." Hence, in the comment that follows, krb ("approach") is understood as "to sing, to hymn" and the phrase "one to the other" is taken to mean "one angel to another."
6. B. Sanh 39b.
7. JV: "notwithstanding, [it] shall not be for thine honor." But R. Reuben construes efes ("notwithstanding") as the Greek afes ("let go, desist").
8. Gen. R. 40:4.
9. JV: "His benefits." But another meaning of gml ("benefit") is "wean."
10. B. Ber 10a.
11. B. Ber 3b.

Holy One: Master of the universe, is there any [other] creature You created in Your world that utters more songs and paeans of praise than I? In that instant a frog happened to meet him and said: David, don't be so boastful. I utter more songs and paeans of praise than you.[1]

136. "Behold, thou art fair, My love, behold, thou art fair" (Song 4:1). R. Akiva said: The entire world, all of it, is not equal in worth to the day on which the Song of Songs was given to Israel. Why? Because all other books in the Writings are holy, whereas the Song of Songs is holy of holies.

In illustration, R. Eleazar ben Azariah told the parable of a man who took a seah of wheat and gave it to a baker, to whom he said: Try to get out of it so much [coarse] flour, so much bran, so much coarse bran, and so much fine flour. And sift out of the fine flour enough for me to bake a cake, elegant, dainty, and savory. So, too, from all of Solomon's wisdom there was sifted out for Israel only the Song of Songs, the most beautiful of songs, the most sublime of songs. See how the Holy One praises Israel in it: "Behold, thou art fair, My love, behold, thou art fair."[2]

137. He who sings selections from the Song of Songs with a tremulous voice in a tavern, turning it into a kind of drinking song, has no portion in the world-to-come.[3]

138. "And the kine took the straight way (va-yisharnah)" (1 Sam. 6:12). Their visages looked straight toward the Ark, and they sang a beautiful song.[4] What song did they sing? Elijah taught:

> Sing, sing, O Ark of acacia!
> Exalted in all your radiance,
> You who are overlaid with woven gold,
> Extolled in God's holiest place,
> Made resplendent with delicate traceries,
> Sheltered between the two cherubim.

R. Samuel bar Nahman said: How much toil did [Moses] the son of Amram expend until he succeeded in teaching song to the Levites, and you [kine carrying the Ark] on your own utter song! All strength (yeyasher) to you.[5]

139. "Of the increase (le-marbeh) of [Hezekiah's] government and of peace there shall be no end" (Isa. 9:6). R. Tanhum related that Bar Kappara expounded this verse in Sepphoris as follows: Why is every mem in the middle of a word open, while the one in this verse is closed?[6] Because the Holy One was about to designate Hezekiah as the Messiah and Sennacherib as Gog and Magog.[7] But the attribute of justice[8] spoke up to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, David, king of Israel, who uttered so many hymns and praises before You—You did not make him Messiah. Yet Hezekiah, for whom You performed all manner of miracles and who uttered no hymn in praise of You—him you are about to make the Messiah?" Following the argument by the attribute of justice, the letter mem was closed.[9] Immediately the earth exclaimed, "Master of the universe, as proxy for this righteous man, I will utter song before You. Designate him the Messiah." And so the earth broke into song before Him, as is written, "From the uttermost ends of the earth have we heard song: 'Glory to the Righteous' " (Isa. 24:16). Then the [angelic] prince of the world spoke up before the Holy One, "Master of the universe, as proxy for this righteous man, the earth has just now fulfilled Your desire [for a song of praise]."[10] But a divine voice cried out and said, "[The delay in the Messiah's coming] 'is My secret, My secret' " (Isa. 24:16). To which the prophet replied, " 'Woe is me' [ibid.], woe is me, how long [must we wait]?" In response, a divine voice cried out, "Until 'the faithless who acted faithlessly will themselves have been betrayed' " (ibid.).[11]

The sages taught in the name of R. Pappias: It is a reproach to Hezekiah and his retinue that they uttered no song [to God] until the earth broke into song.[12]

140. R. Berekhiah said in the name of R. Eleazar: By rights, Hezekiah should have sung a song of thanks over the fall of Sennacherib. "But Hezekiah rendered not according to the benefit done unto him" (2 Chron. 32:25). Why not? "For his heart was lifted up" (ibid.). But consider the matter. Hezekiah, though a king, was righteous. Yet you say, "For his heart was lifted up." What it means, however, is that he was too puffed up with pride to chant a song.

When Isaiah came to Hezekiah and his retinue, and said to them, "Sing unto the Lord" (Isa. 12:5), they asked, "Why should we?" Isaiah replied, "For He hath done gloriously" (ibid.). They said, "This is already made known in all the earth" (ibid.).

Finally, so said Abba bar Kahana, Hezekiah declared, "The Torah with which I am occupied atones for the absence of song."[13]

---

1. Yalkut, Ps., §889, citing Perek Shirah.
2. Tanhuma, Tetzavveh, §5; Song R. 1:11; Rashi on Song 1:1.
3. Tos Sanh 12:10.
4. The word va-yisharnah may mean "looked straight" as well as "sang a song."
5. B. AZ 24b; Gen. R. 54:4.
6. "There are two forms of mem: medial, which is open ( ), and final, which is closed ( ). In this sentence, however, the final form occurs in the middle of a word" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 630, n. 6).
7. It is believed that Gog and Magog will lead all the nations in a powerful attack on Israel. Their defeat will usher in the days of the Messiah.
8. "The attributes of justice and mercy are often hypostatized and represented as interceding with the Almighty" (Isidore Epstein in Sanh, Soncino, p. 630, n. 8).
9. Therefore the word le-marbeh appears in the text with the closed mem to indicate that the matter of Hezekiah's designation as Messiah (a word that begins with the letter mem) was closed.
10. So Samuel Edels. BR take it to mean: "Fulfill the desire of this righteous man," i.e., "Make him the Messiah." The two comments are based on different readings of the phrase tzevi la-tzaddik ("glory to the righteous").
11. So NJV. That is, until Israel's enemies and the enemies of their enemies have been destroyed.
12. B. Sanh 94a and En Yaakov, ad loc; Yalkut, Isa., §415.
13. Song R. 4:8, §3.

141. There were four kings—David, Asa, Jehoshaphat, and Hezekiah—and not one asked of God what each of the others was to ask. David requested, "Let me pursue mine enemies and overtake them, and not turn back till they are consumed" (Ps. 18:38; 2 Sam. 22:38). The Holy One replied, "I will [help you] do so." So "David smote them from dawn until evening and into the morrow of the next day" (1 Sam. 30:17)—on two nights the Holy One gave him light by shooting stars and lightning flashes. Hence David said, "Thou dost light my lamp; the Lord my God doth lighten my darkness' (Ps. 18:29; 2 Sam. 22:29).

Then Asa rose up and requested, "There is no strength in me to slay them. All that I can do is pursue them. You slay them." The Holy One replied, "I will do so." Hence it is said, "Asa and the people that were with him pursued them. . . . None remained alive: for they were shattered before the Lord" (2 Chron. 14:12)—not "before Asa," but "before the Lord."

Then Jehoshaphat rose up and requested, "I have not the strength either to slay or to pursue, but I will utter a song, and You do [the pursuing and the slaying]." The Holy One replied, "I will do so." Accordingly, "when they began to sing and to praise, the Lord set an ambush against the Ammonites . . . and they were smitten" (2 Chron. 20:22).

Finally, Hezekiah rose up and requested, "I have not the strength to slay, to pursue, or to utter song, but I will sleep in my bed, and You do what is required." The Holy One replied, "I will do so." Hence, "it came to pass that night, that the angel of the Lord went forth, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians" (2 Kings 19:35).[1]

142. R. Hananel said in the name of Rav: The ministering angels do not utter song above until Israel utter it below, for it is said, "When [they who are like] the morning stars sing together" (Job 38:7), and after that, "All divine beings shout for joy" (Job 38:7).[2]

143. "As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there: all my springs are in Thee" (Ps. 87:7). R. Yuda said in the name of R. Meir: Like the spring from which fresh water pours out at every moment, so will the children of Israel sing a new song at every moment.

But the sages expounded: Even as the men will sing songs, so also will the women, as is said, "All my springs are in Thee." Here the word "springs" implies women, as in the verse "A garden shut up is my sister, my bride, a fountain sealed, a spring shut up" (Song 4:12).[3]

144. R. Joshua ben Levi said: He who utters song [in praise of God] in this world will merit uttering it in the world-to-come, as is said, "Happy are they that dwell in Thy house now; they will be praising Thee forever. Selah" (Ps. 84:5).

R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: All the prophets are destined to utter song with one voice, as is said, "Hark, Thy watchmen raise their voices; as one they shout for joy" (Isa. 52:8)[4]

145. "I am the rose of Sharon" (Song 2:1). I am she, I am the beloved, I am the one who has been both covered and trampled down while in the shadow of the [heathen] kingdoms, but tomorrow, when the Holy One delivers me from the shadow of those kingdoms, I shall freshen like a rose and sing a new song unto Him, as is said, "O sing unto the Lord a new song; for He hath done marvelous things; His right hand, and His holy arm, hath wrought salvation for Him" (Ps. 98:1).

R. Abba bar Kahana taught that the congregation of Israel said to the Holy One: I am she, I am the beloved, deep in the depths of trouble, but when the Holy One lifts me up out of my troubles, I shall freshen like a rose with good deeds and shall sing a song [to Him], as is said, "A Song of Ascents. Out of the depths have I called Thee, O Lord" (Ps. 130:1).[5]

146. "Look (tashuri) from the top of Amana" (Song 4:8). R. Yusta said: There is a mountain called Amana which marks the extreme boundary of the Land of Israel. From there and beyond is outside the Land.

R. Eleazar son of R. Yose said: ["Look (tashuri)" means that] as soon as the returning exiles reach it, they will utter song (shirah). Hence Scripture: "Sing (tashuri) from the top of Amana."[6]

147. "Then sang Moses and the children of Israel this song (shirah)"[7] (Exod. 15:1). All the songs recited throughout the past by Israel are designated "song" in its feminine form, as if to say: [Just as a woman conceives and gives birth again and again, so troubles keep coming]. Observe that the deliverances of the past were followed by servitude, for Babylon, Media, Greece, and Rome were to rise against Israel. But the deliverance destined to come will not be followed by another servitude, as is said, "O Israel, that art saved by the Lord with an everlasting deliverance" (Isa. 45:17). At that time they will sing a song in its masculine form, as is said, "Sing unto the Lord a new song (shir)" (Ps. 98:1).[8]

---

1. At a time when, it is assumed, Hezekiah was in bed. Lam R., proem 30; Yalkut, 2 Sam., §163.
2. B. Hul 91b.
3. MTeh 87:7.
4. B. Sanh 91b.
5. Song R. 2:1, §1 and §3.
6. Exod. R. 23:5.
7. A feminine form of shir ("song").
8. Exod. R. 23:11; Yalkut, Be-shallah, §242.

CHAPTER NINE

SABBATH, FEASTS, AND FASTS

Sabbath

1. "That ye may know that I the Lord sanctify you" (Exod. 31:13). The Holy One said to Moses: Moses, in My treasury I have a precious gift—it is called the Sabbath, and I wish to give it to Israel. Go and make it known to them.[1]

2. "See, for that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath" (Exod. 16:29). What is implied by the word "see"? R. Yose answered that God meant: See the pearl I am giving you.[2]

3. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: All commandments the Holy One gave to Israel, He gave publicly, except for the Sabbath, which He gave privately, as is said, "It is a sign between Me and the children of Israel forever" (Exod. 31:17).[3]

4. R. Simeon ben Yohai taught: The Sabbath spoke right up to the Holy One: Master of the universe, each one of the days has a mate,[4] but I have no mate. The Holy One replied: The congregation of Israel will be your mate. And when Israel stood before Mount Sinai, the Holy One said to them: Remember the special thing I told the Sabbath, that "the congregation of Israel is to be your mate." It is this that is implied in the verse "Remember the Sabbath day to hallow it" (Exod. 20:8) [by uniting with it in holy wedlock].[5]

5. "Because for you it is a means of hallowing" (Exod. 31:14).[6] The verse tells us that the Sabbath enhances Israel's holiness: Why is the shop of So-and-so closed? Because he is keeping the Sabbath. Why does So-and-so abstain from work? Because he is keeping the Sabbath.[7]

6. In the Five Books, the Prophets, and the Writings, we find it stated that the Sabbath is the equivalent of all the commandments in the Torah. In the Five Books, Israel are reproached: "How long refuse ye to keep My commandments and My laws?" (Exod. 16:28),[8] and this is followed directly by "See that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath" (Exod. 16:29). In the Prophets: "But the House of Israel rebelled against Me in the wilderness; they walked not in My statutes" (Ezek. 20:13), and this is followed directly by "And My Sabbaths they greatly profaned" (ibid.). In the Writings: "Thou camest down also upon Mount Sinai . . . and gavest them . . . statutes and commandments" (Neh. 9:13), and this is followed directly by "And madest known unto them Thy holy Sabbath" (Neh. 9:14).

The Holy One said to Israel: If you succeed in keeping the Sabbath, I will account it to you as though you had kept all the commandments in the Torah. But if you violate it, I will account it to you as though you had profaned all the commandments. Thus Scripture: "He that keepeth the Sabbath from profaning it is as one who keepeth his hand from doing any evil deed" (Isa. 56:2).[9]

7. When a man keeps the Sabbath, it is as though he had fulfilled the entire Torah, all of it.[10]

8. "He that keepeth the Sabbath keepeth his hand from doing any evil" (Isa. 56:2). Thus we learn that he who keeps the Sabbath is kept far from sin.[11]

9. "It is a sign forever" (Exod. 31:17). The verse tells that the Sabbath will never cease in Israel. You find that any observance for which Israel were willing to give up their lives has been preserved among them. But any observance for which Israel were not willing to give up their lives has not been preserved among them. Thus the Sabbath, circumcision, and study of Torah, for which Israel were willing to give up their lives, have been retained by them. But such institutions as the Temple and the sabbatical and jubilee years, for which Israel were not willing to give up their lives, have not been retained by them.[12]

10. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: Even if a man worships idols, as did the generation of Enosh, but keeps the Sabbath as it should be kept, he is forgiven, for Scripture says, "Blessed is Enosh . . . that keepeth the Sabbath from profaning it (me-hallelo)" (Isa. 56:2). Read not me-hallelo, "from profaning it," but mahul lo, "he shall be forgiven."

R. Hiyya bar Abba said: "Better is a handful of quietness" (Eccles. 4:6)—the Sabbath—"than both the hands full of labor and striving after wind" (ibid.)—the six days of work. For R. Hiyya bar Abba used to say: Only through the merit of the Sabbath will Israel be redeemed, as is said, "In sitting still and rest shall ye be saved" (Isa.

---

1. B. Shab 10b; B. Betz 16a.
2. MTeh 92:1; Yalkut, Be-shallah, §241; Yalkut, Ps., §843.
3. B. Betz 16a.
4. The six weekdays make three couples.
5. Gen. R. 11:8; Yalkut, Bereshit, §17.
6. JV: "For it is holy unto you."
7. Mek, Ki Tissa, Shabbata, 1.
8. Even though there was violation of but one commandment, that of the Sabbath.
9. P. Ned 3:9, 38b; Exod. R. 25:12.
10. Pesikta. The translator could not locate the source.
11. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yassa, 6.
12. Mek, Ki-Tissa, Shabbata, 1; Yalkut, Ki Tissa, §391.

30:15). That is, your salvation shall come about through the Sabbath and its rest.[1]

11. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Had Israel kept the first Sabbath, no nation or tongue would have gained dominion over them, for Scripture says, "And it came to pass on the seventh day, that there went out some of the people to gather" (Exod. 16:27), and this is followed at once by "Then came Amalek" (Exod. 17:1).

R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: If Israel were to keep but two Sabbaths as they should be kept, they would be redeemed immediately, as is said, "Thus saith the Lord concerning the eunuchs that keep my sabbaths"[2] (Isa. 56:4), and this is followed by "Them will I bring to My holy mountain" (Isa. 56:7).[3]

12. "As for Me, behold, if My covenant is with thee . . . I will give unto thee and to thy seed after thee, the Land of thy sojournings" (Gen. 17:4 and 17:8). R. Yudan took the verse to say: If your children accept the covenant of Sabbath, they will enter the Land; but if not, they will not enter it.[4]

13. Abbaye said: Jerusalem was destroyed only because its inhabitants profaned the Sabbath there, as is said, "They have hid their eyes from the Sabbaths, therefore am I profaned among them" (Ezek. 22:26).[5]

14. Why was Mount Simeon[6] laid waste? Because its inhabitants played ball on the Sabbath.[7]

15. "Thou shalt not bear false witness" (Exod. 20:16). On one Tablet it is written, "Remember the Sabbath to keep it holy"; and facing it, on the opposite Tablet is written, "Thou shalt not bear false witness." Thus Scripture tells us: Whoever profanes the Sabbath—it is as though he were bearing witness in the presence of Him who spoke and the world came into being that He did not create His world in six days and did not rest on the seventh. But whoever keeps the Sabbath bears witness in the presence of Him who spoke and the world came into being that He did create His world in six days and did rest on the seventh, as is said, "Ye are to be My witnesses, saith the Lord" (Isa. 43:10).[8]

16. There are three who bear witness about one another: Israel, the Sabbath, and the Holy One. Israel and the Holy One bear witness about the Sabbath, that it is a day of rest. Israel and the Sabbath bear witness about the Holy One, that He is unique in His world. The Holy One and the Sabbath bear witness about Israel [that they are unique among the nations].[9]

17. "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy" (Exod. 20:8). Here in Exodus it is written, "Remember," but in Deuteronomy it is written, "Take care of" (Deut. 5:12). R. Yudan and R. Aibu said in the name of R. Simeon ben Lakish: Consider the parable of a king who handed his son a coin and a flask, and sent him to the storekeeper. On the way, the son broke the flask and lost the coin. So the king twisted his son's ear and pulled at his hair, and as he gave him a coin and a flask a second time, he said to him, "Take care that you do not lose these as you lost the others." In the same way, because Israel lost in the wilderness[10] the command that began with "Remember," God gave them the command again, this time beginning with the words "Take care of the Sabbath."[11]

18. R. Berekhiah taught in the name of R. Hiyya bar Abba: The Sabbath was given solely for enjoyment. R. Haggai said in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: The Sabbath was given solely for the study of Torah. But the two do not really differ. What R. Berekhiah said in the name of R. Hiyya bar Abba about the Sabbath's being given for enjoyment applies to disciples of the wise, who weary themselves in study of Torah throughout the week but on the Sabbath come out and enjoy themselves. What R. Haggai said in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman about the Sabbath's being given for study of Torah applies to workingmen, who are monopolized by their work throughout the week, but on the Sabbath come in and busy themselves with the Torah.[12]

19. "And Moses assembled" (Exod. 35:1). Our masters who are expert in Aggadah say: From the beginning of Torah to its end, there is no section where "Moses assembled" is mentioned except here. For the Holy One said to Moses: Gather large assemblies and publicly expound for them the laws of Sabbath, so that coming generations may learn from you to bring together assemblies in synagogues on each and every Sabbath for the purpose of teaching and instructing Israel in words of Torah—what is prohibited and what is permitted—that thereby My great Name will be honored among My children.[13]

---

1. B. Shab 118b; Eccles. R. 4:6, §1.
2. In rabbinic commentary, an unspecified plural denotes two.
3. B. Shab 118b.
4. Gen. R. 46:9.
5. When Jerusalem is in ruins, God's Name is profaned. B. Shab 119b.
6. The place has not been identified. Its name suggests that it was a stronghold in Judea.
7. P. Ta 4:6, 69a; Lam. R. 2:2, §4.
8. Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 8.
9. Concerning the Sabbath, God and Israel bear witness that "when days were fashioned, one of them was His" (Ps. 139:16). Concerning the Holy One, Israel and the Sabbath bear witness that he is one, as is said, "The Sabbath is a sign between Me and you . . . that ye may know that I am the Lord." Concerning Israel, the Holy One and the Sabbath bear witness that Israel are a unique people, as is said, "What one nation . . . is like . . . Israel, whom God went to redeem to be His own people?" (1 Chron. 8:21). Joseph Davis of Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., provided the reference to Perushe ha-Torah le-Baale ha-Tosafot, ed. Gellis (Jerusalem, 1981), vol. 1. Midrash cited in Tosafot on B. Hag 3b.
10. By going out on the Sabbath to gather manna (Exod. 16:27), and by the worship of the golden calf, which led to the breaking of the first Tablets.
11. PR 23:1 (YJS 1:474).
12. PR 23:9 (YJS 1:490–91).
13. Yalkut, Va-yak'hel, §407.

20. "Moses . . . saw their burdens" (Exod. 2:11). He saw that they had no rest whatever [from hard labor]. So he went off and told Pharaoh: "When a man has a slave and the slave gets no rest at least one day during the week, the slave will die. Now, these are your slaves. If you do not let them rest during the week, they will surely die." Pharaoh replied, "Go and do with them as you say." So Moses went and ordained the Sabbath day for them to rest.[1]

21. "Let heavier work be laid upon the men" (Exod. 5:9). When the entire verse is read, it tells us that the Israelites possessed scrolls containing assurances that the Holy One would redeem them. The Israelites took delight in reading them from one Sabbath to the next, for at that time they were still allowed to rest on the Sabbath. But now Pharaoh informed Moses [of a new order]: "Let heavier work be laid upon the men, and make them keep at it [even on the Sabbath], so that they will not delight in lying words" (ibid.)—let them not divert themselves and rest on the Sabbath day.[2]

22. The Torah said: Master of the universe, when Israel enter the Land, what will happen to me? Every man in Israel will proceed to sow and plant his field—and I, what will happen to me? God replied: I have a mate which I will provide for you—the Sabbath, when Israel abstain from work, enter the synagogues and houses of study, and occupy themselves with Torah.[3]

23. "Thou that [when at leisure] dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken for thy voice: 'Cause Me to hear it' " (Song 8:13). R. Nathan said in the name of R. Aha: [God here is compared] to a king who grew angry with some of his servants and threw them into a dungeon. He then took all his soldiers and servants, and went to listen to what they were chanting. When he heard them recite, "Our lord king, he is our praise, he is our life; we will never fail our lord king," he said to them, "My children, raise your voices, so that the companions who are above you may hear." Likewise, although Israel are occupied with their work during the six days of the week, on the Sabbath they rise early and go to the synagogue and recite the Shema; they go over to the lectern, where they read the Torah and conclude the reading with a related passage from the Prophets. Then the Holy One says, "My children, raise your voices, so that the companions standing above you may hear"—the word "companions" here denoting the ministering angels. "Take heed that ye do not hate one another, nor be jealous of one another, nor contend with one another, nor humiliate one another, lest the ministering angels say before me, 'Lord of the Universe, Israel do not concern themselves with the Torah You have given to them, for, as you see, there is enmity, jealousy, hatred, and strife among Israel.' Whereas in fact you are fulfilling the Torah in its entirety."[4]

24. In the school of Elijah it was taught: "Among the days that were to be fashioned, one was to be wholly His" (Ps. 139:16). This is Israel's Sabbath day. In what sense is it to be wholly His? Say, a man who labors for six days rests on the Sabbath and so finds it possible to come closer to his children and the other members of his household. Likewise, a man may labor all six days in the midst of people who are hostile to him, but then, as he rests on the Sabbath, he forgets all the vexation he has previously suffered. Such is the nature of man: a good day makes him forget an evil day, and conversely, an evil day makes him forget a good day.[5]

25. "Remember the Sabbath day" (Exod. 20:8). R. Eleazar ben Hananiah said: Remember it continually from the first day of the week. If a good portion happens to come your way, prepare it for use on the Sabbath.[6]

26. We have been taught: It is told of Shammai the Elder that throughout his life he saved the [best] food for honoring the Sabbath. If he came upon a fine animal, he would say; Let this one be for the Sabbath. If subsequently he came upon a finer animal, he put the second aside for the Sabbath and ate the first. But Hillel the Elder had a different trait. Daily throughout the week, all his doings were in utter reliance upon Heaven, in keeping with "The Lord is to be relied on day by day" (Ps. 68:20).[7] Hence we were taught: The school of Shammai says, "From the first day in the week, look to the Sabbath"; whereas the school of Hillel says, "The Lord is to be relied on day by day."[8]

27. "Remember" and "observe"—remember it before it comes, and observe it after it leaves. The sages said: We should always increase what is holy by adding to it [at both ends] out of the time that is not holy, the Sabbath being like a wolf that preys upon [victims] both in front of him and behind him.[9]

28. He who works on the eves of Sabbaths or on the eves of festivals from midday onward, or [too soon] at the outgoing of Sabbath, at the outgoing of a festival, or the outgoing of the Day of Atonement—or at any time when there is the least possibility of transgression—will never see a sign of blessing.

Our masters taught: Some are industrious and profit from it, while others are industrious and suffer loss; some are indolent and profit from it, while others are indolent and suffer loss. An industrious man who profits: he who works the entire week but does not work [after midday] on the eve of Sabbath. An industrious man who suffers loss: he who works the entire week and also works [after midday] on the eve of Sabbath. An indolent man who profits: he who works neither during the entire week nor [after midday] on the eve of Sabbath. An indolent man who suffers

---

1. Exod. R. 1:28.
2. Exod. R. 5:16.
3. Midrash, cited in "Some say."
4. Song R. 8:13, §1.
5. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 4 (JPS, p. 45).
6. Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 7.
7. He trusted God to provide for the Sabbath.
8. B. Betz 16a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 7.

loss: he who does not work the entire week but works [after midday] on the eve of Sabbath.

Rava said: Those women of Mahoza,[1] who only out of self-indulgence do no work [after midday] on the eve of Sabbath—those women, even though they do no work on any other day of the week either—nevertheless may be spoken of as "an indolent person who profits."[2]

29. R. Hisda said: One should market early for the Sabbath, as is said, "It shall come to pass on the sixth day, that they shall prepare that which they bring in" (Exod. 16:5)—the manna, which they gather early in the morning.[3]

30. Seated on an ivory stool,[4] R. Abbahu would fan the fire [in preparing food for the Sabbath]. R. Anan used to wear a smock [over his clean clothes], for he agreed with what was taught in the school of R. Ishmael: the workaday clothes worn when a man cooks a dish for his master, he should not wear when pouring a cup for him. R. Safra would singe the head [of an animal] himself. Rava salted mullet himself. R. Huna kindled a lamp. R. Papa plaited wicks. R. Hisda cut up beetroots. Rabbah and R. Joseph chopped wood. R. Zera used to kindle a woodchip fire himself. R. Nahman bar Isaac carried in and out what was needed for the Sabbath on his shoulder, saying: Were R. Ammi and R. Assi to visit, would I not act as a porter for them?[5]

31. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Such was the practice of R. Judah bar Ilai: on the eve of Sabbath, a basin filled with warm water would be brought to him. He would wash his face, his hands, and his feet and then wrap himself in his fringed linen robes. He looked like an angel of the Lord of hosts.[6]

32. One Sabbath eve, before sunset, R. Simeon ben Yohai and his son R. Eleazar saw an old man holding two bunches of myrtle and running in the twilight. "What are these for?" they asked him. "To honor the Sabbath," he replied.

"But one should be enough."

"One is for 'Remember,' and one for 'Observe.' "[7]

R. Simeon said to his son, "See how beloved are the commandments to Israel."[8]

33. "As a lily among the thorns, so is My love among the daughters" (Song 2:2). Even as [the fragrance of] the lily is designated for Sabbaths and festivals, so are Israel designated for redemption as early as the very next day.[9]

34. On Sabbath eve, at twilight, R. Hanina would wrap himself in his robe, stand up, and say, "Come, let us go forth to welcome Queen Sabbath!"

On Sabbath eve, R. Yannai would put on his festive garments and say, "Come, O bride! Come, O bride!"[10]

35. "And God blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it" (Gen. 2:3)—blessed the Sabbath with radiance in a man's face; hallowed it with radiance in a man's face. The radiance in a man's face on weekdays is not like that on the Sabbath.[11]

36. "I am black, but comely" (Song 1:5). I am black during the days of the week, but comely on the Sabbath.[12]

37. R. Hisda said in the name of Mar Ukba: When a man praying on the eve of the Sabbath says, "The heaven and the earth were finished" (Gen. 2:1), the two ministering angels who accompany every man place their hands on his head and say to him, "Thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged" (Isa. 6:7).

We have been taught that R. Yose son of R. Judah said: On the eve of Sabbath, two ministering angels accompany every man from the synagogue to his home, a good angel and an evil one. When the man arrives home and finds the lamp lit, the table set, and his couch spread, the good angel says, "May it be God's will that it be thus another Sabbath!" and unwillingly the evil angel responds, "Amen!" But if not [if the room is dark, the table and the couch bare], the evil angel says, "May it be God's will that it be thus another Sabbath!" and unwillingly the good angel responds, "Amen!"[13]

38. "And call the Sabbath a delight" (Isa. 58:13). The word "delight" refers to kindling the lamp on the Sabbath.

"My life was bereft of peace" (Lam. 3:17) refers, according to R. Abbahu, to the lack of a Sabbath lamp. "I had forgotten what happiness was" (ibid.) refers to the lack of a bathhouse. According to R. Yohanan, to the lack of washing hands and feet in warm water. According to R. Isaac Nappaha, to the lack of a beautiful couch and beautiful appointments for it.[14]

39. R. Huna said: He who regularly lights the Sabbath lamp will have sons who are disciples of the wise.

R. Huna used to walk back and forth past the doorway of R. Avin the Carpenter, and he observed that R. Avin regularly lit many Sabbath lamps. So he said: Two distinguished men will issue from this house. Indeed, R. Idi bar Avin and R. Hiyya bar Avin did issue from it.[15]

40. R. Eleazar, quoting "God blessed the seventh day" (Gen. 2:3), said: He blessed the day by the continuous

---

1. A Jewish town on the Tigris, where Rava's academy was situated.
2. B. Pes 50b.
3. B. Shab 117b.
4. He was a wealthy man.
5. B. Shab 119a.
6. B. Shab 25b.
7. Exod. 20:8: "Remember the Sabbath day," and Deut. 5:12: "Observe the Sabbath day."
8. B. Shab 33b.
9. Lev. R. 23:6.
10. B. Shab 119a.
11. Gen. R. 11:2; Yalkut, Bereshit, §17.
12. Song R. 1:5, §2.
13. B. Shab 119b.
14. Tanhuma, Noah, §1; B. Shab 25b; Yalkut, Lam., §3.
15. B. Shab 23b.

burning of the lamp lit for it, as I was to learn from my own experience. I once lit a lamp on Sabbath eve, and when I came back I found it still burning at the Sabbath's end.[1]

41. The Sabbath—the lamps thereof are the honor due to it. If you are meticulous about the Sabbath lamps, I will show you the lamps of Zion [lit again], as is said, "And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will free Jerusalem because of the lamps" (Zeph. 1:12).[2]

42. In the school of Elijah it is taught: "Remember the Sabbath day, to hallow it" (Exod. 20:8). With what are you to hallow it? With reading of Scripture, with reciting of Mishnah, with [appropriate] food and drink, with clean garments, and with rest [of body and spirit].[3]

43. "To hallow it" (Exod. 20:8)—with a blessing. On the basis of this verse, the sages said: At the incoming of the Sabbath we hallow it by reciting the hallowing (Kiddush) of the day over wine.[4]

44. R. Zakkai's disciples asked him: How have you managed to reach such an advanced age? He replied: I never gave a derogatory nickname to a colleague, nor have I omitted to say the Kiddush for the [Sabbath] day. I had a grandmother who once, when I had no wine for Kiddush, sold her headdress and brought me the wine for the Kiddush of the day.

The sages taught that when she died, she left him three hundred kegs of wine, and when he died, he left his sons three thousand kegs of wine.[5]

45. R. Eliezer said: A man should always set a full table for Sabbath eve, even if he himself needs no more than an olive's bulk of food.[6]

46. R. Yose said: May my portion be with those who eat three meals on a Sabbath.[7]

47. "Thou shalt call the Sabbath a delight" (Isa. 58:13). With what is one to show his delight in the Sabbath? R. Judah son of R. Samuel bar Shilat said in the name of Rav: With a dish of beets, large fish, and heads of garlic. R. Hiyya bar Ashi said in the name of Rav: So long as it is prepared in honor of the Sabbath, even a humble dish is "a delight." What humble dish, for example? R. Papa said: Fish-hash pie.[8]

48. "And it shall come to pass on the sixth day that they shall prepare . . . and it shall be twice as much (mishneh)" (Exod. 16:5). Read meshunneh, "different." How? Every day there will be one measure of manna, but for the Sabbath two measures; every day its fragrance will go forth, but more so on the Sabbath; every day it will shine brightly like gold, but more so on the Sabbath.[9]

49. Our masters taught: How many meals is a man duty bound to eat on the Sabbath? Three. R. Hidka said: Four.[10]

50. "And shalt honor it" (Isa. 58:13)—so that your garment for the Sabbath is not like your garment for weekdays.

R. Huna said: If one has a change of garments, he should change them; but if he has nothing to change into, he should let them down.[11]

51. R. Hanina said: A man should have two cloaks, one for weekdays and one for the Sabbath. When R. Simlai preached this to an assembly, the disciples burst into tears in front of him, saying, "Master, our garment on the Sabbath is necessarily the same as our garment on weekdays." He replied, "Nevertheless, you must make some change in it for the Sabbath."[12]

52. "And thou shalt honor it, not doing thy wonted round" (Isa. 58:13): your [leisurely] way of walking on the Sabbath is not to be like your [hurried] way of walking on weekdays. "Not pursuing your affairs" (ibid.): your affairs are forbidden, but the affairs of Heaven may be pursued. "And not [ordinary] talk" (ibid.): your talk on the Sabbath is not to be like your talk on weekdays.[13]

53. Whenever R. Simeon ben Yohai's mother indulged in too much talk on the Sabbath, he would say to her, "It is the Sabbath," and she would grow silent.[14]

54. R. Akiva sat weeping on the Sabbath. His disciples said: Master, you taught us, "Call the Sabbath a delight" (Isa. 58:13). R. Akiva: Such is my delight.[15]

55. Both R. Hisda and R. Hamnuna said: Accounts that have to do with performing a precept may be reckoned on the Sabbath. And R. Eleazar said: One may allocate grants to the poor on the Sabbath. And R. Jacob bar Idi said in the name of R. Yohanan: One may oversee matters of life and death and of communal urgency on the Sabbath, and one may go to synagogues to attend to communal affairs on the Sabbath. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said to R. Jonathan: One may even go to theaters, circuses, and basilicas to attend to communal affairs on the Sabbath.

In the school of R. Manasseh it was taught: One may make arrangements on the Sabbath for the betrothal of a young woman and for teaching reading or a craft to a child,

---

1. Gen. R. 11:2; Yalkut, Bereshit, §17.
2. JV: "that I will search Jerusalem with lamps." But by a slight change, hps ("search") may be read hpsh ("free"). Yalkut, Be-haalotekha, §719.
3. Mek RSbY, p. 149; TdE 26 (ed. Friedmann, p. 133).
4. Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 7.
5. B. Meg 27b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. B. Shab 119b.
7. On weekdays, only two meals were eaten. B. Shab 118b.
8. B. Shab 118b.
9. Mek RSbY, p. 107.
10. B. Shab 117b.
11. And not tuck them up, as he does when he is working. B. Shab 113a; Yalkut, Bereshit, §17.
12. P. Pe 8:7 21b.
13. B. Shab 113a–b.
14. Lev. R. 34:16.
15. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §159. Shibbolei ha-Leket, which cites a Midrash.

for Scripture says, "Not pursuing your affairs," meaning: Your own affairs may not be pursued, but the affairs of Heaven may be pursued.[1]

56. R. Tanhum said in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi: A man is always to run to perform a precept, even on the Sabbath.[2]

57. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yose: He who delights in the Sabbath is given a heritage unlimited by boundaries, for Scripture says, "If thou delightest thyself in the Lord . . . I will let thee enjoy the heritage of Jacob thy father" (Isa. 58:14)—not like the heritage of Abraham, who was told, "Arise, walk through the Land in the length of it and in the breadth of it" (Gen. 13:17); nor like the heritage of Isaac, who was told, "Unto thee, and unto thy seed, I will give all these lands" (Gen. 26:3); but like the heritage of Jacob, who was told, "Thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south" (Gen. 28:14). R. Nahman bar Isaac added: He is saved from servitude under the kingdoms: here, in connection with the Sabbath, it is said, "I will set you astride the heights of the earth" (Isa. 58:14), and elsewhere, in connection with triumph over the kingdoms, it is said, "As you march across their heights" (Deut. 33:29).

R. Judah said in the name of Rav: He who delights in the Sabbath is given his heart's desires, for it is said, "Delight thyself in the Lord; and He shall give thee the desires of thy heart" (Ps. 37:4). Now, I do not know what delight the psalm refers to. But since we read in Isaiah, "Thou shalt call the Sabbath a delight" (Isa. 58:13), one may conclude that by "delight" is meant the Sabbath.[3]

58. In the school of Elijah it is taught: Even though R. Akiva said, "Treat your Sabbath like a weekday rather than be dependent on mortals," one must prepare something, however slight, at home.[4]

59. R. Tahalifa, the brother of Rabinai of [Be] Hozae,[5] taught: A man's entire sustenance [for the year] is fixed for him between New Year's Day and the Day of Atonement, except expenses for Sabbaths, expenses for festivals, and expenses for instructing his children in Torah. If he spends less, he is given less; and if he spends more, he is given more.[6]

60. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: The Holy One said to Israel: My children, borrow on My account to mark the holiness of the day, and put your trust in Me, and I will do the repaying.[7]

61. Joseph-who-honors-the-Sabbath had in his neighborhood a certain Gentile who owned very much property. Soothsayers told him: All the property you have, Joseph-who-honors-the-Sabbath will eventually enjoy. So the Gentile went and sold his property, and with the proceeds he bought a pearl, which he secured in his headdress. As he was crossing a bridge, the wind blew off the headdress and carried it out to sea, and a fish swallowed it. The fish was caught and brought to the marketplace on the eve of a Sabbath at twilight. They asked, "Who will buy a fish at this late hour?" They were told, "Go, take it to Joseph-who-honors-the-Sabbath. He is always eager to buy [fine food in the Sabbath's honor]. So the fish was brought to him, and he bought it. When he cut it open, he found the pearl in it, which he sold for enough gold denars to fill thirteen upper chambers.

A certain venerable elder[8] met him and said: He who lends to the Sabbath, the Sabbath will repay him.[9]

62. R. Hiyya bar Abba told the following story: Once a man of Laodicea[10] invited me to his house, and a golden table was brought before him. Sixteen men carried it by means of sixteen silver chains attached to it. On the table were set plates, goblets, pitchers, and flasks. All kinds of food, all kinds of precious fruits and spices created during the six days of creation were on it [to be eaten]. In the middle of the table there sat a child, and when the table was set down, the child proclaimed loudly, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein" (Ps. 24:1). And when the table was removed, the child said, "The heavens are the heavens of the Lord; but the earth hath He given to the children of men" (Ps. 115:16). I asked my host, "My son, how did you merit all this wealth?" He replied, "Master, I was a simple butcher, and I would say of every fat-fleshed animal, 'This one shall be for the Sabbath.' "[11] I told him, "Happy are you that such is your merit, and blessed be He who is everywhere for having allowed you to enjoy all this."[12]

63. R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Yose: "God blessed the seventh day" (Gen. 2:3) in that, on account of people with delicate digestions, he blessed its food with special flavor.[13]

64. A Caesar asked R. Joshua ben Hananiah: Why do Sabbath dishes have such a fragrant aroma? R. Joshua: We have a certain seasoning called Sabbath which we put into the dish, and that gives it its fragrant aroma. Caesar: Give us some. R. Joshua: For him who keeps the Sabbath, it avails; but for him who does not keep the Sabbath, it will not avail.[14]

---

1. Arranging for a child's instruction is a precept, hence an affair of Heaven. B. Shab 150a.
2. When running is prohibited. B. Ber 6b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. B. Shab 118a–b.
4. B. Pes 112a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. The province of Khuzistan.
6. B. Betz 15b–16a.
7. B. Betz 15b.
8. The prophet Elijah?
9. B. Shab 119a.
10. A town in Syria.
11. The butcher took a chance, since the meat might not get sold and would spoil.
12. B. Shab 119a; Gen. R. 11:4.
13. They will thus enjoy the food and have no difficulty in digesting it. Gen. R. 11:4.
14. B. Shab 119a.

65. When our Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] entertained Antoninus on a Sabbath, he served him cold dishes, which Antoninus ate and liked. On another occasion, our Rabbi entertained Antoninus on a weekday, when he served him hot dishes. Antoninus said: I found the cold dishes more tasty than the hot. Rabbi [Judah] replied: The hot dishes lack one seasoning. Antoninus: Can there be anything at all lacking in the emperor's pantry? Rabbi [Judah]: The hot dishes lack Sabbath. Does your pantry have Sabbath?[1]

66. The tyrant Rufus asked R. Akiva: How does the Sabbath day differ from other days? The latter replied: How does one man differ from other men? Rufus: In that the emperor chooses to honor me [and not other men]. R. Akiva: So, too, the King of kings chooses to honor it. Rufus: What I meant was: Who decides that this day is the Sabbath? R. Akiva: It is proved by the fact that the river Sambatyon, which [flows so swiftly] on weekdays [that] it pulls up the stones [from its bed, does not pull them up on] the Sabbath, when it rests. Rufus: For your proof, you go as far afield as the wind? R. Akiva: A necromancer will be my proof, for he can raise a ghost on any weekday, but not on the Sabbath. Or your father's grave will be my proof, for it emits no smoke on the Sabbath.

Rufus: [By speaking of such proof], you shame, disgrace, and revile my father!

At that, Rufus went off and made the test with his own father. Every day he raised him, but on the Sabbath he could not raise him. After the Sabbath he again raised him and asked him: Have you become a Jew since you died? The father replied: He who does not observe the Sabbath when he is in your world can do so by his own choice, but here he is compelled to observe it. Rufus: And what labor do you all perform on weekdays? The father: On weekdays we are punished, but on the Sabbath we are allowed to rest.[2]

Rufus came back to R. Akiva and asked him: If God wishes to honor the Sabbath, as you say, let Him not cause winds to blow on that day, let Him not cause rain to come down on that day, let Him not cause grass to grow on that day. R. Akiva: May the breath of such a man be blasted out! I will tell you a parable to explain the matter: When only one man lives in a courtyard, he is allowed on the Sabbath to carry things anywhere in the courtyard. So, too, since the entire world, all of it, belongs to Him, and no one else shares this domain with Him, He is free to carry things on the Sabbath throughout the world, through every part of it.[3]

67. A story is told of a pious man who took a walk in his vineyard on the Sabbath. When he noticed a breach in it, he resolved to repair it upon the departure of the Sabbath. But then he said: Since the thought of repairing it came to me on the Sabbath, I will leave it unrepaired forever. How did the Holy One reward him? A big caper bush grew up in the vineyard and filled the breach in the fence, and with the fruit of that bush he sustained himself for the rest of his life.[4]

68. Our masters taught: It once happened that a fire broke out in the courtyard of Joseph ben Simai in Shihin, and because he was a steward of the king,[5] the men of the garrison in Sepphoris came to extinguish it. But out of deference to the Sabbath, he would not permit them to do so, saying, "Let the [divine] Collector collect what is due Him." Right away, a miracle happened in his behalf—rain came down and extinguished the fire. In the evening,[6] he sent a sela to each of them, and fifty to their captain. But when the sages heard it, they said: He had no obligation to restrain them, for we are taught in a Mishnah: if a Gentile comes to extinguish a fire, we do not say to him either, "Extinguish" or, "Do not extinguish."[7]

69. A story is told of a certain pious man who owned a plowing heifer. In time, the pious man's wealth slipped out of his hands, and he had to sell his heifer to a heathen, who plowed with her for six days of the [first] week. But on the Sabbath, when he brought her out to play, she lay down under the yoke and would do no work. Though he kept beating her, she would not budge from her place. Seeing this, he went to the pious man and said to him, "Come, take back your heifer. For six days I worked her, but when I took her out on the Sabbath, she lay down under the yoke and would do no work whatever. And though I beat her again and again, she would not budge from her place."

When the heathen spoke thus, the pious man understood that the reason she would do no work was because she had become accustomed to rest on the Sabbath. He said, "Come along. I will get her up and make her plow." When he came to her, he whispered in her ear, "Alas, heifer, heifer, when you were in my possession, you rested on the Sabbath. But now that my sins have forced me to sell you to this heathen, I beg you, stand up and do the will of your [new] master!"

At once she stood up and was ready to work. The heathen said to the pious man, "I won't let you go until you tell me what you did to her and what you whispered into her ear. Did you perhaps practice some sorcery upon her?" The pious man replied, "I said such-and-such to her."

When the heathen heard this, he was both amazed and shaken, as he drew an inference a fortiori for himself: If this creature—which has no speech, no cognition, no intelligence—affirms her Creator, shall not I, whom the Holy One created in His own image and likeness, and into whom He put cognition and intelligence—shall I not affirm my Creator?

At once he went and became a proselyte. He was

---

1. Ibid.; Gen. R. 11:4.
2. The rest of the week he is in purgatory. But even the wicked are given a respite on the Sabbath.
3. B. Sanh 65b; Gen. R. 11:5; Tanhuma, Ki Tissa, §33; PR 23:8.
4. B. Shab 150b; P. Shab 15:3, 15a–b; PR 23:3.
5. Agrippa II (?).
6. One may not handle money on the Sabbath.
7. B. Shab 121a; P. Shab 16:7, 15d.

privileged to study Torah and came to be called R. Yohanan ben Tortah ("son of a heifer").[1]

70. Comes Sabbath, comes rest.[2]

71. The Sabbath is one-sixtieth of the world-to-come.[3]

72. Sabbath is to the world-to-come as an unripe date to a ripened one.[4]

73. The word "Sabbath" (shbt) is an acrostic of "sleep (shenah) on Sabbath (be-shabbat) is a delight (taanug)."[5]

74. R. Isaac said: Sunshine on the Sabbath is an act of kindness toward the poor, as is said, "But unto you that fear My Name shall the sun shine—a kindness" (Mal. 3:20).[6]

75. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: The Holy One gives man an additional soul on Sabbath eve, and at the Sabbath's departure it is taken from him, as is said, "The Sabbath ceased;[7] va-yinnafash" (Exod. 31:17). Once the Sabbath ceases, vay, en nefesh; "woe, the [additional] soul is no more."[7]

76. R. Hanina said: One should always set a full table at the Sabbath's departure, even if one requires for himself no more food than the bulk of one olive.[8]

Hot water at the Sabbath's departure is soothing. Fresh warm bread also is soothing at the Sabbath's departure.[9]

77. What is the proof that danger to human life suspends the laws of Sabbath? R. Jonathan ben Joseph cited, "For it is holy unto you" (Exod. 31:14). The Sabbath is committed to your keeping, not you to its keeping. R. Simeon ben Menasya cited, "The children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath" (Exod. 31:16). The Torah says: Profane one Sabbath for a man's sake, so that he may keep many Sabbaths.[10]

78. R. Simon said in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: In this world, if a man goes about gathering figs on a Sabbath, the fig tree says nothing at all to him. But in the time-to-come, [if a man should go to pick fruit from a fig tree on a Sabbath], the tree will call aloud to him and say, "It is the Sabbath!"[11]

79. [This number is missing in BR.]

1. PR 14:2; Midrash Aseret ha-Dibberot (BhM 1:74–75).
2. Rashi on B. Meg 9a, citing a Midrash.
3. B. Ber 57b.
4. Gen. R. 17:5. So interpreted by Leon Nemoy.
5. The three letters Sh, B, and T, which make up the word Shabbat ("Sabbath"), are used to suggest that sleep is a delight on the Sabbath. Yalkut Reuveni, Va-et'hannan.
6. B. Ta 8b. The sun's warmth is the only pleasure they can afford.
7. JV: "He ceased from work and rested." But nfsh may mean "soul" as well as "rest."
8. B. Betz. 16a.
9. B. Shab 119b.
10. B. Yoma 85b.
11. MTeh 73:4; Yalkut, Jer., §315.

Hallowing the New Moon and Intercalating the Year

80. "This reckoning of the month shall be unto you" (Exod. 12:2). R. Joshua ben Levi said: How may the matter be illustrated? By the parable of a king who had a clock. When his son reached puberty, he said to him: My son, until now the clock has been in my keeping. From now on, I turn it over to you. So, too, the Holy One used to hallow new moons and intercalate years. But when Israel arose, He said to them: Until now the reckoning of new moons and of New Year's Day has been in My keeping. From now on, they are turned over to you.[12]

81. There was a large courtyard in Jerusalem called Beth Yaazek, where all the witnesses[13] used to gather, and there the court examined them. As an inducement for them to come, lavish fare was provided for them.

How did they examine the witnesses? The pair that came first was examined first. The senior of the pair was brought in and asked, "Tell us, in exactly what position did you see the moon? Turned toward the sun? Away from it? To the north? To the south? How high in the sky was it? Toward what point of the compass did it incline? How thick was the crescent?"

After that, the second witness [of the pair] was brought in and examined. If their accounts tallied, their evidence was held valid. Then the other pairs were questioned only briefly, not because their evidence was really needed, but in order that they did not go away disappointed and were induced to continue to come.

The head of the court would then declare, "Hallowed," and all the people would repeat after him, "Hallowed, hallowed."

Rabban Gamaliel used to have a diagram of the phases of the moon on a tablet [hung] on the wall of his upper chamber, and as he showed them to the unlearned, he would ask, "Did it look like this, or like this?"[14]

82. At first, testimony concerning [the appearance of] the new moon was received from anyone. However, following the nefarious schemes of the Boethusians, it was enacted that testimony should be received only from persons who were known.

What nefarious schemes did the Boethusians contrive? Because the Boethusians believe that the Feast of Weeks must fall only on a Sunday, they conspired on one occasion to mislead the sages [concerning the day on which the month of Nisan had begun].[15] For four hundred zuz, 12. Tanhuma B, Bo, §12.

13. Witnesses who had seen the new moon's crescent. The court hallowed the new moon on the basis of their testimony.
14. RH 2:5–8.
15. By making them believe that the new moon of Nisan had been seen on the thirtieth of Adar, which was a Sabbath, when in fact it had not, so that the second day of Passover might fall on a Sunday and the counting of the omer might commence literally "on the morrow of the Sabbath" (Lev. 23:15), according to their interpretation of the words in Leviticus (Rashi).

they hired two men, one belonging to our party and one to theirs. The one of their party gave his evidence and departed. Then they asked our man: Tell us how you saw the moon. He replied: As I was going up the Ascent of Adummim,[1] I saw the new moon's crescent couched between two rocks, its head like that of a calf, its ears like those of a kid, its horns like those of a hind, and its tail lying between its legs. when I caught sight of its [strange configuration], I was so startled that I fell backward. [The fact is, I was bribed to make you believe that I had seen the new moon, and I promised that I would. Since you obviously do not believe me, I have not succeeded in doing what I promised to do. Being an honest man, I cannot keep the bribe I have not earned.] Since you do not believe me, here are the two hundred zuz. I cannot keep them.[2]

The sages then asked him: Who induced you to do this? He replied: I heard that the Boethusians were conspiring to mislead the sages, so I said [to myself]: I will go and tell the truth to the sages, lest scoundrels come and mislead them. The sages said: The two hundred zuz are yours as a gift, and the man who hired you shall be stretched out on the post [to receive a flogging].

There and then it was ordained that testimony should be received only from persons who were known to the sages.[3]

83. Formerly, beacons would be lit. But after the Cutheans spoiled their effectiveness,[4] it was enacted that messengers should go forth.

How were the beacons lit? They used to take long poles of cedarwood, reeds, olive wood, and short fibers of flax; a man would bind them together with a rope and go to the top of a hill, where he would set them on fire and then wave the pole back and forth and up and down, until he saw his fellow do the same on top of the next hill; and so, too, on top of the third hill, [and so on], until he finally saw the entire Diaspora as though it were one big bonfire spread out before him.

But how could the individual torches appear like one big bonfire? Because each and every person took a torch in his hand and went up to his roof.[5]

84. "This new moon is for you" (Exod. 12:2). It is under your authority, and you are not under its authority. [That the moon is under Israel's authority may be seen from] a story told of R. Hiyya the Elder. Once, on the night ushering in [a Wednesday preceding the day when] New Year's Day [had to be set], the [old] moon was so bright that cattle drivers were able to walk three mil by its light.[6] When R. Hiyya saw the moon, he threw pebbles and clods of earth at it, saying, "It is tomorrow that we wish to declare you the new moon, yet you have arisen now![7] Go, cover yourself." The moon vanished then and there.[8]

85. Our masters taught: The year may be intercalated [by the court] only in Judea. Still, if [for some reason] the decision was arrived at by the court in Galilee, the year is deemed to have been intercalated. However, Hananiah of Ono testified: If the decision was arrived at in Galilee, the year is not deemed to have been intercalated. Nor may the year be intercalated outside the Land. If it had been intercalated there, it is not to be regarded as intercalated, provided that it is possible to intercalate it in the Land of Israel.

R. Judah son of R. Simeon ben Pazzi said: What is R. Hananiah of Ono's proof? The verse "In His habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shalt come" (Deut. 12:5). Whatever search you have to make in a religious matter is to be made only in the habitation of Him who is everywhere.[9]

86. R. Hananiah the son of R. Joshua's brother intercalated the year outside the Land. Rabbi[10] sent him three successive missives by the hand of R. Isaac and R. Nathan. In the first, he addressed him [respectfully] as "the saintly Hananiah." In the second, he reminded him: "The kids you left have become goats."[11] In the third, he reproved him: "If you do not yield, you may as well go forth into a wilderness of brambles, [erect a private high place], slaughter an animal, and let Nehunion[12] dash [the blood of the offering]."

After Hananiah read the first missive, he was deferential to the two emissaries. After he read the second, he continued to be deferential. But after he read the third, he started to insult them. They said to him, "How can you treat us so rudely after you had shown deference to us?"

Then R. Isaac stood up and exclaimed [ironically], "In the Torah it is said, 'These are the appointed seasons of Hananiah the son of R. Joshua's brother.' They replied, "You mean, 'The appointed seasons of the Lord' " (Lev. 23:4). R. Isaac: "Only when so designated among us [in the Land of Israel]."

R. Nathan stood up and concluded [the interchange] with "For out of Babylonia shall go forth the Torah, and the word of the Lord from Nehar Pekod."[13] They said,

---

1. See Josh. 15:7.
2. Interpretation suggested by Leon Nemoy.
3. B. RH 22b; Tos RH 1:15.
4. By lighting their own beacons at the wrong time.
5. R. RH 22b–23a.
6. A sign that the new moon would not appear for at least twenty-four hours. See B. RH 20b.
7. Were the old moon visible during the night ushering in Wednesday, Thursday would have to be the thirtieth day in the month of Elul, and not New Year's Day. New Year's Day would then fall on Friday, and ten days later, the Day of Atonement on a Sunday, bringing about an impossible situation in households.

   Rabbi Saul Leeman of Providence, R.I., who explained the passage to the translator, suggests another possibility: R. Hiyya saw not the old moon, but, prematurely, the new moon, which would make Wednesday New Year's Day; the Day of Atonement would fall on a Friday, likewise intolerable in households.
8. B. RH 25a; Tanhuma B, Bo, §8.
9. In the Land of Israel. B. Sanh 11b; P. Ned 6:8, 40a.
10. An unnamed patriarch.
11. The young disciples have now become mature scholars, and their decisions should be obeyed.
12. The exilarch who approved of R. Hananiah's action.
13. Hananiah's place of residence in Babylonia.

"You mean—do you not?—'Out of Zion shall go forth the Torah, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem' " (Isa. 2:3). R. Nathan: "Only when decisions have been reached among us [in the Land of Israel]."

R. Hananiah went and complained about Rabbi to R. Judah ben Beterah in Nisibis. R. Judah responded, "Follow them, follow them."

R. Hananiah: "Am I not aware of the kind of scholars I left there [in the Land of Israel]? Who will persuade me that they know how to reckon the calendar as well as I?"

Just because he says, "They do not know how to reckon the calendar as well as I," must they [in the Land of Israel] heed him? [On the contrary], precisely because they [in the Land of Israel] say, "We know how to reckon," he [R. Hananiah] must heed them [because they are many, and he is only one].

R. Judah ben Beterah rose up, mounted a horse [and rode off to have his opinion made known everywhere]. The places he got to, he got to; in the places where he did not get to, the people guided themselves by the inaccurate calendar [as reckoned by R. Hananiah].[1]

87. The hallowing of the new moon may be performed by three elders, but the intercalation of the year requires ten.

Whenever our masters went in to intercalate a year, ten learned elders entered the house of study, and with them the president of the court. They shut the windows and discussed the matter in detail throughout the night. At midnight they said to the president of the court: We wish to intercalate this year, so that it will have thirteen months. Will you join us in so decreeing? He responded: Whatever your decision, I am with you.

At this moment, a light shone forth from the house of study and illuminated them. Then they knew that God was satisfied with their decision.[2]

88. Our masters taught: The year is to be intercalated only by those who are invited in advance to the proceedings.

It once happened that Rabban Gamaliel [II] said, "Send me up seven scholars[3] early in the morning to the upper chamber[4] [to intercalate an additional month in the year]." But when he arrived in the morning, he found eight. So he said, "Whoever has come up without permission, let him go down." Samuel the Little stood up and said, "It is I who came up without permission. My purpose was not to participate in the intercalation of the year, but I felt the need to learn the practical application of the law." Rabban Gamaliel answered, "Sit down, my son, sit down. You are worthy of intercalating all the years that require it. However, the rabbis have declared, 'It should be done only by those specially invited to the proceedings.' "

In reality, it was not Samuel the Little [who was the uninvited one], but another man [present there]; Samuel only wished to save the intruder from humiliation.[5]

89. Our masters taught: A year cannot be intercalated unless the patriarch approves the decision. It once happened that Rabban Gamaliel was away seeking permission[6] from the governor of Syria, and as his return was delayed, the year was intercalated subject to Rabban Gamaliel's later approval. When Rabban Gamaliel returned, he gave his approval, with the result that the intercalation held good.[7]

90. Our masters taught: A year may be intercalated only when [an additional month] is required to [give time to repair] roads and bridges, [time to dry] ovens[8] [required for roasting] the paschal lambs, or time for pilgrims from distant Diasporas who have already left their homes but are as yet unable to reach [Jerusalem for Passover]. However, a year may not be intercalated because of heavy snows or cold weather,[9] or for the sake of pilgrims from distant Diasporas [who at the time of the court's deliberations] have not yet set out [from their homes].

Our masters taught further: A year may not be intercalated because kids or lambs [set aside for the paschal offering] or doves are still too young.[10] But such circumstances are considered an auxiliary reason[11] for intercalating a year. How so? R. Yannai gave such an instance by quoting [from a letter to the communities in the Diaspora] that Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel had written: "We beg to inform you that the doves are still tender, the lambs are still too young, and the grain has not yet ripened. After considering the matter, I have deemed it advisable to add thirty days to the year."

We are taught that once Rabban Gamaliel [II][12] was sitting on a step on the Temple Mount, and standing before him was the well-known scribe Yohanan, who had three neatly trimmed sheets of parchment lying before him. "Take one sheet," Rabban Gamaliel said, "and write the following: 'To our brethren in Upper Galilee and to our brethren in Lower Galilee, may your peace grow great! We beg to inform you that the time has come for removing the accumulated tithes from the olive vats.'[13] Take another

---

1. P. Ned 6:8, 40a.
2. Exod. R. 15:20.
3. The seven, together with Rabban Gamaliel and his two aides, would make ten.
4. The meeting place of the rabbis.
5. B. Sanh 10b–11a.
6. "In order to secure confirmation of his appointment as patriarch . . . or to obtain permission for intercalating the year." (Isidore Epstein in Sanh, Soncino. p. 47, n. 2).
7. B. Sanh 11a.
8. Since these ovens were erected in the open and exposed to the winter rains, they became unfit for use.
9. These need not prevent pilgrims from proceeding to Jerusalem.
10. Doves were prescribed as offerings by women after childbirth and by persons cured from flux. As a rule, these people postponed bringing their offerings until Passover. Since they could bring young pigeons as their offerings in lieu of doves (Lev. 12:8), the year was not intercalated to meet their special needs.
11. Two reasons were required to justify intercalation.
12. He was noted for firmness in enforcing his authority.
13. "Tithes were of four classes: (a) the Levitical or first tithe; (b) the priestly tithe given by the Levites from their own tithe; (c) the second tithe, and (d) the triennial or poor tithe. The second tithe was to be eaten in Jerusalem every year of the septennial cycle, except the sheet and write the following: 'To our brethren in the south, may your peace grow great! We beg to inform you that the time has come for removing the accumulated tithes from the corn sheaves.'[1] Take the third sheet and write the following: 'To our brethren the exiles in Babylonia and our brethren in Media, and to all the other exiled people of Israel, may your peace grow great forever! We beg to inform you that the doves are still tender, the lambs are still too young, and the crops are not yet ripe. After I, along with my colleagues,[2] have considered the matter, I have deemed it advisable to add thirty days to this year.' "[3]

91. Three cowherds were standing together [and talking], and the sages happened to overhear what they were saying. One said: If the early and the late sowing[4] sprout together [because the air is warm], the month is Adar; if not, it is not Adar, [but still Shevat]. The second cowherd said: If in the morning the frost is severe enough to [almost] kill an ox, and if at midday the ox lies in the shade of a fig tree and rubs its hide [against a tree to get relief from the heat], then it is already Adar; if not, it is not Adar. The third said: When a strong east wind is blowing and your breath can prevail against it, the month is Adar; if not, it is not Adar [but still Shevat]. That year the sages intercalated a month relying on what the cowherds had to say.[5]

92. Once, the following message [from the land of Israel] was sent to Rava: From Rakkath[6] there arrived a pair of scholars who, because they were in possession of certain articles[7] manufactured in Luz, had been apprehended by the eagle.[8] However, through divine mercy and their own merits, they escaped safely. Further, Nahshon's offspring[9] wished to set up a netziv,[10] but the Edomite[11] would not permit it.[12] Nevertheless, the members of the council[13] did meet, and they set up a netziv in the month in which Aaron the [High] Priest died.[14]

New Year's Day and the Day of Atonement

93. R. Phinehas and R. Hilkiah taught in the name of R. Simon: When all the ministering angels gather before the Holy One and say, "Master of the universe, what day is New Year's Day?" He replies, "Are you asking Me? Let us, you and Me, ask the court on earth."

R. Hoshaiah taught: When an earthly court decrees, "Today is New Year's Day," the Holy One tells the ministering angels, "Set up the judicial dais. Summon the advocates to defend and to prosecute. For My children have decreed that today is New Year's Day." If, however, the court has decided to intercalate the year [and thus to advance New Year's Day to] the next day, the Holy One tells the ministering angels, "Remove the judicial dais, dismiss all the advocates, since My children have decreed, 'Tomorrow is New Year's Day.' " And the proof?

"A decree for Israel is an ordinance for the God of Jacob" (Ps. 81:5). But when it is not a decree for Israel, it is not—if one dare speak thus—an ordinance for the God of Jacob.[15]

94. R. Kruspedai said in the name of R. Yohanan: On New Year's Day, three books are opened—one with the names of the completely righteous, one with the names of the completely wicked, and one with the names of those who are neither completely righteous nor completely wicked. The completely righteous: their verdict—life—is written down and sealed at once. The completely wicked: their verdict—death—is written down and sealed at once. Those neither completely righteous nor completely wicked: their verdict is suspended between New Year's Day and the Day of Atonement. If they are deemed to deserve it [by resolving to repent], they are inscribed for life; if [they fail to repent] and are therefore deemed not to deserve life, they are inscribed for death.[16]

95. R. Isaac said: Why on New Year's Day do we sound a tekiah and a teruah while seated, and then again a third and sixth, when it was replaced by the poor tithe. The whole series of tithes reached its completion close upon Passover in the fourth and seventh year, and all the tithes which ought to have been paid in the course of the three years, but which, whether through negligence or other circumstances, were not given, had to be removed on the eve of Passover, and a prayer of confession offered, in accordance with Deut. 26:13." (Isidore Epstein in Sanh, Soncino, p. 48, n. 4).

---

1. "The chief product of Galilee was olives, and that of the south, wheat" (Isidore Epstein in Sanh, Soncino, p. 48, n. 5).
2. He thus associated his colleagues with the epistle, whereas his son, though noted for his modesty, did not refer to his colleagues.
3. B. Sanh 11a.
4. The wheat sown earlier, and the barley sown later (Rashi).
5. B. Sanh 18b.
6. Tiberias (see B. Meg 6a).
7. Fringes dyed purple and used for garments that had four corners. See Num. 15:38.
8. The eagle was the principal standard of the Roman legions—hence, the Roman government.
9. The patriarch, who descended from Nahshon, the first of the princes of Judah. See Exod. 6:23.
10. Netziv ("military post") is a cipher for "month"; that is, they wished to intercalate a month in the year.
11. "Primarily name given to Esau (cf. Gen. 25:30; 36:1). Edom is used by the Talmudists for the Roman Empire, as they applied to Rome every passage of the Bible referring to Edom or Esau. In the Middle Ages it came to be used symbolically of Christianity, and that accounts for the substitution of 'Aramean' in censored editions" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 52, n. 8).
12. "The above messages were sent in this obscure form to prevent them from being stopped by the Government under the reign of Constantius II (337–361 C.E.), when the persecutions of the Jews reached such a height that, as in the days of Hadrian, all religious exercises, including the computation of the calendar, were forbidden under pain of severe punishment. Cf. [Heinrich] Graetz" (Sanh, Soncino. p. 52, n. 9).
13. The Sanhedrin.
14. The month of Av. B. Sanh 12a.
15. P. RH 1:3, 57b; MTeh 81:6.
16. B. RH 16b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

tekiah and a teruah while standing? To confuse Satan.[1]

R. Abbahu said: Why do we sound a ram's horn? Because the Holy One said: Sound before Me a ram's horn so that I may remember on your behalf the binding of Isaac son of Abraham and deem it for you as if you had bound yourselves on the altar before Me.[2]

96. R. Abbahu taught: The ministering angels spoke up to the Holy One: Master of the universe, why do Israel not chant praise before You on New Year's Day and on the Day of Atonement? He replied: Is it possible that while the King is seated on the throne of judgment, with books of death open before Him, Israel should be chanting praise?[3]

97. R. Tanhuma said: It once happened on the eve of the Day of Atonement that a certain tailor in Rome went to the market to buy fish and found only one fish.

So he and the governor's servant [who was also there] vied for the purchase [of the fish], this one bidding up the price and that one bidding up the price, until it reached twelve denars. In the end, it was the tailor who bought the fish. At mealtime, the governor asked his servant: Why did you not serve fish? The servant replied: My lord, why conceal from you what happened? I went to the market, where there was only one fish left, and I and a Jew found ourselves vying for it until he bid up the price to twelve denars. I wonder, now, what you would have had me do? Bring you a fish that cost twelve denars? The governor: Who is the Jew? The servant: So-and-so. The governor: Go and summon him, for apparently the Jew owns a treasure that properly belongs to the king. The servant went forth and summoned the Jew. The governor asked him: What is your work? The Jew replied: I am a tailor. The governor asked: How is it that you, a mere Jewish tailor, presume to eat a fish that cost twelve denars? The Jew replied: My lord, we Jews have one day that atones for all the sins we have committed throughout the year. When this day comes, should we not honor it? The governor said: Since you bring such a reason for what you have done, you are free to go.

How did the Holy One requite the tailor? When the tailor cut open the fish, God had him find a pearl of purest ray in it, and on the money he got for the pearl he sustained himself all the rest of his days.[4]

98. He who says again and again, "I will sin and then repent"—he will be given no opportunity to repent. He who says, "I will sin, and the Day of Atonement will procure forgiveness for me"—the Day of Atonement will not procure forgiveness for him. Furthermore, the Day of Atonement procures forgiveness only for man's transgressions against Him who is everywhere, but it does not procure forgiveness for man's transgressions against his neighbor until the man has conciliated his neighbor. R. Eleazar ben Azariah expounded this principle by quoting, "From all your sins before the Lord shall ye be clean" (Lev. 16:30). That is, only for man's transgressions against Him who is everywhere does the Day of Atonement procure forgiveness, but for man's transgressions against his neighbor, the Day of Atonement does not procure forgiveness until he has conciliated his neighbor.

R. Akiva said: Happy are you, Israel! Who is He before whom you are cleansed? And who is He that makes you clean? Your Father who is in heaven, for He said, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean" (Ezek. 36:25). And Scripture further says, "Thou pool[5] of Israel, the Lord!" (Jer. 17:13). Just as the pool cleanses those who are unclean, so the Holy One cleanses Israel.[6]

99. You will find that the numerical value of the letters in hstn [Satan], "the Adversary," is three hundred and sixty-four,[7] which is one short of the number of days in the year. Thus the Adversary is given the authority to make accusations against the children of Israel on all the days of the year except the Day of Atonement, for the Holy One said to him, "You have no authority to touch them. Nevertheless, go and see what they are occupied with." Then, when the Adversary goes forth and finds all of them at fasting and prayer, dressed in white [penitential] garments and cloaked like the ministering angels, he immediately returns in shame and confusion. The Holy One asks him, "What have you found out about My children?" He answers, "They are like the ministering angels, and I am unable to touch them." At once, the Holy One shackles the Adversary and announces to the children of Israel, "I have forgiven you."[8]

100. "I am black, but comely" (Song 1:5). "I am black" throughout the days of the year; "but comely" on the Day of Atonement.[9]

101. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: There never were greater days of joy in Israel than the fifteenth of Av and the Day of Atonement. On these days the daughters of Jerusalem used to walk out in white garments, which they borrowed in order not to put to shame anyone who owned none. The daughters of Jerusalem would go out and dance in the vineyards. What did they chant? "Young man,

---

1. "The devotion of the Jews to the precepts nullifies Satan's accusation against them (Rashi). The shofar on New Year is blown twice: once at the close of the morning prayer and of the reading of the Law while the congregation is seated, and again during the Musaf prayers, when the people stand. The shofar was originally blown only at the morning service, whence it was transferred to a later hour in the Musaf because their enemies on one occasion took the shofar blasts early in the morning as a call to arms, whereupon they attacked the Jews. The custom of blowing the shofar at Musaf service was retained even after the rite had been restored to the morning service" (RH, Soncino, p. 61, n. 5).
2. B. RH 16a–b.
3. B. RH 32b.
4. Gen. R. 11:4; PR 23:6.
5. The Hebrew mikveh means "pool for immersion" as well as "hope," the usual translation here.
6. B. Yoma 85b.
7. h = 5, s [sin] = 300, t [tet] = 9, n = 50.
8. MTeh 27:4.
9. Song R. 1:5, §2.

lift up your eyes and see what you choose for yourself. Do not set your eyes on beauty, but set your eyes on good family. 'Grace is deceitful, and beauty is vain; but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised' " (Prov. 31:30).

Our masters taught: What did the beautiful women among the daughters of Jerusalem chant? "Set your eyes on beauty—what is woman for, if not for beauty?" What did those among them who came of noble families chant? "Look for good lineage—woman has been created to bring children into the world [and our lineage is good]." What did those among them who were rich chant? "Set your eyes on moneyed ones." What did those among them in modest circumstances, the poor, and the homely chant? "Carry off your 'purchase' in the name of Heaven, but on condition that you crown us with gold coins; [then we, too, will appear to be rich and beautiful]."[1]

Pilgrimage Festivals

102. "On the eighth day, ye shall have a solemn assembly" (Num. 29:35). The Holy One said to Israel: Rejoicing becomes you, appointed seasons become you, festal days become you.

"Thou hast increased for the nation" (Isa. 26:15). When You multiply festal days for the nations of the world, they eat, drink, and carouse, attend their theaters and circuses, and provoke You with their [foul] utterances and [vile] deeds. But Israel are not like that. When You increase festal days for them, they eat, drink, and rejoice, but then attend synagogues and houses of study, and augment the number of their prayers.[2]

103. In Sepphoris, a heathen posed a question to R. Akiva: Why do you go on observing the appointed seasons? Did not the Holy One say to you, "Your New Moons and your appointed seasons My soul hateth" (Isa. 1:14)? R. Akiva replied: Had the Holy One said, "My New Moons and My appointed seasons My soul hateth," I might have agreed with you. But what He said was: "Your New Moons and your appointed seasons," meaning the appointed seasons that Jeroboam son of Nebat instituted, of which Scripture says, "Jeroboam ordained a feast in the eighth month . . . even in the month which he had devised of his own heart" (1 Kings 12:32–33). But the appointed seasons you refer to will never cease, nor will the New Moons. Why not? Because they belong to the Holy One, as is said, "These are the appointed seasons of the Lord" (Lev. 23:4).[3]

104. R. Sheshet said in the name of R. Eleazar ben Azariah: He who despises the festivals[4] is as though he worshiped idols, as implied by the fact that "Thou shalt make thee no molten god" (Exod. 34:17) is followed directly by "The [seven-day] feast of unleavened bread thou shalt keep" (Exod. 34:18).[5]

105. Our masters taught: A man is obligated to cause his wife, his children, and the members of his household to rejoice, as is said, "Thou shalt rejoice in thy feast, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter," etc. (Deut. 16:14). With what is one to cause them to rejoice? With wine. But R. Judah said: Men, with what is suitable for them, and women, with what is suitable for them. Men, with what is suitable for them—with wine. And women, with what? R. Joseph taught: In Babylonia, with colored garments. In the Land of Israel, with shiny linen garments.[6]

106. We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: On a festival, a man is either to eat and drink or to sit and study. But R. Joshua said: Divide the day—half for eating and drinking, and half for spending in the house of study. R. Yohanan noted: Both deduce it from the same verses. One verse says, "A solemn assembly to the Lord thy God" (Deut. 16:8), while another says, "Ye shall have a solemn assembly" (Num. 29:35). How so? R. Eliezer took the two verses to mean: "Either entirely to God or entirely to yourselves," while R. Joshua took them to mean: "Divide the day—half to God and half to yourselves."[7]

107. The appointed seasons were given to Israel for no other purpose than for them to enjoy themselves. The Holy One said: If you enjoy yourselves [this year], you will do so again the following year, as is said, "When thou keepest this ordinance in its season, then from year to year" (Exod. 13:10)—you will be given the opportunity to do so from year to year.[8]

108. "On a festal day be joyful" (Eccles. 7:14). R. Levi interpreted the verse to mean: On the festal days which I have given you, be joyful and cause the Holy One to rejoice. Even when a year of drought[9] comes, go out to your vineyard, look around, and be joyful; look around your olive yard and be joyful.[10]

109. R. Isaac said: A man should purify himself for a festival.[11]

110. R. Isaac said: Where is the proof that during a festival a man should go calling on his master? The verse, "Wherefore wilt thou go to [the man of God] today? It is neither New Moon nor festival"[12] (2 Kings 4:23).

Our masters taught: It once happened that R. Ilai went calling on his master R. Eliezer in Lydda just before a festival. R. Eliezer said, "Ilai, you do not seem to be among those who rest on a festival." For R. Eliezer used to say, "I praise the indolent who do not go out of their houses during a festival, in keeping with 'Thou shalt re-

---

1. B. Ta 26b and 31a, and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. Yalkut, Pinhas, §782.
3. Tanhuma B, Pinhas, §17; Yalkut, Isa., §255.
4. Does work during the intermediate days. So Rashbam, ad loc.
5. The juxtaposition implies their being equated. B. Pes 118a.
6. B. Pes 109a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. B. Pes 68b; Betz 15b.
8. Tanhuma, Bereshit, §4.
9. "Without drought" in BR is a euphemism.
10. Confident that God will bestow rain. Eccles. R. 7:14, §3.
11. B. RH 16b.
12. JV: "neither New Moon nor Sabbath." But "Sabbath" can also mean "festival," as in Lev. 23:11.

joice in thy feast, thou, together with thy son, together with thy daughter,' etc." (Deut. 16:14).[1]

111. You find three verses that command you to rejoice in the Feast of Tabernacles: "And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast" (Deut. 16:14); "And thou shalt be altogether joyful" (Deut. 16:15); "And ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days" (Lev. 23:40). For Passover, however, you will not find even one command to rejoice. Why not? Because in the season of Passover, judgment is being passed on field crops,[2] and no man knows whether the year will bring forth crops or not. So, too, you find that for the Feast of Weeks there is but one command to rejoice: "And thou shalt keep the Feast of Weeks unto the Lord thy God . . . and thou shalt rejoice . . . thou, and thy son," etc. (Deut. 16:10–11). Why that one? Because the field crop has already been brought into the house. Then why not two commands to rejoice? Because judgment is then being passed on fruits of trees. For Tabernacles, however, when both field crops and fruits of the tree have been brought into the house, three commands to rejoice are set down.

Another answer to the question of why Scripture gives no command to rejoice even once during Passover: because the Egyptians died during the Passover. Therefore you find that, though we read the entire Hallel on each of the seven days of Tabernacles [an entirely joyful feast], on Passover we read the entire Hallel only on the first day and the night preceding it. Why not on the other days of the festival? Because of "Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thy heart be glad when he stumbleth" (Prov. 24:17).[3]

112. We have been taught that R. Judah said in the name of R. Akiva: Why did the Torah say, "Offer an omer of barley on Passover"? Because Passover is the season of produce. Therefore the Holy One said, "Bring before Me an omer on Passover, so that the produce in the fields may be blessed for you." Why did the Torah say, "Bring two loaves of wheat bread on the Feast of Weeks"? Because the Feast of Weeks is the time when fruits ripen on the trees. So the Holy One said, "Bring into My presence two loaves of wheat bread on the Feast of Weeks, in order that the fruits of trees may be blessed for you."[4] And why did the Torah say, "Pour libations of water before Me on Tabernacles"? Because Tabernacles is the time when the year's rains begin. So the Holy One said, "Pour out before Me waters of libation during Tabernacles, so that the year's rains be blessed for you." The Holy One also said, "On New Year's Day, recite before Me texts that mention kingships, remembrances, and shofars—kingships, so that you may proclaim Me King over you; remembrances, so that remembrance of you may rise up before Me for favor. And how will remembrance of you be made to rise up before Me? By the shofar."[5]

113. The Boethusians insisted that the Feast of Weeks must always fall on a day after Sabbath [on a Sunday]. R. Yohanan ben Zakkai joined them in a discussion and finally said, "Fools that you are. What proof have you?" Not one of them could answer him, except an old man, who babbled away, saying, "Moses our teacher loved Israel, and since he knew that the Feast of Weeks lasted only one day, he fixed it on the day after the Sabbath, so that Israel might enjoy themselves for two successive days." R. Yohanan quoted to him the following verse: "It is eleven days' journey from Horeb to Kadesh-barnea by way of Mount Seir" (Deut. 1:2), and went on: "If Moses loved Israel so much, why did he detain them in the wilderness forty years?" "Master," the old man said, "is it with such an argument that you would dismiss me?" "Fool," R. Yohanan answered, "should not our perfect Torah be as convincing as your idle talk? Now, one verse says, 'Ye shall number fifty days' [Lev. 23:16], while another says, 'Seven weeks shall there be complete' [Lev. 23:15]. How can the two verses be reconciled?[6] Only by assuming that the second verse refers to the time when the [first day of the] festival [of Passover] falls on a Sabbath,[7] while the first verse refers to the time when the [first day of the] festival falls on a weekday."[8]

114. Our masters taught: In the words "Ye shall sit in booths" (Lev. 23:42), "sit" means "reside." Hence, they went on to say: During the seven days [of Tabernacles], a man is to make his sukkah the permanent abode, and his home the occasional one. How? If he has beautiful vessels, he should bring them up to the sukkah.[9] If he has beautiful divans, he should bring them up to the sukkah. He should eat and drink, pass his leisure, and study in the sukkah.[10]

115. R. Eliezer said: One is obligated to eat fourteen meals in the sukkah, one each day and one each night.

King Agrippa's administrator asked R. Eliezer: May a man such as I, who eats only one meal a day, eat only one meal in the sukkah and be free of further obligation? R. Eliezer replied: Every day you prolong your meal with all kinds of delicacies to enhance your own honor; for this occasion, will you not prolong the meal with but one more delicacy in honor of your Maker?[11]

116. We have been taught that R. Eleazar bar Zadok said: Such was the custom of distinguished men of Jerusalem: a man would leave his house with the lulav cluster in his hand. He would walk to the synagogue with the lulav cluster in his hand. He would read the Shema and recite the Tefillah with the lulav cluster in his hand. But

---

1. B. Suk 27b.
2. RH 1:1.
3. Yalkut, Emor, §654.
4. The firstfruits of trees were not brought as offerings until the Feast of Weeks.
5. B. RH 16a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. The first verse seems to speak of fifty days regardless of the completeness of the weeks; the second verse, which speaks of "seven weeks . . . complete," seems to imply full weeks, each commencing on a Sunday.
7. In which case there are seven complete weeks.
8. Accordingly, the Feast of Weeks may fall on any day of the week. B. Men 65b.
9. The sukkah was built on the roof.
10. B. Suk 28b.
11. B. Suk 27a.

before he read in the Torah or lifted his hands [for the priests' benediction], he laid the lulav cluster on the ground. When he went to visit the sick or comfort the mourners, it was with the lulav cluster in his hand. But when he entered the house of study, he would have his son, his slave, or his messenger take his lulav cluster home.[1] You are thus made aware how zealous those men were in the performance of precepts.[2]

117. "And ye shall take for you" (Lev. 23:40). "For you" here means "what is yours." The sages inferred from this verse that no one may fulfill his obligation on the first day of Tabernacles with a lulav cluster that belongs to his fellow, unless he later has given it to him as a gift.

It once happened that Rabban Gamaliel, R. Joshua, R. Eleazar ben Azariah, and R. Akiva were traveling on a ship, and only Rabban Gamaliel had a lulav, which he had purchased for a thousand zuz. Rabban Gamaliel took it up, fulfilled his obligation with it, and gave it to R. Joshua as a gift. R. Joshua took it up, fulfilled his obligation with it, and gave it to R. Eleazar ben Azariah as a gift. Finally, R. Akiva took it up, fulfilled his obligation with it, and gave it back to Rabban Gamaliel as a gift.[3]

118. "On the eighth day ye shall have [an additional] solemn assembly" (Num. 29:35). The need for an additional day may be illustrated by the parable of a king who invited his children to a feast for such-and-such a number of days. When their time came to depart, he said: My children, I beg of you, stay on for an additional day—the prospect of separation from you is hard for me.[4]

119. R. Levi said: God desired to give to the children of Israel a festival for each and every month during the summer, so He gave them Passover in Nisan, the minor Passover[5] in Iyyar, and the Feast of Weeks in Sivan. But as He was about to give them a notable feast in Tammuz, they made themselves the golden calf,[6] and as a result He took away the festivals He had intended for the months of Tammuz, Av, and Elul. He made up, however, for Israel's being deprived of the festivals He had intended them to celebrate during the three previous months by assigning them all to the following month, Tishri, and having the three festivals—New Year's Day, the Day of Atonement, and Tabernacles—celebrated within Tishri's span. Then the Holy One said to them: Since Tishri has been used to make up for the other months and has not been given a festival that is its own, let it be given its own day. Hence, "On the eighth day ye shall have [an additional] solemn assembly" (Num. 29:35).

About this matter, Scripture says, "Give a portion [of honor] to seven, and also to [the day that brings the number up to] eight" (Eccles. 11:2): "Give a portion [of honor]" to Tabernacles' seven days: "and also to [the day that brings the number up to] eight." Here the Holy One charged Israel concerning the eighth day's holiness.[7]

120. "Solemn confining[8] by you" (Num. 29:35). Of the confining enjoined at Passover, Scripture says in Deuteronomy, "Solemn confining by the Lord thy God" (Deut. 16:8), while here in Numbers, Scripture says of the Eighth Day Festival, "Solemn confining by you" (Num. 29:35). R. Hanina bar Adda explained: For your sake, says God, on Passover I confine the winds and the rains in order that you may occupy yourselves with harvesting your fields. But during the present season, during Tabernacles, when for My sake you [make pilgrimages to Jerusalem and there—absent from your fields—] confine yourselves [in sukkahs], I open for the sake of your crops the treasuries wherein are winds, wherein are rains.[9]

121. When you consider the matter, you would say that as the concluding Festival of Weeks follows Passover after an interval of fifty days, so the festival at Tabernacles' conclusion should follow Tabernacles after an interval of fifty days. Why, then, does the festival come right after Tabernacles? In answer, R. Joshua ben Levi asked: What parable is apt here? He replied: The one of a king who had many sons, some married to wives in a place far away and some married to wives in a place nearby. Whenever they wished to, those married to wives in the place nearby would come visit him, and when they wished to leave, he was not distressed. Why not? Because, since the journey was short, whenever they wished to come and return home, they could easily come and go [in one day]. But when those who were married to wives in a distant place came to him and then wished to leave, he would press them to remain with him for yet one more day. Likewise, at Passover the days of summer are to begin soon enough, so that after a fifty days' interim Israel may conveniently come up to Jerusalem for Passover's concluding festival, the Feast of Weeks. But the season after Tabernacles is the rainy season, when the roads are troublesome. Therefore the Holy One said: As long as the children of Israel are here, let them also observe the concluding festival. Hence, "on the eighth day, for your own sake, ye shall have a festival" (Num. 29:35).[10]

Hanukkah and Purim

122. In the days of the wicked kingdom of Greece, it was decreed upon Israel that whoever had a bolt on his door should engrave upon it the words "I have neither portion nor heritage in the God of Israel." At once, Israel went and pulled out the bolts from their doors. It was also

---

1. His absorption in study might cause him to drop it or forget its very existence.
2. B. Suk 41b.
3. B. Suk 41b.
4. B. Suk 55b; Rashi on Lev. 23:36.
5. See Num. 9:10ff.
6. On the seventeenth of Tammuz, after which Israel remained in disgrace until the tenth of Tishri, the day God pardoned Israel's sin. See PR 26:6; B. Ta 28b; and Rashi.
7. Yalkut, Pinhas, §782.
8. JV: "solemn assembly." However, atzeret may also mean "solemn confining."
9. Yalkut, Pinhas, §782.
10. Ibid.

decreed that whoever had an ox should write on its horn, "I have neither portion nor heritage in the God of Israel." At once, Israel went and sold their oxen.[1]

123. Why are lamps kindled during Hanukkah? At the time that the sons of the Hasmonean triumphed and entered the Temple, they found there eight spits of iron that they set up firmly and then kindled wicks [with oil they poured into the depressions at the top].[2]

124. With the beginning of Adar we may increase indulgence in amusements.[3]

125. R. Samuel bar judah said: Esther sent word to the sages, saying: [By a book or a festival], fix the memory of me for generations to come. They sent word to her: Such an act would cause ill will against us among the nations of the world. She replied to them: But I am already recorded in the Chronicles of the Kings of Media and Persia.[4]

126. Rava said: On Purim it is a man's duty to mellow himself with wine until he cannot tell the difference between "Cursed be Haman" and "Blessed be Mordecai."

Rabbah and R. Zera joined together in a Purim feast. Rabbah became mellow and plied R. Zera with so much drink that he passed out. The next morning, Rabbah besought mercy and revived him.[5] But the following year, when Rabbah said to R. Zera, "Let the master come and we will celebrate Purim together," R. Zera replied, "[Sorry], but one cannot expect a miracle on every occasion."[6]

The Scroll of Fasts

127. Our masters taught: Who wrote the Scroll of Fasts?[7] The sages replied: Hananiah ben Hezekiah and his companions, for, cherishing the troubles [from which they had been redeemed, they wished to record them].

Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: We, too, cherish [the memory of] such troubles. But what are we to do? If we were to attempt to record them, we would be unequal to the task [since there are so many of them]. Another reason: a fool does not realize he is being oppressed. Still another reason: the flesh of a corpse does not feel the scalpel.[8]

128. Rav and R. Hanina hold that the Scroll of Fasts has been annulled, for only while there is stability[9] are those days to be days of joy and gladness. But when there is no longer such stability, public fasts may be proclaimed on those days. R. Yohanan and R. Joshua ben Levi said: The Scroll of Fasts has not been annulled. Only the four fasts[10] that the Holy One linked with the Temple structure[11] are to become occasions for joy, but the others remain what they were [days on which no public fasts are to be proclaimed].[12]

Fasts

129. [In Jewish history] five punishments befell our forebears on the seventeenth day of Tammuz and another five on the ninth of Av. On the seventeenth day of Tammuz, the Tablets were broken [at the foot of Mount Sinai], the daily offering in the Temple ceased, the city of Jerusalem was breached, Apostomos burned a Torah scroll and set up an idol in the Temple.[13] On the ninth of Av, it was decreed upon our forebears [in the wilderness] that they were not to enter the Land, the Temple was destroyed the first time and the second time, Bethar was captured, and the city [of Jerusalem] was plowed over.[14]

130. R. Simeon said: I do not agree with four expositions R. Akiva used to set forth. [One of them]: R. Akiva used to say that "the fast of the fourth month" (Zech. 8:19) is the ninth of Tammuz, when the city was breached. "The fast of the fifth month" (ibid.) is the ninth of Av, on which the house of our God was burned. "The fast of the seventh month" (ibid.) is the third of Tishri, on which Gedaliah son of Ahikam was slain, assassinated by Ishmael son of Nethaniah.[15] [The fact of a fast's being instituted on that day] shows that the death of the righteous is put on a level with the burning of the house of God. "The fast of the tenth month" (ibid.) is the tenth of Tevet, on which the king of Babylon invested Jerusalem. [It might be asked]: Should this not have been mentioned first?[16] Why then was it mentioned in this place [last]? So as to list the months in their proper order. I, however [continued R. Simeon], do not explain the matter in this way. My view is that "the fast of the tenth month" [does not refer to the tenth of Tevet, which was the first of the calamities, but to] the fifth of Tevet, on which news came to the Diaspora that the city had been smitten, and they put the day of the report on the same footing as the day of [the Temple's] burning. My view is more probable than his, because I follow the chronological order. He does not; true, he does follow the order of months, but I [follow also] the order in which the calamities occurred.[17]

---

1. Midrash le-Hanukkah (BhM 1:133).
2. PR 2:1.
3. B. Ta 29a.
4. B. Meg 7a.
5. So interpreted by Samuel Edels, ad loc.
6. B. Meg 7a.
7. An ancient scroll in which the days on which deliverances had taken place were recorded. On those days, no public fasts were to be observed.
8. B. Shab 13b.
9. While the Temple stands.
10. See below in this chapter, §130.
11. Its burning.
12. B. RH 18b.
13. See Ta 4:6. Gedaliah Alon identified Apostomos as an officer during the revolt against Trajan in 116–17 C.E. See his Toledot ha-Yehudim be-Eretz Yisrael . . . 2 vols. (Tel Aviv, 1953–56), 1:259.
14. B. Ta 26b.
15. See Jer. 41:1–2.
16. The event commemorated being chronologically the first of those mentioned.
17. B. RH 18b; Tos Sot 6:10; Yalkut, Zech., §574.

131. With the beginning of Av we must decrease indulgence in amusements.[1]

132. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Such was the practice of R. Judah son of R. Ilai: on the eve of the ninth of Av, dry bread with salt would be brought to him, and he would sit between the oven and the stove.[2] He would eat the bread with the salt and wash it down with a ladle of water. And he looked as though his dear relative were lying dead before him.[3]

133. Our masters taught: All the laws that apply to mourning apply also to the ninth of Av. On that day eating, drinking, bathing, anointing, wearing shoes, and sexual intercourse are forbidden. It is also forbidden to read in the Five Books, the Prophets, and the Writings, or to study the Mishnah in any of its six divisions, Midrash, Halakhot and Aggadot.[4] However, according to R. Meir, one may read those parts of the Torah that he has not been in the habit of reading and study those parts of the Mishnah that he has not been in the habit of studying.[5] One may also read the book of Lamentations, Job, and the ominous portions in Jeremiah. The children are not free from school. On the other hand, R. Judah said: One is not allowed to read even parts of the Torah that he has not been in the habit of reading or study parts of the Mishnah that he has not been in the habit of studying, but he may read the book of Lamentations, Job, and the ominous portions of Jeremiah. And children are free from school. The reason for the prohibition [of study] is set down in the verse "The precepts of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart" (Ps. 19:9).[6]

134. Some [congregations] read the book of Lamentations in the evening, while others postpone it to the [following] morning, after the reading of the Torah. At that time the reader stands up, his head sprinkled with ashes, his clothes covered with them, weeping and lamenting, reads the book of Lamentations. If he is able to translate it, he may do so; but if not, he gives the book to one who knows how to translate, and [that person] translates it, so that the rest of the men, women, and children may understand it. The reader precedes the reading by saying, "Blessed be the true Judge." Some [congregations] place the Torah scroll, wrapped in a black covering, on the ground and say, "The crown is fallen from our head" (Lam. 5:16). Garments are rent and words of mourning are spoken, like that of a man whose dead lies before him. Some change their [customary] places [in the synagogue]; some come down from their benches [and sit on the floor]. All of them, covered with ashes, refrain from greeting one another all night and all day, until the people have finished reading their book of Lamentations.[7]

135. R. Hana bar Bizna said in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: What is the meaning of the verse "Thus saith the Lord of hosts: The fast of the fourth month, and the fast of the fifth, and the fast of the seventh, and the fast of the tenth shall be to the house of Judah joy and gladness" (Zech. 8:19)? How can the prophet call the four days "fasts" and at the same time call them "joy and gladness"? He intimates by this that when there is stability,[8] they will be for "joy and gladness." But as long as there is no stability, they will remain fasts.[9]

136. "And he said: 'If Esau come to the one camp, and smite it' " (Gen. 32:9); this alludes to our brethren in the south. "Then the camp which is left shall escape" (ibid.) alludes to our brethren in the Diaspora.[10]

Nevertheless, said R. Hoshaia, though they escaped, we fast Mondays and Thursdays on their behalf.[11]

---

1. B. Ta 26b.
2. As an act of humility.
3. B. Ta 30a–b.
4. Because such studies give pleasure.
5. Because they require exertion.
6. B. Ta 30a.
7. Sof 18.
8. The Temple rebuilt.
9. B. RH 18b.
10. To Babylonia. While the Jews in Judea ["our brethren in the south"] were decimated by the Romans, the ones in Babylonia were unscathed.
11. Gen. R. 76:3; Yalkut, Va-yishlah, §131.

PART IV

CHAPTER ONE

THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE, AND RELATIONS BETWEEN HUMAN BEINGS AND HIM WHO IS EVERYWHERE

The Holy One, Blessed Be He

1. Resh Lakish said: In the verse "I will sing unto the Lord, for He is greatly exalted" (Exod. 15:1), the song is to Him who is exalted above all who are exalted. For a master said: The king of beasts is the lion. The king of cattle, the ox. The king of fowl, the eagle. And man is exalted over all of them. But the Holy One, blessed be He, is exalted above them all and above the world, all of it.[1]

2. Every entity regards itself as exalted over another entity. Darkness regards itself as exalted over the deep, because it is above it. Air, as exalted over water, because it is above it. Fire, as exalted over air, because it is above it. The heavens, as exalted over fire, because they are above it. But the Holy One, blessed be He, is truly exalted over them all.[2]

3. "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one" (Deut. 6:4). The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Israel: My children, note that all I created, I created in pairs. Heaven and earth are a pair; the sun and the moon are a pair; Adam and Eve are a pair; this world and the world-to-come are a pair. But My glory is one, and unique in the world.[3]

4. R. Hanina said: The seal of the Holy One, blessed be He, is emet [spelled 'mt], "truth." In explaining the significance of the letters in this word, Resh Lakish said: The first letter, alef, is the first letter of the alphabet; the second letter, mem, is in the middle, and the third letter, tav, is the last letter, thus signifying, "I am the first, and I am the last, and beside Me there is no God" (Isa. 44:6). "I am the first"—I did not receive My kingdom from anyone else. "And beside Me there is no God—I have no partner. "And with the last am the same" (Isa. 41:4)—I am not destined to turn over My kingdom to anyone else.[4]

5. R. Isaac taught: A verse in Deuteronomy speaks of "the skies, the dwelling place of the eternal God" (Deut. 33:27). But we would not have known whether the Holy One, blessed be He, is the dwelling place of the world or whether the world is the dwelling place of the Holy One, blessed be He, unless Moses had come and given us the answer by saying, "Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place . . . from everlasting" (Ps. 90:1).

R. Yose bar Halafta said: We would not have known whether the Holy One, blessed be He, is secondary to His world or whether His world is secondary to Him[5] unless the Holy One Himself, blessed be He, had made the answer plain by saying, "Behold, there is a place by Me" (Exod. 33:21), meaning: "The place is by Me—secondary to Me—and not I to My place."

R. Abba bar Yudan said: He is like a warrior riding upon a horse, with the caparison hanging down on one side and the other; the horse does the bidding of the rider, but the rider does not do the bidding of the horse.

R. Huna said in the name of R. Ammi: Why is the epithet "Place" used for the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He? Because He is the place of the world, and the world is not His place.[6]

6. No spot on earth is devoid of the Presence.[7]

7. R. Hoshaia said: What is meant by "Thou art the Lord, Thou alone . . . and the host of heaven worshipeth Thee" (Neh. 9:6)? Your emissaries are not like the emissaries of flesh and blood. The emissaries of flesh and blood have to report the performance of their task back to the place from which they were sent. But Your emissaries can report the performance of their task at the very place to which they were sent, as is said, "Canst thou send forth lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee: 'Here we are'?" (Job 38:35). Scripture does not aver "that they may come back and say," but "that they may go and say," which proves that the Presence, being in every place, [is there to receive the lightnings' report].[8]

8. "Bless the Lord, O my soul" (Ps. 103:1). The soul—no man knows where its place is. So, too, the Holy One, blessed be He—no creature knows where His place is. Not even the celestial creatures that carry the throne of glory know where His place is, nor in what place He abides. Therefore they say: Whatever place His glory is, "Blessed be the glory of the Lord wherever His place may be" (Ezek. 3:12).[9]

9. It happened that a certain man asked Rabban Gamaliel, "In what place does the Holy One, blessed be He, abide?" Rabban Gamaliel replied, "I do not know." The man said, "Is this your wisdom—the wisdom of the people who pray to God every day yet do not know where His place is?" Rabban Gamaliel replied, "See here, you ask

---

1. B. Hag 13b.
2. Exod. R. 23:13.
3. Deut. R. 2:31; Yalkut, Va-et'hannan, §833.
4. B. Shab 55a; P. Sanh 1:1, 18a; Song R. 1:9, §1.
5. Rather, "appertains to His world or whether His world appertains to Him" (Leon Nemoy).
6. That is to say, without God there would have been no world. Gen. R. 68:9; Exod. R. 45:6; Mteh 90:10.
7. Num. R. 12:4, end.
8. B. BB 25a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. MTeh 103:5; PRE 4.

me about something that is thirty-five hundred years away from me.[1] Now I shall ask you about something that abides with you day and night, and you tell me where its place is." The man asked, "And what is that?" Rabban Gamaliel replied, "It is the soul, which abides within you. Tell me precisely, where does it abide?" The man said, "I do not know." Rabban Gamaliel replied, "May the breath of one such as you be blasted out! You do not know the place of something that abides within you day and night, yet you ask me about something that is thirty-five hundred years away from me!"

The man went on to say to Rabban Gamaliel, "We do well to bow down to the work of our own hands, since we can always see it." Rabban Gamaliel answered, "You see the work of your own hands, but it cannot see you. Whereas the Holy One, blessed be He, sees the work of His hands, but the work of His hands cannot see Him, as is said, 'Man shall not see Me, not even a celestial creature' " (Exod. 33:20).[2]

10. R. Tanhuma said: There is a story of a heathen's ship sailing on the Great Sea, and in the ship was a young lad, a Jew. When a fierce storm rose against them in the sea, everyone in the ship proceeded to take the object of his worship into his hand and call [for mercy], but it availed not at all. Upon seeing that the objects of their worship availed not at all, they said to the Jew: Son, rise up and call upon your God, for we have heard that He is mighty and that, when you people cry out to Him, He answers you. At once, the lad stood up and cried out with all his heart, and the Holy One, blessed be He, accepted his prayer, so that the sea was stilled.

When they came to dry land, and each of them went down to buy what he needed, they asked the lad, "Don't you wish to buy anything at all?" He replied, "What a question to ask a hapless stranger like me!" They replied, "You a hapless stranger? The others are hapless strangers—some are here while their idols are in Babylonia; some are here while their idols are in Rome; and some are here and their idols are with them but avail them not at all. You, however—wherever you go, your God is with you."

With regard to God's ubiquity, Scripture says, "The Lord our God is wheresoever we call upon Him" (Deut. 4:7).[3]

11. A Caesar said to Rabban Gamaliel, "You people say, 'At every gathering where there are ten men, the Presence abides.' Well then, how many Presences must there be?" In answer, Rabban Gamaliel summoned Caesar's servant and boxed his ears. When Caesar asked, "Why did you do this?" Rabban Gamaliel replied, "On account of the sun, which your servant allowed to enter Caesar's palace."

Caesar retorted, "But the sun abides over the entire world."

Rabban Gamaliel: "If the sun, which is merely one of the thousand thousands of myriads serving the Holy One, blessed be He, abides over the entire world, how much more true is this of the Presence of the Holy One Himself, blessed be He!"[4]

12. A Roman noblewoman said to R. Yose: My god is greater than your God. He asked her: Why do you say so? She replied: When your God revealed Himself to Moses in the thornbush, Moses hid his face. But when he saw the serpent, who is my god, at once "Moses fled from before it" (Exod. 4:3). R. Yose: May the breath of a woman such as you be blasted out! When our God appeared in the thornbush, Moses had no place to flee to. Where could he have fled? To heaven, to the sea, or to dry land? What is said of our God? "Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord" (Jer. 23:24). But as for the serpent, who is your god—as soon as a man gets two or three steps away from it, he can escape it.[5]

13. R. Hanina bar Isi said: There are times when the world and the fullness thereof cannot contain the glory of His Godhead, and there are times when He speaks to a man from between the hairs of his head.[6]

14. A certain heretic quizzed R. Meir, saying to him, "Is it possible that He of whom it is written, 'Do not I fill heaven and earth?' (Jer. 23:24), spoke to Moses from between the two staves of the Ark?" R. Meir replied, "Bring me magnifying mirrors." Upon their being brought, R. Meir said to the heretic, "Look at your reflection in them," and the heretic saw how big it was. Then he said, "Bring me reducing mirrors." These were brought, and R. Meir said, "Look at your reflection in them," and the heretic saw how small it was. R. Meir said, "If you, who are flesh and blood, may change your size whenever you wish, how much more by far is this true of Him who spoke and the world came into being, blessed be He. Hence, when He wishes, 'Do not I fill heaven and earth?'; and when He wished, He used to speak to Moses from between the two staves of the Ark."[7]

15. [A proverb]: "When our love[8] was strong, we could lie on the edge of a sword. Now that it has grown weak, a bed sixty cubits wide is not wide enough for us." R. Huna said: We may also infer this truth from verses in Scripture. In the beginning God said, "There I will meet with thee, and I will speak with thee from above the Ark cover" (Exod. 25:22), and we have been taught, "The Ark's height was nine handbreadths, and the Ark cover's thickness one handbreadth, thus ten handbreadths in all." Later on, it was said, "The house which King Solomon built for the Lord, the length thereof was threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits" (1 Kings 6:2). But in the end it was said,

---

1. The thirty-five hundred years since the creation of the world.
2. Usually rendered; "Man shall not see Me and live," but here the commentator takes the form hai ("live") in the substantive sense of a living creature. MTeh 103:5; Yalkut, Ps., §857.
3. P. Ber 9:1, 13b.
4. B. Sanh 39a.
5. Exod. R. 3:12.
6. Gen. R. 4:4.
7. Gen. R. 4:4.
8. A husband's love for his wife.

"Thus saith the Lord: The heaven is My throne, and the earth is My footstool. Where is the house that ye may build unto Me? And where is the place that may be My resting place?" (Isa. 66:1).[1]

16. The norm of flesh and blood: when in his palace, he cannot at the same time be present in the city outside, and vice versa. But with the Holy One, blessed be He, it is not so. He is always present both in the worlds above and in the worlds below, as is said, "The Lord is in His holy abode [above]; let all the earth [here below] keep silent in His presence" (Hab. 2:20).[2]

17. We have been taught that R. Yose said: The Presence never came down below, and Moses and Elijah never ascended on high, for Scripture says, "The heavens are the heavens for the Lord; and it is the earth that He hath given to the children of men" (Ps. 115:16).[3]

18. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: Had there been a chink no bigger than the eye of a fine needle in the cave in which Moses and Elijah stood,[4] neither of them would have been able to endure the light of the Presence, for Scripture says, "Man shall not see Me and live" (Exod. 33:20).[5]

19. A Caesar said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "I want to see your God." R. Joshua: "You cannot see Him." Caesar: "Nevertheless, I want to see Him." So R. Joshua had Caesar stand facing the sun during the summer solstice of Tammuz and said to him, "Look directly at the sun." Caesar: "I cannot." R. Joshua: "If you say of the sun, which is only one of the servitors standing before the Holy One, blessed be He, 'I cannot look directly at it,' how much less could you look at the Presence itself!"[6]

20. The same Caesar said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah, "I wish to prepare a banquet for your God." R. Joshua: "You cannot do so." "Why not?" "Because His attendants are too numerous." Caesar: "Nevertheless, I wish to do it." "Then go and prepare it on the banks of [the river] Revita,[7] where there is ample room." So Caesar spent the six months of summer toiling over the preparations, but then a tempest arose and swept everything into the sea. He then spent the six months of winter toiling over new preparations, but the rains came and washed everything into the sea. "What is the meaning of this?" demanded Caesar. "These are but the sweepers and sprinklers which march ahead of Him." "In that case," Caesar concluded, "I admit I cannot do it."[8]

21. Elijah [the Prophet] told the following: One day as I was walking through the greatest city of the world, there was a roundup and I was roughly seized and brought into the king's house. Presently a Parsee priest came to me and asked me, "Are you a scholar?" I replied, "A bit of a one." He said, "If you can answer the particular question I am about to ask, you may go in peace." I replied, "Ask."

So the Parsee priest said, "You people assert that fire is not god. Then why is it written in your Torah, 'Fire burning eternally' [Lev. 6:6]?" I replied, "My son, when our forebears stood at Mount Sinai to receive the Torah for themselves, they saw no form resembling a human being, nor one resembling the form of any creature, nor one resembling the form of anything that has breath which the Holy One, blessed be He, created in His world, as is said, 'Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves—for ye saw no manner of form on the day that the Lord spoke unto you in Horeb' [Deut. 4:15]. For He, the God of gods, the Lord of lords, is the one and only God, whose kingdom endures in heaven and on earth as well as in the highest heaven of heavens. And yet you people say that fire is god! Fire is no more than a rod to be used upon men on earth. Its use may be understood by the parable of a king who took a lash and hung it up in his house, and then said to his servants, to his children, and to the members of his household, 'With this lash I may strike you, may even kill you'—threatening them, so that in penitence they would turn away from sin. If they do not turn back, then God says, 'I will have to strike them with the lash, will even have to kill them.' Hence, 'Fire burning eternally' is to be read in the light of the verse 'For by fire will the Lord threaten judgment' [Isa. 66:16]. You might suppose that this verse is to be read [literally], 'For by fire will the Lord be judged.' Therefore, elsewhere Scripture declares, 'The Lord thy God is a devouring fire' " (Deut. 4:24).[9]

22. "When they say to me: What is His Name? What shall I tell them?" (Exod. 3:13). At that time Moses was asking that the Holy One, blessed be He, make known to him His great Name.

"And God said unto Moses: 'I am what [from time to time] I may be' " (Exod. 3:14). According to R. Abba bar Mammal, the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses: You wish to know My Name. I am variously called, in keeping with My divers deeds, El Shaddai, Tzevaot, Elohim, Adonai. When I judge created beings, I am called Elohim, "God." When I wage war against the wicked, I am called Tzevaot, "Hosts." When [while waiting for a man to repent] I suspend [judgment] of a man's sins, I am called El Shaddai.[10] And when I have mercy on My world, I am called Adonai.[11] Hence, "I am what [from time to

---

1. I.e., there is no place large enough to contain God. B. Sanh 7a.
2. Mishnat R. Eliezer 11:44.
3. B. Suk 5a.
4. "According to tradition, the cave in which Elijah stood when the Lord passed before him was the same as that in which Moses had stood on a similar occasion" (Meg, Soncino, p. 119, n. 3).
5. B. Meg 19b.
6. B. Hul 60a.
7. Near Yavneh in Palestine. Or, on the shore of the Great Sea.
8. B. Hul 60a.
9. "The Parsee cites Isa. 66:16 in its literal sense, as proof that God is judged by fire—hence fire is not only a deity but even one superior to God. 'Not so fast,' says Elijah, 'it is just to prevent such literal exegesis that Scripture declares elsewhere, "God is fire." Fire is one of His manifestations or tools, like wind, thunder, etc.' " (Leon Nemoy). TdE, JPS, pp. 48–50. For explanatory notes, see above, part 1, chap. 2, §42.
10. "The God who says, She-dai, 'Enough [affliction for the man].' "
11. "Adonai . . . merciful and gracious" (Exod. 34:6).

time] I may be—I am called in keeping with My divers deeds."[1]

23. Whenever "Adonai" is mentioned, it implies the measure of mercy ("Adonai, Adonai, God, merciful and gracious" [Exod. 34:6]). Whenever "God" is mentioned, it implies the measure of justice ("The cause of both parties shall come before God [the Judge, as represented by a human judge]" [Exod. 22:8]).[2]

24. "This is My Name forever" (Exod. 3:15). Le-olam, "forever" [spelled here] without the letter vav, may be read le-alom, "to be concealed," and thus implies that the letters of God's [Ineffable] Name should not be uttered. "Such is to be My appellation for all eternity" (ibid.) My Name is to be uttered by substituting another word.[3]

25. "Show me, I pray Thee, Thy glory" (Exod. 33:18). Moses said to the Holy One, blessed be He: Show me the rule whereby You guide the world. God replied: You cannot fathom My rules.[4]

26. "What is man that he could fathom the King?" (Eccles. 2:12).[5] If a man tells you, "I can fathom the world's foundation," answer him, "You cannot fathom a king of flesh and blood. How, then, I wonder, do you expect to fathom [the words of] the King who is King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He?"[6]

27. "The heavens declare the glory of God" (Ps. 19:1). R. Jacob ben Zavdi told the parable of a mighty man who came to a certain city where the inhabitants did not know his strength. A knowing man said, "You can tell his strength from the size of the stone he manages to roll." Even so, we can tell the strength of the Holy One, blessed be He, from [the size of] the heavens.[7]

28. "His splendor is in the skies" (Deut. 33:26). All Israel gathered at Moses' place and said to him: Our master Moses, what is the measure of the Glory that is above? He replied: From the beings below you can tell the measure of the Glory that is above. To illustrate, there is the parable of one who said, "I want to see the king's countenance." He was told, "Go into the capital, and you will see him." As he was about to go into the capital, he saw spread across its entrance a curtain in which precious stones and pearls were set. [At the sight of it], he was so amazed that he fell to the ground in obeisance. He was told, "Your eyes could not bear the sight [of the curtain], and so you fell down. How much more and more, had you entered the capital itself and seen the king's face." Hence, "His splendor is in the skies."[8]

---

1. Exod. R. 3:6.
2. Gen. R. 33:3.
3. Not YHVH, but Adonai. Exod. R. 3:7.
4. MTeh 25:6.
5. JV: "What can the man do that cometh after the king?"
6. Gen. R. 12:1; Exod. R. 6:1; Eccles. R. 2:12, §9.
7. MTeh 19:6.
8. Sif Deut., §355.

29. It is characteristic of flesh and blood to mention first a man's name and then his accomplishments. "So-and-so the sage, So-and-so the mighty man, So-and-so the rich man." But the Holy One, blessed be He, mentions His accomplishments first and then His Name, "In the beginning created God" (Gen. 1:1).[9]

It is characteristic of a king of flesh and blood to demand that people of his province praise him even before he has built bridges or laid out roads for them. But the Holy One, blessed be He, has not acted thus. First He set everything in order, and after that He demanded worship of Himself, for He created man only as the very last of His creatures.

It is characteristic of a king of flesh and blood that when he is praised, the notables of the realm are praised with him, because they share in carrying his burden. But the Holy One, blessed be He—He alone is praised in His world, He alone is glorified in His world, because no one shares with Him in carrying His burden, as is said, "For Thou art great, and doest wondrous things, Thou art God alone" (Ps. 86:10).

It is characteristic of flesh and blood that when carrying a burden, he is below and the burden he carries is above. But the Holy One, blessed be He, is above, yet He carries both the creatures above and the creatures below, as is said, "Behold, God doeth loftily in His power" (Job 36:22).

It is characteristic of flesh and blood that when he brings his works to a halt, there is no more potential in them for growth. But it is not so with the Holy One, blessed be He—after He brought His works to a halt, there was such potential in them, as is said, "He brought all His work that He had wrought to a half, and bestowed potential for further growth on the seventh day" (Gen. 2:2–3).[10]

30. Pause and consider that the behavior of the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like the behavior of flesh and blood. The behavior of flesh and blood is for the exalted to take notice of the exalted, but not of the lowly. The Holy One, blessed be He, does not act thus. He is lofty, yet He takes notice of the lowly, as is said, "Lofty though the Lord is, He regards the lowly" (Ps. 138:6).[11]

31. It is characteristic of flesh and blood to be more particular about his own honor than about the honor of his emissary. But the Holy One, blessed be He, is more particular about the honor of His emissary than about His own honor. Thus we find that when Jeroboam stood burning incense before an idol, his hand did not dry up. But as soon as he put forth his hand against a righteous man, his hand immediately dried up, as is said, "And it came to pass, when the king heard the saying of the man of God . . . that Jeroboam put forth his hand . . . , saying: 'Lay hold on him.' And his hand dried up" (1 Kings 13:4).

---

9. This is the order of the words in the Hebrew text.
10. JV: "He rested . . . from all His work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day." Mishnat R. Eliezer 11:2–3 and 11:10–12, based on Gen. R. 10:9.
11. B. Sot 5a.

It is characteristic of flesh and blood that when a man has a patron, and a time of trouble befalls the man, he cannot go in unannounced to his patron. Instead, he comes and has to stand at the patron's door, and call a servant or a member of the household, who then tells the patron, "So-and-so is standing at the door of your courtyard." The patron may allow him to enter; then again, he may have him remain outside. But the Holy One, blessed be He, does not act thus. When trouble befalls a man, he need cry out neither to Michael nor to Gabriel, but to the Holy One, blessed be He, alone, as is said, "Call unto Me, and I will answer thee" (Jer. 33:3).

It is characteristic of flesh and blood that when a man examines promissory notes in his possession and finds that money is owed him, he will bring them forth and demand payment; if he finds that he owes money to another, he will suppress them. But the Holy One, blessed be He, does not act thus. When He finds a debt [of guilt] charged to us, He suppresses it, as is said, "He will suppress our guilts" (Mic. 7:19), but when He finds the merit [of good deeds] in our favor, He brings it forth [for payment], as is said, "The Lord brought forth our meritorious acts" (Jer. 51:10).[1]

[31. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: With flesh and blood, if a man has a rich kinsman, the man acknowledges him; but if the kinsman is poor, the man is apt to deny the kinship. But with the Holy One, blessed be He, it is not so. Even when Israel are most degraded, He continues to call them "My brethren and My companions" (Ps. 122:8).[2]]

32. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: The significance of the verse "I the Lord love justice. I hate defrauding even a burnt offering"[3] (Isa. 61:8) may be understood by the parable of a king of flesh and blood who, about to go through a customs house, said to his servants, "Pay the customs to the collectors." They replied, "Our lord king, does not all money collected from customs belong to you?" The king: "Let all travelers learn from me not to defraud customs." So, too, the Holy One, blessed be He, said, "[Though all offerings belong to me, yet] I the Lord hate defrauding, even [if the defrauder's purpose is to present] a burnt offering. Let My children learn from Me to keep themselves from any kind of defrauding" (ibid).[4]

33. R. Yohanan said: Wherever you find the power of the Holy One, blessed be He, mentioned in Scripture, you also find His condescension mentioned, a fact that is stated in the Five Books, repeated in the Prophets, and reasserted in the Writings. In the Five Books it is written, "For the Lord your God, He is God of gods," etc. (Deut. 10:17), and directly after that, "He doth execute justice for the fatherless and the widow" (Deut. 10:18). It is repeated in the Prophets: "For thus saith the high and lofty one: . . . I dwell in the high and lofty place" (Isa. 57:15), and directly after that, "With him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit" (Isa. 57:15). And reasserted in the Writings: "Extol Him that rideth upon the skies, whose name is the Lord" (Ps. 68:5), and directly after that, "A father of the fatherless, and a judge [protector] of the widows" (Ps. 68:6).[5]

34. R. Kahana said in the name of R. Ishmael son of R. Yose: The verse "A psalm for Him who causes others to be victorious" (Ps. 13:1)[6] means: "A psalm for Him who rejoices when others are victorious over Him." Pause and consider that the behavior of the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like the behavior of flesh and blood. The behavior of flesh and blood: when others are victorious over him, he grieves. But when others are victorious over the Holy One, blessed be He, He rejoices, as is said, "Therefore He said that He would destroy them, had not Moses His chosen[7] stood before Him in the breach" (Ps. 106:23).[8]

35. We have been taught that R. Yose said: Pause and consider that the behavior of flesh and blood is not at all like the behavior of the Holy One, blessed be He. The behavior of flesh and blood: when one gives offense to another, the other will attempt to deprive the one of his livelihood. But the Holy One, blessed be He, does not act thus. He cursed the serpent, yet when it goes up to a roof, its sustenance is on hand; and when it comes down, its sustenance is on hand. At Noah's request, He cursed Canaan [to be a slave].[9] Yet a slave eats what his master eats and drinks what his master drinks. He cursed the woman,[10] yet all run after her. He cursed the earth,[11] yet all draw their sustenance from it.[12]

36. R. Eleazar said: Even at the time of the anger of the Holy One, blessed be He, He still remembers compassion.[13]

37. Hezekiah said: Pause and consider that the behavior of the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like the behavior of flesh and blood. A man is apt to allure another from the ways of life unto the ways of death. But the Holy One, blessed be He, allures man from the ways of death unto the ways of life, as is said, "Yea, He hath allured thee out of the mouth of straits" (Job 36:16)—out of Gehenna, whose mouth is strait.[14]

38. "There is none holy as the Lord; for there is none besides Thee (biltekha)" (1 Sam. 2:2). R. Judah bar Men-

---

1. P. Ber 9:1, 13a; Exod. R. 25:6; Yalkut, Joel, §535; Mishnat R. Eliezer 11.
2. P. Ber 9:1, 13b.
3. JV: "iniquity." But the Hebrew word also means "burnt offering."
4. B. Suk 30a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. B. Meg 31a.
6. JV: "For the Leader (menatzeah). A Psalm." But the word can also be construed as in the comment above.
7. Though Moses was victorious over God, God continued to regard Moses as "His chosen."
8. B. Pes 119a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. See Gen. 9:6.
10. See Gen. 3:16. The rabbis understand the punishment He imposed on her to be a curse.
11. Gen. 3:47.
12. B. Yoma 75a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
13. B. Pes 87b.
14. B. Men 99b.

asya said: Read not biltekha, but ballotekh, "There is none can outlive Thee." For the behavior of the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like the behavior of flesh and blood. Flesh and blood: the works of his hands outlive him. But the Holy One, blessed be He: He outlives His works.

"Neither is there any rock (tzur) like our God" (1 Sam. 2:2). No artist (tzayyar) is like our God. When a man makes a figure on a wall, he cannot put spirit, breath, entrails, and bowels into it. But the Holy One, blessed be He, makes a figure [an embryo] within another figure and then puts spirit, and breath, and entrails, and bowels into it.[1]

39. If a man strikes many coins from the same die, they all resemble one another. But though the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, fashioned every man in the stamp of the first man [Adam], not a single one of them is exactly like his fellow.[2]

40. "Who is like unto Thee (ne'dar) in holiness" (Exod. 15:11). [Ne'dar is a composite of] "naeh, You are gracious [to human beings], even though You are addir, mighty in holiness." The nature of the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like the nature of flesh and blood. For it is in the nature of flesh and blood that he cannot say two words at the same time, but the Holy One, blessed be He, spoke the Ten Commandments all at the same time, as is said, "And God spoke all these words, saying [them at one time]" (Exod. 20:1). It is in the nature of a human being that he cannot listen to two people crying out at the same time. The Holy One, blessed be He, is not so—even when all the inhabitants of the world come and cry out at one time before Him, he hears the cries of each of them, as is said, "O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee doth all flesh come" (Ps. 65:3).

"Fearful in praises" (Exod. 15:11). It is in the nature of flesh and blood to be more revered by those far from him than by those near to him. Not so the Holy One, blessed be He. He is revered by those near to Him even more than by those who are far from Him, as is said, "By them that are nigh unto Me am I sanctified" (Lev. 10:3), "Round about Him it stormeth mightily" (Ps. 50:3), and, "Held in awe by all around Him" (Ps. 89:8).

It is in the nature of flesh and blood that when he is about to form a figure, he must begin either with its head or with one of the other parts of its body and then complete it. But the Holy One, blessed be He, forms the entire figure all at once, as is said, "For He is the former of the whole" (Jer. 10:16), and also, "Neither is there any rock (tzur) like our God" (1 Sam. 2:2)—neither is there any former (tzayyar) like our God. It is the norm of flesh and blood that when he goes to a sculptor and says, "Make me an image of my father," the sculptor will reply, Let your father come and pose before me, or bring me likenesses of him, and I will make you his image." Not so the Holy One, blessed be He: out of a drop of fluid he gives a man a son who is the image of his father.[3]

41. It is the norm of flesh and blood that a man who makes a figure can make it only in the light. But the Holy One, blessed be He, makes all who are alive in darkness, in innermost chambers, as is said, "The Lord . . . made the spirit of man within him" (Zech. 12:1).

It is the norm of flesh and blood that when he makes a figure, his figure cannot generate another figure. But the Holy One, blessed be He, makes a figure, and the figure He made in turn generates other figures, as is said, "Be fruitful and multiply" (Gen. 9:1).

It is the norm of flesh and blood that when he puts different ingredients in a boiler, intending to dye with them, they all come out one color. But the Holy One, blessed be He, forms all who are alive out of the same matter, yet each of them emerges in its distinctive species.[4]

42. R. Hanina said: Pause and consider that the norm of the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like the norm of flesh and blood. The norm of flesh and blood is for a king to sit inside while his servants guard him on the outside. But such is not the norm of the Holy One, blessed be He. His servants sit inside while He guards them from the outside, as is said, "The Lord is thy keeper, the Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand" (Ps. 121:5).[5]

43. "He that would break me with a whirlwind, and multiply my wounds without cause" (Job 9:17). Rabbah said: Job blasphemed by speaking of a whirlwind, and he was answered through a whirlwind. He blasphemed by speaking of a whirlwind when he said to God: Master of the universe, [perhaps] a whirlwind passed before You, so that I, Iyyov [Job], was confused with oyev ["enemy"]. He was answered in a whirlwind, as is said, "There the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind [searah] and said: . . . Gird up now thy loins like a man, for I will demand of thee" (Job 38:1 and 38:3). [Whirling like a wind over Job's each and every hair (searah)], God said to Job: You are the biggest fool in the world! I created many hairs in a man's head, and for each and every hair I created a [root] cavity for itself, so that two hairs should not draw sustenance from the same cavity; for if two hairs had to draw sustenance from the same cavity, the light in a man's eyes would grow dark. If I do not confuse one such cavity with another, am I apt to confuse Iyyov and oyev?

"Who hath cleft the waterflood into innumerable molds?" (Job 38:25).[6] I created many drops in the clouds, and for each and every drop a separate mold, so that two drops should not issue from the same mold; for if two drops were to issue from the same mold, they would wash away the soil and it would yield no fruit. If I make sure not to confuse one drop with another, am I apt to confuse Iyyov and oyev?

"Or a way for the lightning of the thunder?" (Job 38:25). I created many thunderclaps in the clouds, and

---

1. B. Meg 14a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. B. Sanh 37a.
3. Mek, Be-shallah, Shirata, 8; Mek RSbY, pp. 93–94.
4. Mishnat R. Eliezer 11:24–25 and 11:31.
5. That is to say, outside your body. B. Men 33b.
6. JV: "Who hath cleft a channel for the waterflood?" But tealah ("channel") is here taken to mean "mold."

for each and every thunderclap I created a path, so that no two thunderclaps should travel by the same path; for if two thunderclaps did travel by the same path, they would destroy the world. If I make sure not to confuse one thunderclap with another, am I apt to confuse Iyyov with oyev?

"Knowest thou the time when the wild goats of the rocks bring forth?" (Job 39:1). The wild goat is cruel toward her young, and when about to crouch to give birth, she goes up to the top of a mountain, so that the young should drop down from her and be killed. Therefore I ready a vulture to catch the young in its wings and set it down before the mother goat. Not even by an instant does the vulture come too soon or too late, for if the vulture were an instant too soon or too late, the youngling would die. If I do not confuse one instant with the next, am I apt to confuse Iyyov and oyev?[1]

44. "Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark" (Isa. 29:15). A parable of an architect who built a city, making [underground] chambers, passages, and caves in it. Later, he was made collector for the royal treasury. When the people of the province sought to hide from him in the [underground] chambers and caves, he said to them: I am he who built the [underground] caves. To what avail is your hiding in them? Hence, "Woe unto them that seek deep to hide . . . from the Lord."[2]

45. "For Thou art my lamp, O Lord" (2 Sam. 22:29). R. Yohanan said: The eye is white, with a black part in its middle. Out of what part would one be expected to see? Out of the white part surely. But no, one sees out of the black part. Since you cannot fathom the light in your eyes, how can you attempt to fathom the way of the Holy One, blessed be He?

You find that he who is in the dark can see what is in the light, whereas he who is in the light cannot see what is in the dark. But the Holy One, blessed be He, does see what is in the dark.[3]

46. R. Berekhiah said: Consider the eyeball. It is not through the white of it that one sees, but through the black. The Holy One, blessed be He, says: If I create light for you out of the darkness, what need have I of your light?[4]

47. "The Lord . . . understandeth all the shapings of the thoughts" (1 Chron. 28:9). Even before a man shapes a thought in his heart, the Holy One, blessed be He, understands it.[5]

48. Haggai, citing R. Isaac, said that the verse "The Lord searcheth all hearts and understandeth every thought before its birthing" (1 Chron. 28:9) means: Even before a thought is shaped in a man's heart, it is already manifest to Him. In the name of R. Isaac, R. Yudan said: Even before a creature is brought into being, his thought is already revealed to Him. On his own, R. Yudan, citing "For there is not a word on my tongue but lo, O Lord, Thou knowest it altogether" (Ps. 139:4), said: Even before a man's tongue articulates a word, "lo, O Lord, Thou knowest it altogether."[6]

49. "Declareth unto man what is his small talk" (Amos 4:13). Even matters that have no substance—even the small talk a man voices to his wife—is written down in a man's ledger [in heaven] and is read to him at the time of his death.[7]

50. A Caesar said to Rabban Gamaliel: I know what occupies your God. At this, Rabban Gamaliel sighed. Caesar: What's troubling you? Rabban Gamaliel: I have a son in one of the cities far across the sea, and I yearn for him. Please let me see him. Caesar: But do I know where he is? Rabban Gamaliel: You do not know what is on earth. Yet you pretend to know what goes on in heaven.[8]

51. Another time a Caesar said to Rabban Gamaliel: In your Scripture it is written, "He counteth the number of the stars" (Ps. 174:4). What is so great about that? I too can count the stars. So Rabban Gamaliel brought some quince seeds, put them in a basket sieve, and began to whirl them. He said to Caesar: Count them. Caesar: [First] stop whirling them. Rabban Gamaliel: Thus also does the firmament whirl.

Some tell the story differently: Caesar said to Rabban Gamaliel: I know how many stars there are. Rabban Gamaliel: Tell me how many teeth you have. Caesar put his hand into his mouth and began counting them. Rabban Gamaliel: You do not know what is in your mouth, yet you think you know what is in heaven.[9]

52. After Hadrian, emperor of Rome, conquered the world, all of it, he returned to Rome and said to the people in his palace: I desire that you declare me God, for, as you see, I have conquered the entire world. They replied: But you still have no dominion over His city or His house. So Hadrian went and destroyed the Temple, exiled Israel, and then returned to Rome, and said to them: Now that I have destroyed His city, burned His Holy Place, and exiled His people, make me God.

Now, according to R. Berekhiah, Hadrian had three philosophers. The first of them said: No man may rebel against the king within the king's own palace, only outside it. Accordingly, you must first leave His palace and then you will be declared God. Heaven and earth, He created them. Go beyond their bounds and you will be declared God. The second philosopher said: You cannot become God, for through His prophets He said, "The gods that have not made the heaven and the earth, these shall perish from the earth" (Jer. 10:11). The third philosopher said:

---

1. B. BB 16b and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Yalkut, Job, §904.
2. Gen. R. 24:1; Yalkut, Isa, §436.
3. Tanhuma B. Tetzavveh, §4 and 6; Yalkut, 1 Kings, §182.
4. Lev. R. 31:8.
5. MTeh 45:4.
6. Gen. R. 9:3; Yalkut, 1 Chron., §1080.
7. Lev. R. 26:7.
8. B. Sanh 39a.
9. Ibid.

I beg of you, stand by me in this urgent matter. Hadrian: What matter? The philosopher: I have a ship more than three mil offshore, and it is being tossed about in the sea. All my merchandise is in that ship. Hadrian: I will send my legions and my ships there, and they will rescue it. The philosopher: Sire, why need you trouble your legions and ships to go there? Dispatch a bit of a wind there, and thus you will rescue it. Caesar: Where am I to get a wind to send there? The philosopher: You cannot create a wind? How then can you make yourself God, in whose name it is said, "Thus saith the Lord, He that created the heavens, and stretched them forth, He that spread forth the earth and that which cometh out of it, He that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein" (Isa. 42:5)?

Hadrian then went to his home greatly troubled. [When his wife asked him: Why are you troubled? he told her what had happened.] So she said: The three philosophers misled you. You can, in fact, become God, for you are a great and mighty king, and everything is in your power. I suggest one thing: give Him back His deposit, and you will become God. Hadrian: What is His deposit? The wife: The soul. Hadrian: But if the soul leaves [me], what will I be capable of doing? The wife: If you exercise no authority over the soul within you—Scripture says of it, "No man has authority over the lifebreath to hold back the lifebreath; there is no authority over the day of death" (Eccles. 8:8)—how can you become God? In truth, you are a man, not God.[1]

53. "And the Lord saw that the wickedness of man was great . . . and it grieved Him at His heart" (Gen. 6:5–6). A heretic asked R. Joshua ben Korhah: "Do you people not maintain that the Holy One, blessed be He, foresees the future?" R. Joshua: "Yes." The heretic: "But does Scripture not say, 'And it grieved Him at His heart'?"[2] R. Joshua: "Was a son ever born to you?" The heretic: "Yes." R. Joshua: "What did you do?" The heretic: "I celebrated and had all others celebrate." R. Joshua: "Didn't you know that in the end he would die?" The heretic: "Joy at the time of joy, and mourning at the time of mourning." R. Joshua: "Even such was the experience of the Holy One, blessed be He."[3]

54. R. Papa said: There is no grief in the presence of Him who is everywhere, for Scripture says, "Strength and joy are in His place" (1 Chron. 16:27).

But elsewhere Scripture says, "In that day did the Lord, the God of hosts, call to weeping," etc. (Isa. 22:12)!

[This refers to] the destruction of the Temple, which is different, for even the angels wept over it, as is said, "The celestial beings cry. '[The Temple's destruction] is an outrage';[4] the angels of peace cry bitterly" (Isa. 33:7).[5]

55. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: The day consists of twelve hours: the first three, the Holy One, blessed be He, sits and occupies Himself with Torah; the next three, He sits and issues judgments for the entire world, all of it—when He sees that the world is so guilty as to deserve extermination, He rises from the throne of judgment and sits down on the throne of compassion; the next three hours, He sits and feeds the entire world, from the horned wild ox to lice; the final three hours, He sits and disports with the Leviathan,[6] as is said, "There is Leviathan, whom Thou hast formed to sport therewith" (Ps. 104:26).[7]

56. A Roman noblewoman, interrogating R. Yose ben Halafta, asked: In how many days did the Holy One, blessed be He, create His world? R. Yose replied: In six days. She asked: And what has He been doing since? R. Yose replied: The Holy One, blessed be He, has been busy making matches—the daughter of Such-and-such to So-and-so. The noblewoman: Is that all He does? I can do the same thing. How many menservants, how many maidservants do I have? In no time at all, I can match them up. R. Yose: Matchmaking may be a trivial thing in your eyes; but for the Holy One, blessed be He, it is as awesome an act as splitting the Red Sea.

R. Yose ben Halafta left the noblewoman and went his way. What did she do? She took a thousand menservants and a thousand maidservants, lined them up, row upon row facing one another, and said, "So-and-so shall marry Such-and-such, and Such-and-such shall be married to So-and-so," and thus matched them all up in a single night. In the morning, the ones thus matched came to the noblewoman, one with his head bashed in, another with his eye knocked out, a third with his arm fractured, a fourth with his leg broken. When she asked them, "What happened to you?" one replied, "I don't want that woman," and another replied, "I don't want that man."

At that, the noblewoman sent for and had R. Yose ben Halafta brought to her. She said to him: Master, your Torah is unerring, completely right, and worthy of praise, and all that you have claimed for it is true.

R. Berekhiah [in differing with the above version of R. Yose ben Halafta's reply to the noblewoman's question about what God has been doing ever since His creation of the world] said that R. Yose's reply was as follows: The Holy One, blessed be He, has been busy making ladders, having this one ascend and that one descend, lifting this one up and putting that one down. [In short, He has been judging mankind.][8]

57. King Ptolemy asked the elders in Rome, "In how many days did the Holy One, blessed be He, create the world?" They replied: "In six days." Ptolemy: "And what has been happening since then?" They: "Gehenna has

---

1. Tanhuma, Bereshit, §7.
2. Why then did He first say of everything that he had made, "Behold, it was very good"?
3. Gen. R. 27:4.
4. JV: "The valiant ones cry without." But see PR 40:6 (YJS 18:718).
5. B. Hag 5a.
6. "A huge sea monster, real according to some, but according to others imaginary. We have here a magnification of God's power in sporting with the mightiest, as men do with their animal pets" (Isidore Epstein in AZ, Soncino, p. 9, n. 6).
7. B. AZ 3b.
8. PRKM 2:4; Gen. R. 68:4; Lev. R. 8:1.

been heated up for the wicked. Woe to the world because of His judgment."[1]

58. R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: Each and every day a divine voice goes forth and proclaims: The daughter of So-and-so to So-and-so! The field of So-and-so to So-and-so![2]

59. "The steps of a man are made firm by the Lord" (Ps. 37:23). R. Hanina said: No man bruises a finger here below unless it was proclaimed for him above.[3]

60. The Holy One, blessed be He, carries out a mission of His through anything, even through a snake, even through a gnat, even through a frog.

There is the story of a scorpion proceeding to the other side of the Jordan to carry out a mission given him. The Holy One, blessed be He, provided him with a frog upon whose back he crossed the river. Then, moving on, he stung a man to death. After the scorpion carried out his mission, the frog brought him back to his place.

R. Yannai was sitting and lecturing at the gate of his town when he saw a snake slithering rapidly toward the town. When it was chased away from one side of the road, it continued its journey on the other side of the road; when chased away from that side, it came back again to the side where it had been first. R. Yannai said: This creature is on the way to carry out its mission. Soon after that, a report spread in the town: So-and-so son of So-and-so was bitten by a snake and is dead.[4]

61. As R. Isaac bar Eleazar was strolling on the cliffs of the Sea of Caesarea, he saw a thighbone rolling on the ground. He hid it,[5] but [it bobbed up out of the ground] and started rolling again. He did it once more, [but it would not stay under] and kept rolling. He said: This thighbone is intent on carrying out the mission assigned it. And indeed, as a courier passed by, it rolled between his feet, so that he stumbled over it and fell to his death. When his body was examined, it was found that he had been carrying documents containing evil decrees against the Jews of Caesarea.[6]

62. R. Joseph expounded: How is the verse "I give thanks to Thee, O Lord! Although Thou wast wroth with me, Thy wrath hath turned back, and Thou comfortest me" (Isa. 12:1) to be understood? Here Scripture alludes to two competitors who were about to set out on a trading venture when a thorn got into the foot of one of them. He began to curse and blaspheme [at this mishap, which delayed him]. After a time, however, when he heard that his competitor's ship had sunk in the sea, he began to thank God and glorify Him [for sparing his life through the thorn]. Hence, "Thy wrath hath turned back, and Thou comfortest me." In this connection, R. Eleazar said: What is implied in the verse "Who doeth wondrous things alone. . . . Blessed be His glorious Name forever" (Ps. 72:18–19)? That even he for whom the miracle is wrought is not aware of the miracle wrought for him.[7]

63. How little does he whom the Lord supports need to grieve or be troubled![8]

64. How many miracles does the Holy One, blessed be He, perform for a man that he is not aware of![9]

65. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yose: When a word [of blessing] issues from the mouth of the Holy One, blessed be He, even if it is based on a condition, He never retracts it.[10]

The Household Above

66. Resh Lakish said: There are seven firmaments; curtain, expanse, grinders, habitation, dwelling, depository, and heavy clouds. Curtain: It serves no purpose whatever except that it enters its sheath in the morning and comes out of its sheath in the evening, thus renewing daily the work of creation. Expanse: where the sun, moon, stars, and planets are fixed. Grinder: where millstones stand and grind manna for the righteous. Habitation: where [the heavenly] Jerusalem, the Temple, and the altar are built; where Michael, the great prince, stands and every day brings an offering. Dwelling: where innumerable companies of ministering angels utter song by night and are silent by day for the sake of Israel's glory.[11] Depository: where there are stores of snow and stores of hail; it is the loft of noxious dews, and the loft of raindrops, and the chamber of the storm and the whirlwind, and the cave of vapor—the doors of all the aforementioned are of fire. Heavy clouds: where are stored right, and justice, and mercy; the treasures of life, the treasures of peace, and the treasures of blessing; the souls of the righteous, and the spirits and souls of those destined to be born, and the dew with which the Holy One will revive the dead. There too are the ofannim,[12] the seraphim, the celestial creatures, the ministering angels, and the throne of glory; the King, the living and enduring God, high and exalted, dwells above them, and darkness, cloud masses, and thick clouds encompass Him. R. Aha bar Jacob said: There is still another heaven above the celestial creatures.

Thus far you have permission to speak. Beyond that, you have no such permission, for in the book of Ben Sira it is clearly stated:

> Do not pry into things too hard for you
> Or examine what is concealed from you.

---

1. Gen. R. 10:9.
2. B. MK 18b.
3. B. Hul 7b.
4. Gen. R. 10:7; Tanhuma B, Hukkat, §1.
5. To give it burial.
6. Gen. R. 10:7; Lev. R. 22:4.
7. B. Nid 31a.
8. B. Yoma 22b.
9. Exod. R. 24:1.
10. B. Ber 7a.
11. Israel utter God's praise by day.
12. Wheel-angels.

Meditate on the commandments you have been given;
What the Lord keeps secret is no concern of yours.
(Ecclesiasticus 3:21).[1]

67. We have been taught that Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai said: What answer did the divine voice give to the wicked Nebuchadnezzar when he said, "I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High" (Isa. 14:14)? The divine voice went forth and said, "O wicked man, son of a wicked man, grandson of the wicked Nimrod, who during his reign induced the whole world, all of it, to rebel against Me! How many are the years of man? 'Threescore and ten, and even by reason of strength fourscore' [Ps. 90:10]. And is not the following true? It is five hundred years' journey from earth to heaven, and five hundred years' journey across the thickness of heaven, and a like distance between each heaven and the one above it. Above the heavens are the celestial creatures. The journey across each of the feet of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across each of the ankles of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across each of the legs of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across the knees of each of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across the thighs of each of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across each of the bodies of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across the neck of each of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across the head of each of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across each of the horns of the celestial creatures takes as much time as all the previous journeys together. And above them is the throne of glory. The journey across each of the legs of the throne of glory takes as much time as all the previous journeys together; the journey across the throne of glory takes as much time as all the previous journeys together. And upon this throne of glory and above all the celestial creatures dwells God, living and enduring, high and exalted. Yet you dared say, 'I will ascend above the heights of the clouds. I will be like the Most High!' In the event, 'thou shalt be brought down to the nether world, to the uttermost parts of the pit' " (Isa. 14:15).[2]

68. "Till thrones were placed, and one that was ancient of days did sit" (Dan. 7:9). Why thrones? We have been taught; One for Himself and one for David. Such was the opinion of R. Akiva. R. Yose protested: Akiva, how long will you profane the Presence? One throne is for justice and the other for mercy. So R. Akiva accepted R. Yose's interpretation, and on another occasion he expounded the verse as R. Yose did. But this time R. Eleazar ben Azariah retorted to R. Akiva: Akiva, what business have you with Aggadah? Stick to the tractates of Negaim and Ohalot.[3] One of the two in the verse serves as the throne, the other a taboret—the throne for Him to sit upon, the taboret as a stool for His feet.[4]

69. Four companies of ministering angels utter praise before the Holy One, blessed be He: the first camp, that of Michael, at His right; the second camp, that of Gabriel, at His left; the third camp, that of Uriel, in front of Him; and the fourth camp, that of Raphael, behind Him.[5] The Presence of the Holy One, blessed be He, is thus in the center. He is seated on a throne high and exalted—high up and suspended above in space. The reflections of His glory have the gleam of amber. Upon His head a crown, the diadem of the Explicit Name on his forehead; His eyes range over the whole earth. Half [of His glory] is fire; the other half, hail. At His right is life; at His left, death. He holds a scepter of fire in His hand, and a veil is spread before Him. Within the veil, which is called the curtain, seven angels minister before Him. His footstool is like [a composite of] fire and hail. Under His throne of glory there is something like a sapphire. Fire is flashing continually around His throne—mercy and justice form the foundation of His throne. Seven clouds of glory surround it, and a whirling wheel-angel, a cherub, and a celestial creature utter praise before Him.[6]

70. "Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel[-angel] upon the earth by the living creatures" (Ezek. 1:15). R. Eleazar said: The verse refers to a certain angel who stands on the earth with his head reaching up close to the celestial creatures. His name, so we are taught in the Mishnah, is Sandalphon.

It is said of Sandalphon that he is taller than his fellows by a height that would take five hundred years to journey across, that he stands behind the chariot, and that he wreathes crowns for his Maker[7] and adjures each crown [he has wreathed] so that it rises of its own accord and reposes on the head of his Lord. And when a crown goes forth [from Sandalphon], all the hosts on high are fevered with excitement and shaken with awe, and the celestial creatures, silent until now, roar like lions. In that instant they cry out and say, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of His glory" (Isa. 6:3). When the crown reaches God's throne, the wheels of the throne revolve and the supports of the footstool tremble, and all the firmaments are seized with a shudder of terror. As the crown goes up above His throne, all the hosts above and His crown, too, open their mouths, saying, "Praised be the glory of the Lord wherever His place be" (Ezek. 3:12).

Come and behold the greatness and the excellence

---

1. B. Hag 12b–13a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. B. Hag 13a; B. Pes 94a–b, and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. Two difficult treatises, the first dealing with signs of leprosy, the second with "tents" or "overshadowings," under which uncleanness—e.g., that of a corpse—will, even without touching them, convey uncleanness to food or utensils.
4. B. Sanh 38b.
5. Concerning these four angels, see JE, svv.
6. PRE 4.
7. He wreathes them out of the prayers of the righteous. See Tosafot, s.v. "Binds crowns," on B. Hag 13b.

of the Holy One, blessed be He! When the crown reaches His head, He brings Himself to accept the crown from His servants. Then all the celestial creatures, the seraphim, the wheels of the chariot, the throne of glory, the mighty ones above and below them—raised in dignity, power, and exaltation—ascribe with one voice glory and royal majesty [to Him], saying, "The Lord will reign forever and ever" (Exod. 15:18).[1]

71. R. Ishmael said: Metatron, the prince of the Presence, related to me: When the Holy One, blessed be He, took me to minister under the throne of glory and under the wheel of the chariot and to all other appurtenances of the Presence, my flesh turned into a flame of fire, my sinews into glowing fire, my bones into coals of broom. My eyelids became like the brightness of the firmament, the orbs of my eyes like torches of fire, the hairs of my head a scorching blaze. All the parts of my body [turned] into pinions of incandescent fire, my entire person into blistering fire; at my right piercing tongues of fire, at my left torches alight, and all about me scurries of a whirlwind's burgeoning.[2]

72. R. Akiva said: Every day in the morning, an angel opens his mouth and says, "The Lord reigns, the Lord did reign, the Lord will reign forever and ever," until he reaches "Bless ye."[3] When he reaches "Bless ye," there stands up in the firmament a creature of the chariot whose name is Israel and upon whose brow "Israel" is inscribed. It stands in the middle of the firmament and says, "Bless ye the Lord who should be blessed." And all the troops [of angels] above respond, saying, "Blessed is the Lord who should be blessed forever and ever."

In the firmament there is one celestial creature on whose brow is the symbol "Truth" when it is day, and thus the angels know that it is day; and "Faithfulness" on its brow in the evening, and thus the angels know that it is night. Each time it says, "Bless ye the Lord who should be blessed," all the troops [of angels] above respond, "Blessed is the Lord who should be blessed forever and ever."[4]

73. Samuel said to Hiyya bar Rav: O son of a lion of a man, come, and I will tell you some of the beautiful things your father used to say: Each and every day ministering angels are created from the fire river, utter song, and then cease to be, as is said, "Because they are new every morning, [the praise of] Thy faithfulness is great" (Lam. 3:23).[5]

74. Hadrian—may his bones be ground to dust—asked R. Joshua ben Hananiah: Do you people maintain that there is no [permanent] company [of angels] above, who praise God and repeat the praise of Him, but that every day the Holy One, blessed be He, has to create a [new] company of angels, who utter song before Him and then go away? R. Joshua: Yes. Hadrian: Where do they go? R. Joshua: To the place where they were created. Hadrian: Where were they created? R. Joshua: In the fire river. Hadrian: What is the nature of the fire river? R. Joshua: It is like the Jordan, which does not cease its flow either by day or by night. Hadrian: Where is its source? R. Joshua: In the [fiery] perspiration of the celestial creatures—they perspire from carrying the throne of the Holy One, blessed be He.[6]

75. When were the angels created?[7] On the second day of creation, said R. Yohanan. On the fifth day, said R. Hanina.

R. Luliani bar Tabrin said in the name of R. Isaac: All agree that the angels were not created on the first day, so that it should not be said, "While Michael was stretching out the firmament in the south, and Gabriel was stretching it out in the north, the Holy One, blessed be He, was stretching out the middle portion." The fact is, God said, "I am the Lord that maketh all things; that stretched the heavens alone; that spread abroad the earth by Myself (me-itti)" (Isa. 44:24). Me-itti, "by Myself," when read as mi itti, "who with Me,"[8] means: "In the work of the world's creation, who was partner with Me?"[9]

76. "The Lord God of differing manifestations of will" (Hos. 12:6)—the will[10] He exercises upon His angels. When He so wills it, He has them come into being seated; at times He has them come into being standing; at other times He makes them in the likeness of women, or of men; at times as winds, and at still other times as fire. When by His command they act as messengers, they are made winds; when they minister before Him, they are made of fire, as is said, "Who makest winds Thy messengers, the flaming fire Thy ministers" (Ps. 104:4).[11]

77. "He maketh peace in His high places" (Job 25:2). Michael is the prince of snow and Gabriel the prince of fire. Yet Michael does not quench Gabriel, nor does Gabriel incinerate Michael. Even when half of an angel is fire and the other half snow, the Holy One, blessed be He, makes peace between the two parts.[12]

78. The angels are kept alive only by the splendor of the Presence, as is said, "Thou keepest them all alive, and

---

1. B. Hag 13b; Hekhalot.
2. Hekhalot.
3. These two utterances form part of the daily liturgy.
4. Hekhalot.
5. B. Hag 14a.
6. Gen. R. 78:1.
7. Gen. 1 does not mention the creation of angels.
8. The commentator's point here is that since the verse has already said that God alone had stretched the heavens, "by Myself" (me-itti) at the end of the verse might appear redundant; but the reading mi itti ("who with Me?") makes the sense of the verse emphatic and avoids the seeming redundancy.
9. There were indeed sectarians who asserted that God created nothing but a demiurge, a single angel, and that this angel did all the rest of the work of creation. This concept ascribes all the anthropomorphic passages in the Bible to this angel and thus avoids the charge that the Bible represents God in human form. Gen. R. 1:3.
10. Tzevaot ("hosts") is here derived not from tzb ("host") but from tzby ("will").
11. Exod. R. 25:2; PRE 4.
12. Song R. 3:11, §1; Tanhuma, Va-yiggash, §6.

the host of heaven prostrate themselves before Thee" (Neh. 9:6).[1]

79. It is taught: Michael arrives with one flap of the wings, Gabriel with two, Elijah with four. The angel of death arrives with eight, but during a pestilence, he, too, arrives with but one flap of the wings.[2]

80. We have been taught: One angel does not perform two [simultaneous] missions, nor do two angels together perform a single mission.[3]

81. The impulse to evil has no power over angels.[4]

82. We have a tradition: In the world above, there is no sitting down and no rivalry. [Angels have] no backs[5] and [experience] no weariness.[6]

83. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: The Jews brought up the names of angels with them from Babylon. Of yore [before they went to Babylon], Scripture has: "Above Him stood the seraphim" (Isa. 6:2) and "Then flew unto me one of the seraphim" (Isa. 6:7). But after they had been in Babylon, Scripture has: "the man Gabriel" (Dan. 9:21) and "Michael your prince" (Isa. 10:21).[7]

84. One verse says, "Each of them had six wings" (Isa. 6:2), while another says, "And every one had four faces, and every one of them had four wings" (Ezek. 1:6). There is no contradiction. The first verse speaks of the time when the Temple was still standing; the second verse of the time the Temple was no longer standing, when, if one dare say such a thing, the wings of the celestial creatures were diminished. Which wings were taken away? Those with which they used to utter song, said R. Hananel in the name of Rav.

One verse says, "Thousand thousands ministered unto Him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before Him" (Dan. 7:10), while another verse says, "Is there a number of His armies?" (Job 25:3). There is no contradiction. The first verse refers to the time when the Temple was still standing, while the second verse refers to the time when the Temple was no longer standing, when, if one dare say such a thing, the household above was diminished.[8]

Idolatry

85. Idolatry is so heinous [a sin] that he who rejects it is as though he affirms the entire Torah, all of it.[9]

86. R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan: In every matter, when a prophet tells you to transgress commands of Torah, obey him,[10] except for idolatry. Even if he should have the sun stand still in the middle of the firmament, do not obey him.[11]

87. R. Nahman said: All sneering is forbidden, except the sneering at idolatry, which is permitted, as is said, "Bel boweth down, Nebo stoopeth. . . . They stoop, they bow down together, they could not deliver the burden" (Isa. 46:1–2).[12]

88. "Should a people seek their god, one who is dead, on behalf of the living?" (Isa. 8:19). The verse may be understood, said R. Levi, by the parable of a man whose son disappeared and who went looking for him in a cemetery. A clever man who saw him asked, "Was your son who disappeared alive or dead?" "Alive." "You are the biggest fool in the world. It makes sense that those who are dead be sought among the living—but the living among the dead? Everywhere the living attend to the needs of the dead, but do the dead attend the needs of the living?" So, too, our God lives and endures forever. But the gods of those who worship idols are dead, as is said, "They have mouths, but they speak not" (Ps. 115:5). Are we to leave Him who lives forever and prostrate ourselves before the dead?[13]

89. General Agrippa asked Rabban Gamaliel: "It is written in your Torah, 'For the Lord thy God is a devouring fire, a jealous God' [Deut. 4:24]. But is a wise man jealous of any but another wise man, a warrior of any but another warrior, a rich man of any but another rich man?" Rabban Gamaliel: "I will tell you a parable by which the verse may be understood. When a man marries a second wife, if the second wife is superior, the first will not be jealous of her; but if she is inferior, the first wife will be jealous of her."[14]

90. A philosopher asked Rabban Gamaliel: "It is written in your Torah, 'For the Lord thy God is a devouring fire, a jealous God' [Deut. 4:24]. But why is He jealous of those who worship an idol rather than of the idol itself?" Rabban Gamaliel: "I will tell you a parable by which the verse may be understood. A king of flesh and blood had a son, and this son reared a dog to which he dared give his father's name, so that whenever he took an oath he exclaimed, 'By the life of the dog my father!' When the king heard of it, with whom was he angry—with his son or with the dog? Surely with his son!" [The philosopher]: "In calling the idol a dog, do you not imply that the idol has substance?"[15] Rabban Gamaliel: "What evidence of it have you seen?"

---

1. Exod. R. 32:4.
2. B. Ber 4b.
3. Gen. R. 50:2.
4. Gen. R. 48:11.
5. Angels have eyes all around them so that they may constantly see God. See Ezek. 1:6.
6. B. Hag 15a.
7. P. RH 1:2, 56d.
8. B. Hag 13b.
9. B. Kid 40a.
10. As when Elijah ordered sacrifices brought on Mount Carmel. See 1 Kings 18.
11. B. Sanh 90a.
12. B. Sanh 63b.
13. Lev. R. 6:6.
14. B. AZ 55a.
15. A dog, after all, is a living being.

The philosopher: "Once a fire broke out in our city, and the whole town was burned, but the shrine of the idol was not burned." Rabban Gamaliel: "I will tell you a parable to account for what happened. One of the provinces of a king of flesh and blood has rebelled against him. When he wages war against it, will he wage it against the living or against the dead? Surely against the living!" [The philosopher]: "You call the idol a dog, and now you call it a dead thing. If it is no more than either, let Him extirpate it from the world!" Rabban Gamaliel: "If what was worshiped were something the world had no need of, He would have had it cease to exist; but people worship the sun and the moon, the stars and the planets, brooks and valleys. Should He extirpate His world on account of fools?"

Our masters taught: Some philosophers asked [Jewish] elders in Rome, "If your God has no desire for idolatry, why does He not have it cease to exist?" The elders replied, "If what was worshiped were something the world had no need of, He would have made it cease to exist. But people worship the sun and the moon, the stars and the planets. Should He, on account of fools, make the world cease to exist? So the world must go on as is its wont. As for fools, who act wrongly—they will have to render an account." Another example: "Say a man stole a measure of wheat, and went and sowed it in the ground—by right it should not grow, but the world must go on as is its wont. As for fools, who act wrongly—they will have to render an account."[1]

91. [A Jew named] Zonin said to R. Akiva: My heart and yours know that there is no substance in an idol. Still, we see men enter [its shrine] crippled and come out cured. [Why should that be so?] R. Akiva: I will tell you a parable to explain what happens. There was a trustworthy man in a city, with whom all townsmen used to deposit [their money] without witnesses, except for one man who insisted on depositing [his money] in the presence of witnesses. However, on one occasion he forgot and made his deposit with the trustworthy man without witnesses. The wife [of the trustworthy man] said to [her husband], "Come, let us deny that he made a deposit." He answered, "Just because this fool has been acting improperly, shall we abandon our trustworthiness?" So it is with afflictions. When they are dispatched against a man, they are adjured, "You are to proceed against him only on such-and-such a day; and you are to leave him only on such-and-such a day, at such-and-such an hour, under the care of So-and-so, and by means of such-and-such a potion." Precisely when the time arrives for the afflictions to depart, this particular man happens to go to an idol's shrine. At first the afflictions plead, "By right we should not leave this man." But then, reconsidering, they say, "Just because this fool acts improperly, shall we break our oath?"[2]

92. R. Azariah said in the name of R. Hanina: Only the orb of the sun was created to give light. Why, then, was the moon created? Because the Holy One, blessed be He, foresaw that idolaters would declare them [the sun and moon] to be divinities. So the Holy One, blessed be He, said: If when they are two, now and then outshining each other, idolaters declare them to be divinities, how much more and more would they be likely to do so if only one luminary had been created.[3]

93. A heathen asked R. Joshua ben Korhah: "In your Torah it is written, 'One is to follow the many' [Exod. 23:2]. We are more numerous than you. Why, then, do you not agree with us about idolatry?" R. Joshua: "Have you sons?" The heathen: "You remind me of my aggravation." R. Joshua: "Why do you say that?" The heathen: "I have many children. When they sit at my table, one recites a blessing to this god, and another recites a blessing to that god, and they do not rise from the table until they all but crack each other's skulls." R. Joshua: "Do you ever get them to agree with one another?" The heathen: "No." R. Joshua: "Before making us agree with you, go and bring about agreement among your own children." Thus rebuffed, the heathen went away.

After he had gone, R. Joshua's disciples said to him, "Master, you thrust him off with a broken reed; but what answer will you give us?" R. Joshua: "You numskulls, by rights I should not answer you. However . . . In connection with Esau, only six souls are mentioned in Scripture, and they are spoken of in the plural as 'souls' [Gen. 36:6], while in connection with Jacob, Scripture mentions seventy souls, and they are spoken of in the singular as one soul. The reason for Scripture's inconsistency: with regard to Esau, whose descendants worshiped many gods, the phrase 'many souls' is used.[4] But with regard to Jacob, whose entire household worshiped the one God, the phrase 'one soul' is used: 'They who came out of the loins of Jacob were one soul' " (Exod. 1:5).[5]

94. What is [the heathen idol] teraphim? A man, a firstborn, is slaughtered. His head is plucked off and pickled in salt and spices. Then the name of the spirit of uncleanness, written on a plate of gold, is placed under his tongue. The head is affixed to a wall, lamps are lit in front of it, and people prostrate themselves before it.[6]

95. What is [the heathen idol] Molech like? Our masters taught: Even though all other shrines for idolatry were in Jerusalem, Molech's was outside Jerusalem, some distance away. It was a hollowed image, its visage that of a calf, its hands spread out like those of a man who opens his hands to receive something from his fellow, and in one hand it held a copper plate. The image was placed within seven enclosures, which a man entered in keeping with the offering he brought. He who offered a fowl entered the first enclosure and offered it. A goat, the second. A lamb, the third. A calf, the fourth. A bullock, the fifth. An ox, the sixth. He who offered his son would be told by the

---

1. B. AZ 54b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. B. AZ 55a.
3. Gen. R. 6:1.
4. Hence, even though Esau's descendants are numerous, they do not constitute a majority, since they are divided among themselves.
5. Lev. R. 4:6; Yalkut, Va-yishlah, §137.
6. Tanhuma, Va-yetze, §12; PRE 36.

priests that no one was higher than he, and he was allowed to enter the seventh enclosure, where he would kiss the Molech. With regard to such kissing, Scripture says, "They that sacrifice men kiss calves" (Hos. 13:2). The Molech was heated from within until its hands became as hot as fire. Then the child was taken and placed between the idol's hands on the copper plate. Timbrels were brought and struck to make a loud noise, so that the father should not hear the cry of his son and his heart yearn for him. They who stood there intoned songs, while the priests commended the father as they said to him, "May it please you! May it benefit you! May it agree with you!"[1]

96. R. Isaac said: What is meant by the verse "And now they sin more and more, and they made them molten images of their silver, according to their own understanding, even idols" (Hos. 13:2)? The verse suggests that each of them made a small image of the object of his awe, put it in his purse,[2] and whenever he thought of it, took it from his bosom, fondled it, and kissed it.

"Men sacrifice themselves in homage to calves" (Hos. 13:2).[3] R. Isaac of the school of R. Ammi said: When priests cast covetous eyes upon men of means, they would starve the calves [that were worshiped]. Then they made images in the likenesses of these men of means, which they set at the calves' cribs. After a while, they let loose the calves, which, upon seeing the men [whose images they had learned to associate with food], started running after them, eager to lick them. Then the priests would say to each of these men, "The idol yearns for you. Come and sacrifice yourself to him."[4]

97. "Moreover thou hast taken thy sons . . . whom thou hast borne unto Me, and . . . hast sacrificed them [to the images] of those idols" (Ezek. 16:20). A priest would come to a man and say to him, "Such-and-such an idol has sent me to you, because he has heard you have many sons. Why don't you bring one of them as an offering?" The man would reply, "They are no longer under my authority—one is engaged with silver, another with gold; one with flocks, another with herds." The priest: "But if you come before the idol empty-handed, will he not be angry with you?" The man: "I have a young son at school. Wait until he comes home, and I will give him to you. Then you may go and bring him as an offering." At that, the Holy One, blessed be He, would say to the man, "Thou hast taken thy sons . . . whom thou hast borne unto Me, and . . . hast sacrificed them [to the images] of these idols." Of all the sons you have, you would sacrifice none but the one who [being at school] is consecrated to Me![5]

98. "And I will cast your carcasses upon the carcasses of your idols" (Lev. 26:30). The sages said: Elijah the Righteous, while searching in Jerusalem for those swollen by hunger, found a child swollen and lying [helpless] on a dungheap. He asked, "From what family are you?" The child: "From such-and-such a family." Elijah: "Does anyone of that family remain alive?" The child: "No one except me." Elijah: "If I teach you something by which you can stay alive, will you learn it?" The child: "Yes." Elijah: "Every day, say, 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one' " (Deut. 6:4). The child: "Be silent, for one must not make mention of the Name of the Lord" (Amos 6:10). He spoke thus because his father and his mother had not taught him [to worship God]. Then the child took the idolatrous object of his awe out of his bosom, fondled it, and kissed it until his belly burst. The object of his awe fell to the ground and he fell upon it, to fulfill the verse "I will cast your carcasses upon the carcasses of your idols."[6]

99. Manasseh appeared in a dream to R. Ashi, who asked him: Why did you people worship idols? Manasseh replied: Had you been living in our time, you would have hiked up the skirt of your garment and come running to join us.[7]

100. "And they cried with a loud voice unto the Lord their God" (Neh. 9:4). What was the cry about? [They cried], "Woe, woe, it is [the impulse to idolatry] that destroyed the Sanctuary, burned the Temple Hall, slew all the righteous, exiled Israel from their Land, and still dances around in our midst! You have given him to us for no purpose other than that we may receive a reward through him, but we want neither him nor the reward through him!" Then a tablet fell down from heaven, upon which was written, "True." They observed a fast for three days and three nights, and the impulse was handed over to them, emerging from the Holy of Holies like a fiery lion. A prophet of Israel said, "This is the wickedness" (Zech. 5:8), namely, the impulse to idolatry. When they seized him [the impulse] and a single hair was pulled from the hair of his head, his cry of pain was heard four hundred parasangs away. The sages asked, "What shall we do? They may, God forbid, take pity on him in heaven." The prophet advised, "Throw him into a leaden pot and cover its mouth with lead, because lead absorbs sound."[8]

101. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Once, when a gentile woman fell very sick, she vowed, "If this sick woman recovers from her sickness, she will go and worship every idol in the world." She did recover and proceeded to pay homage to every idol in the world, until she reached Peor, where she asked her servants, "How does one worship this one?" "People eat beets, drink beer, and then defecate against it." The gentile woman said, "I would rather fall sick again than worship an idol in such a way."[9]

102. There is the story of Savta of the town of Alas,[10] who hired out his ass to a gentile woman. When she got

---

1. Tanhuma B, Va-et'hannan, supplement, §2; Lam. R. 1:9, §36; Yalkut, Jer., §277.
2. The word mi-kaspam ("of their silver") is construed as portmanteau; mi-kis ("out of the purse") and peh ("[kiss with] the mouth").
3. JV: "They that sacrifice men kiss calves."
4. B. Sanh 63b.
5. Lam. R. 1:9, §36.
6. B. Sanh 63b–64a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. B. Sanh 102b.
8. B. Yoma 69b.
9. B. Sanh 64a.
10. In Cilicia.

to Peor, she said to Savta, "Wait until I go in and come out again." After she came out, he said to her, "You, too, wait until I go in and come out." She asked him, "Are you not a Jew?" He replied, "How does that concern you?" He went in, defecated in the idol's presence, and wiped himself on its nose. At that, the idol's retinue applauded him, saying: No one has ever served Peor so well.[1]

103. A Parsee priest said to Amemar: From your middle upward, you belong to Ormazd; and from your middle downward, you belong to Ahriman. Amemar asked: Why then does Ahriman allow Ormazd to send water through his territory?[2]

104. Everywhere you find that the Holy One, blessed be He, requites the kingdoms only after He first requites their idols and their princes. Thus Scripture first says, "It shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord will punish the host of the high heaven on high" (Isa. 24:21), and after that, "And the kings of the earth upon the earth" (ibid.).[3]

105. The proverb says: Idols maimed—their priests are shamed.[4]

106. Our masters taught: If one sees a statue of Mercurius, he is to say, "Blessed be He who shows forbearance toward those who transgress His will." If he sees a place from which idolatry has been uprooted, he is to say, "Blessed be He who has uprooted idolatry from our Land; and as it has been uprooted from this place, so may it be uprooted from all places belonging to Israel, and may the hearts of [Israelites] who serve such idols be turned to serve Thee." It is not necessary to say the latter words outside the Land, where most of the people are Gentiles. However, R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: One should say these words outside the Land as well, because the people there will eventually become proselytes, as is said, "For then I will make the peoples pure of speech, so that they all invoke the Lord by name" (Zeph. 3:9).[5]

107. "Ashamed will be all they that serve graven images, that boast themselves of things of nought; bow down to Him, all ye gods" (Ps. 97:7). R. Nahman said in the name of R. Mana: The idol is destined to come spit in the face of those who worship it and put them to shame, then bow down before the Holy One, blessed be He—and cease to exist.[6]

Heretics

108. R. Yohanan said: Not until twenty-four sects of heretics had come into being were Israel exiled. And the proof? The verse "Son of man, I send thee to the children of Israel, to the rebellious nations that have rebelled against Me" (Ezek. 2:3). God did not say, "To the rebellious nation," but, "To the rebellious nations that have rebelled against Me; they and their fathers have transgressed against Me, even unto this very day" (ibid.).[7]

109. "Remove thy way far from her" (Prov. 5:8)—from heresy. A man is told, "Don't go into the midst of heretics, don't even look in on them, lest you stumble because of them." Should the man say, "I am sure of myself, so that even if I go there, I will not stumble," he is told, "Even though you are sure, don't go, lest you say, 'I think there is something in what they assert, and I will go back to them [to learn more].' Scripture says clearly, 'All who go there will not return and thus not attain the paths of life' " (Prov. 2:19).[8]

110. Scripture says, "She hath prepared her meat; she hath mingled her wine; she hath also furnished her table" (Prov. 9:2). In this verse [the wiles of] heretics are meant. Because, when a man comes into their midst, they feed him, clothe him, shelter him, and give him much money. But as soon as he becomes one of them, each identifies what he gave him and takes it back. Hence Scripture: "Till an arrow strike through his liver; as a bird hasteneth to the snare—and knoweth not that it is at the cost of his life" (Prov. 7:23).[9]

111. One should not engage in give-and-take with heretics, nor should one receive medical treatment from them even to prolong life by ever so little.

It once happened to Ben Dama, the son of R. Ishmael's sister, that he was bitten by a snake. Jacob of Kefar Sekhania[10] came to heal him, but R. Ishmael did not allow him to. Ben Dama pleaded, "Ishmael, my uncle, allow me to be healed by him—I will cite for you proof from the Torah that he is permitted to." He did not finish speaking when his soul departed, just as he was uttering the word "permitted," and he died. R. Ishmael exclaimed, "Happy are you, Ben Dama, that your body is pure, that your soul has left you while you were in a state of purity, and that you have not disregarded the words of your colleagues, who quote 'He who breaketh through a fence, a serpent shall bite him' " (Eccles. 10:8).[11]

112. The Evangels and the books of the heretics are not to be saved from a fire [on a Sabbath].[12] R. Yose the Galilean said: When I find books of heretics, I cut out the divine Names written in them, hide those, and burn the rest. R. Tarfon said: May I bury my sons if, when

---

1. B. Sanh 64a.
2. Water taken in at the mouth and emptied through urination. B. Sanh 39a.
3. Yalkut, Isa., §418; Yalkut, Jer., §331, based on Mek, Be-shallah, Shirata, 2, and Tanhuma, Bo, §4.
4. Literally, "Strike the idols, and their priests will be confounded." Tanhuma, Va-era, §13.
5. B. Ber 57b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. P. AZ 4:7, 44a.
7. The nation of Israel is made up of twelve tribes. The plural "nations" is taken to imply double that number—hence twenty-four sects of rebels. So Kikkar la-Aden, ad loc. P. Sanh 10:5, 29c.
8. ARN 2; ARNB 2.
9. ARN 2.
10. Possibly James son of Alphaeus (Mark 3:18) or James the Younger (Mark 15:40). So Isidore Epstein in AZ, Soncino, p. 85, n. 3.
11. B. AZ 27b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
12. Which involves labor prohibited on the Sabbath.

books of heretics come into my hands, I do not bury them together with the divine Names in them! For even if a man pursued me to slay me and a serpent were after me to bite me, I would seek refuge in a heathen temple rather than in the houses of heretics, since idolaters do not know the Holy One, blessed be He, and so deny Him, whereas these [the heretics] know Him and still deny Him.

R. Ishmael said: If in order to make peace between a man and his wife, He who is everywhere has said, "My Name, written in sanctity, is to be blotted out in water,"[1] how much more does it follow that the books of heretics, which cause hatred, anger, and strife between Israel and their Father in heaven, are to be burned, together with the divine Names written in them. Of such books Scripture says, "Do I not hate them, O Lord, that hate Thee? And do I not strive with those that rise up against Thee? I hate them with utmost hatred; I count them as my enemies" (Ps. 139:21–22). And just as we are not to save them from a fire, so we are not to save them from under a collapsed house, from water, or from anything else that may destroy them.[2]

113. Our masters taught: When R. Eliezer was arrested on suspicion of [Judeo-Christian] heresy, he was brought up on the [torturer's] scaffold to be examined. The governor said to him, "How can a venerable sage like you occupy himself with such drivel?" R. Eliezer replied, "I acknowledge the Judge as right." The governor, thinking that R. Eliezer referred to him—in fact he referred to his Father in heaven—said, "Because you have acknowledged me as being right, I grant you pardon. You are acquitted." Nevertheless, R. Eliezer felt uneasy about the accusation of heresy. When he came home, his disciples called on him to console him,[3] but he would accept no consolation. R. Akiva said to him, "Master, will you permit me to cite something you taught me?" He replied, "Cite it." "Master, is it possible that some heretical teaching had been reported to you and you found it pleasing, and for that reason you were arrested?" He exclaimed, "Akiva, you have reminded me. I was once walking in the upper market of Sepphoris when I came across one of the disciples of Jesus the Nazarene, named Jacob of Kefar Sekhania. He said to me, 'It is written in your Torah, "Thou shalt not bring the hire of a harlot . . . into the house of the Lord thy God" [Deut. 23:19]. May such money be applied to the erection of a privy for the high priest?' To this I made no reply. He went on, 'Thus was I taught [by Jesus the Nazarene]: "For of the hire of a harlot hath she gathered them, and unto the hire of a harlot shall they return" [Mic. 1:7]—since it came from a place of filth, it should go back to a place of filth [such as the high priest's privy].' Those words pleased me very much, and that is why I was arrested for heresy, for in reacting thus, I transgressed Scripture: 'Remove thy way far from her' [Prov. 5:8], meaning heresy, 'so that you will not have to come nigh to the door of her house' [Prov. 5:8]—to the house of the ruling power."[4]

114. When Hananiah the son of R. Joshua's brother went to Capernaum, the heretics worked a spell on him and brought him into the town riding his ass on the Sabbath. His uncle Joshua visited him and gave him an ointment, and the spell was removed. He said to him: Since the ass of that wicked person[5] is now roused against you, you should not continue living in the Land of Israel. So he went down to Babylonia, where he died in peace.[6]

115. R. Judah ben Nakosah had dealings with the heretics. They kept asking him questions, which he kept answering. They continued goading him with questions, which he answered. Finally he said to them: We argue to no purpose. Come, let us agree between ourselves that he who prevails may hit the opponent's head with a mallet. He kept prevailing and kept hitting them until their heads were covered with bruises.

When he returned, his disciples said to him: Master, you were helped by Heaven, and you prevailed. He replied: To no purpose. Go and pray for me, and also for this bag [passing as my head], which was once filled with precious stones and pearls, and now is filled with [burned-out] coals.[7]

116. Our masters taught: The left hand may always repulse, but the right hand should bring near. Not like R. Joshua ben Perahiah, who repulsed Jesus with both hands.

What was the incident with R. Joshua ben Perahiah? When King Yannai rose up against the sages to put them to death, Simeon ben Shetah was hidden by his sister, and R. Joshua ben Perahiah [and Jesus] fled to Alexandria of Egypt. When peace came,[8] Simeon ben Shetah wrote to R. Joshua, "From me, Jerusalem the holy city, to you, my sister Alexandria of Egypt: My husband dwells in your midst, and I abide desolate." R. Joshua replied, "I understand. Peace upon you." So he rose up, together with his disciple [Jesus], and came to Jerusalem. He happened to put up at a certain inn [run by a woman], where great honor was accorded him. He remarked, "What a beautiful inn." His disciple replied, "Yes, master, but her[9] eyes are bleary." R. Joshua: "You wicked person! So it is with such matters that you occupy yourself!" At that, he brought forth four hundred rams' horns and [had them sound as he] excommunicated him. Though Jesus came day after day before R. Joshua, pleading, "Take me back," R. Joshua paid no attention to him. But one day, as R. Joshua was reciting the Shema, [Jesus] came and stood before him. [Relenting], R. Joshua decided to take him back and motioned to him with his hand. But Jesus interpreted the gesture as a final repulse. So he went off, set up a brick, and worshiped it.

---

1. See Num. 5:23ff.
2. B. Shab 116a; P. Shab 16:1, 15c; Tos Shab 14:5; Tanhuma B, Korah, supplement, §1.
3. R. Eliezer was greatly troubled: what sin had he committed that God should have made him the victim of such a charge?
4. B. AZ 16b–17a and En Yaakov, ad loc; Eccles. R. 1:8, §3; Yalkut, Mic., §551.
5. Jesus.
6. Eccles. R. 1:8, §4.
7. Some of the heretics' arguments contaminated his mind. Ibid.
8. At Yannai's death. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §48.
9. Aksania (Greek xenia) means both "inn" and "hostess of the inn."

R. Joshua implored, "Repent." But Jesus replied, "I have a tradition from you: he who sins and causes others to sin should not be given the opportunity to repent."

A master taught: Jesus practiced magic and incited Israel to heresy, leading them astray.[1]

117. Ben Stada brought out [secrets] of sorcery from Egypt by incising them in his flesh.[2]

118. He who incites to idolatry should be brought to the [High] Court, where he is to be condemned to death by stoning. This was done in Lod to Ben Stada, whose body was hanged [after being stoned].[3]

119. We have been taught: Jesus was executed on the eve of Passover. Forty days prior to the execution, a herald went forth and proclaimed, "He is going forth to be stoned because he practiced sorcery, incited to idolatry, and led Israel astray. Anyone who knows anything in his defense, let him come forward and plead in his behalf." Since no one pleaded, he was hanged on the eve of Passover.

Ulla challenged the account: Do you suppose that he was one for whom such a plea could possibly have been made? He was one who incited to idolatry, of whom the Torah says, "Neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him" (Deut. 13:9).

Jesus had to be treated differently[4] because he was close to the [Roman] government.

The sages taught: Jesus had five disciples: Mattai, Nakkai, Netzer, Bunni, and Todah. When Mattai was brought before the court, he asked [the judges], "Shall Mattai be put to death? Is it not writtten, 'Matai[5] shall come and appear before God' (Ps. 42:3)?" They replied, "Yes, Mattai is to be put to death, for it is written, 'Matai shall die, and his name perish' " (Ps. 41:6). When Nakkai was brought before the court, he asked [the judges], "Shall Nakkai be put to death? Is it not written, 'Naki[6] and the righteous slay thou not' (Exod. 23:7)?" The judges replied, "Yes, Nakkai is to be put to death, since it is written, 'In secret places does naki slay' " (Ps. 10:8). When Netzer was brought in, he asked [the judges], "Shall Netzer be put to death? Is it not written, 'And Netzer[7] shall grow forth out of his roots' (Isa. 11:1)?" They replied, "Yes, Netzer shall be put to death, for it is written, 'But thou art cast forth away from thy grave like Netzer'"[8] (Isa. 14:19). When Bunni was brought, he asked, "Shall Bunni be put to death? Is it not written, 'Beni,[9] My firstborn' (Exod. 4:22)?" They replied, "Yes, Bunni shall be put to death, for it is written, 'Behold, I will slay binekha,[10] thy firstborn' " (Exod. 4:23). When Todah was brought in, he asked, "Shall Todah be put to death? Is it not written, 'A Psalm for todah'[11] (Ps. 100:1)?" They replied, "Yes, Todah is to be put to death, for it is written, 'Whoso slaughtereth todah[12] honoreth Me' " (Ps. 50:23).[13]

120. "No man is God" (Num. 23:19)[14] [was uttered] because Balaam foresaw that a certain man would lead mortals astray by claiming to be God.[15]

121. R. Avin said in the name of R. Hilkiah: The minds of those liars who say that the Holy One, blessed be He, has a son are truly dense. Consider what happened to Abraham's son. When God saw that Abraham was about to slaughter him, He could not bear to see him in pain, but immediately cried out, "Do not put forth your hand" (Gen. 22:12). Now, if God had a son, would He have allowed him to be crucified? Would He not have turned the world upside down, reducing it to chaos and desolation? Solomon said, "There is One that is alone, and He hath not a second; yea, He hath neither son nor brother" (Eccles. 4:8).[16]

122. "There is One . . . and He hath not a second." "There is One": the Holy One, blessed be He, of whom it is said, "The Lord our God, the Lord is one" (Deut. 6:4). "And He hath not a second": He has no partner in His world. "He hath neither son nor brother": since He has no brother, how is He to have a son?[17]

123. "I am the Lord thy God" (Exod. 20:2). R. Abbahu said: Consider by way of contrast the parable of a king of flesh and blood who reigns and who has a father or a brother. On the other hand, the Holy One, blessed be He, said: I am not like that. "I am the first" (Isa. 44:6), for I have no father; "and I am the last" (ibid.), for I have no son; "and beside Me there is no God" (ibid.), for I have no brother.[18]

124. R. Yohanan said: In all the passages that heretics cite [as proof for their heretical teaching], the refutation is found near at hand. Thus: "Let us make man in our image" (Gen. 1:26) is refuted by "And God created [a verb in the singular] man in His own image" (Gen. 1:27). "Come, let us go down and there confound their language" (Gen. 11:7) is refuted by "And the Lord came down [a verb in the singular] to see the city and the tower" (Gen. 9:5). "Because there were revealed to him Gods" (Gen. 35:7) is refuted by "Unto God who answereth [a verb in the singular] me in the day of my distress" (Gen. 35:3). "For what great nation is there that hath God so nigh [an

---

1. B. Sot 47a; B. Sanh 107b.
2. B. Shab 104b.
3. B. Sanh 47a, as in Munich and Oxford mss.
4. He was hanged, not stoned.
5. JV: "when."
6. JV: "The innocent."
7. JV: "a twig."
8. JV: "an abhorred offshoot."
9. JV: "My son."
10. JV: "thy son."
11. JV: "of thanksgiving."
12. JV: "[sacrifice of] thanksgiving."
13. All the foregoing are a kind of word game. B. Sanh 43a.
14. JV: "God is not a man."
15. Tanhuma, Balak, according to Etz ha-Daat Tov, by Hayyim Vital (Zolkiev; 1870).
16. Aggadat Bereshit 31 (ed. Buber, p. 64).
17. Since He has none like Him, whose daughter could he marry to bear Him a son? Eccles. R. 4:8, §1.
18. Exod. R. 29:5.

adverb in the plural] unto it, as the Lord our God is [unto us]" (Deut. 4:7) is refuted by the same verse's conclusion, "Whensoever we call upon Him" [pronoun in singular form] (ibid.). "And what one nation in the earth is like Thy people, Israel, whom God went" [a verb in the plural] (2 Sam. 7:23) is refuted by the verse's conclusion, "To redeem for a people unto Himself" [a pronoun in the singular] (ibid.). "Till thrones were placed" (Dan. 7:9) is refuted by the verse's conclusion, "And one that was ancient did sit" (ibid.).

Still, why should the foregoing verbs and nouns have plural forms? Because the Holy One, blessed be He, does nothing without first consulting His household above, as is said, "The matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the sentence by the word of the holy ones" (Dan. 4:14). Now, what was just said explains adequately the use of the plural in all the verses, except "Till thrones were placed." How is this phrase to be explained? One throne was for justice, the other for mercy.[1]

125. "I am the Lord thy God" (Exod. 20:2). The heretics challenged R. Simlai, saying: There are many divinities in the world. R. Simlai asked them: Why do you say so? They replied: Because Scripture says, "Did ever a people hear the voice of elohim (gods)?" (Deut. 4:33). R. Simlai: But does Scripture go on to say, "They speak" (medabberim, plural)? No; it says, "He speaks" (medabber, singular).

At this, R. Simlai's disciples said to him: Master, you put these off with a broken reed of an answer. But how will you reply to us? [R. Simlai]: It was R. Levi who considered this verse and explained it, saying: How is the verse "Did ever a people hear the voices of elohim (gods)?" to be understood? [In the light of "The voice of the Lord is fitted to the strength" (Ps. 29:4).] Had it read, "The voice of the Lord is in His strength," the world could not have endured it. Hence Scripture says, "The voice of the Lord is fitted to the strength," that is to say, to the strength of each and every person—the young according to their strength, the aged according to their strength, the little ones according to their strength. By this, the Holy One, blessed be He, intended to say: Because you hear so many voices, do not imagine that there are many gods in heaven. Rather, you are to know that I alone am the Lord your God, as is said, "I am the Lord your God" (Exod. 20:2).[2]

126. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Azzai said: Pause and consider that in connection with all the offerings in the Torah there is no mention of El or Elohim, no mention of Shaddai, or Tzevaot—only "Lord," in order not to give heretics the opportunity to rebel.[3]

127. A heretic asked R. Ishmael son of R. Yose: Scripture says, "Then the Lord caused to rain upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord" (Gen. 19:24). Should it not have said, "From Him"? A certain fuller interjected, "Leave him to me. I will answer him." [He then proceeded]: "It is written, 'And Lamech said to his wives: Ada and Zillah, hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech' [Gen. 4:23]. He should have said, 'My wives.' But such is the idiom of Scripture. Here, too, such is the idiom of Scripture."[4]

128. "It is not in heaven" (Deut. 30:12). Moses said to them, "Do not say, 'Another Moses will arise and bring us another Torah from heaven,' for I say to you, 'It is not in heaven'—no part of it has remained in heaven."[5]

129. R. Meir calls the heretics' writ aven-gilion,[6] "the gospel of falsehood"; R. Yohanan calls it avon-gilion, "the gospel of iniquity."

In the vicinity of Imma Shalom, R. Eliezer's wife, who was Rabban Gamaliel's sister, there lived a heretical judge who had a reputation for not accepting bribes. In an attempt to expose him, Imma Shalom brought him a golden lamp. She then appeared before him [in court], where she said, "I desire that a share be given me in my [deceased] father's estate." He ordered, "Divide [the estate]!" But Rabban Gamaliel spoke up, "In our Scripture, it is written, 'Where there is a son, a daughter does not inherit.' " The heretical judge: "Ever since the day you were exiled from your Land, the Torah of Moses has been suspended and another Torah given.[7] In that Torah it is written, 'A son and a daughter inherit equally.' " The next day, after Rabban Gamaliel had brought him a Lybian ass, the judge said to them, "I have read further to the end of the book, where it is written, 'I came not to destroy the Torah of Moses,[8] but only to add to the Torah of Moses,' and as you said, in that Torah it is written, 'A daughter does not inherit where there is a son.' " At this, Imma Shalom said to the judge, "May your light shine forth like a lamp!" Rabban Gamaliel added, "An ass has come and knocked down the lamp!"[9]

130. Heretics challenged R. Abbahu: We do not find death mentioned in connection with Enoch. R. Abbahu: What makes you say so? The heretics: It is said of Enoch, "God took him" (Gen. 5:24), and it is said of Elijah [who did not die], "Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head today?" (2 Kings 2:3). R. Abbahu: If you base your conclusion on the term "taking," consider that, just as it is used of Enoch, so is it used with regard to the death of Ezekiel's wife, of whom it is said, "I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke" (Ezek. 24:16) ["with a stroke" clearly implying death]. R. Tanhuma observed: R. Abbahu answered them beautifully.[10]

---

1. B. Sanh 38b.
2. Hence, the voices of what appear to be several gods are in reality varying manifestations of the one and only God. Exod. R. 29:1.
3. By saying that there are many deities. B. Men 110a; Sif Num., §143.
4. B. Sanh 38b.
5. Deut. R. 8:6.
6. A play on the Greek word evangelion ("gospel").
7. Or, as in the Oxford Codex: "and the law of the Evangelium has been given."
8. See Matthew 5:17ff.
9. B. Shab 116a–b.
10. Gen. R. 25:1.

131. There were once two heretics; one was called Sason, "joy," and the other Simhah, "gladness." Sason said to Simhah, "I am better than you, since it is said, 'They shall obtain Sason and Simhah' " (Isa. 35:10).[1] "No," said Simhah, "I am better than you, since it is written, 'The Jews had Simhah and Sason' " (Esther 8:17).[2] "One day," said Sason to Simhah, "they will take you out and make you a mere runner, since it is said, 'For with Simhah shall they go forth' " (Isa. 55:12). "One day," Simhah said to Sason, "they will take you out and draw water with you, for it is said, 'Therefore with Sason shall ye draw water' " (Isa. 4:3).

A Sadducee whose name was Sason said to R. Abbahu, "In the world-to-come, you will be drawing water for me, since it is said, 'Ye shall draw water for joy (be-sason)' " (Isa. 12:3).[3] R. Abbahu replied, "Had the text actually read 'for joy (le-sason),' you would have been right. But since it reads 'in joy (be-sason),' it implies that your skin will be made into a bottle for us to draw water."[4]

132. Know how to answer the unbeliever.[5]

Between Man and Him Who Is Everywhere

133. Bar Kappara expounded: What is the brief passage upon which all principles of Torah depend? "In all thy ways be aware of Him" (Prov. 3:6).[6]

134. "It is He that buildeth His upper chamber in the heaven, [which is firm only] as long as it stays tied together; [otherwise it collapses] upon the earth on which He founded it" (Amos 9:6).[7] R. Simeon ben Yohai said: The verse may be understood by the parable of a man who brought two ships and fastened them together with anchors and clamps, then placed them on their keels [on dry land] and built a [chambered] palace over them. As long as the ships stay fastened together, the [chambered] palace stands. Once the ships are separated, the [chambered] palace will not stand. So are Israel: when they obey the will of Him who is everywhere, His upper chamber in heaven stands. But when they do not obey the will of Him who is everywhere, "that which [was] tied together [collapses] upon the earth on which He founded it." Similarly, you say, "This is my God, and I will glorify Him" (Exod. 15:2). When I acknowledge Him, He—if one dare say such a thing—is glorified, but when I do not acknowledge Him, He is glorified merely in name. Similarly, you say, "Ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord, and I am God" (Isa. 43:12). When you are My witnesses, I am God, but when you are not My witnesses, I am not God. Similarly, you say, "Unto Thee I lift up mine eyes, O Thou that art my enthroned one[8] in the heavens" (Ps. 123:1). But for me, You would not be sitting in the heavens.[9]

135. "The God before whom my fathers did walk" (Gen. 48:15). R. Yohanan and Resh Lakish differed in their interpretations of this verse. R. Yohanan said: God is compared to a shepherd who stands and watches his flock. Resh Lakish said: He is like a prince before whom the elders walk. According to R. Yohanan's opinion, we are in need [of the majesty] of His glory.[10] According to Resh Lakish, He is in need [of our eagerness] to glorify Him.[11]

136. "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God," etc. (Deut. 6:5). R. Eliezer the Elder commented: If Scripture says, "With all thy soul," why also say "With all thy might"? On the other hand, if it says, "With all thy might," why say also, "With all thy soul"? The answer is: Should there be a man whose body is more precious to him than his money, Scripture says to him, "With all thy soul"; and should there be a man whose monetary might is more precious to him than his life, Scripture says to him, "With all thy might." But R. Akiva maintained that "With all thy soul" means: Love Him even during the affliction you suffer at His taking the soul from your body. Simeon ben Azzai said: "With all thy soul"—love Him until your soul departs from you.

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy entire heart" (Deut. 6:5)—with both your impulses, the impulse to good and the impulse to evil.[12]

137. R. Yose said: Let all your deeds be for the sake of Heaven.[13]

138. "The fear of the Lord is His treasure" (Isa. 33:6). Rava said: When a man is led in for judgment [in the world-to-come], he is asked, "In your dealings, did you give and take with integrity? Did you fix definite times for study of Torah? Did you fulfill the duty of being fruitful and multiplying? Did you wait for [God's] deliverance? Did you analyze the wisdom you acquired? Did you draw proper inferences from each utterance?" No matter what the answer to these questions, if "the fear of the Lord is his treasure,"[14] it will go well with him; if not, it will not go well. The latter may be compared to a situation where a man told his agent, "Bring a kor of wheat up for me into my upper chamber." After the agent went and brought it

---

1. "Joy" before "gladness."
2. "Gladness" before "joy."
3. JV: "Therefore with joy shall ye draw water."
4. The stories of Sason and Simhah may have been directed at heresiarchs, who by various means "found" allusions to themselves in Scripture. R. Abbahu was known for his skill in debating such heretics. B. Suk 486.
5. Avot 2:19. See parallel in 1 Peter 3:15.
6. B. Ber 63a.
7. JV: "It is He that buildeth His upper chambers in the heaven, and hath founded His vault upon the earth." But aguddato ("His vault") can also mean "that which He fastened together."
8. "The poetic form yoshvi (enthroned one) would in ordinary prose mean 'my enthroned one' " (Brother Caedmon Holmes).
9. Sif Deut., §346.
10. To scare off all kinds of predators.
11. Since we are the ones who speak of His greatness. Gen. R. 30:10.
12. B. Ber 61b; Sif Deut., §32.
13. Avot 2:17.
14. Even if he answers all these questions affirmatively, he is asked the final and most important question: Did he fear the Lord?

up, the man asked him, "Did you mix in with it a kav of sandy soil containing salt?"[1] When the agent said no, he replied, "Then it would have been better if you had not carried up the wheat at all."[2]

139. R. Hanina said: Everything is in the hand of Heaven except the fear of Heaven, as is said, "And now Israel, what is the one thing that the Lord thy God requireth of thee, but to fear Him?" (Deut. 10:12). Yet, is the fear of Heaven such a small thing? Did not R. Hanina, citing R. Simeon ben Yohai, say: In His treasuries the Holy One, blessed be He, has naught but the treasure of fear of Heaven, as is said, "His one treasure is fear of the Lord" (Isa. 33:6)? Yes, for Moses it was a small thing, as R. Hanina explained by the parable of a man who is asked for a big utensil he happens to have—it seems a small thing to him. But if he is asked for a small utensil he does not have, it seems a big thing to him.[3]

140. R. Helbo said in the name of R. Huna: He who is filled with the fear of Heaven—his words are listened to, as is said, "The end of the matter, [when] all is heard, Fear God, and keep His commandments, that being all of man" (Eccles. 12:13). What is meant by "That being all of man"? According to R. Eleazar, the Holy One said: The entire world, all of it, was brought into being for such a man. According to R. Abba bar Kahana, such a man is equal in worth to the entire world, all of it. According to R. Simeon ben Azzai, the entire world, all of it, was brought into being only to provide companionship for such a man.[4]

141. R. Hama bar Papa said: When a man is endowed with grace, it is clear that he is one who fears Heaven, as is said, "The grace of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear Him" (Ps. 103:17).[5]

142. When R. Yohanan ben Zakkai fell ill, his disciples came in to visit him . . . and said to him: Our master, bless us. He replied: May it be God's will that the fear of Heaven shall be [as great] upon you as the fear of flesh and blood. His disciples asked: Is that all?[6] He replied: Would that you might attain even this much fear! You can see for yourselves the truth of what I say: When a man is about to commit a transgression, he says, "I hope no man will see me."[7]

143. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Greater is he who acts from love than he who acts from fear. For the latter, the merit remains in effect for only a thousand generations, while for the former, it remains in effect for two thousand generations. With regard to love of God, Scripture says, "He keepeth mercy for two thousand [generations] for them that love Me and keep His commandments [out of love]" (Exod. 20:6); while with regard to fear, Scripture says elsewhere, "For a thousand [generations] for them that keep His commandments [out of fear]" (Deut. 7:9).[8]

144. Judah ben Tema said: Be fierce as a leopard, light as an eagle, swift as a gazelle, and strong as a lion to do the will of your Father in heaven.[9]

145. Rabbi Judah [I] the Patriarch said: If you have done His will as though it were your own will, you have not yet done His will as He wills it. But if you have done His will as though it were not your own will, then you have done His will as He wills it. Is it your wish not to die? Die, so that you will not die [in the world-to-come]. Is it your wish to live? Do not live, so that you may live [in the world-to-come]. It is better for you to die in this world, where you are going to die whether you wish it or not, than to die in the time-to-come, where, if you wish, you need not die.[10]

146. Rabban Gamaliel son of R. Judah [I] the Patriarch used to say: Do His will as though it were your will, so that He may do your will as though it were His will. Set aside your own will in favor of His will, so that He may set aside the will of others in favor of your will.[11]

147. When a man enhances the glory of Heaven and belittles his own glory, the glory of Heaven is magnified and his own glory is likewise magnified. However, if a man belittles the glory of Heaven and enhances his own glory, the glory of Heaven remains undiminished, but his own glory is diminished.[12]

148. "Honor the Lord with whatever excellence He hath bestowed upon thee"[13] (Prov. 3:9)—with whatever He has bestowed upon you. If you are a man with good looks, honor Him with the good looks He has given you. If your voice is pleasing and you are seated in a synagogue, rise up and honor the Lord with your voice.

Hiyya the son of R. Eliezer ha-Kappar's sister had a pleasing voice, so R. Eliezer ha-Kappar would say to him: Hiyya, my son, rise up and honor the Lord with what He has bestowed upon you.[14]

149. R. Yohanan ben Berokah said: He who profanes the Name of Heaven in secret—whether the profanation was done unwittingly or wantonly—shall be requited openly.[15]

---

1. To protect the wheat from vermin.
2. B. Shab 31a.
3. B. Ber 33b.
4. B. Ber 6b.
5. B. Suk 49b.
6. Should not the fear of God exceed fear of mortals?
7. He does not say, "I hope God will not see me." B. Ber 28b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. B. Sot 31a.
9. Avot 5:23.
10. ARNB 32.
11. Avot 2:4.
12. TdE 14 (JPS, p. 188); Num. R. 4:20.
13. A play on hnnk ("bestowed upon you") and hvnk ("the substance given you").
14. PR 25:2 (YJS 18:516–17).
15. Avot 4:4.

150. "There is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the Lord" (Prov. 21:30). Wherever there is profanation of the Lord's Name, no respect is given to a teacher.[1]

151. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Jehozadak: It is well to have a letter rooted out of the Torah if the Name of Heaven will thereby be openly hallowed.[2]

152. One should expose hypocrites to prevent the profanation of the Name, as is said, "If a righteous man abandoneth his righteousness and doeth wrong [in secret], I shall put a stumbling block before him [to expose him]" (Ezek. 3:20).[3]

153. There should be no delay in punishment for profanation of the Name, whether unwitting or wanton.[4]

154. To what extent is one guilty of profanation of the Name? In my case, said Rav, if I buy meat from the butcher and do not pay him at once.[5]

When Abbaye bought meat from two partners, he paid each of them separately. Afterward, he brought them together and made the reckoning with them [so that each should know that he had paid the other].

In the school of R. Yannai, it was taught: If a disciple's colleagues are ashamed of his [bad] reputation [but nevertheless are willing to put up with it], they are guilty of profanation of the Name. By way of example, R. Nahman bar Isaac cited the case of a disciple about whom people said, "May his Lord forgive him."[6]

155. For him who is guilty of profanation of the Name, penitence has no power to suspend judgment; the Day of Atonement has no power to expiate, nor suffering to purge. All of them together, however, suspend judgment, and death scours it, as is said, "The Lord of hosts revealed Himself in my ears: This iniquity [of profanation] shall not be expiated by you till you die" (Isa. 22:14).[7]

156. Six hundred and thirteen commandments were spoken to Moses. When Habakkuk came, he summed them up in one principle, saying, "The righteous shall live by his faith" (Hab. 2:4).[8]

Prayer

157. We have been taught: "To love the Lord your God and to serve Him with all your heart" (Deut. 11:13). What service is that with the heart? You must say, It is prayer.[9]

158. R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: "The Lord is the hope (mikveh) of Israel" (Jer. 17:13) means that as the ritual bath of purification (mikveh)[10] cleanses those who are unclean, so the Holy One, blessed be He, cleanses Israel.

Hence, the Holy One, blessed be He, declared to Israel: When you pray, pray in the synagogue in your city; if you cannot pray in the synagogue in your city, pray in your open field; if you cannot pray in your open field, pray in your house; if you cannot pray in your house, pray on your bed; if you cannot pray aloud in your bed, commune with your heart.[11] Hence it is written, "Commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still. Selah" (Ps. 4:5).[12]

159. R. Yose son of R. Hanina said: The [daily] *Tefillah*s were instituted by the [three] patriarchs. But R. Joshua ben Levi said: They were instituted to replace the [two] daily offerings [in the Temple].[13]

160. Abraham instituted the morning Tefillah; Isaac instituted the afternoon Tefillah; and Jacob instituted the evening Tefillah.[14]

161. "I sleep, yet my heart waketh" (Song 5:2). The congregation of Israel said to the Holy One, blessed be He: Master of the universe, "I sleep" for lack of offerings [since there is no Temple now]; "yet my heart waketh" at the reading of the Shema and the Tefillah.[15]

162. R. Eleazar said: Prayer is more efficacious than offerings.

R. Eleazar also said: Ever since the day the Temple was destroyed, the gates of prayer have been closed, for Scripture says, "Yea, when I cry and call for help, He shutteth out my prayer" (Lam. 3:8). But though the gates of prayer are closed, the gates of tears are not closed, for it says, "Hear my prayer, O Lord . . . [but if Thou wilt not hear], keep not silence at my tears" (Ps. 39:13).[16]

163. R. Joshua ben Levi said: Even an iron partition cannot interpose between Israel and their Father in heaven.[17]

164. Blessed be you unto the Lord, ye heavens and ye who go down in the chariot, if you tell and declare to My children what I do when they pronounce the sanctification, saying, "Holy, holy, holy." Be sure to teach them to lift

---

1. B. Ber 19b; B. Er 63a.
2. B. Yev 79a.
3. B. Yoma 86b.
4. B. Kid 40a.
5. For then people might think that Rav does not pay at all, as a reward for his leniency when the butcher inquires about kashrut (the fitness of a slaughtered animal). So Mikhtam, cited by Steinsaltz in his edition of Yoma, ad loc.
6. B. Yoma 86a.
7. Ibid.
8. B. Mak 23b–24a.
9. B. Ta 2a.
10. A play on these two homonyms.
11. "That is, if you cannot go to your synagogue because you are busily at work in your field, pray there; if you cannot manage to pray in the field, wait until you reach your home and pray there; if you are traveling and cannot pray in your home, pray on your bed while you rest; if you are on the move and cannot pray on your bed, commune with your heart" (Leon Nemoy).
12. MTeh 4:9.
13. B. Ber 26b.
14. Ibid.
15. Song R. 5:2, §1.
16. B. Ber 32b; B. BM 59a.
17. B. Pes 85b.

their eyes to their [heavenly] house of prayer and thus lift themselves to the region above. For I have no joy in the world like the joy in that hour when their eyes are lifted to Me on high and My eyes meet their eyes. In that hour I take hold of the throne of My glory, which is in the likeness of Jacob, hug them in My arms, kiss them, am mindful of their exile, and hasten their redemption.[1]

165. "Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye men of Israel" (Isa. 41:14). Just as the worm has only its mouth with which to smite the cedar, so Israel has only prayer. Likewise, Scripture says, "They were sore afraid, the children of Israel cried unto the Lord" (Exod. 14:10)—they seized upon the occupation of their fathers, the occupation of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Thus, too, Jacob said to Joseph, "Moreover, I have given to thee one portion more than to thy brethren, which I took from the Amorites with my sword and with my bow" (Gen. 48:22). Did Jacob really take it with his sword and his bow? Rather, by "my sword" he meant prayer, and by "my bow" supplication. Likewise, David said to Goliath, "Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a javelin; but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts" (1 Sam. 17:45). And it is also written, "Some trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will make mention of the Name of the Lord our God. They are bowed down and fallen; but we are risen and stand upright. Save, Lord; let the King answer us in the day that we call" (Ps. 20:8–10). Likewise, Scripture says, "And Asa cried unto the Lord his God, and said: 'Lord, there is none beside Thee to help, between the mighty and him that hath no strength; help us, O Lord our God; for we rely on Thee, and in Thy name are we come against this multitude,' " etc. (2 Chron. 14:10).[2]

166. R. Simeon taught: What skilled craftsmen are Israel, who know just how to conciliate their Creator!

R. Yudan said: Those Cutheans really know how to beg alms. One of them goes to a woman and says to her, "Do you have an onion? Please give it to me." After she gives it to him, he says to her, "But can one eat an onion without bread?" After she gives him bread, he says, "Can one eat without drinking?" Thus he obtains both food and drink.

R. Aha said: There is a woman who is clever at borrowing, and there is a woman who is not clever at borrowing. There is a woman who is clever at borrowing: she goes to her neighbor, and, though the door is open, she knocks on it and says, "Peace unto you, my neighbor. How are you doing? How is your husband doing? How are your children doing?" Should the neighbor reply, "They are well," she will ask, "May I come in?" The neighbor will then say, "Come in. What do you require?" The visitor: "Have you such-and-such a utensil? Would you let me have it?" The neighbor is likely to answer, "Yes." On the other hand, the woman who is not clever at borrowing will go to the neighbor, and, though the door is closed, she will open it and say to her, "Have you such-and-such a utensil?" The neighbor is likely to answer, "No."

R. Hanina said: There is a tenant who is clever at borrowing, and there is another tenant who is not clever at borrowing. The one clever at borrowing: when he sees that he is likely to fall behind in what he will produce during his tenancy, he summons up his courage, combs his hair, cleans his garments, puts on a cheerful face, takes his stick in his hand, places his [seal] ring on his finger, and goes to his landlord. When the latter says to him, "Come in peace, my good tenant. How are you making out?" he responds, "I am doing well." "How is the land doing?" "May you enjoy its produce in plenty." "How are the oxen doing?" "May you enjoy their fat in plenty." "How are the goats doing?" "May you enjoy their kids in plenty." "What do you require?" "If you have ten denars, would you let me have them?" The landlord: "If you need them, take even twenty." As for the tenant who is not clever at borrowing: he will go to his landlord with his hair unkempt, his clothes soiled, and his face gloomy. When the landlord asks him, "How is the land doing?" he replies, "I hope that you will get out of it what you put into it." "How are the oxen doing?" "They are feeble." "What do you need?" "If you have ten denars, give them to me." "Be off, and give me back what you [already] have of mine."[3]

167. "May He regard the prayer of the destitute" (Ps. 102:18). R. Isaac interpreted the verse as referring to the generations in exile, which have neither king nor prophet, neither priest nor Urim and Tummim, and have nothing left to them except prayer. David said to the Holy One, blessed be He: Master of the universe, do not despise their prayer.[4]

168. R. Hama bar Hanina said: If a man sees that he prays and is not answered, he should pray again, for Scripture says, "Wait thou for the Lord, be strong and let thy heart take courage; yea, wait thou for the Lord" (Ps. 27:14).[5]

169. Both R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar said: Even if a sharp sword is actually resting on a man's neck, he should not hold himself back from praying for [God's] mercy.[6]

170. R. Ze'era said: A man may have a favorite who so importunes him with his needs and his wants that the man comes to dislike him and tries to avoid him. But with the Holy One, blessed be He, it is not so. The more a man importunes God with his needs and his wants, the more God loves him, as is said, "Call unto Me, and I will answer thee" (Jer. 33:3).

R. Ze'era said further: A man may have a client [a dependent]. The first time the client comes to visit, he seats him on a couch; the second time the client comes to visit, he seats him on a chair; the third time, he seats him on a bench; but the fourth time, he says of him, "How this fellow forces himself upon me, and how he burdens

---

1. Hekhalot.
2. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yehi, 3; Yalkut, Isa., §450.
3. Lev. R. 5:8.
4. Lev. R. 30:3.
5. B. Ber 32b.
6. B. Ber 10a.

me!" But with the Holy One, blessed be He, it is not so: the more often the children of Israel throng toward His place of prayer, the greater is His joy. Hence it is said, "Who is as the Lord our God whensoever we call upon Him?" (Deut. 4:7).[1]

171. R. Yudan said, Flesh and blood may have a patron, but when a time of trouble befalls him, he cannot go in unannounced to his patron. Instead, he comes and has to stand at the patron's door and call a servant or a member of the household, who will tell the patron, "So-and-so is standing at the door." He then may admit him or may leave him standing at the door. But not such a patron is the Holy One, blessed be He, who says, "Whenever trouble befalls a man, he need call neither Michael nor Gabriel. Let him call Me directly, and I shall answer him at once." As Scripture says, "It shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the Name of the Lord shall be delivered" (Joel 3:5).[2]

172. The Holy One, blessed be He, yearns for the prayers of the righteous.[3]

173. "And Isaac was as effective as a shovel" (Gen. 25:21).[4] R. Isaac said: Why is the prayer of the righteous likened to a shovel? Even as a shovel turns the grain from one place to another in the granary, so the prayer of the righteous turns the dispensations of the Holy One, blessed be He, from the measure of anger to the measure of mercy.[5]

174. "For the Leader. Upon the hind of the dawn" (Ps. 22:1). R. Benjamin bar Japheth said in the name of R. Eleazar: Why is the prayer of the righteous compared to a hind? To tell you that as with the hind, whose antlers keep forming more and more branches every year as long as it grows, so with the righteous—the more they pray, the more will their prayer be heard.[6]

175. A man upon whom a calamity has befallen should make it known to the public, so that many people may entreat [God's] mercy for him.[7]

176. Rabbah bar Hinena the Elder said in the name of Rav: He who is able to entreat [God's] mercy for his fellow and does not is called a sinner, for Scripture says, "Moreover, as for me, far be it from me that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you" (1 Sam. 12:23). Rava said: If his fellow who is in straits is a disciple of the wise, he must pray for him to the point of making himself sick.[8]

177. He who entreats [God's] mercy for his fellow while he himself is in need of the same thing will be answered first, for it is said, "The Lord changed the fortune of Job when he prayed for his friend" (Job 42:10).[9]

178. When you pray, make your prayer not a routine but a plea for mercy and a supplication before the Holy One, blessed be He.

R. Eliezer said: When a man makes his prayer a routine, it is not supplication.

What is meant by [one whose prayer is a] routine? R. Jacob bar Idi said in the name of R. Hoshaia: Anyone whose prayer is to him nothing but a heavy burden. The sages said: He who does not say it as one supplicating. Rabbah and R. Joseph both said: He who is unable to bring something fresh into it. Abba bar Avin and R. Hanina bar Avin both said: He who does not make an effort to pray [in the morning and in the evening at the proper time, namely] when the sun appears to stand still.[10]

179. [Mornings], R. Yose bar Hanina used to pray at the time the sun appeared to stand still, so that the fear of Heaven might be upon him all day.[11]

180. "And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed," etc. (Exod. 17:11). But did the hands of Moses actually wage war or win victories? Of course not. What the text signifies is that so long as Israel turned their thoughts upward and submitted their hearts to their Father in heaven, they prevailed; but otherwise, they fell.

In the same way, you read, "Make thee a fiery serpent . . . and it shall come to pass that everyone that is bitten, when he seeth it, shall live" (Num. 21:8). But was it the serpent that killed, or was it the serpent that kept alive? Not so: what the text indicates is that so long as Israel turned their thoughts upward and submitted their hearts to their Father in heaven, they were healed; otherwise, they rotted away.[12]

181. Our masters taught: He who prays should direct his heart toward Heaven. The verse "Thou directest their heart, then Thou causest Thine ear to attend" (Ps. 10:17), said Abba Saul, is a reminder of this requirement.[13]

182. R. Hiyya and R. Simeon bar Rabbi were once sitting together when one of them began [the following discussion]: A man at prayer should direct his eyes toward the place here on earth [where the Temple once stood], in keeping with the verse "And Mine eyes and Mine heart shall be there perpetually" (1 Kings 9:3). But the other said: He should direct his eyes toward [the heavens] above, for Scripture says, "Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens" (Lam. 3:41). In the meanwhile, R. Ishmael son of R. Yose joined them and asked, "What subject are you discussing?" "One's posture at prayer." R. Ishmael: "My father ruled thus: 'A man at prayer should

---

1. MTeh 4:3.
2. P. Ber 9:1, 13a.
3. B. Yev 64a.
4. JV: "And Isaac entreated." But 'tr ("to entreat") also means "shovel."
5. B. Yev 64a; B. Suk 14a.
6. B. Yoma 29a.
7. B. Hul 78a.
8. B. Ber 12b.
9. B. BK 92a.
10. Avot 2:13; B. Ber 29b.
11. P. Ber 2:1, 7b.
12. B. RH 29a.
13. B. Ber 31a.

direct his eyes toward the place here on earth [where the Temple once stood] and direct his heart toward [the heavens] above, so as to comply with both verses.' "[1]

183. R. Ammi said: A man's prayer is not heard until he places his very life into his uplifted hands, as is said, "Let us lift up our hearts with our hands unto God in the heavens" (Lam. 3:41).[2]

184. Hezekiah said: A man's prayer is not heard until he makes his heart [soft] like flesh, as is said, "And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another . . . shall all flesh come to worship before Me" (Isa. 66:23).[3]

185. R. Eleazar would first give a copper to a poor man, and then pray, explaining: It is said, "Through charity I shall behold Thy face" (Ps. 17:15).[4]

186. When a man does not distribute his tithes in generous fistfuls, his prayer will not ascend [to heaven].[5]

187. R. Judah said: Repentance effects half [of the atonement], while prayer effects all [of it]. But R. Joshua ben Levi said the opposite: Repentance effects all [of the atonement], while prayer effects only half.[6]

188. "There shall not be male nor female barren among you" (Deut. 7:14). R. Hanin ben Levi said: This means that your prayer will never prove barren—it will always rise and bear fruit.[7]

189. R. Hanina bar Papa put the following question to R. Samuel bar Nahman: Since I have heard that you are a master of Aggadah, [tell me] what is signified by the verse "Thou hast covered Thyself with a cloud, so that no prayer can pass through" (Lam. 3:44). He replied: Prayer is likened to an immersion pool, while repentance is likened to the sea. Even as an immersion pool is at times open and at times barred, so the gates of prayer are at times barred and at times open. On the other hand, the sea is always open, so that whoever wishes to bathe in it bathes in it whenever he wishes. So, too, the gates of repentance are always open. R. Berekhiah and R. Helbo said in the name of R. Anan son of R. Joseph: In truth, the gates of prayer too are never barred.[8]

190. Quoting "As for me, let my prayer be unto Thee, O Lord, in an acceptable time" (Ps. 69:14), R. Yose bar Halafta said: This means that there are acceptable times for prayer and that David prayed to the Holy One, blessed be He: Whenever I pray before You, may it be an acceptable time.[9]

191. "As for me, let my prayer be unto Thee, O Lord, in an acceptable time." For everything the Holy One, blessed be He, set a time and a season, as is said, "There is a time for every experience, including the doom" (Eccles. 8:6)—except for prayer. Whenever a man prays, he is answered. Why is no time set for prayer? Were a man to know the time when, if he prays, he will be answered, he would leave off other times and pray only then. Accordingly, the Holy One, blessed be He, said: For this reason I do not let you know when you will be answered, so that you will be willing to pray at all times, as is said, "Put your trust in Him at all times" (Ps. 62:9).[10]

192. Our masters taught: One should not stand up to say the Tefillah when depressed, when indolent, when laughing, when gossiping, when frivolous, or when engaged in idle matters, but only when still rejoicing after the performance of a religious act.[11]

193. One should not stand up to say the Tefillah except in a reverent frame of mind. The pious men of yore used to spend an hour [in meditation] and pray only after that, in order to make sure that their hearts would be directed to their Father in heaven.

And the proof from Scripture? From the verse "Worship the Lord in the beauty (hadrat) of holiness" (Ps. 29:2), concerning which R. Joshua ben Levi said, Read not hadrat but herdat, "awe." But R. Nahman bar Isaac said, From another verse: "Serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling" (Ps. 2:11), which, according to Rav, means; Where there is rejoicing, there is also to be trembling.[12]

194. Our masters taught: The pious men of yore used to spend an hour [in meditation], then pray for an hour, and then meditate again for an hour. But seeing that they thus had to spend nine hours a day at prayer,[13] how was their knowledge of Torah preserved, and how did their work get done? Well, because they were pious, their knowledge of Torah was preserved and their work was blessed with success.[14]

195. When you pray, know before whom you stand.[15]

196. R. Hanah bar Bizna said in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: When a man prays, he should regard himself as though the Presence were before him, in keeping with "I regard the Lord as always before me" (Ps. 16:8).[16]

---

1. B. Yev 105b.
2. B. Ta 8a.
3. B. Sot 5a.
4. B. BB 10a.
5. Num. R. 12:11.
6. Lev. R. 10:5.
7. Deut. R. 3:6.
8. Lam. R. 3:44, §9; MTeh 65:4.
9. P. Mak 2:6, 31d.
10. Aggadat Bereshit 77.
11. B. Ber 31a.
12. B. Ber 30b.
13. Three hours for each of the three daily services.
14. B. Ber 32b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
15. B. Ber 28b.
16. B. Sanh 22a.

197. R. Ashi said: During a period of distress in the world, I saw R. Kahana remove his cloak, clasp his hands, and pray, saying, "I pray like a slave before his master." But during a period of peace, he would put on his cloak, covering and wrapping himself with it, and pray, saying, "Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel" (Amos 4:12).[1]

198. Even if a man is greeted by the king while praying, he may not return the greeting. And even if a snake is wound around his heel, he may not interrupt his prayer.

Our masters taught: It is related that once, when a certain pious man was praying by the roadside, a general came by and greeted him, but he did not return his greeting. So the general waited for him to finish his prayer. When he finished it, the officer said to him: Numskull! Is it not written in your Torah, "Take utmost care, and watch yourself scrupulously" (Deut. 4:9), and also, "Be most careful about yourselves" (Deut. 4:15)? Why, then, when I greeted you, did you not return my greeting? Had I chosen to cut off your head with my sword, who would have demanded your blood from me? The pious man: Wait a moment, and I will try to explain. If you had been standing before a king of flesh and blood, and a friend of yours came by and greeted you, would you have returned his greeting? The general: No. The pious man: And if you did return his greeting, what would have been done to you? The general: My head would have been cut off with the sword. The pious man: Have we not here an instance of a fortiori? If such is the penalty for the return of a greeting when standing before a king of flesh and blood, who is here today and tomorrow in the grave, how much greater by far the penalty for the return of a greeting when I stand before the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, who lives and endures forever and ever and ever! The general was instantly mollified, and the pious man returned to his home in peace.[2]

199. Rav said in the name of R. Meir: When addressing the Holy One, blessed be He, a man's words should be few, for Scripture says, "Be not rash with thy mouth . . . to utter a word before God. . . . Therefore let thy words be few" (Eccles. 5:1).[3]

200. The story of a reader who went down[4] [before the Ark] in the presence of R. Hanina and said, "O God, great, mighty, awesome, majestic, powerful, feared, strong, overwhelming, reliable, and honored." R. Hanina waited until the reader finished. Then, when he finished, he asked him, "Have you concluded all epithets of praise to be accorded to your Master? Why did you have to voice so many? We would not have been allowed to utter even the three[5] we do utter, had not Moses our teacher mentioned them in the Torah and had not the Men of the Great Synagogue come and included them in the Tefillah; yet you not only uttered the three, but went on and on. It is as if a king of flesh and blood had a thousand thousand gold denars and was praised for possessing silver ones. Would that not be an insult to him?"[6]

201. Our masters taught: Once a certain disciple went down before the Ark in the presence of R. Eliezer and spun out his prayers to great length. R. Eliezer's disciples said to him: Master, what a long-winded fellow this one is! R. Eliezer: Did he spin out his prayer to greater length than did our teacher Moses, who mentioned "the forty days and the forty nights [that I fell down in prayer]" (Deut. 9:25)?

Another time it happened that a certain disciple went down before the Ark in the presence of R. Eliezer and made his prayers very short. R. Eliezer's disciples said to him: What a terse fellow this one is! R. Eliezer: Was he any more terse than our teacher Moses, who prayed, "Heal her, O God, I beseech Thee" (Num. 12:13)?[7]

202. Rava saw R. Hamnuna prolonging his prayers. He said: Some people forsake eternal life [i.e., study of Torah] and occupy themselves with temporal life.[8] But R. Hamnuna held: The time for prayer is reckoned by itself, and the time for study is reckoned by itself.[9]

203. How many *Tefillah*s is one required to utter every day? Our masters taught: One is to utter no more than the three *Tefillah*s which the Fathers of the world ordained. David came and specified the times: "Evening, morn, and noon" (Ps. 55:18). Hence, one is not permitted to utter more than three *Tefillah*s a day. However, R. Yohanan said: Oh that one could continue to pray the entire day![10]

204. Antoninus asked our holy Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]: "Is one allowed to pray every hour?" Rabbi: "It is forbidden." Antoninus: "Why?" Rabbi: "So that one should not become irreverent toward the Almighty." Antoninus refused to accept this explanation. What did our holy Rabbi do? Early in the morning, he went to the palace of Antoninus and called out, "Hail, O Lord."[11] An hour later, he came again: "Hail, Emperor." After another hour: "Peace upon you, O king." At this, Antoninus asked, "Why do you treat royalty with such contempt?" Rabbi replied, "Let your ears hear what your mouth utters. If you, who are no more than flesh and blood, think that he who salutes you every hour holds you in contempt, surely one should not bother [with his prayers] the King who is King of kings every hour."[12]

205. R. Eleazar said: When in doubt whether one has recited the Tefillah or not, he need not go back and recite

---

1. B. Shab 10a.
2. B. Ber 30b and 32b–33a, and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. B. Ber 61a.
4. The reading desk was at a lower level than the floor of the synagogue; hence the expression "went down."
5. "Great, mighty, and awesome" (Hertz, APB, p. 131).
6. B. Ber 33b.
7. B. Ber 34a.
8. Prayers for health and sustenance.
9. One should not be shortened for the sake of the other. B. Shab 10a.
10. Tanhuma, Mi-ketz, §9; B. Ber 31a.
11. Kiri keri; Greek: Kyrie chaire.
12. Tanhuma, Mi-ketz, §9.

it. But R. Yohanan said: O that one could keep reciting the Tefillah all day long![1]

206. "Let every breath praise the Lord" (Ps. 150:6). At each and every breath a man takes, he should praise his Creator.[2]

207. R. Yose son of R. Hanina, citing R. Eliezer ben Jacob, said: The verse that reads "Ye shall not eat before the blood" (Lev. 19:26)[3] means you are not to eat before you say the Tefillah for [the gift of] your blood.

When a man eats and drinks, and then says the Tefillah, Scripture declares of him, "Thou . . . hast cast Me behind thy back" (1 Kings 14:9). Read not gavvekha, "behind thy back," but ge'akha, "behind thy arrogance." For the Holy One, blessed be He, says, "Only after this person stoked his arrogance did he deign to accept the kingship of Heaven."[4]

208. A man should not stand on a chair, a footstool, or any place that is elevated when he says the Tefillah, but should stand in a place that is low lying and say it there, in keeping with the verse "Out of the depths I call Thee, O Lord" (Ps. 130:1).[5]

209. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: One should always pray in a house that has windows, for it is said of Daniel at prayer, "His windows were open in his upper chamber toward Jerusalem" (Dan. 6:11).[6]

210. Our masters taught: A blind man or anyone who cannot direct his gaze toward a particular point of the compass should direct his heart toward his Father in heaven. If he is standing outside the Land, he should direct his heart toward the Land of Israel, as is said, "And pray unto Thee toward their Land" (1 Kings 8:48). If he stands in the Land of Israel, he should direct his heart toward Jerusalem, as is said, "And they pray unto the Lord toward the city which Thou hast chosen" (1 Kings 8:44). If he is standing in Jerusalem, he should direct his heart toward the Temple, as is said, "They pray toward this house" (2 Chron. 6:32). If he is standing in the Temple, he should direct his heart toward the Holy of Holies, as is said, "They pray toward this place" (1 Kings 8:35). If he is in the east, he should turn his face to the west; if in the west, he should turn his face to the east; if in the south, he should turn his face to the north; if in the north, he should turn his face to the south. In this way, all Israel will be turning their hearts toward the same place. The verse that confirms the need for turning toward the same place is "Thy neck is like the tower of David builded with talpiyyot"[7] (Song 4:4), talpiyyot being understood as a composite word, "the hill (tel)[8] toward which all (piyyot) mouths are to turn."[9]

211. R. Hamnuna said: How many important rulings may be derived from the verses about Hannah at prayer (1 Sam. 1:10ff.). "Now Hannah, she spoke with her heart"—hence, he who says the Tefillah must direct his full heart to the prayer; "only her lips moved"—hence, he who says the Tefillah is to do it clearly with his lips; "but her voice could not be heard"—hence, it is forbidden to raise one's voice in the Tefillah; "and Eli thought she was drunk"—hence, one who is drunk is forbidden to say the Tefillah.[10]

212. The story is told of a man who always regretted not having read Scripture nor recited Mishnah. Once, as he was standing in the synagogue and the reader before the Ark reached the Sanctification of the Divine Name,[11] the man raised his voice, responding loudly to the reader, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts" (Isa. 6:3). People asked him, "What impelled you to raise your voice?" He replied, "I have not had the privilege of reading Scripture or reciting Mishnah. Now when I get the opportunity [to respond], should I not raise my voice, so that my [troubled] spirit may be calmed?"[12] Not one year passed by nor a second, nor a third but that [good fortune came to this man]. He went up from Babylonia to the Land of Israel, was made an officer of the Roman emperor's army, and was appointed supervisor of all the fortresses in the Land of Israel. Then they assigned him an area where he built himself a town, in which he settled. And he, his children, and his grandchildren until the end of all the generations came to be recognized as coloni [citizens of Rome].[13]

213. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: Why was it instituted that the Tefillah be spoken in a whisper? In order not to embarrass transgressors.[14] For, note: Scripture does not provide one place on the altar for a burnt offering and another place for a sin offering.[15]

214. He who makes his voice heard during his Tefillah is of those whose faith is small.[16]

He who raises his voice during his Tefillah is at one with false prophets.[17]

---

1. B. Ber 21a; B. Pes 54b.
2. Gen. R. 14:9; Deut. R. 2:37.
3. JV: "Ye shall not eat with the blood."
4. B. Ber 10b.
5. Ibid.
6. B. Ber 34b.
7. JV: "turrets."
8. Understood as the hill on which the Temple stands.
9. B. Ber 30a.
10. B. Ber 31a.
11. The Kedushah. See Hertz, APB, p. 134.
12. "The man is depressed because he never had the chance (too busy, too poor, or no competent teachers nearby) to study Scripture and Mishnah. He is worried and unhappy. At last he sees a ray of hope—he can at least earn merit by loudly responding to the Sanctus. Now he feels at least slightly relieved, slightly easier, slightly less guilty. . . . This leads me to conclude that what is meant is shvh, ('to go down, to sink,'), from which it is only one step to 'to settle, to calm down, to rest' " (Leon Nemoy).
13. A play on words: Latin colonus ("settler," "citizen of Rome") and koloni ("one who raised his voice [in prayer])." Num. R. 4:20.
14. Who confess their sins.
15. So that the onlooker is unable to tell which kind of offering is brought. B. Sot 32b.
16. Since it suggests that unless he spoke audibly, God would not hear.
17. See 1 Kings 18:28.

He who belches or yawns during his Tefillah is of the arrogant. Some say, It shows that he is vulgar.

It is a bad omen for a man if he sneezes during his Tefillah.

When a man spits during his Tefillah, it is as if he spat in the face of the king.[1]

215. Our masters taught: One should not respond with a hasty amen,[2] a truncated amen,[3] or an orphaned amen.[4] Nor should one hurl, so to speak, a benediction from his mouth.[5]

216. R. Hiyya bar Ashi said in the name of Rav: He whose mind is not at ease may not say the Tefillah, since it is said, "He who is in distress shall not utter that which requires deliberation."

R. Hanina would not say the Tefillah on a day when he had succumbed to anger.

Samuel would not say the Tefillah in a house where there was alcoholic drink.

R. Papa would not say it in a house where there was a fish hash.[6]

Samuel's father would not say the Tefillah for three days after returning from a journey.[7]

217. To entreat concerning what has already happened is to utter a vain prayer. For example: if a man's wife is pregnant and he says, "May it be [God's] will that my wife give birth to a male child," he utters a vain prayer. If, upon returning from a journey, he hears a cry of distress in the town and says, "May it be [God's] will that there is nothing untoward in my home," he utters a vain prayer.[8]

218. There are certain pleas that are prayers uttered in vain. For example: a man gathers a hundred kor [of grain] and prays, "May it be [God's] will that they become two hundred." Or he brings in a hundred jars [of wine] and prays, "May it be [God's] will that they become two hundred." Each is a prayer uttered in vain. But he may pray that blessing come into what he has gathered and that no curse come into it.[9]

219. Our masters taught: He who is asked to go down before the Ark [to lead the service] must show reluctance.[10] If he shows no reluctance, he is like an unsalted dish [hurriedly served]. If he shows too much reluctance, he is like an oversalted dish. What should he do? The first time, he should show reluctance; the second time, he should hesitate like a wick just touched by the flame; the third time, he should stretch his legs and go down.[11]

220. If a man makes a mistake in his Tefillah, it is a bad omen for him; and if he is a reader for the congregation, it is a bad omen for those who have commissioned him, because a man's agent is like himself. It is told of R. Hanina ben Dosa that he used to pray for the sick and say, "This one will live, this one will die." When asked, "How do you know?" he would reply, "If my prayer comes fluently to my mouth, I know that the sick man is accepted [for recovery]; if not, then I know that he is rejected."[12]

221. R. Helbo said in the name of R. Huna: He who sets a fixed place for his Tefillah has the God of Abraham as his helper. And when he dies, people say of him, "Alas for the humble man, alas for the pious man, who was of the disciples of Abraham our father." And what is the proof that our father Abraham set a fixed place for his Tefillah? The verse "Abraham got up early in the morning to the place where he had stood before the Lord" (Gen. 19:27).[13]

222. Abba Benjamin said: A man's prayer is heard by God only in a house of prayer, for Scripture says, "[God is willing] to hearken to the song and to the prayer" (1 Kings 8:28). In the place where there is song,[14] there is to be prayer.

223. Ravin bar R. Adda said in the name of R. Isaac: What is the proof that the Holy One, blessed be He, is found in a house of prayer? The verse "God standeth in the congregation of God" (Ps. 82:1). And what is the proof that when ten people pray together, the Presence is with them? The verse "God standeth in the congregation of God."[15]

224. "I will be unto them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they have come" (Ezek. 11:16). The verse, said R. Isaac, refers to the houses of prayer and houses of study in Babylonia.

Rava expounded: The verse "O Lord, Thou hast been our refuge" (Ps. 90:1) refers to houses of prayer and houses of study.[16]

225. "I sleep, nevertheless my heart waketh" (Song 5:2). The congregation of Israel said to the Holy One, blessed be He: Master of the universe, I am [numb as though] asleep, for lack of the Temple; "nevertheless my heart waketh" in houses of prayer and houses of study.[17]

226. He hath delivered My soul by acts of peace, so that none dare wage war with Me—for many strive to come

---

1. B. Ber 24b.
2. "Men" instead of "amen."
3. "Ame" instead of "amen."
4. Spoken without having first heard the benediction.
5. Perfunctorily, as if it were a burden. A benediction should be uttered slowly and solemnly. B. Ber 47a.
6. He could not stand its pungent odor.
7. B. Er 65a.
8. B. Ber 54a.
9. Tos Ber 7:7.
10. By way of saying that he is unworthy of such a responsibility.
11. B. Ber 34a.
12. B. Ber 34b.
13. B. Ber 6b.
14. The song of the congregation and of the precentor. B. Ber 6a.
15. A congregation consists of not less than ten adult males (see B. Sanh 2a). B. Ber 6b.
16. B. Meg 29a.
17. Song R. 5:2, §1.

near Me" (Ps. 55:19).[1] The Holy One, blessed be He, said: When a man occupies himself with Torah and with deeds of charity [which lead to peace], and strives alongside many others to come near Me through prayer, it is as though he has redeemed Me—Me and My children—from the nations of the world.[2]

227. "But as for me, my prayer is unto Thee, O Lord, in an acceptable time" (Ps. 69:14). When is "an acceptable time"? The time when the congregation prays.[3]

228. "O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee (adekha) doth all flesh come" (Ps. 65:3). R. Phinehas in the name of R. Meir and R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Abba said: When Israel pray, you do not find them all praying at the same time, but each and every assembly prays separately, first one assembly and then another. When all assemblies have finished all their prayers, the angel appointed over prayers collects all the prayers that have been uttered in all the assemblies, weaves them into garlands, and places them upon the head of the Holy One, blessed be He, for Scripture says, "With a garland for Thee (adekha) doth all flesh come." The world adekha here means "garland," as in the verse "Thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all as with a garland (adi)" (Isa. 49:18). Thus, too, God says, "Israel, in whom I will be glorified" (Isa. 49:3), [implying that] the Holy One, blessed be He, is crowned with the prayers of Israel, for Scripture says, "And a glorious garland upon Thy head" (Ezek. 16:12).

Another comment: "O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee doth all flesh come." You are aware that flesh and blood cannot hear the conversation of two persons speaking at the same time. It is not so with the Holy One, blessed be He. All pray before Him, and He hears and receives the prayers of each one.

Another comment: "O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee doth all flesh come." Flesh and blood: when a poor man says something to him, he barely listens; but when a [rich] man comes to say something, he is all attention and deference. But the Holy One, blessed be He, does not act thus. Before Him, all are equal—women, slaves, poor, and rich. You can see this for yourself: to designate prayer, Scripture uses the same word for Moses, master of all prophets, and for a poor man. With regard to Moses, Scripture says, "A prayer of Moses, the man of God" (Ps. 90:1), and of a poor man, it says, "A prayer of the poor man, when he fainteth, and poureth out his complaint before the Lord" (Ps. 102:1). "Prayer" in the first instance and "prayer" in the second, so that you should know that at prayer all are equal before Him who is everywhere.[4]

229. Resh Lakish said: He who has a house of prayer in his city and does not enter it to pray is called an evil neighbor, as is said, "Thus saith the Lord: As for all Mine evil neighbors, who barely touch the inheritance which I have caused My people Israel to inherit" (Jer. 12:14). More! Such a person brings exile upon himself and upon his children, as the verse goes on to say, "Behold, I will pluck them up from off their land" (ibid.).[5]

230. Ravin bar R. Adda said in the name of R. Isaac: He who regularly attends a house of prayer, but fails to come one day—the Holy One, blessed be He, inquires about him, saying, "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of His servant? Yet now walketh off in darkness and hath no light?" (Isa. 50:10). If [he walked off in darkness away from the house of prayer] for a religious purpose, he will continue to have light; if for a secular purpose, he will have no light.

R. Yohanan said: When the Holy One, blessed be He, comes into a house of prayer and does not find ten persons there,[6] He immediately grows angry, saying, "Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? When I called, was there none to answer?" (Isa. 50:2).[7]

231. When R. Yohanan was told, "In Babylonia, there are men who are old," he was surprised. He quoted, " 'That your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the Land' [Deut. 11:21]—but not outside the Land!" But when told further, "These men go to a house of prayer morning and evening," he said, "It is this that made them worthy. For thus did R. Joshua ben Levi say to his sons: Go morning and evening to the house of prayer, that your life may be prolonged."[8]

232. R. Joshua ben Levi said: A man should always come early to the house of prayer, so that he may merit being counted among the first ten. Even if a hundred more come after him, he will receive a reward equal to that of all of them.[9]

233. R. Isaac asked R. Nahman: Why does the master not come to the synagogue to pray? R. Nahman: I have not the strength. R. Isaac: Then let ten men gather at the master's home and pray with him. R. Nahman: There is too much trouble for me in such an arrangement. R. Isaac: Then let the master ask the reader to come and tell the master that the congregation is about to pray [so that he may pray at the same time]. R. Nahman: Why go to such trouble? R. Isaac: Because of what R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: With regard to the verse "But as for me, my prayer is unto Thee, O Lord, in an acceptable time" (Ps. 69:14). When is the time acceptable? The time when the entire congregation is praying.[10]

---

1. JV: "He hath redeemed my soul in peace so that none came nigh me; for they were many that strove with me." The word mi-kerav can mean "wage war" as well as "come near."
2. B. Ber 8a.
3. Ibid.
4. Exod. R. 21:5.
5. B. Ber 8a.
6. The minimum number for a public service. If there are fewer than ten, several important parts of the service cannot be said.
7. B. Ber 6b and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Yalkut, Isa., §473.
8. B. Ber 8a.
9. B. Ber 47b.
10. B. Ber 7b–8a.

234. It happened that R. Eliezer entered a synagogue and did not find ten persons present. He emancipated his slave in order to complete the ten.[1]

235. "Happy is the man that hearkeneth to Me, determined to enter [within] My doors" (Prov. 8:34). What is meant by "determined to enter [within] My doors"? The Holy One, blessed be He, said, When you go to pray within the synagogue, do not remain standing at the outer door, to pray there.[2] But make sure that you go through the door beyond the outer one. Scripture does not say, "Determined to enter within My door," but, "Within My doors"—[at least] two doors. Why? Because God counts your steps and gives you a reward [for each step you take]. The Holy One, blessed be He, said: If you do so, know that you will face the Presence. What follows directly? "Whoso findeth Me findeth life" (Prov. 8:35), intimating that the Holy One, blessed be He, asked: Who ever came to a synagogue and did not find My glory there? Moreover, said R. Aibu, when you sit in a synagogue, the Holy One stands over you [to wait on you], as is said, "God standeth in the congregation of God" (Ps. 82:1). The Holy One, blessed be He, went on to say: Not only do you face the Presence in the synagogue, but you go out of there laden with blessings, as is said, "Whoso findeth Me findeth life, and obtaineth favor of the Lord" (Prov. 8:35).[3]

236. R. Helbo said in the name of R. Huna: When a man leaves the synagogue, he should not take big steps. Abbaye added: Only when one comes from the synagogue; but when he goes to it, it is his duty to run, as is said, "Let us hurry to know the Lord" (Hos. 6:3).[4]

237. We have been taught that Abba Benjamin said: If two men enter to pray, and one finishes his prayer earlier and, not waiting for the other, leaves,[5] his prayer is torn up in his face, as is said, "He teareth his soul['s outpouring] in his own face.[6] Shall the earth be forsaken because of thee?" (Job 18:4). Moreover, such a man causes the Presence to depart from Israel, as the verse goes on to say, "And shall the Rock be removed from His place?" (ibid.).[7]

238. Our masters taught: One is not to behave in a free and easy manner in synagogues. Thus, one should not eat or drink in them, make use of them for one's own pleasure, stroll about in them, or go into them during hot days merely to escape the heat and during rains to escape the rain. Nor is one to deliver in them a eulogy for a person mourned by few. But one may read Scripture in them, study Mishnah in them, and deliver in them a eulogy for a person mourned by many. Synagogue floors are to be swept and sprinkled, lest grass sprout on them. R. Judah said: When should that be done? When they are in use. But when they have been demolished, grass may be allowed to grow in them. When grass does grow in them, one should not pull it out—[its continued presence] will stir up grief [and the synagogues will be rebuilt].

Moreover, R. Judah said: If a synagogue has fallen into ruins, one still may not deliver a eulogy in it [for an ordinary individual], nor may one twist ropes or stretch out nets in it, nor may produce be spread on its roof to dry, nor may it be used as a shortcut, for Scripture says, "I will make your holy places desolate" (Lev. 26:31). Their holiness remains even when they are desolate.

R. Joshua ben Levi said: He who spits in a synagogue is as though he spat in God's eye.[8]

239. R. Assi said: Synagogues in Babylonia are built with the stipulation [that they may be used for ordinary purposes]. Nevertheless, one should not treat them irreverently. In what way, for example? By reckoning personal accounts there. R. Assi went on: A synagogue that is used for reckoning personal accounts may as well be used to keep a corpse overnight.[9]

240. Rav said: Any city whose roofs are higher than its synagogue will ultimately be destroyed, as is said, "To raise high the house of our God and so prevent the city's destruction" (Ezra 9:9).[10] The restriction applies only to houses; there is no objection to fortresses and towers [being higher than synagogues].[11]

241. R. Hisda said: One may not demolish a synagogue before another is built.[12]

242. While R. Hama bar Hanina and R. Hoshaia the Elder were walking among the synagogues of Lydda, R. Hama bar Hanina said to R. Hoshaia the Elder: "How much money my forebears sank here!" R. Hoshaian replied, "How many souls your forebears sank here! Would it not have been better if your forebears had instead made it possible for people to labor in Torah?"

R. Avin had a gate built for the great house of study. When R. Mani came to visit R. Avin, he said: Look at what I have accomplished. R. Mani applied to R. Avin the verse "Israel hath forgotten his Maker and builded palaces" (Hos. 8:14). Would it not have been better if you had instead made it possible for people to labor in Torah?[13]

243. When R. Eleazar concluded his Tefillah, he would add: May it be Your will, O Lord our God, that in our lot there dwell love and brotherhood, peace and friendship. May You make our territories abundant in disciples. To the very end of our lives, may You endow us with hope

---

1. B. Ber 47b.
2. Making it seem that you are eager to get away.
3. Deut R. 7:2; B. Ber 8a.
4. B. Ber 6b.
5. Exposing him to the danger of walking by himself from the synagogue, which was at some distance from the town.
6. JV: "He teareth himself in his anger." But nafsho ("himself") may also mean "his prayer"; and af ("anger") also means "face."
7. B. Ber 5b.
8. B. Meg 28a–b; P. Ber 3:5, 6d.
9. B. Meg 28b.
10. JV: "To set up the house of our God, and to repair the ruins thereof."
11. B. Shab 11a.
12. B. BB 3b.
13. P. Shek 5:4, 49a.

and expectation. May You set our portion in Paradise. May You sustain us in Your world with a good friend and a good impulse. When we rise in the morning, may we find our hearts yearning to fear Your Name, and may You be pleased to regard our contentment with favor.

When R. Yohanan concluded his Tefillah, he would add: May it be Your will, O Lord our God, when seeing our shame and glimpsing our evil plight, to clothe Yourself in Your mercies, cover Yourself with Your strength, wrap Yourself in Your loving-kindness, gird Yourself with Your graciousness, and have the attribute of Your kindness and gentleness come into Your presence.

When R. Zera concluded his Tefillah, he would add: May it be Your will, O Lord our God, that we sin not, so that we need feel no shame or disgrace in the presence of our forebears!

When R. Hiyya concluded his Tefillah, he would add: May it be Your will, O Lord our God, that Your Torah be our occupation, and that [as we study it] our hearts not ache nor our eyes grow dim.[1]

When Rav concluded his Tefillah, he would add: May it be Your will, O Lord our God, to grant us a long life, a life of peace, a life of goodness, a life of blessing, a life of sustenance, a life of bodily vigor, a life in which there is fear of sin, a life free from shame and disgrace, a life of sufficiency and honor, a life marked by love of Torah and fear of Heaven, a life in which You will fulfill all the wishes in our hearts that are good for us.

When Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] concluded his Tefillah, he would add: May it be Your will, O Lord our God and God of our fathers, to deliver us from the impudent and from impudence, from an evil man, from evil fortune, from the impulse to evil, from an evil companion, from an evil neighbor, from the destructive Accuser, and from a difficult lawsuit and a difficult adversary in the suit, whether he be a son of the covenant or not the son of the covenant!

When R. Safra concluded his Tefilllah, he would add: May it be Your will, O Lord our God, to establish peace in the household above and in the household below, as well as among the disciples who occupy themselves with Your Torah, whether they do so for its own sake or not for its own sake; and may it be Your will that all who study Torah not for its own sake come to study it for its own sake!

When R. Alexandri concluded his Tefillah, he would add: May it be Your will, O Lord our God, to put us in a corner where there is light and not in a corner where there is darkness, and let not our hearts ache nor our eyes grow dim! According to some, this was the prayer of R. Hamnuna, but when R. Alexandri concluded his Tefillah, he would add: Lord of the universe, it is known and manifest to You that our intention is to do Your will. But what is it that hinders us? The leaven in the dough[2] and the servitude to the foreign kingdoms. May it be Your will that in front of us and behind us You subdue them both, so that we may return to do the statutes of Your will with entire heart!

When Rava concluded his Tefillah, he would add: My God, before I was formed, I was of no worth, and now that I have been formed, it is as though I had not been formed. Dust am I while alive, all the more so when I am dead. [Aware of my frailty], I stand before You a vessel filled with shame and confusion. May it be Your will, O Lord my God, that I sin no more; and the sins I have committed before You, wipe away in Your abundant mercy, though not by means of suffering and painful diseases.

When Mar son of Ravina concluded his Tefillah, he would add: My God, keep my tongue from evil and my lips from speaking falsehood. Let me remain silent before those who slander me. Let me be as humble as dust before all. Open my heart to Your Torah, and may my soul pursue Your commandments. Deliver me from evil fortune, from the evil impulse, from an evil woman, and from all evils that come storming into the world. As for all who plot evil against me—speedily frustrate their designs, make nothing of their schemes! May the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable before You, O Lord, my Rock and my Redeemer![3]

244. R. Ishmael ben Elisha said: Once when I entered into the innermost part [of the Sanctuary] to offer incense, I saw Akhtariel Yah,[4] the Lord of hosts, seated upon a high and exalted throne. He said to me, "Ishmael, My son, bless Me!" I replied, "May it be Your will that Your mercy subdue Your wrath and Your mercy prevail over Your other attributes, so that You deal with Your children according to the attribute of mercy; and may You, on their behalf, stop short of the limit of strict justice!" And He nodded His head toward me.

Here we learn [incidentally] that the blessing of an ordinary man is not to be regarded lightly in our eyes.[5]

245. [In the time-to-come] all prayers will cease, but the prayer of thanksgiving will not cease.[6]

246. When you go forth on a journey, seek the counsel of your Maker. What is meant by "Seek the counsel of your Maker"? It refers to the prayer before setting out on a journey. What is the prayer? May it be Your will, O Lord my God, that You lead me forth in peace, and direct my steps in peace, and uphold me in peace, and deliver me from every foe and ambush on the way, and send blessing in the works of my hands, and cause me to find grace, kindness, and mercy in Your eyes and in the eyes of all who see me. Blessed are You who hears prayer.[7]

247. R. Joshua said: One who is traveling in a dangerous place may entreat God in a shorter prayer, saying, "De-

---

1. From intense use.
2. The impulse to evil.
3. B. Ber 16b–17a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. Literally, "crown of God."
5. A conclusion drawn from God's apparent gratitude to a mortal for the blessing he bestowed upon Him. B. Ber 7a, and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. Lev. R. 9:7.
7. B. Ber 29b.

liver, O Lord, Your people, the remnant of Israel. On every crossroads, may their needs be before You. Blessed are You, O Lord, who hears prayer."

Our masters taught: One who passes through a place infested with bands of soldiers or robbers may say a shorter prayer. What is the shorter prayer? According to R. Eliezer: "Do Your will in heaven above and grant relief to those who fear You below; nevertheless, do that which is good in Your eyes. Blessed are You, O Lord, who hears prayer." According to R. Joshua: "Hear the entreaty of Your people Israel and speedily fulfill their request. Blessed are You, O Lord, who hears prayer." According to others: "The needs of Your people Israel are many, but their capacity [to concentrate on prayer] is small. May it be Your will, O Lord our God, to give to each and every one enough for his sustenance, and to each and every body enough for what it needs. Blessed are You, O Lord, who hears prayer."[1]

248. He who goes through a capital city [in the course of a journey] should say two prayers, one on entering and one on leaving. Ben Azzai said: Four prayers—two on entering and two on leaving, giving thanks for past mercies and supplicating for the future.

Our masters taught: What should he say on entering? "May it be Your will, O Lord my God, to bring me into this city in peace." After he enters it, he should say, "I give thanks to You, O Lord, my God, that You have brought me into this city in peace." When about to leave, he should say, "May it be Your will, O Lord my God and God of my fathers, to bring me out of this city in peace." When he is outside, he should say, "I give thanks to You, O Lord my God, that You have brought me out of this city in peace, and as You brought me out in peace, so may You guide me in peace, support me in peace, make me proceed in peace, and deliver me from the hand of every enemy and of anyone who lies in ambush on the road."[2]

249. Our masters taught: On entering a bathhouse, one should say, "May it be Your will, O Lord my God, to deliver me from the immoralities practiced here and from the likes of them, and let no perversity or iniquity befall me; and should I succumb to such perversity or iniquity, may my death serve as atonement for all my iniquities."

On leaving the bathhouse, what does he say? According to R. Aha: "I give thanks to You, O Lord my God, that You have delivered me from hellfire."

On going to be cupped,[3] one should say, "May it be Your will, O Lord my God, that this operation be a healing for me, and may You be the one to heal me, for You are a healing God who is faithful and Your healing is sure." When he gets up [after cupping], what should he say? According to R. Aha: "Blessed be He who heals without payment."

On entering a privy, one should say, "Be honored, O honored and holy ones[4] who minister to the Most High. Pay honor to the God of Israel. Wait for me while I enter and attend to my needs, and I will return to you." But Abbaye said: A man should not speak thus, lest the angels leave him and go away. What he should say is: "Watch over me, watch over me, help me, help me, support me, support me, wait for me, wait for me, till I have entered and come forth, for such is the way of human beings."[5]

Benedictions

250. A man should taste nothing before he utters a blessing. Since "the earth is the Lord's, and all that it holds" (Ps. 24:1), a man embezzles from God when he makes use of this world without uttering a blessing.[6]

251. [Of a man condemned to die, it is said], "He who is dead shall be put to death" (Deut. 17:6), for a wicked man is called dead even while alive, because when he sees the sun shining, he is not stirred to utter in blessing, "Who creates light." When he sees it set, he is not stirred to say in blessing, "Who brings on evenings." When he eats and drinks, he is not stirred to speak a blessing. But the righteous are stirred to bless God for each and every thing they eat or drink, or see, or hear.[7]

252. R. Judah said: He who goes abroad in the days of Nisan [springtime] and sees the trees in blossom should say, "Blessed be He who has not deprived His world of aught and has created in it goodly creatures and goodly trees for the enjoyment of mankind." Mar Zutra bar Tobiah said in the name of Rav: What is the proof that a blessing should be said over fragrant odors? The verse "Let every breath praise the Lord" (Ps. 150:6). What is it that gives enjoyment to the breath and not to the body? You must say that it is a fragrant odor.[8]

253. R. Meir said: Even if one merely sees a loaf of bread and says, "Blessed be He who created this bread; how beautiful is this bread!"—that is the same as a blessing over it. Even if he sees figs and says, "Blessed be He who created these figs; how beautiful they are!"—that is the same as a blessing over them.

But R. Yose said: He who changes the formulae the sages have fixed for blessings has not discharged his duty.[9]

254. When a man sees beautiful trees or beautiful people, he should say, "Blessed be He who has created such beautiful creatures in His world."

---

1. B. Ber 28b and 29b.
2. B. Ber 54a and 60a.
3. To be bled for medical purposes by having cups applied to the body.
4. These words are addressed to the angels who are supposed to accompany a man to privies, which were regarded as the haunt of evil spirits.
5. B. Ber 60a.
6. Tos Ber 4:1.
7. Tanhuma, Berakhah, §7.
8. B. Ber 43b.
9. Tos Ber 4:4–5.

It happened once that when Rabban Gamaliel saw a beautiful gentile woman, he uttered a blessing at the sight of her.

But was it not said in the name of R. Yohanan that the words "You shall show them no grace" (Deut. 7:2) mean "You shall ascribe no grace to them"?

But what had Rabban Gamaliel said? He did not say, "Abaskanta,[1] [May God keep you from harm]." All he said was: "Who has created such beautiful creatures in His world." For even if he had seen a beautiful camel, a beautiful horse, a beautiful donkey, he would have said, "Blessed be He who has created beautiful creatures in His world!"

Was it Rabban Gamaliel's habit to gaze at women? No, but the road was tortuous, and he looked at her without intending to.[2]

255. If one sees a crowd of Israelites, he is to say, "Blessed be He who discerns things that are secret," for the mind of each is different from that of every other, just as the face of each is different from that of every other. Ben Zoma once saw such a crowd on the ascent to the Temple Mount. He said, "Blessed be He who discerns things that are secret," and, "Blessed be He who has created all these people to serve me." For he used to say: What effort Adam had to make before he obtained bread to eat! He plowed, he sowed, he reaped, he bound [the sheaves]; he threshed, winnowed, and sorted the grain; he ground it and sifted [the flour]; he kneaded and baked. And only then, at long last, was he able to eat. Whereas I rise in the morning and find all these things done for me. What effort Adam had to make before he obtained a garment to wear! He had to shear the wool, wash [it], comb it, spin it, and weave it. And only then, at long last, did he obtain a garment to wear. Whereas I rise in the morning and find all these things done for me. All kinds of craftsmen come early to the door of my house, and I rise in the morning and find all these [necessities] before me.

He used to say: What does a good guest say? "How much trouble my host has gone to for me! How much meat he placed before me! How much wine he brought before me! How many loaves of white bread he set before me! And all the trouble he went to was only for my sake!" But what does a bad guest say? "How much, in truth, has my host put himself out? I ate only one loaf of bread, I ate only one slice of meat, I drank only one cup of wine! All the trouble my host went to was in fact only for the sake of his wife and his children!"

How, according to Scripture, does a good guest speak? "As notables are sung to, so shall men laud their conduct" (Job 36:24). But with regard to a bad guest, Scripture says, "Men do therefore shy away from him" (Job 37:24).

Our masters taught: On seeing the sages of Israel, one should say, "Blessed be He who has imparted of His wisdom to them that fear Him." On seeing the sages of other nations, one should say, "Blessed be He who has imparted of His wisdom to His creatures." On seeing kings of Israel, one should say, "Blessed be He who has imparted of His glory to them that fear Him." On seeing kings of the nations, one should say, "Blessed be He who has imparted of His glory to His creatures."[3]

256. On seeing the houses of Israel, when inhabited, one should say, "Blessed be He who sets up anew the boundaries of the widow [Israel]"; if uninhabited, "Blessed be the true Judge."

Once, when Ulla and R. Hisda were walking along the road, they came to the door of the house of R. Hana bar Hanilai. R. Hisda broke down and sighed. Ulla said to him, "Why are you sighing?" R. Hisda replied, "How shall I refrain from sighing on seeing a house in which there used to be sixty cooks by day and sixty cooks by night, who cooked for everyone who was in need. Nor did R. Hana ever take his hand away from his purse, saying to himself: Perhaps a poor man of good family might come and be put to shame while I reach for my purse. Moreover, the house had four doors opening to the four cardinal points, and whoever came in hungry went out full. In years of scarcity, wheat and barley were placed outside, so that anyone who was ashamed to take some by day could come and take it by night. Now that the house is a mound of ruins, shall I not sigh?"[4]

257. When one sees a place where miracles were wrought for Israel, one should say, "Blessed be He who wrought miracles for our ancestors in this place." When one sees a place from which idolatry has been extirpated, one should say, "Blessed be He who has extirpated idolatry from our Land." [In the presence of] shooting stars, earthquakes, thunderclaps, windstorms, and lightning, one should say, "Blessed be He whose power and might fill the world." On seeing mountains, hills, seas, rivers, and deserts, one should say, "Blessed be He who wrought the work of creation." R. Judah said: If one sees the Great [Mediterranean] Sea, one should say, "Blessed be He who has made the Great Sea," provided, that is, one sees it at [considerable] intervals. For rain and for good tidings, one should say, "Blessed be He who is good and bestows good." For evil tidings, one should say, "Blessed be the true Judge." One who has built a new house or bought new vessels should say, "Blessed be He who has kept us alive, preserved us, and brought us to this season."

One should say, "Blessed be the true Judge" on the occasion of evil, even if out of it there emerges some good; and one should say, "Blessed be He who has kept us alive" on the occasion of good, even if out of it there emerges some evil.

A man is obligated to bless [God] for evil in the same way as for good, for Scripture says, "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy might" (Deut. 6:5). "With all thy heart" means with both your impulses, the impulse to good as well as the impulse to evil. "With all thy soul" means even if He

---

1. Greek.
2. P. Ber 9:2, 13b–c.
3. B. Ber 58a.
4. B. Ber 58b.

takes away your soul. "With all thy might" means with all your monetary might.

In another interpretation, "With all thy might [me'odekha] is read, "With all the measure [me'oddekha] given thee." For whatever measure (middah) He metes out to you, you are still to thank Him.[1]

258. Is a blessing to be said only for a miracle wrought for many people, but not for one wrought for only one person?

The answer: for a miracle wrought for many people, it is the duty of everyone to say a blessing; for a miracle wrought for one person, he alone is required to say a blessing.

If one sees the place where Israel crossed the Red Sea, or the place where Israel crossed the Jordan, or the place where Israel crossed the valleys of Arnon;[2] or if one sees hailstones at the descent from Beth-horon,[3] or the stone that Og king of Bashan wanted to throw at Israel,[4] or the stone on which Moses sat while Joshua fought with Amalek,[5] or [the pillar of salt into which] Lot's wife [turned],[6] or the wall of Jericho that was swallowed up into the ground upon which it stood[7]—in each of these instances, one should utter thanksgiving and praise to Him who is everywhere.[8]

259. R. Joshua ben Levi said: He who sees his friend after a lapse of thirty days should say, "Blessed be He who has kept us alive, preserved us, and brought us to this season." If after a lapse of twelve months, he should say, "Blessed be He who revives the dead."

He who sees an Ethiopian, a red-spotted or white-spotted person, a hunchback, a dwarf, or a person afflicted with dropsy should say, "Blessed be He who makes strange creatures." He who sees a person with a limb cut off, or blind, or flat-headed, or lame, or smitten with boils, or pockmarked should say, "Blessed be the true Judge!"

On seeing an elephant, a tailless ape, or a long-tailed ape, one should say, "Blessed be He who makes strange creatures." On seeing beautiful creatures or beautiful trees, one should say, "Blessed be He who has such in His world."[9]

260. R. Joshua ben Levi said: On seeing the rainbow in the clouds, one should fling himself down upon his face, in keeping with "At the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud . . . the instant I saw it, I flung myself down upon my face" (Ezek. 1:28). In the west [the Land of Israel], they cursed anyone who did this, because it seemed as though he were bowing down to [worship] the rainbow; but one may certainly say a blessing [over it].

What blessing should one say? "Blessed be He who remembers the covenant,[10] is faithful to His covenant, and fulfills His promise."

R. Joshua ben Levi also said: He who sees the sky in all its purity says, "Blessed be He who wrought the work of creation."[11]

261. The sages taught: He who sees the sun starting on its new cycle,[12] the moon in its power,[13] the planets in their orbits, and the signs of the zodiac in their orderly progress should say, "Blessed be He who wrought the work of creation."[14]

262. When do we begin to say the blessing for rain? When the bridegroom goes out to meet his bride.[15] What blessing should one say? R. Judah taught: "We give thanks unto You for every drop You caused to fall on us."

R. Johanan used to conclude the blessing thus:

Were our mouths filled with song as the sea [is with water],
And our tongue with ringing praise as the roaring waves.
Were our lips full of adoration as the wide expanse of heaven,
And our eyes sparkling
like the sun or the moon.
Were our hands spread out in prayer as eagles' wings
in the sky,
And our feet as swift as the deer,
We should still be unable to thank You enough, O
Lord our God.
Blessed be You, O God, to whom thanksgivings are due.[16]

263. Our masters taught: He who sees a statue of Mercury should say, "Blessed be He who shows long-suffering to those who transgress His will." He who sees a place from which idolatry has been uprooted should say, "Blessed be He who has uprooted idolatry from our Land; and as it has been uprooted from this place, so may it be uprooted from all places where Israel dwell and may You turn the hearts of those that serve them to serve You."

R. Hamnuna said in a discourse: If one gazes upon wicked Babylon, one should say five benedictions. On seeing [the ruins of] Babylon, one should say, "Blessed be He who has destroyed wicked Babylon." On seeing the [ruins of the] palace of Nebuchadnezzar, one should say, "Blessed be He who destroyed the palace of wicked Nebuchadnezzar." On seeing the fiery furnace or the lions' den,[17] one should say, "Blessed be He who wrought mir-

---

1. Ber 9:1.
2. See above, part 1, chap. 5, §110.
3. See Josh. 10:11.
4. See above, part 1, chap. 5, §111.
5. See Exod. 17:12.
6. See Gen. 19:26.
7. See Josh. 6:20.
8. B. Ber 54a.
9. B. Ber 58b.
10. Not to cause another flood.
11. B. Ber 59a.
12. Of twenty-two years.
13. In the spring equinox, when it causes extraordinarily powerful tides. So W. M. Feldman in Ber, Soncino, p. 370, n. 1.
14. B. Ber 59b.
15. When the drops of rain first strike the earth.
16. B. Ber 59b.
17. Mentioned in the book of Daniel.

acles for our ancestors in this place." On seeing the statue of Mercury, one should say, "Blessed be He who shows long-suffering to those that transgress His will." On seeing a ruin from which earth is carried away [to be used in building], one should say, "Blessed be He who says and does, who decrees and carries out." When Rava would see asses carrying earth, he used to slap them on their back and say, "Run, O righteous ones, to perform the will of your Creator." When Mar son of Ravina came to [the site of] Babylon, he used to pick up some earth in his kerchief and fling it to the wind, to fulfill the text "I will sweep it with the broom of destruction" (Isa. 14:23).[1]

264. On seeing the graves of Jews, one should say;

Blessed be He who fashioned you in justice,
Who maintained you in justice,
Fed you in justice,
And in justice gathered you in,
And in justice will raise you up again.

Mar son of Ravina, citing R. Nahman, used to conclude the blessing thus:

And He knows the number of all of you,
And He will bring you back to life and preserve you.
Blessed be He who brings the dead back to life.[2]

[1] B. Ber 57b, P. Ber 9:1, 12d.

[2] B. Ber 58b.

CHAPTER TWO

GOOD AND EVIL

The Impulse to Good and the Impulse to Evil

1. R. Nahman son of R. Hisda expounded: Why is the word Va-yitzer ["He formed man"] (Gen. 2:17) spelled with two *yod*s? Because the Holy One created two *yetzer*s ("impulses") in man—the impulse to good and the impulse to evil.[1]

2. Our masters taught: There are two kidneys in man. One counsels to do good, the other to do evil.

It stands to reason that the good kidney is on man's right side and the evil one on his left side, as is written, "A wise man's understanding is at his right hand, but a fool's understanding is at his left" (Eccles. 10:2).[2]

3. Our masters taught: The impulse to evil is hard to bear, since even its Creator called it evil, for He said, "From his youth the impulse in man's heart is evil" (Gen. 8:21).[3]

4. R. Hiyya the Elder said: How wretched the dough that the baker himself admits is bad! [Thus man's Creator declares], "The impulse in a man's heart is evil from his youth" (Gen. 8:21). R. Yose the Potter[4] said: How miserable the leaven that he who kneaded it admits is bad, as is said, "For He knoweth our impulse, He remembereth that we are dust" (Ps. 103:14). The sages said: How inferior the plant that he who planted it admits is bad, as is said, "The Lord of hosts, that planted thee, hath spoken evil of thee" (Jer. 11:17).[5]

5. "There shall no strange god be in thee" (Ps. 81:10). What is the strange god within a man's body? It is none other than the impulse to evil.[6]

6. Rava said: The impulse to evil is first called "wayfarer," then "guest," and finally "master." Thus it is said, "And there came a wayfarer unto the rich man" (2 Sam. 12:4); then, "And he spared to take of his own flock and of his own herd to dress for the guest" (ibid.); and finally, "And dressed it for the master who had come to be with him" (ibid.).[7]

7. R. Assi said: At first the impulse to evil is as thin as a spider's gossamer, but in the end it is as thick as a cart rope, as is said, "Woe unto them that begin to draw iniquity with gossamer strands, and in the end sin as it were with a cart rope" (Isa. 5:18).[8]

8. Such is the art of the impulse to evil: One day it bids a man, "Do this"; the next day, "Do that"; until finally it says to him, "Go worship idols." And he goes and worships them.[9]

9. The impulse to evil is sweet in the beginning and bitter in the end.[10]

10. Rav said: The impulse to evil is like a fly sitting at the entrance to both ventricles of the heart,[11] as is said, "Flies of death make the ointment of the Perfumer fetid and putrid" (Eccles. 10:1).[12]

11. R. Ammi said: The impulse to evil walks not along the sides [of the road] but in its middle, and as soon as it sees a man making eyes at girls, frizzing his hair, and walking with a swagger, it says, "This one is mine."

R. Avin said: If a man indulges his impulse to evil in his youth, it will in the end, in his old age, be his master, as is said, "He that indulgeth his servant in youth shall have him become a master at the last" (Prov. 29:21).[13]

12. Rava said: We have a tradition that the impulse to evil dominates only what its eyes see.[14]

13. "My son, give Me thy heart . . . and let thine eyes observe My ways" (Prov. 23:26). Why did the Holy One deem it necessary to ask Israel to direct their hearts and eyes toward Him? Because transgression is dependent on them. Hence it is written, "That you do not follow your heart and your eyes" (Num. 15:39), the eye and the heart being the two agents of sin.[15]

14. The impulse to evil yearns only for that which is forbidden to a man.[16]

15. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: Satan, impulse to evil, and angel of death—all three are the same thing.[17]

---

1. B. Ber 61a.
2. Ibid.
3. B. Kid 30b.
4. "The Potter"—Gen. R TA; BR: "ha-Torati"—from Torata in Babylonia (see Jaskow, pp. 1658–59).
5. Gen. R. 34:10.
6. B. Shab 105b.
7. B. Suk 52b.
8. B. Suk 52a; Gen. R. 22:6.
9. B. Shab 105b: B. Nid 13b.
10. P. Shab 14:3, 45c.
11. The impulse to evil is said to be at the left ventricle, while the impulse to good is at the right ventricle. Yet the impulse to evil manages to get into the right ventricle by pretending that its counsel is good.
12. B. Ber 61a.
13. Gen. R. 22:6.
14. B. Sot 8a.
15. Num. R. 10:2.
16. P. Yoma 6:4, 43d.
17. B. BB 16a.

16. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: The impulse to evil first incites a man [to sin] in this world and then testifies against him in the world-to-come.[1]

17. Antoninus asked Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], "At what time does the impulse to evil gain mastery over man—at the time of his conception or at the time he is born?" Rabbi: "At the time of his conception." Antoninus: "If so, he would have kicked his way out of his mother's womb. Accordingly, the impulse to evil must gain mastery at the time of birth."

Subsequently, Rabbi used to say: This is one thing that Antoninus taught me, and Scripture supports him, for it is said, "At the door [through which the newborn child issues], sin croucheth" (Gen. 4:7).[2]

18. Come and observe: a kid or a lamb, when it sees a pit, turns back, since in an animal there is no impulse to evil [to lead it to harm]. But an infant—the impulse to evil drives him headlong [to destruction], so that the infant places his hand on a serpent or a scorpion and is stung by it, or he places his hand on glowing coals and is burned.[3]

19. "When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even those hostile to him be at peace with him" (Prov. 16:7). R. Joshua ben Levi said: The words "those hostile to him" refer to the impulse to evil. In the way of the world, when a man grows up in a city with another for two or three years, he is bound to the other in affection. But this one [the impulse to evil], though it grows up with a man from youth to old age, [its hostile nature is such that] if it is with him for even seventy years, it will bring him down; and even if it is with him for eighty years, it will still bring him down. In David's question "Who is like unto Thee, who deliverest the wretched . . . and the needy from his despoiler?" (Ps. 35:10), R. Aha identified "his despoiler" by asking, "Is there a despoiler greater than the impulse to evil?"

[In contrast to David, and suggesting that man himself should cope with the impulse], Solomon said, "If he who is hostile to thee be hungry, give him bread to eat, and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink" (Prov. 25:21)—[silence his mouth with] the bread of Torah and the water of Torah.[4]

20. "The impulse of man's heart was evil from the time he was expelled from his mother's womb" (Gen. 8:21).[5] If you argue: "Is it not the Holy One Himself who created the impulse to evil, of which it is written, 'The impulse of man's heart was evil from the time he was expelled from his mother's womb'? Who then can possibly make it good?" the Holy One replies, "You are the one who makes the impulse to evil stay evil. How? When you were a child, you did not sin. Only when you grew up, you began to sin." If you argue: "But no man can guard himself against it!" the Holy One replies, "How many things in the world are even less bearable and more bitter than the impulse to evil, yet you manage to sweeten them. Nothing is more bitter than the lupine, and yet, in order to sweeten it, you carefully boil it in water seven times, until it becomes sweet. Now, if you sweeten for your need bitter things that I alone created, all the greater is your responsibility for the impulse to evil, which was placed under your control."[6]

21. R. Isaac said: A man's impulse to evil renews itself [in allure] every day, as is said, "Every impulse wrought by his mind was sheer evil every day" (Gen. 6:5).

R. Simeon ben Lakish said: A man's impulse to evil grows in strength from day to day and seeks to slay him, as is said, "The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him" (Ps. 37:32). And but for the Holy One who is his help, he could not withstand it, as is said, "The Lord will not leave him in his hand" (Ps. 37:33).[7]

22. R. Isaac cited: "Even when a living man is in mourning, he is overcome by his proneness to sin [sexually]" (Lam. 3:39).[8] Even during the time of a man's mourning, his impulse is apt to overcome him.[9]

23. The sages said: The impulse to evil is [at least] thirteen years older than the impulse to good. It begins growing with a child in the mother's womb and comes out with him. If the child is about to profane the Sabbath, it does not deter him; if the child is about to take a life, it does not deter him; if the child is about to commit an act of unchastity, it does not deter him. Only at the age of thirteen is the impulse to good born in a child. If then he is about to profane the Sabbath, it warns him: "You fool! Scripture states, 'Everyone that profaneth it shall surely be put to death' " (Exod. 31:14). If he is about to take a life, it warns him: "You fool! Scripture says, 'Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed' " (Gen. 9:6). If he is about to commit an act of unchastity, it warns him: "You fool! Scripture states, 'Both the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death' " (Lev. 20:10).

When a man stirs up his passion and is about to commit an act of lewdness, all parts of his body are ready to obey him. On the other hand, when a man is about to perform an act of piety, all his parts become laggard, because the impulse to evil in his innards is ruler of the two hundred and forty-eight parts of his body, whereas the impulse to good is like a man confined in a prison.[10]

---

1. B. Suk 52b.
2. B. Sanh 91b.
3. ARN 16.
4. Gen. R. 54:1.
5. JV: "For the impulse of man's heart is evil from his youth." But here the word mi-ne'urav ("from his youth") is taken to be a nominal form of nin'ar ("expelled [from his mother's womb]").
6. Tanhuma, Bereshit, §7; ARN 16.
7. B. Suk 52b; B. Kid 30b.
8. JV: "Wherefore doth a living man complain, a strong man because of his sins?" But yit'onen ("complain") also means "be in mourning."
9. B. Kid 80b.
10. ARN 16.

24. R. Ammi bar Abba said: What is meant by "There is a little city, and few men within it," etc. (Eccles. 9:14)? "A little city" refers to a man's body; "and few men within it" to its parts. "And there came the great king against it, and besieged it" (ibid.). "The great king" is the impulse to evil. "And built great bulwarks against it" (ibid.)—the devisings of sin. "Now there was found in it a man poor and wise" (Eccles. 9:15)—the impulse to good. "And he by his wisdom delivered the city" (ibid.)—by means of repentance and good deeds.[1]

25. R. Levi bar Hama said in the name of R. Simeon ben Lakish: A man should always make the impulse to good [within him] rage against the impulse to evil. If he prevails against it, well and good; if not, he should occupy himself with Torah. If he then prevails against it, well and good; if not, he should recite the Shema. If he now prevails against it, well and good; if not, he should remind himself of the day of death.[2]

26. A sage in the school of R. Ishmael taught: My son, if this filthy wretch [the impulse to evil] meets you, drag him to the house of study, where, if he is made of stone, he will dissolve; if made of iron, he will be shattered into pieces.[3]

27. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. BaNaah: Israel are to be congratulated—when they occupy themselves with Torah and with deeds of loving-kindness, their impulse to evil is mastered by them, and not they by their impulse.[4]

28. "Didst Thou will that I not be wicked?[5] Yet there is none that can deliver out of Thy hand" (Job 10:7). Rava said, Job sought to exculpate the entire world from judgment as he said: Master of the universe, You created the ox whose hoofs are cloven, You created the ass whose hoofs are whole, You created the Garden of Eden, You created Gehenna, You created the righteous, you created the wicked—who can restrain You?

What did Job's friends say to him in reply? "Yea, thou doest away with fear, and impairest devotion before God" (Job 15:4). To be sure, the Holy One created the impulse to evil; but He also created Torah as an antidote.[6]

29. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: The impulse to evil resembles a piece of iron cast into the flame. As long as it is in the flame, one can make of it any vessel desired. So it is with the impulse to evil: there is no way of ameliorating it except by words of Torah, which are like fire.[7]

30. R. Levi told the parable of an isolated settlement thrown into confusion by ravaging troops. What did the king do? He set a guard within it to protect it. The Holy One [acted in a similar way when He] said: The Torah is called a stone, as in the verse "The tables of stone, and the law and the commandment" (Exod. 24:12); the impulse to evil is likewise called a stone, as in the verse "I will take away the heart of stone out of your flesh" (Ezek. 36:26). Thus, since Torah is a stone, and the impulse to evil a stone, let one stone guard against the other stone.[8]

31. R. Ilai the Elder said: When a man sees that his impulse [to evil] is about to gain mastery over him, let him go to a place where he is not known, put on black garments—indeed, wrap himself entirely in black garments[9]—and [if that does not restrain him] do what his heart desires, but let him not openly profane the Name of Heaven.[10]

32. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: "Israel will never see the face of Gehenna," a statement that may be explained by the parable of a king of flesh and blood who had a field of most inferior quality. Some men came and rented it at ten kor of wheat a year. They manured it, hoed it, watered it, and weeded it, and still could get it to yield no more than one kor of wheat during the year.

The king asked them, "How do you account for such a poor yield?" They replied, "Our lord king! You know that the field you turned over to us had originally yielded nothing for you; now, even after we manured it, weeded it, and watered it, we could get it to yield no more than one kor of wheat." In like manner will Israel plead with the Holy One: "Master of the universe, [what do you expect of us]? You know that the impulse to evil has been inciting us, as Scripture states, 'For He knoweth our impulse' " (Ps. 103:14).[11]

33. R. Simeon ben Pazzi said: Woe is me because of Him who formed me (yotzeri), and woe is me because of the impulse formed within me (yitzri).[12]

34. "And these words which I command thee this day shall be [an oath] upon thy heart" (Deut. 6:6). From here it follows, R. Josiah used to say, that one should adjure his impulse [to evil], even as you find all righteous men adjuring their impulse. Thus, Abraham is quoted in Scripture as saying, "I have lifted up my hand unto the Lord, God Most High, Maker of heaven and earth, that I will not take a thread nor a shoe-latchet nor aught that is thine" (Gen. 14:22–23). Boaz is quoted as saying, "I will do the part of a kinsman unto thee, as the Lord liveth; lie down until morning" (Ruth 3:13). Of David, Scripture records, "David said: 'As the Lord liveth, nay, but the Lord shall smite him, or his day shall come to die, or he shall go down into battle and be swept away' " (1 Sam. 26:10).

---

1. B. Ned 32b.
2. B. Ber 5a.
3. B. Suk 52b.
4. B. AZ 5b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. RV: "Although Thou knowest that I am not wicked."
6. B. BB 16a.
7. ARN 16.
8. Lev. R. 35:5.
9. The color of mourning. Hopefully, these would cool his passion.
10. B. Hag 16a.
11. ARN 16.
12. God will punish me if I obey my evil impulse, yet I cannot resist its incitement. B. Ber 61a.

Elisha is quoted as saying, "As the Lord liveth . . . I will receive none" (2 Kings 5:16).[1]

35. Who is mighty? He who subdues his impulse [to evil].[2]

36. "Happy is the man" (Ps. 1:1). Happy is he who is man enough to subdue his impulse to evil.[3]

37. "Ye mighty in strength, who nevertheless do His bidding, hearkening unto the voice of His word" (Ps. 103:20)—men such as R. Zadok and [R. Akiva, one of] his companions, [who, though possessed of potency for the sexual act, nevertheless did His bidding].

Thus, when a [Roman] noblewoman propositioned R. Zadok, he said to her, "My heart is faint, and I have not the strength to perform. Is there something to eat?" She replied, "There is unclean food." R. Zadok: "So what? A man ready to do what I am about to do will eat such food." She fired the oven, and as she was placing the food in it, he ascended and seated himself in it. She asked him, "What does this mean?" He replied, "He who is about to do the one thing will end up [being roasted] like this." The noblewoman: "Had I known [the act was so heinous to you], I would not have brought you to such distress."[4]

38. When R. Akiva went to Rome, he was slanderously described to a certain general [as one enjoying the company of loose women]. As a result, the general sent him two beautiful women who had been bathed, anointed, and adorned like brides for their grooms. All night, they kept thrusting themselves at R. Akiva, one saying, "Turn to me," and the other saying, "Turn to me." He just sat there, spitting at both and turning to neither.

In the morning the two women went off and complained to the general, saying to him, "We would rather die than be given to such a man." The general sent for R. Akiva and asked him, "Why did you not do with these women what men usually do? Are they not beautiful? Are they not human beings like yourself? Did not He who created you create them?" R. Akiva replied, "What could I do? The odor of the forbidden meat and the creeping things they had eaten revolted me."[5]

39. R. Akiva used to ridicule transgressors [for succumbing to the evil impulse]. One day Satan, in the guise of a woman, appeared to him standing at the top of a date palm. R. Akiva took hold of the date palm and began climbing it. When he reached halfway up the palm, Satan [resuming his usual form] let him go, saying: Had they not proclaimed in heaven, "Beware of R. Akiva and his Torah," I would have valued your life at no more than two meah.

R. Meir used to ridicule transgressors [for the same reason]. One day Satan, in the guise of a woman, appeared to him on the opposite bank of a river. As there was no bridge, R. Meir seized a rope [stretching from bank to bank] and proceeded to cross, hand over hand. When he reached halfway along the rope, Satan [resuming his usual form] let him go, saying: Had they not proclaimed in heaven, "Beware of R. Meir and his Torah," I would have valued your life at no more than two meah.[6]

40. A story of Matia ben Heresh: He was rich and feared Heaven and, like R. Meir, his teacher, sat all his days in the house of study occupying himself with Torah. Now, the splendor of his countenance shone like the radiance of the sun, and the beauty of his features resembled that of the ministering angels. It was said of him that never in his life had he raised his eyes upon a woman. Once, Satan passed by and, seeing him, was overcome with envy as he said: Is it possible that there is a righteous man entirely without sin in the world? At once he went up to the height above, stood before the Holy One, and said, "Master of the universe, Matia ben Heresh—what sort of man is he in Your sight?" God: "He is utterly righteous." Satan: "Give me permission, and I will test him." God: "You will not prevail over him." Satan: "Nevertheless!" So God gave him permission.

Satan went and found R. Matia seated and occupied with Torah. So he appeared to him in the guise of a beautiful woman, the like of which there had not been in the world since the days of Naamah, Tubal-Cain's sister, on account of whom ministering angels went astray. Satan stood in front of R. Matia, who, upon seeing him, turned his back to him. Satan went around and again stood in front of R. Matia. When R. Matia turned his face to still another direction, Satan was once more in front of him. When R. Matia saw that Satan [in the woman's guise] turned up on all sides, he said to himself: I fear that the impulse to evil will gain mastery over me and cause me to sin. What did that righteous man do then? He summoned one of his disciples, who acted as his attendant, and said to him: My son, go and bring me fire and nails. After he brought them, R. Matia passed the nails through the fire, then plunged them into his own eyes. When Satan saw this, he was shaken, all but knocked out, and left R. Matia.

In that instant, the Holy One summoned Raphael, prince of healings, and said to him, "Go and heal the eyes of Matia ben Heresh." When Raphael came and stood before him, Matia asked, "Who are you?" Raphael answered, "I am the angel Raphael, whom the Holy One had sent to heal your eyes." Matia: "Let me be. What happened has happened."

Raphael returned to the Holy One and reported to Him, "Master of the universe, thus-and-thus did Matia ben Heresh answer me." The Holy One said, "Go and tell him: From this day and henceforth, fear not. I guarantee you in this matter that, throughout your days, the impulse to evil will have no sway over you."

When Matia ben Heresh heard God's guarantee from

---

1. Sif Deut., §33.
2. Avot 4:1.
3. B. AZ 19a.
4. B. Kid 40a.
5. ARN 16.
6. B. Kid 81b.

the angel, he was willing to accept the angel's healing and was healed.[1]

41. The story of a man who was very scrupulous about the command to wear fringes on his garments. Nevertheless, when he heard of a certain courtesan in one of the cities across the sea who charged four hundred gold denars as her fee, he sent her four hundred gold denars, and she fixed an appointment for him. When his time arrived, he came and sat down at the entrance to her house. Her maidservant went in and told her, "The man [from across the sea] who sent you four hundred gold denars has come and is sitting at the entrance to the house." The courtesan replied, "Let him come in." After he came in, she prepared seven beds for him [one above the other], six with silver [bedclothes] and one with gold. Between one bed and the next there was a silver ladder, but the last ladder was of gold. She then [disrobed and] climbed up to the uppermost bed, and sat down, nude, upon it. He, too, [disrobed and] went up after her to sit across from her. But just then the four fringes [of the one garment he still wore] struck him across his face, whereupon he let himself slide off until he sat on the ground. She also slid off until she sat on the ground, and she said, "By the Roman eagle, I will not let you be until you tell me what blemish you saw in me." "By the Temple," he replied, "never have I seen a woman as beautiful as you. But there is one precept the Lord our God has commanded us called tzitzit, 'fringes.' With regard to it, 'I am the Lord your God' is written twice in Scripture, signifying, 'I am He who will exact punishment, and I am He who will give reward.' And just now the four fringes of the tzitzit seemed to me like four witnesses [ready to testify against me]." She said, "I will not let you be until you tell me your name, the name of your town, the name of your teacher, and the name of your school in which you study Torah." He wrote all this down and gave the script to her. At that, she arose and divided her possessions into three parts—a third for the government, a third for the poor, and a third she took with her in her hand; the aforementioned bedclothes, however, she retained. She then came to the study house of R. Hiyya and said to him, "Master, direct your disciples to make me a proselyte." "My daughter," he replied, "perhaps you have set your eyes on one of the disciples?" She took out the script and gave it to R. Hiyya. "Go," he said, "you deserve the husband you are about to acquire."

Before long, those same bedclothes she had laid out for him for an unlawful purpose she was able to lay out for him for a lawful purpose.[2]

42. While R. Hanina and R. Jonathan were walking on a road, they came to two paths, one leading to the door of a place for idolatry and the other to the door of a brothel. One sage said to the other: Let us [take the path leading] to the place of idolatry, since the inclination for it has been killed [it is easily resisted].[3] The other said: Let us [take the path] to the brothel, overcome our inclination, and receive a reward.

As they approached the brothel, they realized that the harlots made themselves scarce.[4] One sage asked the other: What made you so certain that you could overcome your inclination? In reply, the other quoted, "[Torah] shall watch over thee against lewdness, discernment shall guard thee" (Prov. 2:11).[5]

43. While R. Kahana was selling women's workbaskets, a [Roman] noblewoman propositioned him. Saying to her, "I will go and adorn myself," he went to an upper chamber and hurled himself to the ground. But [the prophet] Elijah came and caught him [before he reached bottom], and then said to him, "You have troubled me to come a distance of four hundred parasangs!" R. Kahana replied, "What brought me [to this mishap]? Poverty."[6]

At that, Elijah gave him a measure full of denars.[7]

44. Several captive women [who had been redeemed] were brought to Nehardea and taken to an upper chamber in the house of R. Amram the Pious. Then the ladder to it was removed from under them. As one of them passed by in the upper chamber, the light [of her beauty] shone through the skylight. At that, R. Amram grabbed the ladder, which ten men could not lift, set it up unaided, and proceeded to climb it. After he had gone halfway up, he forced himself to stand still as he cried out, "A fire in R. Amram's house!" When his disciples came [and found him halfway up to the women's chamber], they reproved him: "You put us to shame!" R. Amram replied, "It is better that you be put to shame in this world because of Amram than that you be put to shame because of him in the next." He then adjured his impulse to depart from him, and it issued from him in the shape of a column of fire. He said to it, "See, you are fire and I am flesh, yet I am stronger than you."[8]

45. Abbaye, hearing a certain man say to a woman, "Let us get up early and go on our way," said to himself: I will follow them to keep them from doing what is prohibited. He followed them through meadows a distance of three parasangs. As they were about to separate, he heard them say, "The company is pleasant, but the way is long." Abbaye said: If I were in their place, I could not have restrained myself. And in deep anguish he leaned against the bolt in a doorway. An elder[9] came and recited the tradition: "The greater the man, the greater his impulse to evil."[10]

---

1. Tanhuma B, Hukkat, supplement, §1 (p. 131); Midrash Avkir; Yalkut, Va-yehi, §161.
2. B. Men 44a and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Sif Num., §115.
3. After the Temple's destruction. See above, part 4, chap 1, §99–100.
4. Literally, "hid themselves from them," in apparent certainty that the two would not solicit them.
5. JV: "Discretion shall watch over thee, discernment shall guard thee." But mezimmah ("discretion") also means "[against] lewdness." B. AZ 17a–b.
6. Poverty forced me to sell women's baskets, thus exposing me to temptation from my customers.
7. B. Kid 40a.
8. B. Kid 81a.
9. The prophet Elijah?
10. B. Suk 52a.

46. Pelimo used to say every day, "An arrow in your eyes, Satan!"[1] One day—it was the eve of the Day of Atonement—Satan disguised himself as a poor man, went to Pelimo's door, and begged for alms. Bread was taken out to him. "On such a day," pleaded Satan, "when everyone is inside, shall I be outside?" At that, he was taken in, and bread was served to him. "On a day like this," he again pleaded, "when everyone eats at the table, am I to eat alone?" So he was taken over and seated at the table. As he sat down, he caused his body to be covered with suppurating sores and proceeded to act in a revolting manner. "Sit properly," he was told. He said, "Give me a cup," and one was given him. Then he became overheated and began spitting his mucus and phlegm into it. Even as they were scolding him, he passed out and died. The rumor went forth: "Pelimo killed a man, Pelimo killed a man!" So Pelimo fled from the city and hid himself. But Satan followed him, and [at the sight of Satan] Pelimo [frightened of being discovered] fell down before him. Seeing how Pelimo was suffering, Satan disclosed his identity, then asked Pelimo, "Why are you in the habit of saying, 'An arrow in your eyes, Satan!'?"

Pelimo: "What else am I to say?"

"Say: 'May the Lord rebuke you, Satan!' "[2]

47. Every time R. Hiyya bar Ashi fell down upon his face,[3] he used to say, "May He who is everywhere save me from the impulse to evil." One day, when his wife heard him pray thus, she said to herself: It is now many years that he has held aloof from me; what need has he to pray in this manner? And so one day, while he was studying in his garden, she disguised herself with [enticing] adornments and kept walking past him, and finally sat down before him. "Who are you?" he asked. "I am Haruta,[4] and today I returned from a journey," she replied. He asked her [to lie with him]. She said to him, "Bring me that pomegranate from the uppermost branch." He jumped up and brought it to her.

When he came back to his house, his wife was firing the oven. He went up and sat in it. "What does this mean?" she asked. He replied, "Such-and-such a thing has just happened." "It was I," she assured him. But he paid no heed to her until she produced the pomegranate. "Nevertheless," he said, "my intention was to commit a forbidden act."

All the rest of his days that righteous man fasted, until he died from his fasts.[5]

48. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: It happened that a certain man set his eyes on a certain woman [and became so enamored of her] that his heart was consumed by his ardent desire [and his life was endangered]. When inquiry was made of physicians, they said, "There is no remedy other than that she submit to him." The sages said, "Let him die rather than that she submit."

"Then let her stand naked before him."

"Let him die rather than that she stand naked before him."

"Then let her [at least] talk to him from behind a screen."

"Let him die rather than that she talk to him from behind a screen."[6]

49. R. Nahman bar Hanin said: He who is consumed by sexual desire will eventually be fed his own flesh [he will commit incest].[7]

50. Even the most pious among the pious should not be designated guardian where there is a possibility of unchastity.[8]

51. Thoughts about illicit copulation are more exciting than the act itself—the analogy being the aroma of meat [which is more pleasing than the meat itself].[9]

52. The beginning of the sin of lewdness is the thought in the heart.[10]

53. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: When confronting the impulse to evil [in a child or in a woman], the left hand should thrust aside while the right hand should bring near.[11]

54. After people slew the impulse to the evil of idolatry, they said: Since this is a time of grace, let us beseech [God's] mercy against the impulse to the evil of lewdness. They besought God's mercy and the impulse was turned over to them. A prophet warned them: Consider carefully—if you slay it, the world will be destroyed. So [instead of slaying it] they imprisoned it for three days. But then, when a day-old egg was sought throughout the Land of Israel for a sick man, it could not be found. So they said: What shall we do now? If we slay the impulse, the entire world will be destroyed.[12] So they painted its eyes [blinding it] and then let it go. What they did helped weaken its strength.[13]

55. The Holy One created two impulses in His world—the impulse to idolatry and the impulse to lewdness. The impulse to idolatry is already rooted out, but the impulse to lewdness still abides. So the Holy One said: When a

---

1. To restrain him from enticing human beings.
2. B. Kid 81a–b.
3. After reciting the Eighteen Benedictions, each person may pray silently for whatever he desires. Such prayers are called "supplications" (tahanunim). When saying them, one would fall down on his face. See Ismar Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst (Frankfurt am Main, 1924), pp. 73ff.
4. A well-known courtesan.
5. B. Kid 81b.
6. Such conduct would disgrace her family. B. Sanh 75a.
7. Gen. R. 41:7.
8. P. Ket 1:8, 25d.
9. B. Yoma 29a.
10. DEZ 6.
11. Otherwise, the child might run away and the woman might take to evil ways. B. Sot 47a.
12. The elimination of the sexual instinct prevents the propagation of all living creatures.
13. B. Yoma 69b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

man succeeds in resisting the temptation to commit an act of lewdness, I will deem it for him as though he had resisted both impulses.[1]

56. R. Samuel bar Nahman said: The words "Behold, it was good"[2] refer to the impulse to good, and the words "Behold, it was very good" (Gen. 1:31) refer to the impulse to evil. But how can the impulse to evil be termed "very good"? Because Scripture teaches that were it not for the impulse to evil, a man would not build a house, take a wife, beget children, or engage in commerce. All such activities come, as Solomon noted, "from a man's rivalry with his neighbor" (Eccles. 4:4).[3]

57. R. Judah said, The world endures because of three things: rivalry, lust, and mercy.[4]

58. Resh Lakish said, Pause and consider how grateful we should be to our forebears—had they not been prone to sin, we would not have come into the world.[5]

59. Israel said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, You know the power of the impulse to evil, how enduring it is. The Holy One replied: Clear out a bit of it in this world, and I will remove it altogether from you in the world-to-come, as is said, "Build up, build up the highway, clear away the rocks" (Isa. 62:10), and also, "Build up, build up a highway! Clear a road! Remove all obstacles from the road of My people" (Isa. 57:14). But in the world-to-come, I will pull it out of you by its roots, as is said, "I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh" (Ezek. 36:26).[6]

60. The impulse to evil will have no sway in the world-to-come.[7]

61. R. Judah bar Ilai expounded: In the time-to-come, the Holy One will bring the impulse to evil and slaughter it in the presence of both the righteous and the wicked. To the righteous, it will have the appearance of a towering mountain; and to the wicked, it will have the appearance of a strand of hair. These will weep, and the others will weep. The righteous will weep, saying, "How were we able to cope with such a towering mountain?" The wicked will weep, saying, "How is it that we were unable to cope with a mere strand of hair?" And the Holy One will also marvel together with them, as is said, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts: If it be marvelous in the eyes of the remnant of this people . . . it will also be marvelous in Mine eyes" (Zech. 8:6).[8]

62. "The end for darkness is set" (Job 28:3). A definite time was set for the world to spend in darkness. As long as the impulse to evil is in the world, darkness and thick darkness are in the world. After the impulse to evil is pulled out by its roots from the world, the end for darkness will have been set.[9]

Precept and Transgression

63. Akavia ben Mahalalel said: Reflect upon three things, and you will not fall into the grip of sin. Know where you came from, where you are going, and before whom you are destined to give an account and reckoning. "Where you came from"—from a putrid drop. "Where you are going"—to a place of dust, worm, and maggot. "And before whom you are destined to give an account and reckoning"—before the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He!

R. Abba son of R. Papi and R. Joshua of Sikhnin said in the name of R. Levi: R. Akavia drew the three inferences from one verse, "Remember thy Creator (bor'ekha)" (Eccles. 12:1)—your well (be'erekha), your pit (borekha), your Creator. "Your well": the place where you came from. "Your pit": the place where you are going. "Your Creator": before whom you are destined to give an account and reckoning.[10]

64. Rabbah bar R. Huna, citing R. Huna—some say, R. Huna, citing R. Eleazar—said: From the Five Books, the Prophets, and the Writings, it may be inferred that one is allowed to follow the road he wishes to take. From the Five Books: Balaam was first told, "Thou shalt not go with them" (Num. 22:12), and subsequently was told, "Rise up and go with them" (Num. 22:20). From the Prophets: "I am the Lord thy God, who teacheth thee for thy profit, who leadeth thee by the way thou wouldest go" (Isa. 48:17). From the Writings: "If he is of the scorners, he will [be allowed to] speak scorn; and [if] of the meek, he will be shown grace" (Prov. 3:34).[11]

65. Our masters taught: "Neither shall ye defile yourselves, for ye will become even more defiled thereby" (Lev. 11:43). When a man defiles himself by ever so little, he will be judged greatly defiled. If he defiles himself here below, he will be judged defiled up above. If he becomes defiled in this world, he will be judged defiled in the world-to-come.

"Make yourselves holy therefore, and be ye holy" (Lev. 11:44). When a man reaches out by ever so little for holiness, he will be judged most holy. If he reaches out for holiness here below, he will be judged holy up above. If he reaches out for holiness in this world, he will be judged holy in the world-to-come.[12]

66. Our masters taught: A man should always regard himself as though he were half-guilty and half-meritorious. If he performs even one precept, happy is he, for he has

---

1. Song R. 7:8, §1.
2. Since there is no such phrase in Gen. 1, it may be a variant reading.
3. Gen. R. 9:7; Eccles. R. 3:11, §3.
4. ARNB 4.
5. B. AZ 5a.
6. Num. R. 15:16.
7. Gen. R. 48:11.
8. B. Suk 52a.
9. Gen. R. 89:1.
10. Avot 3:1; P. Sot 2:2, 18a.
11. B. Mak 10b.
12. B. Yoma 39a.

tilted the scale for himself toward the side of merit; if he commits one transgression, woe to him, for he has tilted the scale for himself toward the side of guilt, as is said, "But one sinner destroyeth much good" (Eccles. 9:18). On account of the single sin he commits, he destroys for himself much good.

R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: The world is judged by the majority [of its deeds], and an individual is likewise judged by the majority [of his deeds, good or bad]. A man should therefore always regard himself and the world as half-meritorious and half-guilty. If he performs one good deed, happy is he, for he has tilted the scale both for himself and for the entire world, all of it, toward the side of merit; if he commits even one transgression, woe to him, for he has tilted the scale both for himself and for the entire world, all of it, toward the scale of guilt, as is said, "But one sinner destroyeth much good." On account of a single sin this man has committed, he has destroyed for himself and for the entire world much good.[1]

67. Merit has both stock [for the world-to-come] and fruit [in this world], for it is said, "Hail the righteous man, for he shall fare well; he shall eat the fruit of his works" (Isa. 3:10). Transgression has stock but no fruit, for it is said, "Woe to the wicked man, for he shall fare ill: as his hands have dealt, so shall it be done to him" (Isa. 3:11). Then how do I interpret "The wicked eat the fruit of their own ways, and have their fill of their own counsels" (Prov. 1:31)? Transgression that bears fruit[2] has fruit; that which does not bear fruit[3] has no fruit.

The Holy One adds up a good intention to a [good] deed, as though the intention had been carried out, for it is said, "Then they that feared the Lord spoke one with another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before Him, for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon His Name" (Mal. 3:16). Now, what is the meaning of "that thought upon His Name"? R. Assi said: Even if one no more than thinks of performing a good deed but is forcibly prevented from doing so, Scripture ascribes it to him as though he had performed it. But the Holy One does not add up an evil intention to a [wicked] deed, as though the intention had been carried out, for it is said, "When I regarded iniquity in my heart, the Lord would not hear" (Ps. 66:18). Well then, how do I interpret "Behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts" (Jer. 6:19)? The Holy One adds up an intention that bears fruit to a deed, as though the intention had been carried out; an intention that does not bear fruit, the Holy One does not add up to a deed, as though the intention had not been carried out.[4]

68. R. Judah said: Good works are not barren, but bear fruit. Sin, however, is barren.[5]

69. R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: He who performs one precept acquires for himself one advocate, and he who commits one transgression acquires for himself one accuser. Repentance and good works are as a shield against retribution.[6]

70. R. Hinena bar Idi said: He who fulfills a precept as commanded will be spared evil tidings, as is said, "Whoso keepeth the commandment shall know no evil thing" (Eccles. 8:5).

R. Assi—according to others, R. Hanina—said: Even when the Holy One issues a decree, the righteous man can annul it, for the question "Because the King's word hath power, and who may say unto Him, 'What doest Thou?' " (Eccles. 8:4) is answered at once, "Whoso keepeth the commandment shall know no evil thing."[7]

71. R. Hanina ben Dosa said: He whose fear of sin takes precedence over his learning[8]—his learning will endure. But he whose learning takes precedence over his fear of sin—his learning will not endure. For it is said, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of learning" (Ps. 111:10).

He used to say: He whose [good] works exceed his learning—his learning will endure. But he whose learning exceeds his [good] works—his learning will not endure. For it is said, "We will do [what is right], then we will understand" (Exod. 24:7).

Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai was asked, "How would you describe a man who is both learned and fearful of sin?" He replied, "He is a craftsman who has the tools of his craft in his hand." "And the man who is learned but does not fear sin?" He replied, "He is a craftsman who has no tools of his craft in his hand." "And the man who fears sin but is not learned?" He replied, "He is no craftsman, but the tools of his craft are in his hand."[9]

72. R. Simon and R. Eleazar were seated when R. Jacob bar Aha passed by. One said to the other, "Let us stand up for him, because he is a sin-fearing man." The other replied, "Let us stand up for him, because he is a man of learning." Said the one, "I will tell you that he is a sin-fearing man, and you tell me that he is merely a man of learning!"[10]

73. "The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever" (Ps. 19:10). You find that even when a man studies Midrash of Halakhot and Aggadot, but has no fear of sin, he really possesses nothing, as may be illustrated by the parable of a man who said to his friend, "I have a thousand measures of grain, a thousand measures of oil, and a thousand measures of wine." His friend asked, "Do you have storehouses in which to keep them? If you have them, all will remain yours; if not, you will possess nothing." So it is with a man who studies everything; he is told, "If you have fear

---

1. B. Kid 40b; Tos Kid 1:14.
2. When the sinner is imitated by others.
3. When he sins quietly, with none to imitate him.
4. B. Kid 40a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. MTeh 62:4.
6. Avot 4:11.
7. B. Shab 63a.
8. His ethical conduct concerns him more than his learning.
9. Avot 3:9; ARN 22.
10. B. Shab 31b.

of sin, you have everything," as is said, "Even if faithfulness to your times of study brings a hoard of salvation, both wisdom and knowledge, still it is the fear of the Lord which is a man's treasury" (Isa. 33:6).[1]

74. R. Abbahu said: When a man causes his companion to perform a precept, Scripture imputes it to him as though he had performed it himself.[2]

75. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: When a man performs a precept in this world, it precedes him—goes ahead of him—in the world-to-come. And when a man commits a transgression in this world, it clings to him and goes before him on the Day of Judgment. R. Eleazar said: It attaches itself to him like a dog.[3]

76. We have been taught that R. Yose son of R. Judah said: When a man commits a transgression, he should be forgiven the first time, forgiven the second time, forgiven the third time, but not forgiven the fourth time, as is said, "Thus saith the Lord: For three transgressions of Israel, [yes]; but for four I will not reverse it" (Amos 2:6), and, "Lo, all these things does God work twice, yea thrice, with a man" (Job 33:29).[4]

77. R. Judah son of R. Nahmani, Resh Lakish's interpreter, expounded: The verse "Trust ye not in evil,[5] put ye not confidence in such an intimate" (Mic. 7:5) means that if the impulse to evil says to you, "Sin, and the Holy One will pardon you," do not believe it. You may say: But who will testify against me? The stones of your house, the beams of your house, even the furnishings of your house will testify against you, for Scripture says, "The stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it" (Hab. 2:11). However, the sages assert: The man's own soul will testify against him, for Scripture says, "Keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom" (Mic. 7:5). What is it that lies in a man's bosom? You must admit, it is the soul.

R. Zerika said: The two ministering angels that accompany him will testify against him, for it is said, "He will give His angels charge over thee, to watch thee in all thy ways" (Ps. 91:11). But other sages assert: A man's own limbs will testify against him, for they have been told, "Therefore ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord, and I am God" (Isa. 43:12).[6]

78. R. Isaac bar Parnakh said: All of a man's iniquities are engraved upon his bones.[7]

79. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: If most of a man's years have passed without sin, he will not sin anymore, as is said, "He will guard the steps of His saintly one" (1 Sam. 2:9).

Sages in the school of R. Shila taught: If a man had the opportunity to sin and then had a similar opportunity once again, and sinned neither time, he will not sin in the future, as is said, "He will guard the steps of His saintly one."[8]

80. R. Huna said: When a man has committed a sin once and a second time, it appears to him as if it were permitted.[9]

81. R. Ulla expounded: What is meant by "Be not much wicked" (Eccles. 7:17)? Is it that a man may not be wicked much, but he may be wicked a little bit? No indeed. Rather, if a man has eaten a bit of garlic and his breath smells, is he to eat more garlic so that his breath will smell even more?[10]

82. Ben Azzai said: Run to perform an easy precept as you would to perform a difficult one,[11] and flee from transgression, since one precept draws another in its train, and one transgression draws another in its train. For the recompense for performing a precept is the opportunity to perform another precept, and the recompense for committing a transgression is the temptation to commit another transgression.[12]

83. He used to say: Recoil from a slight sin so that you will recoil from a grave sin. Anticipate what is commanded, so that retribution does not anticipate you. If you have lapsed into transgression, worry not so much about that transgression as about the one that will come after it. And if observance of a precept has come to your hand, rejoice not so much about the observance of that precept as about the precept that will come after it.[13]

84. "But if any man hate his brother, and lie in ambush for him" (Deut. 19:11). From this verse the sages inferred: When a man violates an easy precept, he will in the end violate a grave precept. If a man violates the precept "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Lev. 19:18), he will in the end violate successively "Thou shalt not hate thy brother" (Lev. 19:17), "Thou shalt not take vengeance, nor bear any grudge" (Lev. 19:18), and "That thy brother may live with thee" (Lev. 36:22), until finally he comes to shed blood, as is said, "If any man hate his neighbor, he will come to lie in ambush for him, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally" (Deut. 19:11).[14]

---

1. Exod. R. 30:14.
2. B. Sanh 99b.
3. B. Sot 3b.
4. B. Yoma 86b.
5. The word re'a ("friend") is read as though vocalized ra' ("evil").
6. B. Hag 16a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. Ka R. 3:1.
8. B. Yoma 38b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. B. Yoma 86b.
10. If a man has sinned a little, he should not continue sinning. B. Shab 31b.
11. The words "as you would perform a difficult one" are not found in many versions.
12. Avor 4:2.
13. ARNB 33.
14. Sif Deut., §186–87.

85. "Happy is he who is raised above transgression"[1] (Ps. 32:1). Happy is the man who rises above proneness to transgression, and whose proneness to transgression does not rise above him.[2]

86. Resh Lakish said: No man commits a transgression unless the spirit of madness enters into him.[3]

87. [The prophet] Elijah said to R. Judah brother of R. Salla the Pious: Refrain from anger, and you will not sin; drink not to excess, and you will not sin.[4]

88. A sage of the school of R. Ishmael taught: Sin dulls the heart of man, as is said, "Neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled thereby" (Lev. 11:43). Read not ve-nitmetem "that ye should be defiled," but ve-nittamtem, "that ye should become dulled."[5]

89. R. Isaac said: When a man commits a transgression in secret, it is as though he were pushing the feet of the Holy One [off His footstool], as is said, "Thus saith the Lord: The heaven is My throne and the earth is My footstool" (Isa. 66:1).[6]

90. We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: A man may commit a transgression in secret, but the Holy One proclaims it about him in the open.[7]

91. R. Kahana said: I consider a man brazen who sets forth his sin in detail, for it is said, "Happy is the man whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered" (Ps. 32:1).[8]

92. R. Nahman bar Isaac said: A transgression performed with good intention is better than a precept performed with evil intention.[9]

93. One may presume that a man will not commit a sin unless he stands to profit by it.[10]

94. There can be no agent for a sinful act.[11]

95. No man ascribes guilt to himself.[12]

96. A sinner may not be allowed to profit.[13]

97. Woe unto him who cannot distinguish between good and evil.[14]

98. Sin's beginning is sweet, but its end is bitter.[15]

99. Rava expounded: The verse that says, "The mandrakes give forth fragrance" (Song 7:14), alludes to young men in Israel who have never savored the taste of sin.[16]

100. R. Zutra bar Tobiah said in the name of Rav: Young men in Israel who have not savored the taste of sin are destined to give forth sweet fragrance like that of Lebanon, as is said, "His young men[17] shall spread out far, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his fragrance as Lebanon" (Hos. 14:7).[18]

101. "If your sins be in keeping with your years"[19] (Isa. 1:18). When a man's iniquities are in keeping with his years,[20] "they shall be as white as snow" (ibid.).[21]

102. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Do works [of righteousness and charity] while you can find [people to do such works for], while you have the opportunity, and while it is still in your power. Indeed, in his wisdom, Solomon said, "Remember then thy Creator in the days of thy youth, before the evil days come"—the days of old age—"and the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say: 'I have no pleasure in them' " (Eccles. 12:1)—the days of the Messiah, when there will be neither merit nor guilt.[22]

103. Quoting "Among the dead I am free" (Ps. 88:6), R. Yohanan said: Once a man is dead, he is free from religious obligations.[23]

The Righteous and the Wicked

104. "Say ye of the righteous, when they are good, that they shall eat the fruit of their doings" (Isa. 3:10). But is it conceivable for there to be one righteous man who is good and another righteous man who is not good? The answer is: he who is good to Heaven and good to man is a righteous man who is truly good; good to Heaven but not good to man is a righteous man who is not truly good. Similarly, you read, "Woe unto the wicked man that is evil; for the reward of his hands shall be given unto him" (Isa. 3:11). But is it conceivable for there to be one wicked man who is evil and another wicked man who is not evil? The answer is: he who is evil to Heaven and evil to man

---

1. JV: "whose transgression is forgiven."
2. Gen. R. 22:6.
3. B. Sot 3a.
4. B. Ber 29b.
5. B. Yoma 39a.
6. B. Hag 16a.
7. B. Sot 3a.
8. B. Ber 34b.
9. B. Naz 23b.
10. B. BM 5b.
11. Hence, the agent cannot exculpate himself by pleading that he was no more than an agent. B. BK 51a.
12. B. Shab 119a.
13. Shev 9:9.
14. B. Sanh 103a.
15. Lev. R. 16:8.
16. B. Er 21b.
17. JV: "boughs."
18. B. Ber 43b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
19. JV: "like scarlet." But shanim ("scarlet") also means "years."
20. So that when old, he does not take to youthful follies.
21. P. Yoma 6:5, 43d.
22. B. Shab 151b.
23. Ibid.

is a wicked man who is truly evil; he who is evil to Heaven but not evil to man is a wicked man who is not truly evil.[1]

105. "They who practice Thy righteousness are like the mighty mountains" (Ps. 36:7). As the mountains are sown and yield fruit, so the deeds of the righteous yield fruit which benefits them and others. By what parable may the matter be illustrated? By that of a golden ball whose clapper is a pearl. "They upon whom Thy judgments are imposed are like the great deep" (ibid.)—these are the wicked. As the deep cannot be sown to yield fruit, so the deeds of the wicked cannot yield fruit, for if they yielded fruit, they would destroy the world.[2]

106. R. Phinehas the Priest bar Hama said: In the heaven called Aravot,[3] the Holy One sows the doings of the righteous and they bear fruit, as is said, "They shall eat the fruit of their doings" (Isa. 3:10).[4]

107. "Now the earth was unformed and void" (Gen. 1:2); this alludes to deeds of the wicked. "And God said: 'Let there be light' " (ibid.); this alludes to deeds of the righteous.[5]

108. Righteous men say little but perform much. Thus, Abraham said, "I will fetch a morsel of bread and stay ye your heart" (Gen. 18:5), but in the event "Abraham ran unto the herd" (Gen. 18:7). On the other hand, the wicked say much but do not perform even a little. Thus we find Ephron saying to Abraham, "The field give I to thee . . . a piece of land worth four hundred shekels of silver—what is that betwixt me and thee?" (Gen. 23:11, 23:15). But in the event, "Abraham weighed to Ephron . . . four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant" (Gen. 23:16). Ephron refused to accept anything but centenaria.[6]

109. R. Yose the Galilean said: The righteous—their impulse to good judges them, as Scripture says, "My heart pierces [my soul] within me" (Ps. 109:22). The wicked—the impulse to evil judges them, as Scripture says, "Transgression speaketh [accusingly] to a wicked man within his heart" (Ps. 36:2). Middling people are judged by one impulse as well as by the other, for Scripture says, "Because He standeth at the right hand of the needy, to save him from those[7] who would judge his soul" (Ps. 109:31). Rabbah said, "People such as ourselves are middling." Abbaye said to him, "[If the master is no more than average], he gives no one else a chance to survive!"[8]

Rabbah further said: "Everyone should himself know whether he is completely righteous or not."[9]

Rava said: The world was created only for the completely wicked and the completely righteous. He went on: Thus, the world was created only for Ahab son of Omri and for R. Hanina ben Dosa—this world for Ahab son of Omri; and for R. Hanina ben Dosa, the world-to-come.[10]

110. If there is no righteous person, there is no wicked either. Hence, the wicked said to the righteous: You should endeavor to show gratitude to me, for were I not wicked, how would you be recognized? Were all men righteous, you would have no superiority.[11]

111. The wicked—they are under control of their hearts. But the righteous—they have their hearts under their control.[12]

112. R. Hanina bar Papa expounded: The name of the angel in charge of conception is Night; he takes each drop [of semen] and places it before the Holy One, saying to Him, "Master of the universe, what is this drop to become, a strong man or a weak man, a wise man or a fool, a rich man or a poor man?" But he does not say, "A righteous man or a wicked man?" R. Hanina added: Everything is in the hands of Heaven except the fear of Heaven, as is said, "And now, O Israel, what is the thing that the Lord thy God requireth of thee? It is to fear [Heaven]" (Deut. 10:12).[13]

113. Our masters taught: When a wicked man enters the world, wrath enters the world. When a wicked man perishes from the world, good comes to the world. When a righteous man departs from the world, evil comes to the world. When a righteous man comes into the world, good comes to the world.[14]

114. The death of the wicked is a benefit to them and a benefit to the world; the death of the righteous is an injury to them and an injury to the world. Wine and sleep of the wicked are a benefit to them and a benefit to the world; wine and sleep of the righteous are an injury to them and an injury to the world. Dispersion of the wicked is a benefit to them and a benefit to the world; dispersion of the righteous is an injury to them and an injury to the world. Gathering of the wicked is an injury to them and an injury to the world; gathering of the righteous is a benefit to them and a benefit to the world.[15] Tranquility of the wicked is an injury to them and an injury to the world; tranquility of the righteous is a benefit to them and a benefit to the world.[16]

---

1. B. Kid 40a.
2. Tanhuma, Emor, §5.
3. Here associated with aravah ("an arid tract").
4. MTeh 114:2.
5. Gen. R. 2:5.
6. Twenty-five times the worth of the field. The centenarium is a weight equal to 100,000 Roman sesterces, the same as the biblical talent (kikkar). B. BM 87a; Tanhuma, Be-har, §1.
7. Plural pronoun; hence, two impulses.
8. For if so, the overwhelming majority of mankind is wicked and faces damnation.
9. And if not completely righteous, he should know that he is destined to suffer.
10. B. Ber 61b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. Midrash Tem 2 (BhM 1:108).
12. Gen. R. 34:1.
13. B. Nid 16b.
14. B. Sanh 113b.
15. The source for "Gathering of the wicked is an injury . . . to the world . . ." is unknown to the translator.
16. B. Sanh 72a.

115. R. Yohanan said: As long as the wicked live, they evoke the anger of the Holy One, as is said, "Ye have wearied the Lord with your words" (Mal. 2:17). But when they die, they cease to anger the Holy One, as is said, "There the wicked cease from raging" (Job 3:17), which means that there the wicked cease from enraging the Holy One. As long as the righteous live, they must combat their impulse to evil, but when they die, they enjoy rest, in keeping with "And there the weary are at rest" (ibid.), [as the righteous say], "We have labored enough."[1]

116. "It is not good to respect the person of the wicked" (Prov. 18:5); it is not good for the wicked to be favored [by the Holy One] in this world.[2] "[But it is good] to subvert the righteous in judgment" (ibid.); it is good for the righteous that no favor be shown them [for their faults by the Holy One] in this world.[3]

Happy are the righteous! Not only do they acquire merit, but they bestow merit upon their children and children's children to the end of all generations. Aaron had several sons who deserved to be burned like Nadab and Abihu, as is said, "His sons that were left" (Lev. 10:12),[4] but the merit of their father stood up for them. Woe unto the wicked! They render not only themselves guilty, they bestow guilt upon their children and children's children unto the end of all generations. Canaan had many sons who were worthy to be ordained like Tabi, the slave of R. Gamaliel, but the guilt of their ancestor caused them [to be held unworthy].[5]

117. "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children—upon the third, and upon the fourth generation" (Num. 14:18). Consider the implications of this verse by analogy with a four-level storehouse, one level above the other; on one there is wine; on another, oil; on still another, honey; and on still another, water. If a fire starts on any one of the levels, what is above it will extinguish the fire. But if all four levels should have oil on them, all four will burn down. Likewise, if children persist, generation after generation, in the wicked ways of their forefathers, punishment will be visited upon them. But if the generations alternate, one generation righteous and the next wicked, and so on, then "the fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers" (Deut. 24:16). Hearing this, Moses rejoiced, saying, "In Israel, no one is a malicious destroyer of grapevines just because his father was a malicious destroyer of grapevines."[6]

118. Believe not in yourself until the day of your death. The high priest Yohanan ministered in the high priesthood for eighty years, and in the end became a Sadducee [heretic].[7]

119. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Even if a man is perfectly righteous all his life, but rebels in the end, he annuls the [good] deeds he had previously performed, as is said, "The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression" (Ezek. 33:12). And conversely, even if a man was completely wicked, but then resolved on penitence, his wickedness is never mentioned to him again, as is said, "Nor shall the wickedness of the wicked cause him to stumble when he turns back from his wickedness" (ibid.).[8]

120. R. Eliezer son of R. Yose the Galilean said: If you are aware of a righteous man about to set out on a journey, and you intend to go in the same direction, start out as many as three days earlier or as many as three days later, so that you set out on the journey together with him, because angels of peace accompany him, he being told, "For He will give His angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways" (Ps. 91:11). On the other hand, if you are aware of a wicked man about to set out on a journey, and you intend to go in the same direction, start out as many as three days earlier or as many as three days later because of him, so that you will not have to set out with him on the journey, for the angels of Satan will accompany him, as is said, "Set thou a wicked man near him, and Satan will stand at his right hand" (Ps. 109:6).[9]

121. Abbaye said: Woe to the wicked, woe to his neighbor. It is well with the righteous, and well with his neighbor.[10]

122. "God remembered Abraham and removed Lot" (Gen. 19:29). We have been taught: A case in which there is a book of Scripture should be saved [by being carried out of a burning house on the Sabbath], together with the book itself; a case containing tefillin should be saved together with the tefillin themselves. Hence you learn that it is well with the righteous and well with those who cleave to them. And so, too, Scripture says, "God remembered Noah, and every living thing with him" (Gen. 8:1) [remembered them on account of Noah]. But woe to the wicked, and woe to those who cleave to them, for Scripture says earlier, "And He blotted out every living substance which was upon the face of the earth" (Gen. 7:23).[11]

123. A sage in the school of R. Ishmael taught: The verse "When he that is falling falls thence [from the roof that has no parapet]" (Deut. 22:8) implies that he was destined to fall ever since the six days of creation, for even though he had not yet fallen, Scripture speaks of him as "he that is falling," because reward is bestowed through

---

1. Gen. R. 9:5.
2. So that punishment may be visited upon them in the world-to-come.
3. Because thereby they come to eternal life purged of sin.
4. The suggestion being: "They were left to survive," even though they also deserved the punishment suffered by their two brethren.
5. B. Yoma 87a.
6. Yalkut, Shelah, §744.
7. Avot 2:4; B. Ber 29a.
8. B. Kid 40b.
9. Tos AZ 1:17.
10. B. Suk 56b.
11. Tanhuma, Va-yera, §9.

a person deserving of reward, and punishment through a person deserving punishment.[1]

124. He who causes the many to be righteous—no sin will occur through him. But he who causes the many to sin will not be provided means to resolve on penitence. Moses was righteous and caused the many to be righteous, therefore the righteousness of the many is deemed to be dependent on him, as is said, "He executed the righteousness of the Lord, and his ordinances[2] with Israel" (Deut. 33:21). But Jeroboam son of Nebat sinned and caused the many to sin. Therefore the sin of the many is deemed to be dependent on him, as is said, "For the sins of Jeroboam which he sinned, and wherewith he made Israel to sin" (1 Kings 15:30).[3]

125. R. Abba bar Kahana said: The root of the Presence had been with those below, for it is said, "And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking through the garden" (Gen. 3:8). When Adam sinned, the Presence withdrew to the first heaven. When Cain sinned, it withdrew to the second heaven; the generation of Enosh—to the third; the generation of the flood—to the fourth, the generation of the dispersion of the races of man—to the fifth; the people of Sodom—to the sixth; the Egyptians in the days of Abraham—to the seventh. Over against these wicked men there rose seven righteous men who brought it about that the Presence came down to the earth. Abraham had the privilege of bringing it down from the seventh to the sixth. Isaac rose up and brought it down to the fifth; Jacob—to the fourth; Levi—to the third; Kohath—to the second; Amram—to the first. Then Moses rose up and brought it down from the world above to the world below.[4]

126. R. Phinehas said in the name of R. Hoshaia: Although you read, "Because on it He rested from all His work" (Gen. 2:3), He rested, to be sure, from the work of [creating] His world, but not from the work of the wicked and the work of the righteous, for He works with the former and also with the latter. He shows the ones [the consequences of] their essential character and the others [the consequences of] their essential character. How do we know that the punishment of the wicked is called work? Because it is said, "The Lord hath opened His armory, and hath brought forth the weapons of His indignation, for it is a work that the Lord God hath to do" (Jer. 50:25). And how do we know that the bestowing of reward upon the righteous is called work? Because it is said, "Oh how abundant is Thy goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee, which Thou hast worked for them that take refuge in Thee" (Ps. 31:20).[5]

127. R. Yohanan said: The righteous are greater than the ministering angels.[6]

128. Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said: The soul of one righteous man equals in weight the entire world, all of it.[7]

129. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: When the Holy One saw that the righteous were but few, He planted them in each and every generation, as is said, "The pillars of the earth [the righteous], which are of the Lord, upon them He placed the world" (1 Sam. 2:8).[8]

130. "And the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven, and said: 'Abraham, Abraham' " (Gen. 22:11). R. Eliezer ben Jacob stated: [The repetition of the name implies that God spoke] to him as well as to subsequent generations. There is no generation that does not have someone like Abraham, no generation that does not have someone like Jacob, no generation that does not have someone like Moses, and no generation that does not have someone like Samuel.[9]

131. The world rests on twelve pillars, as is said, "He set the borders of the peoples according to the number [of the tribes] of the children of Israel" (Deut. 32:8). Some maintain: On seven pillars, as is said, "She hath hewn out her seven pillars" (Prov. 9:1). R. Eleazar ben Shammua maintained: On one pillar, and its name is Righteous, for it is said, "Righteous is the foundation of the world" (Prov. 10:25).[10]

132. R. Eleazar said: Even for the sake of just one righteous man would the world have been created.

R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: Even for the sake of just one righteous man would the world endure, as is said, "The righteous is the foundation of the world."[11]

133. Rava said: If the righteous desired [to be utterly free of iniquity], they could create a world, for Scripture says, "It is only your iniquities that have distinguished between you and your God" (Isa. 59:2).

Rava created a man and sent him to R. Zera. R. Zera spoke to him but received no answer. So he said: You are a creature of the associate scholars [haverim of the academy]. Go back to your dust![12]

134. You will find that, through the agency of the righteous, the Holy One anticipated in this world everything that He will do in the world-to-come. The Holy One quickens the dead, and [the prophet] Elijah quickened the dead. The Holy One holds back rain, and Elijah held back rain. The Holy One blesses the [ones who have] little, and Elijah

---

1. The man who built a roof without a parapet deserves punishment, and a man who deserves to fall because of guilt is the instrument for punishing the man who built the roof improperly. B. Shab 32a.
2. Not God but Moses is credited with the ordinances.
3. Avot 5:18.
4. Gen. R. 19:7; Num. R. 13:2; Song R. 5:1, §1.
5. Gen. R. 11:10; Yalkut, Jer., §335.
6. B. Sanh 92b–93a.
7. B. Sanh 103b.
8. B. Yoma 38b.
9. See Gen. 46:2, Exod. 3:4, and 1 Sam. 3:10. Gen. R. 56:7.
10. B. Hag 12b.
11. B. Yoma 38b.
12. B. Sanh 65b.

blessed the [ones who have] little.[1] The Holy One quickens the dead,[2] and [the prophet] Elisha quickened the dead. The Holy One remembers barren women, and Elisha remembered barren women.[3] The Holy One blesses the [ones who have] little, and Elisha blessed the [ones who have] little.[4] The Holy One makes the bitter sweet, and Elisha made the bitter sweet.[5] The Holy One sweetens the bitter through the agency of the bitter,[6] and Elisha sweetened the bitter through the agency of the bitter.[7]

135. R. Abbahu interpreted the verse "The God of Israel said, The Rock of Israel spoke to me, the ruler over men—the righteous" (2 Sam. 23:3) as meaning; "The God of Israel said to me: The Rock of Israel spoke to me: I am the ruler over men. Who rules Me? The righteous man. For I issue a decree, and he nullifies it."[8]

136. "And to rule over the day and over the night" (Gen. 1:18). These are the righteous, who rule over what was created to give light during the day and over what was created to give light during the night. Of this power, Scripture says, "And the sun stood still and the moon stayed" (Josh. 10:13).[9]

137. "Thy righteousness is like the mighty mountains, Thy judgments are like the great deep" (Ps. 36:7). R. Josiah the Elder said: Transpose the parts of the verse and read it thus: "Like the mighty mountains over the great deep is Your righteousness over Your judgments," that is: As the mountains hold down the deep so that it does not come up and flood the earth, so the righteous hold down retribution so that it should not come to the world.[10]

138. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said: Woe to the wicked, who turn the measure of mercy into the measure of judgment. Blessed are the righteous, who turn the measure of judgment into the measure of mercy.[11]

139. A heretic once said to R. Joshua ben Hananiah: You are no more than a brier, since it is said of you, "The best of them is as a brier" (Mic. 7:4). R. Joshua replied: You fool, go to the end of the verse, where it is said, "The upright man is better [protection] than a tabernacle" (ibid.).[12] What, then, is meant by "The best of them is as a brier"? Even as briers shield a gap in a fence, so do the best among us provide a shield for the rest of us.[13]

---

1. See Gen. 30:30 and 1 Kings 17:14.
2. 2 Kings 4:32–34.
3. 2 Kings 4:16.
4. 2 Kings 4:43–44.
5. See Exod. 15:25 and 2 Kings 2:21–22.
6. The wood that Moses was told to cast into the water is said to have been olive wood, which is very bitter.
7. Salt. See 2 Kings 2:19–20. Gen. R. 77:1.
8. B. MK 16b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. Gen. R. 6:9.
10. Gen. R. 33:1; Lev. R. 27:1; MTeh 36:5.
11. Gen. R. 33:1.
12. JV: "The most upright is worse than a thorn hedge." But R. Eliezer takes mesukhah ("thorn hedge") to be a form of sukkah ("tabernacle").
13. B. Er 101a.

140. R. Isaac observed: When a man says to his friend, "Why do you do this or that?" his friend gets angry. Yet the righteous say to the Holy One, "Why?"[14] and He does not get angry, and the righteous are not punished. Why are the righteous not punished? Because they seek no boon for themselves, but only for the children of Israel.[15]

141. Abbaye said: In the world there are no fewer than thirty-six righteous men, who in each generation are allowed sight of the Holy One's countenance, for it is said, "Blessed are all they who wait on Him (lo) [lv]" (Isa. 30:18). The numerical value of the letters lamed and vav in the word lo is thirty-six.[16]

142. "It is a brilliant light, which gives off rays on every side—and there His glory is enveloped" (Hab. 3:4). To what, then, may the righteous in the vicinity of the Presence be likened? To a lamp in the presence of a torch.[17]

143. "I am a rose of Sharon, a lily of the valleys" (Song 2:1). R. Eliezer said: The righteous are likened to the most exquisite plant and its most exquisite variety. The most exquisite plant: the lily; its most exquisite variety: the lily of the valley. Not the lily of the mountain, which soon withers, but the lily of the valley, which remains full of sap. But as for the wicked, they are likened to the vilest thing and to its vilest representative—to chaff before the wind. Do not suppose that the wicked are likened to the chaff of the valley, which retains some moisture. No! "They shall be chased as the [utterly dried] chaff of the mountains before the wind" (Isa. 17:13).[18]

144. "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon" (Ps. 92:13). [With this verse] R. Tanhuma bar Abba began his discourse: Why are the righteous likened to a palm tree and a cedar, but not to any other tree? You find that with all other trees a man cannot tell from afar that it is such-and-such a tree. Why not? Because they are low. Whereas the palm tree and the cedar, being tall in stature, can be seen from afar, and all may stand under them and raise their eyes to the trees' stature. Therefore are the righteous likened to a palm tree and to a cedar, since the Holy One elevates the righteous in the world, so that they may be seen from afar.[19]

145. Does a man plant a vineyard to eat grapes from it and drink wine from it or to have it overgrown with weeds? If it becomes overgrown with weeds and thorns, he sets them on fire and burns them. If a few vines survive, he manures it, hoes it, prunes it, and irrigates it to propagate the vines in it. So it is with the righteous in the world—they are like the pillars of a house, and the entire world

---

14. Questions such as "Why do You countenance treachery?" (Hab. 1:13).
15. MTeh 2:2; Yalkut, Ps., §620.
16. B. Sanh 97b.
17. Even as the light of an oil lamp seems dim in the presence of a torch, so does the light of the righteous in God's presence. B. Pes 8a.
18. Song R. 2:1, §3.
19. Adapted from Tanhuma, Lekh lekha, §5.

is sustained by them. Such is the meaning of "The pillars of the earth are the Lord's, and He hath set the world upon them" (1 Sam. 2:8).[1]

146. "Hearken unto Me, ye stout-hearted [ye righteous], who are far from having to depend on charity" (Isa. 46:12). The entire world, all of it, is sustained by [God's] charity, while they are sustained by their arm [their own merit]. Some say that the entire world, all of it, is sustained by the merit of the righteous, while they themselves are not sustained even by their own merit.[2] Thus, R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Each and every day a divine voice goes forth from Mount Horeb and proclaims: The entire world, all of it, is sustained on account of My son Hanina. But as for My son Hanina—he has to sustain himself on a kav of carobs from Sabbath even to Sabbath eve.[3]

147. "And Jacob would dwell" (Gen. 37:1). R. Aha said: When the righteous dwell in peace and would continue to dwell in peace in this world, Satan comes along and charges, saying: It is not enough for these that the world-to-come is prepared for them—they seek to live in peace in this world as well.[4]

148. "The Lord loveth the righteous" (Ps. 146:8). Why does the Holy One love the righteous? Because their worth stems neither from inheritance nor from family. You find that priests constitute an ancestral house and Levites constitute an ancestral house, as is said, "O house of Aaron, bless ye the Lord; O house of Levi, bless ye the Lord" (Ps. 135:19–20). Accordingly, should a man wish to become a priest, he cannot; to become a Levite, he cannot. Why not? Because his father was not a priest or not a Levite. But should a man—even a Gentile—wish to be righteous, he can, because being righteous does not depend on an ancestral house. Therefore the psalm says, "Ye that fear the Lord, bless ye the Lord" (Ps. 135:20)—not, "Ye house of them that fear the Lord," because they who fear the Lord do not constitute an ancestral house. But they themselves come forth on their own and love the Holy One. Therefore does the Holy One love them.[5]

149. R. Eleazar pointed to an apparent contradiction between two verses. One says, "The Lord is good to all" (Ps. 145:9), while another says, "The Lord is good unto them that wait for Him" (Lam. 3:25). He reconciled the two verses by the parable of a man who has an orchard. When he irrigates it, he irrigates the entire orchard, but when he hoes, he hoes only the best trees.[6]

150. R. Simeon ben Judah said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: Beauty, strength, riches, honor, wisdom, old age and gray hair, and children are comely for the righteous and comely for the world.[7]

151. The Holy One has more consideration for the honor of the righteous than for His own honor.[8]

152. One righteous man may surpass another in seven respects: his wife may be more beautiful than his friend's, his sons more handsome than his friend's; when two righteous men eat from the same dish, one will enjoy the food in keeping with his merits and the other in keeping with his; when two righteous men dye cloth in the same vat, the color comes up brilliant for one and dull for the other. [Further, one may surpass the other] in wisdom, knowledge, and stature, as is said, "One righteous man may surpass another" (Prov. 12:26).[9]

153. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohahan: No righteous man ever departs from the world until a righteous man like him is brought into being, as is said, "A sun ariseth, even as another sun goeth down" (Eccles. 1:5). Thus, even before the sun of Eli set, the sun of Samuel the Ramathite began to shine.[10]

154. R. Hama bar Hanina said: The righteous are more powerful after their death than during their life.[11]

155. "For the living know that they died" (Eccles. 9:5)—these are the righteous, who even after their death are called living. "But the dead know not anything" (ibid.)—these are the wicked, who even during their life are called dead.[12]

156. R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hanina: When a righteous man dies, he dies only to his own generation.[13] A parable of a man who lost a pearl: Wherever the pearl is, it is still a pearl—it is lost only to its owner.[14]

157. "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon" (Ps. 92:13). Why are the righteous likened to a palm and to a cedar? Because you find it true of the majority of trees that, even after they are cut down, a sprout may be taken from them and planted in another place, and they begin to grow again. But when the palm and the cedar are cut down, who can make others grow up in their stead except after many years and much labor? So, too, when a righteous man perishes from the world, who can make another stand up in his stead except after many years?[15]

---

1. TdEZ 5 (JPS, p. 428).
2. The latter part of the verse is now read, "Who are far from receiving [God's] charity."
3. B. Ber 17b.
4. Gen. R. 84:2.
5. Num. R. 8:2.
6. Only the good are fully cared for. B. Sanh 39b.
7. Avot 6:8.
8. PRKM, Ki Tissa, 6 (2:25).
9. JV: "The righteous is guided by his friend." ARN 37.
10. B. Yoma 38b.
11. B. Hul 7b.
12. B. Ber 18a–b.
13. Both his reputation and his soul survive.
14. B. Meg 15a.
15. Tanhuma B, Lekh lekha, §9.

158. Our masters taught: "The spirit returneth unto God who gave it" (Eccles. 12:7). As He gave it to you in purity, so you [give it back] in purity. The matter may be illustrated by the parable of a king of flesh and blood who distributed royal vestments among his servants. The wise among the servants folded the vestments and placed them carefully in a chest, while the fools among them proceeded to do their ordinary work wearing them. After a time, the king asked for his vestments. The wise among his servants returned them immaculate, while the fools had to return them soiled. The king was pleased with the wise but angry with the fools. Of the wise, he said, "Let my vestments be placed in my treasury, and they may return to their homes in peace"; of the fools, he said, "Let my vestments be given to a fuller, and they who wore them are to be confined in prison." So, too, the Holy One quotes concerning the bodies of the righteous, "Let them enter in peace, let them rest on their couches" (Isa. 57:2); concerning their souls, He quotes, "The soul of my lord shall be treasured in the treasury of life" (1 Sam. 25:29). But concerning the bodies of the wicked, He quotes, "There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked" (Isa. 48:22); concerning their souls, He quotes, "He will fling away the souls of thine enemies as from the hollow of a sling" (1 Sam. 25:29).[1]

159. R. Hiyya bar Gamda said in the name of R. Yose ben Saul: When a righteous man departs from the world, the ministering angels say to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, such-and-such a righteous man is coming." God responds, "Let the righteous come [from their nesting places] and go forth to meet him, and say to him, 'Let him enter in peace [and then they may go back] and rest on their couches.' " (Isa. 57:2).

R. Eleazar said: When a righteous man departs from the world, three companies of ministering angels go forth to meet him. One says, "Let him come in peace"; another, "Let him rest on his couch"; and still another, "Each may walk in his uprightness" (Isa. 57:2). When a wicked man perishes from the world, three companies of destroying angels come to meet him. One proclaims, "There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked" (Isa. 48:22); another tells him, "Ye shall lie down in sorrow" (Isa. 50:11); and still another says to him, "Go down, and be thou laid with the uncircumcised" (Ezek. 32:19).[2]

160. The death of the righteous is as grievous as the burning of the house of our God.[3]

161. The sages said in the name of Bar Kappara: When one sheds tears for a virtuous man, the Holy One counts them and lays them up in His treasury, as is said, "Thou countest my grievings. Put Thou my tears into Thy bottle. Are they not in Thy record?" (Ps. 56:9).[4]

162. When R. Hiyya bar Adda, the son of Bar Kappara's sister, died, Resh Lakish, who was his teacher, wept for him, because a disciple is as dear to his teacher as a son. Then he went in and spoke the eulogy for him: "My Beloved is gone down to His garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies" (Song 6:2). "My Beloved" is the Holy One; "went down to His garden"—to the world; "to the beds of spices"—to Israel; "to feed in the gardens"—these are the nations of the world; "and gather lilies"—these are the righteous among the nations, whom He removes from the midst of the nations to plant in Israel. By what parable may the matter be illustrated? By the one of a king who had a son whom he loved exceedingly. What did the king do? He planted an orchard for him. Whenever the son carried out his father's wish, the king would go around the entire world, all of it, and when he saw a beautiful sapling in the world, he would [bring it and] plant it in his orchard. But whenever the son provoked him, he would cut down all his saplings. So, too, whenever Israel carry out the will of Him who is everywhere, He goes around the entire world, all of it, and when He sees a righteous man among the nations of the world, such as Jethro and Rahab, He brings him and has him cleave to Israel. But whenever Israel provoke Him, He removes the righteous who are in their midst.[5]

163. When R. Yose of Milhaia[6] died, R. Yohanan and Resh Lakish went up to attend his funeral, and R. Isaac Passaka went with them. A certain old man who happened to be there wished to deliver the eulogy for R. Yose. R. Isaac Passaka said to him, "Do you dare open your mouth in the presence of these two lions?" But R. Yohanan said, "Let him be—he is an old man and wishes to be accorded honor in the place where he lives." So the old man went in and delivered the eulogy for R. Yose, saying, "The departure of the righteous is more grievous for the Holy One than the hundred less two curses mentioned in Deuteronomy and than the destruction of the Temple. In connection with the curses, it is written, 'Then the Lord will make the plagues wonderful' [Deut. 28:59], and of the destruction of Jerusalem, it is written, 'Therefore is she come down wonderfully' [Lam. 1:9]. But of the departure of the righteous, Scripture says, 'Therefore, behold, I will multiply wonderful work among this people, yea, wonder upon wonder' [Isa. 29:14]. And why such multiplying of God's wonders? Because, as the verse goes on to say, 'The wisdom of their wise men shall perish' " (ibid.). At that, R. Isaac Passaka exclaimed, "May the mouth of this man be blessed,"[7] and R. Yohanan said, "If we had not allowed him to speak, where would we have heard such a pearl [of a eulogy]?"[8]

164. R. Abbahu taught in the name of R. Eleazar: The Holy One records upon His purple robe the name of every righteous man whom the nations put to death. And the

---

1. Shab 152b.
2. B. Ket 104a; MTeh 30:3.
3. B. RH 18b.
4. B. Shab 105b.
5. P. Ber 2:8, 5b–c.
6. A town in Upper Galilee.
7. The word gavra ("man") is in BR mistakenly translated koah ("power").
8. Lam. R. 1:9, §37; Yalkut, Isa., §436.

Holy One will demand of the nations of the earth, "Why did you put to death My righteous ones?" When the nations of the earth claim ignorance and reply, "We did not put them to death," what will the Holy One do? He will fetch His royal robe, judge them, and decree their doom.[1]

165. No monuments need be put up for the righteous—their words are their monuments.[2]

166. "The name of the righteous is to be invoked in a blessing" (Prov. 10:7). R. Isaac said: When one mentions a righteous man by name without blessing him, one violates a positive command. What is the proof? "The name of the righteous is to be invoked in a blessing." While he who mentions by name a wicked man without cursing him also violates a positive command. What is the proof? "But the fame of the wicked rots" (ibid.).

R. Samuel bar Nahman said: The names of the wicked are like weaving implements—as long as you use them, they stay taut; but when you lay them aside, they slacken. Thus, have you ever heard a man call his son Pharaoh, Sisera, or Sennacherib? No—he calls him Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Reuben, or Simeon.[3]

167. Akavia ben Mahalalel said: Better I be called a fool all my days than become wicked for even one hour before Him who is everywhere.[4]

168. Our masters taught: There are four kinds of men who are called wicked. They are, to begin with, he who raises a hand against his fellow to strike him. Even if he does not actually strike him, he is called wicked. Note the language of Scripture: "And he said to the wicked, 'Wherefore wouldst thou strike thy fellow?" (Exod. 2:13). The verse does not say, "Wherefore didst thou strike?" but "Wherefore wouldst thou strike" [implying that the man had not yet struck him]. There is also the kind who borrows but does not repay, of whom Scripture says, "The wicked borroweth and payeth not" (Ps. 37:21). Then there is the kind who is so brazen that he feels no shame in the presence of one superior to him, of whom it is said, "The wicked man is brazen in his presence" (Prov. 21:29). Finally, there is the kind who causes strife. With regard to a band of such, Scripture says, "Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men" (Num. 16:26).[5]

169. What are the wicked like? Like a man who walks on a road in the dead of night [without a lantern in his hand], so that when he trips over a stone, he falls down; when he bumps into a tree, it bruises his face; when he comes to a pit, he stumbles into it; when he comes to a river, he falls into it—he just does not know where he is going. Of such a one, Scripture says, "The way of the wicked is as darkness; they do not know what will make them stumble" (Prov. 4:19). But the righteous are like a man who carries a torch in his hand while walking in the darkness, so that when he comes to a stone, he steps aside; when he sees a tree, he removes himself from it; when he reaches a pit, he takes care; when he reaches a river, he takes care. Such a man can say, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet" (Ps. 119:105).[6]

170. "Thou hast broken the teeth of the wicked" (Ps. 3:8). A parable of two men, one righteous and the other wicked, who were walking along a highway. When they came upon an inn, they said to each other, "Let us go in and eat." As they entered the inn, the wicked man saw a great abundance of [food]—fish, bullock, ox, lamb and ram, fowl, and other good victuals. So he said to the righteous man, "We will pay nothing, and eat all we want." The righteous man answered, "Has this inn just opened today? Only if it has just opened today could we try out its food without paying."[7] The two men sat down, each by himself. The wicked man said to the innkeeper, "Fetch me pheasants, fetch me spiced wine, fetch me something of all the victuals in the inn." The righteous man said to the innkeeper, "Bring me a bowl of lentils, a small round bread, and two slices of meat." As the two men sat, each by himself, the wicked man was making sport of the righteous man, saying, "Look at that fool, son of a windbag! All these abundant victuals are before him, and he's eating lentils!" And the righteous man was making sport of the wicked man, saying, "He's been devouring all those delicacies, but he'll soon have his teeth broken."

When the righteous man finally said to the innkeeper, "Let me have two cups of wine," the innkeeper served them to him. The righteous man said grace and stood up. Then the innkeeper said, "Pay me for what you ate—one small round bread, a bowl of lentils, two slices of meat, and two cups of wine." The righteous man asked, "How much am I to pay you?" The innkeeper: "Give me two issar." The righteous man: "Here you are." The innkeeper took the money and said to the righteous man, "Go in peace."

When the wicked man stood up to go, the innkeeper said, "Settle your account with me!" The wicked man answered, "What have I eaten? One small round bread." The innkeeper said, "No, you have eaten two!" The wicked man, "Well, I ate two eggs!" The innkeeper insisted, "You have eaten five eggs!" The wicked man: "No, I have not eaten that many." At that, the innkeeper and his servants set upon him and broke his teeth. Hence it is said, "Thou hast broken the teeth of the wicked."

So, too, the wicked think: "How can God know?" (Ps. 73:11). But the righteous say, "There is not a word in my tongue, but what Thou, O Lord, knowest it altogether" (Ps. 139:4).[8]

171. "The wicked are like the troubled sea" (Isa. 57:20). The waves in the sea exalt themselves as they rise, even

---

1. MTeh 9:13; Yalkut, Ps., §643.
2. P. Shek 2:5, 47a.
3. Gen. R. 49:1.
4. Ed 5:6.
5. Tanhuma, Korah, §8.
6. MTeh 119:44; PR 8:5.
7. In newly opened inns in Roman times, there was a custom of offering free food on opening day.
8. MTeh 4:13.

though each of them is shattered when it reaches and must go back to the sea. And even though each successive wave sees the preceding shattered, it too exalts itself as it rises and will not return to the sea. So it is with the wicked. Though they see what happened to the others, still they exalt themselves. None of the generations—the generation of Enosh, the generation of the flood, the generation of the dispersion of the races of men—none learned from the other, but kept exalting themselves. Therefore they are likened to the sea: "The wicked are like the troubled sea."[1]

172. "Why do the heathen rage?" (Ps. 2:1). R. Aibu said: All the raging of the wicked, all their wearying of themselves, is in vain, as is said, "The people labor for the fire, and the nations weary themselves for vanity" (Hab. 2:13).

Whom do the wicked resemble? Grasshoppers trapped in an urn, flinging themselves upward, only to fall down. So, too, the wicked, with regard to whom Scripture says, "It is He that sitteth above the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers" (Isa. 40:22).[2]

173. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: Even at the entrance to Gehenna, the wicked do not turn in penitence, for it is said, "All flesh . . . shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that rebel[3] against Me" (Isa. 66:24). Scripture does not say, "That have rebelled against Me," but, "That rebel against Me," implying that they go in rebellion forever.[4]

174. Nittai the Arbelite said: Keep your distance from a bad neighbor and do not associate with a wicked man.[5]

175. "On account of Abel—for it was Cain that [Lamech] slew" (Gen. 4:25).[6] Because of the sin against Abel, Cain was slain. What Eve said may be illustrated by the parable of two trees growing close to each other. A wind knocked down one of them, which fell on the other and knocked it down. So, too, Eve said, "On account of Abel—for it was Cain that [Lamech] slew": because of the sin against Abel, Cain had to be slain.[7]

176. R. Yohanan said: A man is forbidden to gaze at the countenance of a wicked man, for [Elisha said to a wicked king of Israel], "Were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor gaze upon thee" (2 Kings 3:14).

Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] asked R. Joshua ben Korhah, "How did you manage to reach such long life?" R. Joshua: "Do you begrudge me the length of my life?" Rabbi: "My inquiry is concerned with Torah, [whose precepts for long life] it is necessary for me to learn." R. Joshua: "In my life I have never gazed at the countenance of a wicked man."[8]

177. R. Dostai son of R. Mattan said: It is permitted to contend with the wicked in this world, as is said, "They that forsake the Torah praise the wicked; but such as keep the Torah contend with them" (Prov. 28:4). Should someone whisper to you, "Contend not with evildoers, neither be thou envious of them that work unrighteousness" (Ps. 37:1), say to him, "One who is afraid [of the secular authorities] speaks in such a way. As for the verse in the psalm, it is to be read, 'Strive not with evildoers' by trying to be like evildoers, and 'neither be thou envious of them that work unrighteousness' by trying to be like those who work unrighteousness."

But R. Issac said: If you see a wicked man upon whom the hour smiles, do not contend with him.[9]

178. R. Samuel bar Nahman said: Accursed be the wicked, who never perform an act of unmixed kindness.[10]

179. Accursed be the wicked, for even when they do a kindness, their intention is evil.[11]

180. All the favors of the wicked turn out to be bad for the righteous.[12]

181. The wicked's ease ends in calamity.[13]

182. "And Balak saw" (Num. 22:2). It would have been better for the wicked if they were blind, for their eyes bring a curse to the world. Of the generation of the flood, it is written, "The sons of God saw" (Gen. 6:2).[14] It is also written, "And Ham the father of Canaan, saw" (Gen. 9:22); "The princess of Pharaoh saw her" (Gen. 12:15); and, "Shechem the son of Hamor . . . saw her" (Gen. 34:2). And so, too, "And Balak saw."[15]

183. Rava said: Every man has most concern for his own self, hence no man will declare himself wicked.[16]

184. "As they went out before the vanguard, they said: 'Give thanks unto the Lord, for His mercy endureth forever' " (2 Chron. 20:21). R. Jonathan said: Why are the words "for He is good" omitted from this thanksgiving?

---

1. Tanhuma B, Va-yikra, §17.
2. MTeh 2:2.
3. JV: "that have rebelled." But the Hebrew poshe'im is in the present tense.
4. B. Er 19a.
5. Avot 1:7.
6. JV: "instead of Abel; for Cain slew him." But the commentator regards the statement that Cain had slain Abel is unnecessary. Hence, from this verse he infers that the man Lamech said he slew (Gen. 4:23) was Cain. See above, part 1, chap 2, §106.
7. Gen. R. 23:5.
8. B. Meg 28a.
9. B. Ber 7b.
10. Gen. R. 89:7.
11. Tanhuma, Mi-ketz, §5.
12. B. Yev 103a–b.
13. B. Yoma 86b.
14. After which, they sinned.
15. Num. R. 20:2; Tanhuma, Balak, §2.
16. Hence, he may not testify for or against himself. B. Sanh 9b.

Because the Holy One does not rejoice at the downfall of the wicked.

R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: What is implied in the verse "And one [angel] approached not another all night" (Exod. 14:20)? In that instant the ministering angels wished to utter song before the Holy One, but He rebuked them, saying, "The works of My hands are drowning in the sea, and you would utter song in My presence!"[1]

185. One is forbidden to pray that the wicked be removed from the world.[2] For had the Holy One removed Terah from the world when he worshiped idols, Abraham would not have come into being.

186. Do not raise a vicious dog's pup, even if it is docile. But if it is vicious, all the less so.[3]

187. Misdeed is [usually] ascribed to a [known] misdoer.[4]

188. R. Simeon said: The Egyptians would have drowned Israel in the sea, and the Edomites would have confronted Israel with the sword, yet Scripture prohibited intermarriage with them for only three generations. But for the Moabites, who took counsel to cause Israel to sin, Scripture prohibited intermarriage with them forever. Hence you learn that he who causes a person to sin is more cruel to him than he who slays him, for he who slays him takes him out of only this world, while he who causes him to sin takes him out of both this world and the world-to-come.[5]

189. "Ye shall burn their groves with fire" (Deut. 12:3). If the Torah decrees with regard to trees, which neither eat, nor drink, nor smell: "Destroy, burn, exterminate," because men stumbled on their account, how much more and more are you to destroy him who leads his fellow astray from the paths of life to the paths of death.

"And ye shall break down their altars" (Deut. 12:13). In what way did wood and stones sin? However, because men stumbled on their account, Scripture says, "Break them down." The matter may be argued a fortiori: if the Torah says of wood and stone, which have neither guilt nor merit, neither good nor evil, yet, because man has stumbled on their account: "Break them down," how much more and more does this apply to a man who causes his fellow to sin and turns him from the path of life to the path of death.[6]

190. "Their inward thought is, that within their houses they shall continue forever, and their dwelling places to all generations; they call their lands after their own names" (Ps. 49:12). R. Yudan said: Why do the wicked think that "within their houses they shall continue forever"? Because "they call their lands after their own names," that is, Tiberias after Tiberius's name, Alexandria after Alexander's name, and Antioch after Antiochus's name.

R. Phinehas construed the verse "Kirbam ('within') are their houses forever" to mean that tomorrow their houses will become their graves (kivram).[7]

191. R. Joshua used to say: A foolish pietist, a cunning rogue, a hypocritical woman, and the wounds of the Pharisees—these wreck the world.

What is a foolish pietist? One who sees a child struggling in the river and says, "As soon as I remove my tefillin, I will save him," and while he is removing his tefillin, the child gives up the ghost. Or he sees a woman drowning in the river and says, "It is not proper for me to look at her as I save her." Or he sees the first ripe fig and says, "I will give it to the first person I meet."[8]

Who is a cunning rogue? R. Yohanan said: He who ingratiatingly tells[9] his case to the judge before the other party to the suit has arrived. R. Abbahu said: He who gives a poor man a denar to bring the poor man's possessions to the total of two hundred zuz.[10] For we have been taught: The poor man who has two hundred zuz may not take the gleanings, the forgotten sheaves, the produce from the corner of the field, and the poor man's tithe. R. Joseph bar Hama said in the name of R. Sheshet: He who [by the practice of deception] induces others to follow in his ways. R. Zerika said in the name of R. Huna: He who is lenient with himself and strict with others.

What is a hypocritical woman? Our masters taught: A maiden given to prayer and a gadabout widow—these wreck the world. Other masters added: A maiden given to fasting.

"The wounds of the Pharisees." Our masters taught: There are seven kinds of Pharisees: The shikhmi[11] Pharisee, the nikpi[12] Pharisee, the kizzai[13] Pharisee, the medokhi[14] Pharisee, the "May-I-know-my-guilt-and-I-will-make-it-up" Pharisee, the Pharisee vaunting his love of God, and the Pharisee vaunting his fear of God.

King Yannai said to his wife: Fear not the Pharisees, nor those who are not Pharisees, but only the hypocrites who make themselves resemble Pharisees, for though their works are like those of Zimri, they demand a reward as though they were Phinehas.[15]

---

1. B. Sanh 39b.
2. MhG, Va-yera. The translator could not locate this rule in MhG. It is found in Zohar, Gen. 105a.
3. Lev. R. 19:6.
4. B. BB 109b.
5. Sif Deut., §252.
6. B. Sanh 55a; Sem 8:16.
7. Gen. R. 23:1.
8. Abstaining from the joy of eating it himself.
9. Literally, "feeds his words."
10. The rogue prevents the poor man from taking any part of the rogue's crop, thus keeping it all for himself. A zuz is another name for a denar.
11. Shikhmi, the adjectival form of shekhem ("shoulder"), may mean the Pharisee who ostentatiously carries on his shoulder the good works he performs.
12. May mean: "Excuse me [while I perform a precept]."
13. He calculates his good deeds to counterbalance his evil ones.
14. From medokhah ("mortar")—he is given to bowing and scraping.
15. On Zimri and Phinehas, see Num. 25:1–15, and on the entire passage, see the excellent presentation in ARNB, trans. Saldarini, 45. B. Sot 20a–22b; P. Sot 3:4, 19a and 5:7, 20c.

192. R. Isaac said: What is meant by the verse "But to the wicked God saith: 'What hast thou to do to declare My statutes?' " (Ps. 50:16)? The Holy One said to the wicked Doeg: How dare you declare My statutes? When you come to the section dealing with murderers or the section dealing with slanderers, what can you say in expounding them? "That shouldst take My covenant in thy mouth?" (ibid.). R. Ammi said: Doeg's learning in Torah was [external]—from the lips outward.[1]

193. One should expose hypocrites in order to prevent profanation of the Name.[2]

Repentance

194. R. Abbahu bar Ze'era said: Great is repentance, for it preceded the creation of the world, as is said, "Before the mountains were brought forth . . . Thou turnest men to contrition" (Ps. 90:2–3).[3]

195. "Good and upright is the Lord, because He doth show sinners the way" (Ps. 25:8). He shows [them] the way of repentance.

When Wisdom is asked, "The sinner—what is to be his punishment?" Wisdom answers, "Evil shall pursue sinners" (Prov. 13:21). When Prophecy is asked, "The sinner—what is to be his punishment?" Prophecy replies, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18:4). When Torah is asked, "The sinner—what is to be his punishment?" Torah replies, "Let him bring a guilt offering and his sin will be expiated for him." When the Holy One is asked, "The sinner—what is to be his punishment?" the Holy One replies, "Let him vow penitence, and his sin will be expiated for him."

With regard to this, the psalm says, "Because He doth show sinners the way." He shows sinners the way to resolve on penitence.[4]

196. In the neighborhood of R. Meir there lived hooligans, who annoyed him so much that he prayed for them to die. His wife Beruriah said to him: Why do you suppose [your prayer should be heard]? Is it because of the verse "Let the sinners be consumed" (Ps. 104:35)? But in fact, not "sinners" is written, but "sins." Moreover, look at the end of the verse: "And let the wicked be no more," which implies that once sins cease, the wicked will be no more. Rather, beseech mercy for them, that they may turn in penitence, so they will be wicked no more. He besought mercy for them, and they turned in penitence.[5]

197. In the neighborhood of R. Zera there lived brigands, whom he befriended in the hope that they might repent. But the sages were annoyed. When R. Zera died, the brigands said: Until now we had that Scorch-thighed Shorty[6] beseech mercy for us. Who will do it for us now? Thus were they led to thinking about the kind of people they were, until they resolved to repent.[7]

198. When R. Eliezer said, "Repent, even if only one day before your death," his disciples asked him, "Does any man know what day he will die?" R. Eliezer: "Then all the more reason that he repent today. For should he die tomorrow, his entire life will have been spent in repentance. In his wisdom, Solomon also intimated [the need to repent] when he said, "Let thy garments be always white; and let not thy head lack ointment" (Eccles. 9:8).

Regarding this, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai said: The matter may be illustrated by the parable of a king who invited his servants to a banquet without designating the precise time. The wise ones among them adorned themselves and sat at the entrance to the palace, for they said, "Is anything lacking in a royal palace?" The foolish went to their work, saying, "Can there be a banquet without preliminary preparation?" Suddenly the king called for his servants: the wise entered his presence adorned, while the foolish entered his presence wearing their soiled [working clothes]. The king rejoiced in welcoming the wise but was angry with the foolish. "Let those who adorned themselves for the banquet," he ordered, "sit, eat, and drink. But let those who did not adorn themselves for the banquet remain standing and watch."

R. Meir's son-in-law said in R. Meir's name: The foolish might have said, "If only it had been done that way, for then we would have appeared to be attendants." In fact, however, both the wise and the foolish were seated, but the wise ate while the foolish stayed hungry; the wise drank while the foolish stayed thirsty. For it is said, "Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, My servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry; behold, My servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty; behold, My servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed; behold, My servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart" (Isa. 65:13–14).[8]

199. R. Jacob said: This world is like a vestibule before the world-to-come. Fix yourself up in the vestibule, so that you may enter the banqueting hall.

He used to say: Better one hour spent in repentance and good deeds in this world than the whole life in the world-to-come; and better one hour of bliss in the world-to-come than the whole life in this world.[9]

200. "A twisted thing cannot be made straight, a lack cannot be made good" (Eccles. 1:15). In this world, he who is twisted can be made straight, and he who lacks something can have it made good. But in the time-to-come, he who is twisted cannot be made straight, and he who

---

1. B. Sanh 106b; Yalkut, Ps., §761.
2. B. Yoma 86b.
3. MTeh 90:12; Gen. R. 1:4.
4. P. Mak 2:6, 31d; Yalkut, Ps., §702.
5. B. Ber 10a.
6. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §504.
7. B. Sanh 37a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. B. Shab 153a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. Avot 4:16.

lacks something cannot have it made good. There were two wicked men who were friendly with each other in this world. One of the two was beforehand, in that he repented just before he died, but the other did not repent. Eventually the one finds himself standing in a company of righteous men, while the other stands in a company of wicked men. At the sight of his friend, the latter will exclaim, "Woe is me! Is there perhaps some partiality in divine judgment? He and I stole together, he and I robbed together, and together we did all sorts of evil things in the world. Yet here he stands in the company of the righteous, while I am with the company of the wicked!" He will be told bluntly, "You are the biggest fool in the world! Don't you know that your friend vowed penitence?" At that, he cries out, "Allow me, and I too will go and vow penitence." But he is told, "Alas for you, world's fool that you are! Don't you know that this world is like the Sabbath, and the world from which you came is like a Sabbath eve? If a man does not make preparations on Sabbath eve, what will he eat on the Sabbath? This world is like the sea, and the world from which you came is like dry land. If a man does not make preparations for himself while he is on dry land, what will he eat when at sea? This world is like a wilderness, and the world from which you came is like inhabited land. If a man does not make preparations for himself from what is on inhabited land, what will he eat in the wilderness? This world is like the rainy season, and the world from which you came is like the dry season. If a man does not plow and sow, harvest and vintage during the dry season, what will he eat during the rainy season? At that, he gnashes his teeth and is ready to eat himself alive.[1]

201. "A dog [a scoundrel] may thrive, so that he will be better off than a lion [a noble man] who [because he has been brought low] may, so to speak, die." (Eccles. 9:4).[2] In this world, he who is a dog may become a lion, and a lion may become a dog. But in the time-to-come, he who is a dog cannot become a lion, and he who is a lion cannot become a dog.[3]

202. "When a wicked man dieth, his hope shall perish" (Prov. 11:7). As long as a man lives, the Holy One expects him to repent. But once he is dead, the hope that he will repent is gone. The matter may be illustrated by the parable of a band of robbers confined in a prison. What did they do? They dug an opening and escaped. One alone remained behind—he did not escape. When the warden came, he began beating the prisoner with a stick, saying to him, "Ill-starred and hapless wretch! There was an opening before you, and you did not escape!" So, too, in the time-to-come, the Holy One will say to the wicked, "Repentance was before you, and you did not repent!"[4]

203. Two things appear to be near you and yet are far from you, appear to be far from you and yet are near you. Repentance appears to be near you but is far from you,[5] appears to be far from you but is near you.[6] Death is near you but it can be far from you,[7] appears to be far from you but is near you.[8]

204. Hillel used to say: If I am not for myself, who will be for me? But if I care only for myself, what am I? If not now, when?[9]

205. According to R. Isaac, the Holy One told Jeremiah: Go, say to Israel, "Vow repentance." When Jeremiah went and exhorted them, they replied, "Our master, how shall we vow repentance? With what countenance may we come into the presence of Him who is everywhere? Have we not provoked Him? Have we not vexed Him? Those mountains and hills where we sacrificed to idols—are they not still standing?" When Jeremiah came into the Holy One's presence and reported Israel's reply, God said to him, "Go tell them this: If you come to Me [in repentance], will you not be coming to your Father in heaven?"[10]

206. "Open to Me, My sister" (Song 5:2). According to R. Yose, the Holy One said to Israel: My children, open to Me in penitence an opening as small as the eye of a needle, and I shall make an opening in Me for you so wide that through it wagons and coaches could enter.[11]

207. R. Phinehas the Priest bar Hama said: The Holy One does not wish to condemn any creature: "For it is not My desire that anyone shall die, saith the Lord God. Repent, therefore, and live" (Ezek. 18:32); "Thou art not a God who desires to declare guilt" (Ps. 5:5); and, "As I live—saith the Lord God—it is not My desire that the wicked shall die" (Ezek. 33:11). What does He desire? To vindicate His creatures: "The Lord desires His [servant's] vindication" (Isa. 42:21). You can see this for yourself. When creatures sin and provoke Him, and He is provoked at them, what does the Holy One do? He goes around and seeks an advocate who will plead for them, and He Himself provides for the advocate a line [of argument]. Thus, in the days of Jeremiah, you find that He said, "Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that doeth justly, that seeketh truth, and I will pardon her" (Jer. 5:1). So, too, when the Sodomites sinned, He revealed the matter to Abraham so that he would plead for them, as intimated in the verse "Shall I hide from Abraham," etc. (Gen. 18:17). Indeed, Abraham at once began to plead in their behalf: "And Abraham drew near, and said: 'Wilt

---

1. Eccles. R. 1:15, §1; Ruth R. 3:3; Midrash Prov. 6 (ed. Buber, p. 55). Yalkut, Eccles., §967.
2. A bold paraphrase suggested by Leon Nemoy. JV: "a living dog is better than a dead lion."
3. Yalkut, Eccles., §989.
4. Eccles. R. 7:15, §1; Yalkut, Job, §906.
5. Because it is so difficult.
6. Because it is possible to repent.
7. Good deeds may avert it.
8. Wicked deeds may bring it near. Eccles. R. 8:16, §1.
9. Avot 1:14.
10. PRK 24:16.
11. Song R. 5:2, §2; Yalkut, Song, §988.

Thou sweep away the innocent with the guilty?' " (Gen. 18:23).[1]

208. R. Simeon ben Lakish said: What is meant by "If a man wishes to join scorners, he is allowed to; but if a man wishes to join the humble, he will be given grace in their eyes" (Prov. 3:34)?[2] If a man comes to defile himself, doors should be opened for him; but if he comes to purify himself, he should be helped. A sage in the school of R. Ishmael explained the matter by the parable of a man who was selling naphtha and balsam. If [a purchaser] comes to measure out naphtha, [the shopkeeper] says, "Measure it out for yourself." But to one who would measure out balsam, he says, "Wait for me to measure it out together with you, so that both of us may become perfumed by it."[3]

209. "Cain went out from the presence of the Lord" (Gen. 4:16). R. Huna, citing R. Hanina bar Isaac, said: Cain went forth glad at heart. As he went out, Adam met him and asked, "What sentence was given you?" Cain replied, "I vowed repentance and was granted clemency." Hearing this, Adam proceeded to strike himself in the face in self-reproach, saying: "So, repentance has all this power, and I knew it not!" Then and there Adam composed "a psalm, a song for the Sabbath day" (Ps. 92:1).[4]

210. "This shall be written for the generation to come" (Ps. 102:19). From the verse's end, it follows that the Holy One receives the penitent. For, in going on to say, "A people that shall be created shall praise the Lord," it clearly speaks of the penitent to whom God gives a new life—creates anew.[5]

211. "The stranger need not lodge outside" (Job 31:32). The Holy One declares no creature unfit—He receives all. The gates [of repentance] are always open, and he who wishes to enter may enter.[6]

212. R. Helbo asked R. Samuel bar Nahman: Since I have heard of you as a master of Aggadah, [tell me] what is meant by the verse "Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud so that no prayer can pass through" (Lam. 3:44). R. Samuel answered: Prayer is likened to an immersion pool, but repentance is likened to the sea. Just as an immersion pool is at times open and at other times locked, so the gates of prayer are at times open and at other times locked. But the sea is always open, even as the gates of repentance are always open.[7]

213. "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to Thy loving-kindness" (Ps. 51:3). With whom may David be compared? With a man who had a wound on his hand and came to a physician. The physician said, "You cannot be treated. The wound is large, but the money you have is little." The man said, "I beg of you, take all the money that I have here, and as for the rest, let it come from you. Have mercy upon me, have compassion upon me." So, too, David said to the Holy One, "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to Thy loving-kindness." You are compassionate, so "according to the multitude of Thy compassions blot out my transgressions" (ibid.): You have already shown me much mercy. David also said, "Make passing great Thy mercies, O Thou that savest . . . them that take refuge in Thee" (Ps. 17:7): healing comes from You. Because the wound is large, lay on a large poultice for me, as is said, "Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity" (Ps. 51:4).[8]

214. R. Levi said: The power of repentance is so great that it soars up all the way to the throne of glory, as is said, "Return, O Israel, all the way to the Lord thy God" (Hos. 14:2).[9]

215. "Return, O Israel, all the way to the Lord thy God." Our holy rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] expounded the verse: So great is the power of a return in penitence that, as soon as a man meditates in his heart to vow penitence, it soars up at once [straight to God]. It soars up to a height not of ten mil, nor of twenty, nor of a hundred, but to a height that would require a journey of five hundred years to accomplish—soaring not merely to the first heaven but all the way to the seventh heaven, soaring ever upward beyond the seventh heaven until it stands before the throne of glory itself. Such was Hosea's thought when he said, "Return, O Israel, all the way to the Lord thy God."[10]

216. R. Simeon ben Lakish said in the name of R. Judah [II] the Patriarch: What is meant by the verse "And they had the hands (yede) of a man under their wings" (Ezek. 1:8)? Actually yado, "His hand," is written, meaning the hand of the Holy One, which is spread out under the wings of the celestial creatures in order to receive penitents [and shield them] from the measure of justice.[11]

217. R. Yohanan said: He who declares that Manasseh has no share in the world-to-come weakens the hand of penitent sinners.

R. Yohanan went on to say in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: What is meant by "Manasseh . . . prayed unto Him, and He was entreated ('tr) of him" (2 Chron. 33:13)? That God let Himself be dug into (htr).[12] The verse implies that, to prevent inteference by the measure of justice, the

---

1. Tanhuma, Va-yera, §8.
2. JV: "If it concerneth the scorners, He scorneth them, but unto the humble He giveth grace."
3. B. Yoma 38b–39a.
4. The second verse reads: "It is a good thing to confess to the Lord." Lev. R. 10:5.
5. Lev. R. 30:3.
6. Exod. R. 19:4.
7. Lam. R. 3:43, §9.
8. MTeh 51:1; Yalkut Ps., §764.
9. B. Yoma 86a.
10. PR 44:9.
11. B. Pes 119a.
12. Some Hebrew dialects, under the influence of Aramaic, made no distinction between the gutturals het and ayin.

Holy One contrived a kind of opening [mahteret] in the firmament to accept Manasseh in his penitence.[1]

218. R. Hama son of R. Hanina said: Great is penitence, for it brings healing to the world, as is said, "I will heal their affliction, generously will I take them back in love" (Hos. 14:5).[2]

219. R. Yohanan said: Great is penitence, for it tears up the decree issued against a man.[3]

220. The repentance of confirmed sinners delays punishment, even if the decree of punishment for them had already been sealed.[4]

221. R. Jonathan said: Great is penitence, for it brings redemption, as is said: "A redeemer will come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob" (Isa. 59:20).[5]

222. R. Judah said: If Israel do not vow penitence, they will not be redeemed. Yet Israel vow penitence only out of distress and out of wandering hither and yon, and because they have no livelihood. However, they will not vow spontaneous penitence until Elijah, ever remembered on good occasions, comes, as is said, "Behold, I will send you Elijah the Prophet . . . and he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers" (Mal. 3:23–24).[6]

223. Resh Lakish said: Great is penitence, because it reduces one's deliberate sins to mere errors.

But did not Resh Lakish say at another time: Great is penitence, because it transforms one's deliberate sins into merits?

The latter statement refers to penitence out of love; the former, to penitence out of fear.

R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: Great is penitence, because it prolongs one's days and years, as is said, "And when the wicked turneth from his wickedness . . . he shall live thereby" (Ezek. 33:19).

R. Isaac said: In the west [the Land of Israel], the sages said in the name of Rabbah bar Mari: Come and see that the conduct of flesh and blood is not at all like the conduct of the Holy One. The conduct of flesh and blood: when a man angers his friend with words, it is questionable whether or not the friend will agree to be pacified by him. And even if you suppose the friend is willing to be pacified, it is questionable whether he will be pacified by mere words or will have to be pacified by compensation. But with the Holy One, there is no question. When a man commits a sin in secret, He is pacified with mere words, as is said, "Take with you words, and return unto the Lord" (Hos. 14:3). More: He even accounts it to him as a good deed, as is said, "And accept that which is good" (Hos. 14:3). Still more: Scripture accounts it for him as though he had offered up bullocks, as is said, "So will we render bullocks with offerings of our lips" (ibid.). Lest you suppose that Scripture refers here to obligatory bullocks, it is said, "I will love the voluntary offerings [of bullocks]" (Hos. 14:5).[7]

We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: Great is penitence, for on account of one individual who vows penitence, pardon is given to him as well as to the entire world, to all of it, as is said, "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely, when mine anger is turned away from him" (Hos. 14:5). Hosea says not, "From them," but, "From him."

How is one to tell whether a penitent is genuine? R. Judah said: When the penitent has the opportunity to commit the same sin once and once again, and he refrains from committing it.[8]

224. We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: It would seem to be impossible to say, "He will clear the guilty" (Exod. 34:7), when Scripture is about to say, "He will not clear the guilty" (ibid.). Nor would it seem to be possible to say, "He will not clear the guilty," having just said, "He will clear the guilty." How is the inconsistency explained? That He clears the guilty who repent, but does not clear the guilty who do not repent.

R. Matia ben Heresh asked R. Eleazar ben Azariah in Rome: Have you heard about the four categories of those who atone for sin that R. Ishmael has set forth? R. Eleazar answered: They are actually three,[9] and in each category penitence is required. When a man transgresses a positive commandment and vows penitence, forgiveness is granted him even before he stirs from the place where he is, as is said, "Return, ye backsliding children, I will heal your backslidings" (Jer. 3:22). If he has transgressed a negative commandment and vowed penitence, his penitence suspends punishment and the Day of Atonement procures atonement, as is said, "For on this day shall atonement be made for you . . . from all your sins" (Lev. 16:30). If he has committed [a sin punishable by] excision[10] or by any of the deaths decreed by the High Court and has vowed penitence, his penitence and the Day of Atonement suspend punishment, and his suffering completes the atonement, as is said, "Then I will punish their transgression with the rod, their iniquity with plagues" (Ps. 89:33). But if the man was guilty of profanation of the Name, penitence has no power to suspend punishment, nor can the Day of Atonement procure atonement, nor will suffering complete it; but all of them together suspend the punishment, and only death completes atonement, as is said, "And the Lord of hosts revealed Himself in my ears:

---

1. B. Sanh 103a.
2. B. Yoma 86a.
3. B. RH 17b.
4. B. Yoma 86b.
5. Ibid. and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. PRE 43.
7. JV: "I will love them freely."
8. B. Yoma 86b and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Yalkut, Hos., §530.
9. Since, as will be stated, no atonement for the profanation of God's Name is possible while the offender is alive. So Moses ibn Haviv, as cited by Adin Steinsaltz in his edition of Yoma, ad loc.
10. Shortening the years of his life.

surely this iniquity shall not be expiated by you till ye die" (Isa. 22:14).[1]

225. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: All the prophets prophesied only concerning penitences, but as for the reward of the wholly righteous, "Eye hath not seen, O God, beside Thee" (Isa. 64:3).

But R. Abbahu differed. In the place where the penitents stand, even the wholly righteous are not permitted to stand, for Scripture promises, "Peace, peace to him that was far and to him that is near" (Isa. 57:19)—first to him who had been far, and then to him who has been near all along.[2]

226. It is told of R. Eliezer ben Dordia that there was not one courtesan in the world whom he had not patronized. Once, on hearing that there was a certain courtesan in one of the cities across the sea who demanded a purse of denars as her fee, he took such a purse and journeyed forth, crossing seven rivers for her sake. During the foreplay of the sexual act, she broke wind. She said, "As this wind will not return to its place, so Eliezer ben Dordia will never be received in penitence." So he went and dwelled among mountains and hills, imploring them: O you mountains and hills, beseech [God's] mercy for me! They replied: Before beseeching mercy for you, we have to beseech it for ourselves, since it is said, "The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed!" (Isa. 54:10). He went on to implore: Heaven and earth, beseech mercy for me! They, too, replied: Before beseeching mercy for you, we have to beseech it for ourselves, since it is said, "For the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment" (Isa. 51:6). He then went on: Sun and moon, beseech mercy for me! But they also replied: Before beseeching mercy for you, we have to beseech it for ourselves, since it is said, "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed" (Isa. 24:23). He went on: Stars and planets, beseech mercy for me. They replied: Before beseeching mercy for you, we have to beseech it for ourselves, since it is said, "And all the hosts of heaven shall moulder away" (Isa. 34:4). So he concluded: The issue of the matter must depend on me alone! He lowered his head between his knees and wept aloud until his soul departed. A divine voice went forth to announce: "Rabbi Eliezer ben Dordia is destined for life in the world-to-come!"

[On hearing this], Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] wept and said: One person may acquire eternal life only after many years, while another in one hour. He went on to say: Not only are penitents accorded acceptance, but they are even granted the title Rabbi.[3]

227. Resh Lakish said: A single self-reproach in a man's heart is better than a hundred lashes, as is said, "A rebuke in a man of understanding goes deeper than a hundred lashes on a fool" (Prov. 17:10).[4]

228. Bar Hinena the Elder said in the name of Rav: When a man commits a transgression and then is ashamed of it, all his iniquities are forgiven him.[5]

229. R. Adda bar Ahavah said: A man who confesses after committing a transgression but does not change his ways is like one who persists in holding a dead reptile in his hand—even if he immerses himself in all the waters of the world, his immersion will not cleanse him. But once he throws the reptile away and then immerses himself in no more than forty seah of water, the immersion is effective in cleansing him, as is said, "Whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall obtain mercy" (Prov. 28:13), and, "Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens" (Lam. 3:41).[6]

230. He who says, "I will sin and then repent, I will sin and then repent," will be given no opportunity to vow penitence.[7]

231. "He openeth their ear for instruction. . . . But they that are godless . . . cry not for help when He bindeth them" (Job 36:10 and 36:13). R. Phinehas the Priest son of R. Hama said: After the Holy One has waited in vain for the godless to vow penitence, then even if in the end they wish to repent, He distracts their hearts so that they cannot vow penitence.[8]

232. Our masters taught: If a man misappropriates a beam and builds it into a palace, he must demolish the palace and return the beam to its rightful owner. So says the school of Shammai. But the school of Hillel says: Because we wish to encourage penitents, the owner may claim no more than the value of the beam.[9]

233. The story of a man who wished to restore an object he had misappropriated. His wife said to him, "You numbskull, if you begin restoring things, even the girdle you are wearing is not yours." So he refrained and did not return a thing.

It was then that the sages declared: If robbers or usurers offer to return the things they misappropriated, these items are not to be accepted; and he who does accept them will not have the approval of the sages.[10]

234. Our masters taught: The left hand may always repulse, but the right hand should bring near. Not like Elisha, who pushed away Gehazi with both hands, or like R. Joshua ben Perahiah, who with both hands[11] repulsed his disciple [Jesus].

---

1. B. Yoma 86a.
2. B. Ber 34b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. B. AZ 17a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. B. Ber 7a.
5. B. Ber 12b.
6. B. Ta 16a.
7. His so-called repentance not being genuine. B. Yoma 85b.
8. Exod. R. 11:1.
9. B. Git 55a.
10. According to the law, a robber must return, with interest, the very object he stole, even if in the meantime he made such use of it that its return would cause him great loss. Hence the sages' ordinance. B. BK 94b; Tanhuma, Noah, §4.
11. 2 Kings 5:20ff.

What was the incident with R. Joshua ben Perahiah? When King Yannai rose up against the sages to put them to death, Simeon ben Shetah was hidden by his sister, and R. Joshua ben Perahiah [and Jesus] fled to Alexandria of Egypt. When peace came,[1] Simeon ben Shetah wrote to R. Joshua: "From me, Jerusalem the holy city, to you, my sister Alexandria of Egypt: My husband dwells in your midst, and I abide desolate." R. Joshua concluded: It is clear from this message that peace has been made. Upon his return [together with his disciple Jesus], he happened to put up at a certain inn, where great honor was accorded him. So he sat down and spoke in praise of the woman who kept the inn. But when he said, "What a gracious hostess,"[2] his disciple observed, "Master, her eyes are bleary." R. Joshua: "You wicked man! So it is with such matters that you occupy yourself!" At that, he had four hundred rams' horns brought and [had them sounded to] put him under the ban. Though Jesus came every day before R. Joshua [pleading to be readmitted], R. Joshua paid no attention to him. One day, while R. Joshua ben Perahiah was reciting the Shema, Jesus appeared before him. R. Joshua, intending to readmit him, gestured with his hand, but Jesus took the gesture to be a final repulse. So he went out and led a depraved life.

When R. Joshua implored him, "Repent," Jesus replied, "I have a tradition from you: he who sins and causes others to sin is not given the opportunity to repent."[3]

235. When a man causes many to earn merit, no sin will come through him; when a man causes many to sin, the opportunity to repent will not be given him. "When a man causes many to earn merit, no sin will come through him"—so that he will not have to be in Gehenna while his disciples are in the Garden of Eden. "When a man causes many to sin, the opportunity to repent will not be given him"—so that he will not manage to get to the Garden of Eden while his disciples are in Gehenna.[4]

Reward and Punishment

236. Antigonus of Sokho[5] received [the Oral Torah] from Simeon the Righteous. He used to say: Be not like servants who serve their master in the hope of receiving a gratuity. Be like servants who serve their master with no expectation of receiving a gratuity.

Antigonus of Sokho had two disciples, who repeated his teaching to their disciples, and so did the disciples to their disciples. But then [two of the latter] disciples rose up and speculated on the implications of what they had been taught, asking, "Why did our masters say such a thing? Is it right for a laborer to toil all day and not [expect to] receive his reward in the evening? Had our forebears been certain that there is another world and that there is to be the resurrection of the dead, they would surely not have taught such a thing!" So they rose up and turned away from the Torah. From these two disciples sprang two sects, the Sadducees and the Boethusians. The Sadducees were named after Zadok and the Boethusians after Boethus. All their lives, both sects used vessels of silver and gold—not because they were personally arrogant but because, as they explained, "it is a [silly] tradition of the Pharisees to subject themselves to austerity in this world,[6] for in the world-to-come they will possess nothing at all."[7]

237. R. Akiva said: Everything is foreseen [by God], but the right [to choose] is given [to man]. The world is judged by [divine] goodness, yet all is in accord with the number of a man's [good] deeds.[8]

He [also] used to say: Everything is given against a pledge, and a net is spread out over all the living.[9] The store is open, the [divine] Storekeeper extends credit, the account book lies open, a[n angel's] hand writes [therein], and whoever wishes to borrow may come and borrow. But the collectors go around regularly every day and exact payment from every man, whether he is aware or not that he is being punished. And the collectors have good authority to rely on, since the judgment is a true judgment, and all is prepared for the banquet.[10]

238. R. Eleazar ha-Kappar used to say: They who are born [are destined] to die, and they that are dead to be brought to life, and the living to be brought to judgment. Therefore men who should know, make known, and be fully aware that He is God, He is the Fashioner, He is the Creator, He is the Discerner, He is the Judge, He is the Witness, He is the Plaintiff, and He, blessed be He, will pass judgment. In His presence there is no guile, no forgetting, no respect of persons, no taking of bribes. For everything is His. And know that all is according to reckoning. Do not let your impulse to evil assure you that Sheol is a place of refuge for you: despite yourself you are formed; despite yourself you are born; despite yourself you live; despite yourself you will die; and despite yourself you are destined to give an account and reckoning before the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He.[11]

239. R. Eleazar said: Know before whom you toil, who is your Employer, and who will pay you the wages of your labor.

R. Tarfon said: The day is short, the task is great, the workmen are indolent; but the wages are high and the Master of the house is insistent.

He used to say: It is not your duty to complete the work [of Torah study], yet you are not at liberty to desist

---

1. At Yannai's death. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §48.
2. Aksania (Greek xenia) means both "inn" and "hostess of the inn."
3. B. Sot 47a; B. Sanh 107b.
4. B. Yoma 87a.
5. First half of third century B.C.E.
6. Cf. Josephus Antiquities 18.1.3: "The Pharisees live simply, and despise delicacies."
7. The two sects reputedly did not believe in the resurrection of the dead. Avot 1:3; ARN, 5.
8. Thus a man who gives a denar each to a thousand poor men is deemed more worthy than one who gives a thousand denars to one poor man.
9. No one can escape judgment.
10. The reward of the righteous is assured. Avot 3:15–16.
11. Avot 4:22.

from it. If you have studied much Torah, high wages will be paid you—your Employer may be trusted to pay you full wages for your labor. But you are to know that the giving of reward to the righteous will be in the time-to-come.[1]

240. Akavia ben Mahalalel said: Reflect upon three things, and you will not fall into the grip of sin. Know where you came from, where you are going, and before whom you shall have to give an account and reckoning. "Where you came from"—from a putrid drop [of semen]. "Where you are going"—to a place of dust, worm, and maggot. "And before whom you shall have to give an account and reckoning"—before the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He![2]

241. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: Consider three things, and you will not fall into sin. Know what is above you: a seeing eye, a hearing ear, and all your deeds recorded in a book.[3]

242. With ten [divine] utterances[4] was the world created. What does Scripture teach by this? Could not the world have been created with but one utterance? Yes, but Scripture intimates that God will impose [severe] penalties upon the wicked, who would destroy the world which was created with [no fewer than] ten utterances, and will bestow rich reward upon the righteous, who maintain the world which was created with ten utterances.[5]

243. Ben Azzai said: The reward for performing a precept is [an opportunity to perform] another precept, and the reward for committing a transgression is [a temptation to commit] another transgression.[6]

244. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: Be as careful with an easy precept as with a difficult one, for you cannot know the degree of reward for each precept. Reckon the loss [that may be incurred through observance] of a precept against the reward for it, and the gain that may be had through committing a transgression against the punishment sure to follow.[7]

245. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: What is meant by the verse "Wherefore do ha-moshelim ('they that speak in parables') say: Come ye to Heshbon" (Num. 21:27)? The word ha-moshelim means here: "they who rule[8] their impulse to evil." "Come ye to Heshbon" means: "Come and consider the account (heshbon) of the world—the loss incurred by the fulfillment of a precept against the reward secured by its observance, and the gain made by succumbing to sin against the punishment for it."[9]

246. R. Hiyya told the parable of a king who had an orchard, into which he brought workmen without revealing to them the wages for planting each of the several kinds of trees in the orchard. Had he revealed to them the reward for planting each kind of tree in the orchard, the workmen would have picked out the kind of tree for whose planting there was the greatest wage and would have planted it exclusively; as a result, the work of planting the orchard would have been neglected in one part and maintained in another part. Just so, [concluded R. Hiyya], the Holy One did not reveal to Israel the reward for heeding the individual precepts of Torah. Had He revealed it to them [Israel might have picked out the most rewarding precept and heeded only that one]. Then some of the precepts of Torah would have been maintained, while the others would have been neglected.[10]

247. R. Simeon ben Yohai taight: The Holy One has revealed the reward for heeding two precepts in the Torah: one of these precepts is the least onerous, and the other is the most onerous. The least onerous concerns letting the mother go when chancing on a bird's nest—with regard to it, Scripture promises "that thou mayest prolong thy days" (Deut. 22:7). The most onerous concerns honoring one's father and mother—with regard to it also, Scripture promises "that thy days may be long" (Deut. 5:16).

So the two precepts are alike in the reward received in this world for their observance.[11]

248. Ben He He said: According to the suffering is the reward.[12]

249. One man acquires his [place in the] world[-to-come] only after many years, while another does so in an instant.[13]

250. R. Joshua ben Levi said: What is implied in the verse "Which I command you this day to do them" (Deut. 7:11)? This day you are to do them—you may not postpone doing them to a morrow [when in the world-to-come it will be impossible to do them]. You are to do them this day and receive reward for them only on a morrow.[14]

251. In this world, there is no reward for any precept.

We have been taught that R. Jacob said: There is not a single precept in the Torah whose reward is specified immediately, where it is not intimated that that reward is

---

1. Avot 2:14–16.
2. Avot 3:1.
3. Avot 2:2.
4. In Gen. 1:3–29 and 2:18, the words "And God said" occur ten times.
5. Avot 5:1.
6. Avot 4:2.
7. Avot 2:1.
8. The homonym moshelim means both "speaking parables" and "ruling."
9. B. BB 78b.
10. Tanhuma, Ekev, §2.
11. Ibid.
12. Or, "According to the labor is the reward." Some commentators take Ben He He to have been a proselyte. They understand the word "He" to be made up of the letter he, the last letter in Sarah, and the letter alef, the first letter in Abraham—hence a spiritual son of Abraham and Sarah. Avot 5:23.
13. B. AZ 10b.
14. B. Er 22a; B. AZ 3a.

linked with resurrection of the dead. Thus, in connection with honoring one's parents, it is written, "That thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee" (Deut. 5:16). Again, in connection with letting the mother bird go from a nest one chances upon, it is written, "That it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days" (Deut. 22:7). Suppose a father said to his son, "Go up to the top of the tower and bring me down some young birds," and the son went up to the top of the tower, let the mother bird go, and took the young ones, but on his descent he fell down and was killed. Where is the son's length of days, and where is the son's doing well? Hence, "That thy days may be prolonged" must refer to the world that is wholly long, and "That it may go well with thee" must refer to the world that is wholly good.

But perhaps such a thing could not happen? R. Jacob saw such a thing happen.

R. Joseph said: Had Aher[1] interpreted this verse as R. Jacob, his daughter's son, did, he would not have sinned. What did he actually see? Some say: He saw just such a thing happen. Others say: He saw the tongue of Hutzpit the Interpreter lying on a dunghill and he exclaimed, "Shall the mouth that uttered pearls lick dust!" Then he went off and sinned—he did not realize that the words "That it may go well with thee" refer to the world that is wholly good, and the words "That thy days may be prolonged" refer to the world that is wholly long.[2]

252. "The blessing, if ye shall hearken . . . and the curse, if ye shall not hearken" (Deut. 11:27–28). A parable of an old man seated on a highway from which there branched two roads, [one full of thorns at the beginning but level at the end], and the other level at the beginning but full of thorns at the end. So he sat at the fork of the road and cautioned passersby, saying, "Even though the beginning of this road is full of thorns, follow it, for it will turn level in the end." Whoever sensibly heeded the old man and followed that road did get a bit weary at first, to be sure, but went on in peace and arrived in peace. Those who did not heed the old man set out on the other road and stumbled in the end. So it was with Moses, who explicitly said to Israel, "Behold the way of life and the way of death, the blessing and the curse. 'Therefore choose life, that thou mayest live, thou and thy seed' " (Deut. 30:19).[3]

253. He who took the trouble to prepare on the eve of Sabbath can eat on the Sabbath; but he who has not troubled himself to prepare on the eve of Sabbath—where is he to get food to eat on the Sabbath?[4]

254. R. Aibu said: There are three kinds of men. The first kind says, "Had I been created to do no more than behold the stars and the heavenly bodies, it would have been enough for me," as is said, "When I behold . . . the moon and the stars which Thou hast ordained" (Ps. 8:4). The second kind says, "All that Thou hast to give me, give it to me in the time-to-come." The third kind, made up of slothful laborers, says, "Give us now what is ours and also what was our fathers'."[5]

255. "Get thee up into the high mountain; . . . lift up thy voice with strength. . . . His reward is with him, and his recompense before him" (Isa. 40:9–10). R. Jeremiah son of R. Eleazar said: A divine voice will reverberate on the mountaintops, saying, "Whosoever has wrought with God, let him come and receive the reward due him." And the divine spirit will say, "Who hath given Me anything beforehand that I should repay him?" (Job 41:3). Who could sing out in praise of Me before I put breath in him? Who could perform circumcision in My name before I gave him a male child? Who could build a parapet at My request[6] before I gave him a roof? Who could make a mezuzah at My request before I gave him a house? Who could build a sukkah at My request before I gave him a space? Who could make a lulav cluster at My request before I gave him money? Who could make fringes at My request before I gave him a garment? Who could set aside the corners of the crop at My request before I gave him a field? Who could set aside heave offering for priests at My request before I gave him a threshing floor? Who could set aside the priests' share of the dough[7] at My request before I gave him dough? Who could set aside an offering at My request before I gave him an animal?[8]

256. Antoninus[9] said to Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], "The body and the soul can both free themselves from judgment. Thus, the body can plead, 'The soul has sinned—ever since the day it left me, look, I lie in the grave like a mute stone'; while the soul can plead, 'The body has sinned—ever since the day I departed from it, look, I fly about in the air like a bird.' " Rabbi Judah replied, "I will show you by a parable [that neither the body nor the soul can thus free itself]. A king of flesh and blood who owned a beautiful orchard, which yielded luscious first figs, appointed two watchmen—one lame and the other blind—over it. [One day] the lame watchman said to the blind one, 'I see some early figs in the orchard. Come and take me upon your shoulder, so that we can pick the figs and eat them.' The lame man got up on the blind man, and together they picked figs and ate them. After a while, the owner of the orchard came and inquired, 'Where are those early figs?' The blind man replied, 'Have I eyes to see with?' The lame man replied, 'Have I legs to walk with?' What did the king do? He had the lame man mount upon the shoulders of the blind one and judged them together, as though they were one. So will the Holy One bring the soul, toss it inside the body, and judge the two together, as is written, 'He shall call to the heavens

---

1. Aher ("the Other") is the name by which Elisha ben Avuyah, an apostate, is often referred to.
2. B. Kid 39a; Hul 142a.
3. Tanbuma, Re'eh, §3.
4. B. AZ 3a.
5. MTeh 8:6.
6. See Deut. 22:8.
7. Hallah. See Num. 15:20.
8. Lev. R. 27:2.
9. Antoninus has been identified as Marcus Aurelius.

from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people' [Ps. 50:4). 'He shall call to the heavens from above'—call for the soul; 'and to the earth, that He may judge His people'—call for the body."[1]

257. "God shall bring every work into the judgment concerning every hidden thing" (Eccles. 12:14). R. Levi cited the parable of a bird kept in a cage. Another bird came by, alighted over the caged one, and said, "How happy you must be that the food you require is provided for you!" The bird in the cage responded, "All you see is the feed. You don't see the bars of the cage."[2]

258. "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth. . . . But know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment" (Eccles. 11:9). R. Hiyya the Elder told the parable of a robber who, as he was fleeing from the examining magistrate, was told, "Don't run too far, so that you will not be exhausted [and will be able to stand on your feet] when you are dragged back here [for sentencing]."[3]

259. "The Rock, His work is perfect. . . . Just and right is He" (Deut. 32:4). The sages said: At the time of a man's departure to his eternal home, all his deeds are set out before him as he is told, "Such-and-such a thing you have done in such-and-such a place on such-and-such a day." And he responds, "Yes." He is then told, "Sign," and he signs, as is said, "It is signed by every man's hand" (Job 37:7). Furthermore, he accepts the verdict as just, saying, "You have judged me fairly."[4]

260. R. Abba Cohen bar Dala said: Woe unto us on the Day of Judgment. Woe unto us on the day of rebuke. Balaam, the wisest of the heathens, could not withstand his donkey's rebuke: "Was I ever wont to do so unto thee?" And he said, "Nay" (Num. 22:30). Joseph was the youngest of the tribe fathers, and yet his brothers could not withstand his rebuke, as is said, "And his brethren could not answer him; for they were affrighted at his presence" (Gen. 45:3). How much more by far will this be true when the Holy One comes to rebuke each man according to his deserts, when, according to Scripture God will say, "I will rebuke thee, and set the cause before thine eyes" (Ps. 50:21).[5]

261. When Hillel saw a skull floating on the water, he said to it: Because you drowned others, you were drowned, and in the end they who drowned you will also be drowned.[6]

262. We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: What is the proof that with the same measure a man measures out it will be measured out to him? The verse "In full measure (sa'sseah) . . . Thou dost contend with her" (Isa. 27:8). Sa'sseah is taken as a reduplicating form and read: seah for seah [that is, "measure for measure"]. How do we know that, [just as] small coins add up to a large sum, [so small sins add up to a large guilt]? From Scripture, which says, "Adding one to one, to find out the sum" (Eccles. 7:27).[7]

263. Samson followed [the lust in] his eyes: therefore the Philistines gouged his eyes. Absalom took pride in his hair; therefore he was left hanging by his hair.[8]

264. Our masters taught: The woman suspected of infidelity set her eyes on one who was not proper for her. What she had sought was not given her, and what she had possessed was taken away from her. Because he who sets his eyes on what is not his is not given what he seeks, and what he possesses is taken away from him.

We find this to be true also of the primeval serpent [in the Garden of Eden], which set its eyes on what was not proper for it: what it had sought was not given to it, and what it possessed was taken away from it. For the Holy One said: I declared; Let it be king over all cattle and beasts; but now "cursed art thou above all cattle and above every beast of the field" (Gen 3:14). I declared: Let it walk with an erect posture; but now "upon thy belly thou shalt go" (ibid.). I declared; Let its food be the same as that of man; but now "dust shalt thou eat" (Gen. 3:14). The serpent said: I will kill Adam and marry Eve; but now "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed" (Gen. 3:15).

We find this to be true also of Cain, Korah, Balaam, Doeg, Ahithophel, Gehazi, Absalom, Adonijah, Uzziah, and Haman, who set their eyes upon what was not proper for them; what they sought was not given to them, and what they possessed was taken away from them.[9]

265. R. Simeon ben Lakish began his discourse with the verse "And if a man lie not in wait, but God cause it to come to hand" (Exod. 21:13). [He went on]: This verse is to be considered in the light of what Scripture says elsewhere. "As saith the proverb of the ancients: Out of the wicked cometh forth wickedness" (1 Sam. 24:14). Of whom does the verse in Exodus speak? Of two men who had each committed murder, one unwittingly and the other deliberately, with no witnesses against the one or against the other. The Holy One has the two meet at an inn, where He has the one who had slain deliberately sit under a stepladder and the one who had slain unwittingly come down the stepladder and fall, killing the other. The murderer who had slain deliberately is thus put to death, and the murderer who had slain unwittingly goes into banishment [to a city of refuge].[10]

266. Ever since the Temple was destroyed, even though the Sanhedrin ceased, the four forms of capital punishment

---

1. B. Sanh 91a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. PRKM 24:14; Yalkut, Eccles., §989.
3. PRKM 24:14.
4. B. Ta 11a.
5. Gen. R. 93:6.
6. Avot 2:7.
7. B. Sot 8b.
8. B. Sot 9b.
9. B. Sot 9a–b.
10. B. Mak 10b.

have not ceased. He who would have been sentenced to death by stoning either falls from a roof or is attacked and killed by a wild beast. He who would have been sentenced to death by burning either falls into a conflagration or is stung by a snake. He who would have been sentenced to death by decapitation is either delivered to the government or attacked by brigands. And he who would have been sentenced to death by strangulation either drowns in a river or is suffocated by croup.[1]

267. The arrow maker is slain by his own arrow—paid back by the devisings of his own hands.[2]

268. R. Simeon bar Abba said: Though all [the Sanhedrin's] measures [of justice] have ceased, the [divine] rule of measure for measure has not ceased.[3]

269. We have been taught that R. Meir said: With the same measure a man measures out, it is measured out to him. R. Judah asked: But can we say of a man who metes out a handful [of charity] to a poor man in this world that the Holy One will mete out to him a handful of His bounty in the next?[4] Is it not said of the Holy One, "He meted out all of heaven with His span" (Isa. 40:12)? R. Meir replied: You do not agree with me? Consider then: which measure is greater? That of goodness [i.e., reward] or of punishment? You must admit that the measure of reward is greater than that of punishment. Now, with regard to the measure of punishment, it is written, "Their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched" (Isa. 66:24). But will not a man in this world who puts his finger into fire be immediately burned? However, just as the Holy One gives the wicked the strength to receive their punishment, so does He give the righteous the capacity to receive their reward.[5]

270. The measure of reward comes quicker than the measure of punishment.[6]

271. "According unto the greatness of Thy loving-kindness" (Num. 14:19). R. Hama bar Hanina said: The verse refers to God's measure of bounty, which is filled to overflowing.[7]

272. Bar Kappara said: The increment given by the Holy One exceeds the principal.[8]

273. R. Isaac said: A man should be judged only according to his deeds at the time of judgment, as is said, "God hath heard the voice of the lad according to what he was then" (Gen. 21:17).[9]

In this connection, R. Simon taught: The ministering angels leaped up to make accusations against Ishmael, saying to God, "Master of the universe, for a person who will one day bring death to Your children by pretending to relieve their thirst,[10] will You now raise up a well?" But the Holy One asked the ministering angels, "At this moment, what sort of person is Ishmael—righteous or wicked?" They answered, "Righteous." God said, "I do not judge a man except for what he is at the time I am judging him."[11]

274. R. Hamnuna said: The Holy One does not requite a man until his measure [of guilt] is full, as is said, "In the fullness of his sufficiency, he shall be in straits" (Job 20:22).[12]

275. Moses said, "He visits the iniquity of the fathers upon the children" (Exod. 34:7). But when Ezekiel came, he revoked it, saying, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18:4).[13]

276. The Holy One does not deal despotically with His creatures.[14]

277. R. Hanina taught: He who says that the Holy One is lawless in the execution of justice will have his life outlawed, for it is said, "The Rock, His work is perfect, for all His ways are just" (Deut. 32:4).[15]

278. R. Hisda said: The verse "O give thanks unto the Lord, for it is the bounty . . ." (Ps. 136:1) means, "Give thanks unto the Lord, who exacts a man's debt from the bounty given to him—an ox from a rich man, a lamb from a poor man, an egg from an orphan, a hen from a widow."[16]

279. Scripture speaks of God as "long in sufferings" (Exod. 34:6), not as "long in suffering," implying that He is willing to suffer the righteous as well as suffer the wicked.[17]

280. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: The Holy One does not deprive any creature of the reward due it, even if it is rewarded for no more than a becoming expression.[18]

281. "Therefore any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field, ye shall cast to the dogs" (Exod. 22:30). The verse implies that the Holy One does not deprive any creature of the reward due it. Thus, because Scripture says, "Not a dog shall snarl against any of the Israelites" (Exod. 11:7),

---

1. B. Ket 30a–b; B. Sanh 37b.
2. B. Pes 28a.
3. Gen. R. 9:11.
4. How is a man to cope with such abundance?
5. B. Sanh 100a–b.
6. B. Shab 97a.
7. Yalkut, Shelah, §744.
8. Gen. R. 61:4.
9. JV: "God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is."
10. See above, part 1, chap. 3, §15.
11. B. RH 16b; Gen. R. 53:14; Yalkut, Va-yera, §94.
12. B. Sot 9a.
13. B. Mak 24a.
14. B. AZ 3a.
15. B. BK 50a.
16. B. Pes 118a.
17. B. BK 50b.
18. B. BK 38b.

the Holy One commanded, "Give the dog his reward." Now, the matter may be argued a fortiori: if God did not withhold the reward due an animal, all the less does He withhold the reward due a man.[1]

282. There is the story of a certain butcher in Sepphoris who sold Israelites flesh of animals that died a natural death or were torn by beasts. One Sabbath eve he drank much wine, went up to the roof, fell down, and died. As dogs were licking up his blood, people came and asked R. Hanina: May his body be moved [on the Sabbath] away from the dogs? R. Hanina replied: Let the dogs be, for they are eating what is their due, as is said, "You must not eat flesh torn by beasts; you shall cast it to the dogs" (Exod. 22:30). This one robbed dogs of flesh by feeding it to Israel. Let the dogs be—they are eating what is theirs.[2]

283. "A God of faithfulness, and without iniquity" (Deut. 32:4). "A God of faithfulness": just as the wicked will be requited in the world-to-come even for a slight transgression they had committed, so are the righteous requited in this world even for a slight transgression committed by them. "And without iniquity": just as the righteous will receive a reward in the world-to-come even for an easy precept they had obeyed, so do the wicked receive in this world reward even for an easy precept they had observed.[3]

284. "And with those round about Him it shall be as a hairsbreadth" (Ps. 50:3)[4] implies that the Holy One is exact down to a hairsbreadth with those around Him, an implication that R. Nehunia derived from another verse: "A God greatly dreaded in the council of the holy ones, held in awe by all around Him" (Ps. 89:8).[5]

285. "Thy righteousness is like the mighty mountains; Thy judgments are like the great deep" (Ps. 36:7). R. Akiva said: The Holy One is exact with the righteous as well as with the wicked, searching out the very depths of their being. He is exact with the righteous, holding them to account for the few wrongs they committed in this world, in order to lavish bliss upon them and give them a goodly reward in the world-to-come. On the other hand, He lavishes ease upon the wicked and rewards them in this world for the few good deeds they performed in order to requite them in the world-to-come.[6]

286. R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok said: To what may the righteous be compared in this world? To a tree standing wholly in a place of cleanness, while its foliage overhangs a place of uncleanness; when the foliage is lopped off, the tree stands entirely in a place of cleanness. So, too, does the Holy One bring suffering upon the righteous in this world,[7] in order that they may inherit the world-to-come, as is said, "And though thy beginning is in pain, yet thy latter end shall prosper" (Job 8:7).[8] And to what may the wicked be compared in this world? To a tree standing wholly in a place of uncleanness, while its foliage overhangs a place of cleanness; when the foliage is lopped off, the tree stands entirely in a place of uncleanness. So, too, does the Holy One prosper the wicked in this world, in order to banish them, to consign them to the nethermost rung, for it is said, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Prov. 14:12).[9]

287. He whose good deeds are more numerous than his wrongdoings is punished as severely[10] as though he had burned a Torah scroll, leaving not even a single letter. And he whose wrongdoings are more numerous than his good deeds has as much good bestowed upon him as though he had kept the entire Torah, omitting not even a single letter.[11]

288. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yose: Moses asked three things of the Holy One, and they were granted to him. He asked that the Presence rest upon Israel, and it was granted to him, for it is said, "Is it not in that Thou goest with us?" (Exod. 33:16). He asked that the Presence not rest upon the idolaters, and it was granted to him, for the verse goes on to say, "So that we are distinguished, I and Thy people" (ibid.). He asked that he be shown the ways of the Holy One, and it was granted to him, for it is said, "Show me now Thy ways" (Exod. 33:13).[12] Moses went on to say before Him: Master of the universe, why is it that some righteous men prosper while others suffer adversity, some wicked men prosper while others suffer adversity? The Holy One replied: Moses, the righteous man who prospers is a righteous man who is the son of a righteous man; the righteous man who suffers adversity is a righteous man who is the son of a wicked man. The wicked man who prospers is a wicked man who is the son of a righteous man; the wicked man who suffers adversity is a wicked man who is the son of a wicked man.

According to some, the Holy One replied to Moses: The righteous man who prospers is completely righteous; the righteous man who suffers adversity is not completely righteous. The wicked man who prospers is not completely wicked; the wicked man who suffers adversity is completely wicked. Now, the [saying of R. Yose] that three

---

1. Mek, Mishpatim, Kaspa, 2.
2. P. Ter 8:4, 5c.
3. B. Ta 11a.
4. JV: "And round about Him it stormeth mightily." But s'r ("storm") also means "hairsbreadth."
5. B. BK 50a.
6. Gen. R. 33:1.
7. Thereby purging them of the few sins they do commit—lopping off, so to speak, the branch inclining to an unclean place.
8. JV: "Though thy beginning was small, yet thy end shall greatly increase." But R. Eleazar reads mitz'ar ("small") as mi-tza'ar ("in pain").
9. B. Kid 40b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. Thus purged of his sins in this world, he may enjoy life fully in the world-to-come.
11. So that he may then be entirely condemned to Gehenna. B. Kid 39b.
12. The aforegoing citations show what Moses asked. That God granted his requests is indicated in the reply: "I will also do this thing that thou hast asked" (Exod. 33:17).

things were granted to Moses is in disagreement with the saying of R. Meir. R. Meir said: Two [requests] were granted to Moses, and one was not granted to him. For the Holy One said to Moses, "I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious" (Exod. 33:19), even if he does not deserve it, "and I will show mercy on whom I will show mercy" (ibid.), even if he does not deserve it.[1]

289. R. Levi said: Two men, Abraham and Job, said the same thing. Abraham: "That be far from Thee, to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked" (Gen. 18:25); Job: "It is all one—therefore I say: He destroyeth the innocent and the wicked" (Job 9:22). Yet Abraham received a reward for what he said, while Job was punished for what he said. The reason: Abraham ate the fig ripe [and spoke after careful consideration of God's ways], while Job swallowed it raw [and spoke rashly]—"It is all one . . . I say."[2]

290. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Yohanan: Calamity comes upon the world only when there are wicked persons in the world, and it always begins with the righteous,[3] as Scripture says, "If fire break out and catch in thorns" (Exod. 22:5). When does fire break out? When thorns are found nearby. It begins, however, with the righteous, for the verse goes on to say, "And the stack of corn has been consumed [by fire]." Not "And it would consume the stack of corn," but "And the stack of corn has been consumed," implying that the stack of corn had already been consumed.

R. Joseph taught: The verse "And none of you shall go out of the door of his house until the morning" (Exod. 12:22) implies that once permission is granted to the destroyer, he does not distinguish between the righteous and the wicked. Moreover, he even begins with the righteous, as Scripture says, "And I will cut off from thee [first] the righteous and [then] the wicked" (Ezek. 21:8).

R. Joseph wept as he said: So their being righteous counts as nothing! But Abbaye [consoling him] said: Their early death is to their advantage, as Scripture declares, "The righteous is taken away from the evil [to come]" (Isa. 57:1).[4]

291. "But there is that which is swept away without justice" (Prov. 13:23). R. Levi said: Abraham pleaded: Is Your anger like a she-bear ravaging among animals, which, when not finding another animal to destroy, destroys its own young? R. Simon said: [Abraham pleaded: Is Your anger] like a scythe, which cuts down thorns, but when it finds no more, cuts down roses?[5]

292. R. Gorion—some say R. Joseph son of R. Shemaiah—stated: When there are righteous men in a generation, they are held responsible for [the sins of] the generation. When there are no righteous men in a generation, schoolchildren are held responsible.[6]

293. "The Lord testeth the righteous" (Ps. 11:5). R. Jonathan said: Your potter does not test defective vessels, because if he gives them a single rap [to test them], they break. Which vessels does he test? The sound ones, which even if rapped many times will not break. So, too, the Holy One does not test the wicked—only the righteous.

R. Eliezer told the parable of a householder who had two heifers, one whose strength was ample and the other whose strength was limited. Upon which one will he put the yoke? Not on the one whose strength is ample? So, too, the Holy One tests the righteous.[7]

294. R. Yannai said: We did not enter into the tranquility of the wicked, nor did we attain the suffering of the righteous. Hence, neither the tranquility of the wicked nor the suffering of the righteous is within our reach.[8]

295. When R. Joshua ben Levi went to Rome, he entered a palace in which he saw marble pillars covered with wrappings to keep them from [expanding and] cracking during the heat and from [freezing and] contracting during the cold. Then, when he went out into the marketplace, he saw a poor man wrapped in a reed mat [to protect him from the heat and cold]. In regard to the pillars, R. Joshua cited the words "Thy care is like the mighty mountains" (Ps. 36:7); and in regard to the poor man, "Thy judgments are like the great deep" (ibid.).[9]

296. "Sweet is the sleep of a laboring man, whether he eat little or much" (Eccles. 5:11). R. Tanhuma bar Abba said: Solomon was told: Had another person uttered such a thing, we would have laughed at him. How can you, who are described as "wiser than all men" (1 Kings 5:11), have said, "Sweet is the sleep of a laboring man, whether he eat little or much"? It simply is not so. When a man is hungry and eats only a little, sleep will forsake him, but if he eats a lot, his sleep will be sweet. Solomon replied: I spoke only of the righteous and of those who labor in Torah. What do I mean? Well, take a man thirty years old, who since the age of ten has labored at Torah and the doing of precepts and he dies at thirty; another man, eighty years old, who since the age of ten until he died has labored at Torah and the doing of precepts. One might suppose that since the first man labored only twenty years at Torah, while the second labored seventy years, the Holy One will make the reward of the second greater than that of the first. Therefore I say that "whether he eat little or much," the bestowal of reward on the first will be like the bestowal of reward on the second.

R. Levi said: By what parable may the matter be illustrated? By the one of a king who hired laborers to do

---

1. Since God refuses to divulge the "method" of His mercy and graciousness, R. Meir infers that Moses' request to be shown God's ways was denied. B. Ber 7a; B. BB 15b.
2. Gen. R. 49:9; Tanhuma, Va-yera, §5.
3. Cf. 1 Peter 4:17a.
4. B. BK 60a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. Gen. R. 49:8 (Gen R. TA, p. 508).
6. B. Shab 33b.
7. Gen. R. 32:2 and 34:2.
8. In short, we are neither perfectly righteous nor perfectly wicked. Avot 4:15; ARNB 33 (trans. Saldarini, p. 197).
9. That is to say, unfathomable. Gen. R. 33:1; Lev. R. 27:1.

his work, and while they were working, the king took one of them to stroll with him. In the evening, when the laborers came to receive their wages, the workman who had been out for a stroll with the king also came to receive his wage. Should the king say to him, "You worked no more than two hours with them. You are therefore to receive a wage in keeping with the time you put in"? The laborer could tell the king, "Had you not idled me by having me stroll with you, my wage would have been equally substantial." So, too, he who exerted himself twenty years at Torah and then died could say to the Holy One, "Had you not removed me from the world in the middle of my years, I would have continued occupying myself with Torah and precepts."[1]

297. When R. Avun son of R. Hiyya died, R. Zera went in and began a eulogy for him with the verse "Sweet is the sleep of a laboring man, whether he eat little or much" (Eccles. 5:11). To whom may R. Avun son of R. Hiyya be compared? To a king who owned a vineyard and hired many laborers to work it. Among them was one laborer far more skillful in his work than the rest. What did the king do? He took him by the hand and walked with him here and there. Toward evening, when the laborers came to receive their wages, this laborer came with them, and the king gave him the full wage. The others, distressed, began to grumble, saying, "We toiled all day, whereas this one toiled for only two hours, and yet the king has given him his full wage." The king replied, "What reason have you for grumbling? This man with his skill achieved in two hours more than you achieved in the entire day." So, too, R. Avun son of R. Hiyya learned more Torah in twenty-eight years than even a distinguished scholar could learn in a hundred years.[2]

298. "Now that I lie still, I am quiet; when I sleep, I am at rest" (Job 3:13). What the righteous are to have bestowed upon them as reward is prepared for them for the time-to-come, but at their departure, while they are still in this world, the Holy One shows them the reward He will bestow upon them. Their souls thus satisfied, they go to sleep.

At the time of R. Abbahu's death, thirteen rivers of balsam passed in front of him. When he asked, "Whose are these?" and was told, "Yours," he said, "All these for Abbahu? 'Yet to me, all my labor seemed useless, my strength worn out in vain. But my case rested with the Lord, and my recompense with my God' " (Isa. 49:14).

The story is told of R. Simeon ben Halafta, who once returned home on a Friday afternoon and found that he had nothing to buy food with [for the Sabbath]. So that afternoon he went outside the city and prayed to the Holy One. At once, a precious stone was given him from heaven. He sold it to a moneychanger and thus was able to provide food for the Sabbath. However, his wife asked him, "Where did all this food come from?" He replied, "From what the Holy One has provided." She said to him, "If you do not tell me truly where all this comes from, I will not touch a morsel." So he began to tell her what happened, concluding, "I prayed thus to God, and He gave me [the precious stone] from heaven." She said in disbelief, "I will still not touch a morsel until you promise me to return the precious stone at the Sabbath's conclusion." He asked her, "Why should I?" She replied, "Do you wish that your table [in heaven] shall be lacking [all good things], while that of your colleague shall be laden with them?"

R. Simeon went and told the story to Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], who said to him, "Go back and tell your wife, 'If anything shall be lacking from your table, I will replenish it from mine.' " When he came back and told this to his wife, she said, "Come with me to him who taught you Torah." [When they got there], she said to Rabbi [Judah], "Master, will a man be able to see his colleague in the world-to-come? Will not each and every righteous man have a world for himself? For Scripture says, 'Man goeth to his own world' " (Eccles. 12:5). After [R. Simeon ben Halafta] heard what his wife had to say, he [quickly] went and returned the precious stone to heaven.

Our masters said: The second miracle was even more difficult [to perform] than the first. For as soon as R. Simeon stretched forth his hand to restore the precious stone to heaven, an angel descended and took it from him.[3]

299. "And I will bestow freely on whom I have no choice but to bestow freely" (Exod. 33:19). At that time the Holy One showed Moses all the treasuries prepared for bestowing reward on the righteous, to each according to his deeds. Moses kept asking, "For whom is this treasury intended?" and God replied, "For masters of Torah." "And this one?" "For givers of charity." And so on with each and every treasury, until he saw a huge treasury and asked, "For whom is this one intended?" God replied, "To him who has [the merit of] good deeds, I give out of the treasury intended for him. But for him who has no such merit, I provide freely and give him out of this [huge treasury], in keeping with 'I will bestow freely on whom I have no choice but to bestow freely.' "[4]

The World-to-Come

300. "Thou dost protect my head on the day of kissing"[5] (Ps. 140:8)—the day when the two worlds kiss each other, the day a man leaves this world and enters the world-to-come.[6]

301. "Make me know the path of life . . . fullness of joy" (Ps. 16:11). David said before the Holy One: Let me know by which gate one is led to life in the world-to-come. The Holy One told David: If you ask for life, you ask for affliction, since "reproofs of affliction are the way to life" (Prov. 10:23).[7]

---

1. Tanhuma, Ki Tissa, §3.
2. Eccles. R. 5:11, §5.
3. P. AZ 3:1, 42c; Exod. R. 52:3; Yalkut, Prov., §890.
4. Tanhuma B, Ki-Tissa, §16; Tanhuma, Ki-Tissa, §28; Exod. R. 45:6.
5. JV: "battle." But neshek ("battle") also means "kissing."
6. P. Yev 15:2, 14d.
7. Lev. R. 30:2.

302. Rav had a favorite saying: The world-to-come is not at all like this world. In the world-to-come, there is no eating, no drinking, no procreation, no commerce, no envy, no hatred, no rivalry; the righteous sit with crowns on their heads and enjoy the radiance of the Presence.[1]

303. R. Joshua ben Levi said: In the world-to-come, the Holy One will have each righteous man inherit three hundred and ten worlds, as intimated in the verse "That I may cause those that love Me to inherit yesh[2] [whose letters yod (ten) and shin (three hundred) add up to three hundred and ten]" (Prov. 8:21).[3]

304. Rabbah said in the name of R. Yohanan: In the time-to-come, the Holy One will set up seven canopies for each and every righteous man.

"Smoke, and the shining of fire . . . for each glory shall be a canopy" (Isa. 4:5). The verse implies that the canopy the Holy One makes for each and every righteous man will be in keeping with the glory that is to be accorded him.

Why is smoke required in such a canopy? To teach you, said R. Hanina, that whoever regards disciples of the wise with jaundiced eyes in this world will have his eyes filled with smoke in the world-to-come.

And why is fire required in such a canopy? To teach you, said R. Hanina, that each righteous man will burn [in envy of the superior] canopy of his friend. Alas for such shame! Alas for such a disgrace![4]

305. "When man goeth to his own long habitation" (Eccles. 12:5). R. Isaac said: The verse implies that every righteous man is given a habitation as befits the honor due him. The matter may be understood by the parable of a king who enters a city with his servants. When they enter, all of them enter through the same gate. But when they lodge overnight, each one is given a habitation in keeping with the honor due him.[5]

306. We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: The souls of the righteous are treasured under the throne of glory, as is said, "The soul of my lord shall be treasured in the treasury of life" (1 Sam. 25:29). But the soul of the wicked is tied up and then tossed about. For one angel stands at one end of the world and another angel stands at the other end of the world, and they sling the souls of the wicked to each other, as is said, "The souls of thine enemies, them shall He sling out, as from the hollow of a sling" (ibid.).[6]

307. R. Joseph son of R. Joshua ben Levi became ill, and his spirit flew away. After his spirit returned to him, his father asked him, "What did you see?" He replied, "I saw a world turned upside down—the people high up here were moved down, and the lowly here were moved up." R. Joshua: "My son, you saw a world in which right is made clear. But what of you and me—where were we placed?" "Just as we are esteemed here, so were we esteemed there. I also heard them say, 'Happy is he who comes here with his learning in hand.' I also heard them say, 'They who were martyred by the [Roman] government—no man is allowed to stand within their compartments.' "[7]

308. All Israel have a portion in the world-to-come, as is said, "Thy people are all righteous. They shall inherit the world that is forever: the branch of My planting, the work of My hands, wherein I glory" (Isa. 60:21).

Three kings and four commoners have no portion in the world-to-come. The three kings are Jeroboam, Ahab, and Manasseh. R. Judah, however, said: Manasseh has a portion in the world-to-come, for it is said, "And he prayed unto Him . . . and He hearkened to his supplication and brought him to Jerusalem into his kingdom" (2 Chron. 33:13). The sages retorted to R. Judah: God brought him to his kingdom, but not to life in the world-to-come. The four commoners: Balaam, Doeg, Ahithophel, and Gehazi.

Who enumerated them? The Men of the Great Assembly.

These Men [of the Great Assembly] were about to include one more [Solomon], but the apparition of his father's likeness came and prostrated itself [in supplication] before them. However, they ignored it. Then a fire came down from heaven and licked about their benches, but they ignored it also. At that, a divine voice cried out to them, "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand with kings; he shall not stand with mean men" (Prov. 22:29). He who gave precedence to the building of My house over his and built My house in seven years but his own in thirteen, "he shall stand with kings; he shall not stand with mean men." But they ignored that also. Then the divine voice cried out, "Shall his recompense be as thou wilt? . . . Wilt thou choose, and not I?" (Job 34:33).

They who look for the inherent meaning of Scripture maintain: All the aforementioned will enter the world-to-come.[8]

309. The righteous of the nations of the world also have a portion in the world-to-come.[9]

The Garden of Eden and Gehenna

310. R. Joshua ben Levi said: There are two gates of chalcedony in the Garden of Eden, and around them are sixty myriads of ministering angels, the radiance of the countenance of each of whom shines like the splendor of the firmament. When a righteous man comes to them, they remove from him the garments in which he abode in the

1. B. Ber 17a.
2. JV: "substance."
3. Uk 3:13.
4. B. BB 75a.
5. B. Shab 152a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. B. Shab 152b.
7. B. Pes 50a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. B. Sanh 90a and 104b; Yalkut, Prov., §960.
9. Based on Tos Sanh 13:12.

grave and clothe him in eight garments of clouds of glory. They put two crowns on his head, one of precious stones and pearls, and the other of Parvaim gold. They place eight myrtles in his hand and chant praise before him, saying, "Go, eat thy bread with joy" (Eccles. 9:7). Then they bring him to a place of waterbrooks encompassed by eight hundred species of roses and myrtles. Each and every righteous man is given a canopy in keeping with the honor due him. Out of it flow four rivers, one of milk, one of wine, one of balsam, and one of honey. Each and every canopy has above it a vine of gold in which thirty pearls are set, and the brightness of each shines like the brightness of the planet Venus. Each and every canopy has in it a table made of precious stones and pearls. Sixty angels stand at the head of each and every righteous man, and say to him: Come and eat honey in gladness, because you have occupied yourself with Torah, which is likened to honey; and drink the wine kept in its grapes ever since the six days of creation, because you have occupied yourself with Torah, which is likened to wine. The most homely among the angels has a visage like that of Joseph or like that of R. Yohanan.[1] For the righteous, there is no night. During the night's [usual] three watches, life continues to be renewed for the righteous. During the first watch, each righteous man becomes a child and enters the compartment for little children, where he rejoices the way little children rejoice. During the second watch, each righteous man becomes a young man and enters the compartment of young men, where he rejoices the way young men rejoice. During the third watch, each righteous man becomes an old man and enters the compartment for old men, where he rejoices the way old men rejoice.

In the Garden of Eden, in every one of its recesses, there are eighty myriad species of trees, the least of which is more beautiful than all varieties of spice trees. Sixty myriads of ministering angels sing sweetly in each recess of the Garden. The tree of life is in the center, and its foliage spreads over the entire Garden of Eden. The tree has five hundred thousand kinds of fruit, each differing in taste; the appearance of one fruit is not like the appearance of another, and the fragrance of one not like the fragrance of another. Clouds of glory hover above the tree, and from the four points of the compass [breezes] blow at it, so that its fragrance is wafted from world's end to world's end. Under the tree sit disciples of the wise, explaining the Torah. Each of them has two canopies, one studded with stars and the other with the sun and moon. Between each pair of canopies there is a curtain of clouds of glory. Beyond each canopy there is Eden, in which are three hundred and ten worlds. Within Eden are seven companies of the righteous: the first, those slain by the [Roman] government, such as R. Akiva and his companions; the second, those who were made to drown in the sea; the third, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai and his disciples; the fourth, those upon whom the cloud descended and covered;[2] the fifth, the penitents, for where penitents stand, not even the wholly righteous may stand; the sixth, bachelors who during their lives did not savor the taste of [sexual] sin; the seventh, the poor who have Scripture, Mishnah, and moral conduct, of whom Scripture says, "So shall those that take refuge in Thee rejoice" (Ps. 5:12). Among them sits the Holy One, explaining the Torah to them, as is said, "Mine eyes are upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with Me" (Ps. 101:6). The Holy One did not make known further details of the honor prepared for the righteous, as is said, "No eye except Thine hath seen what will be done for those who trust in Thee, O God" (Isa. 64:3).[3]

311. "God hath set the one close to the other" (Eccles. 7:14). Between the Garden of Eden and Gehenna there is no more than the breadth of a hand.[4]

312. "Who can stand before His indignation? And who can abide in the fierceness of His anger?" (Nah. 1:6). R. Zera began his discourse with the verse "The leech has two daughters: Hav, Hav" (Prov. 30:15), a verse R. Eleazar took to mean that two companies of angels stand at the gates of Gehenna and say, "Hav, Hav. 'Bring [(have)], bring [(have) the wicked to judgment].' "

Why is it called Gehenna?[5] Because the sound of the groaning (nahamah)[6] within it goes from world's end to world's end.

There are three gates to Gehenna, one at the sea, another at the wilderness, and the third at inhabited land.

There are five kinds of fire in Gehenna: a fire that eats and drinks, one that drinks but does not eat, one that eats but does not drink, one that neither eats nor drinks, and a fire that eats fire. In Gehenna there are coals as big as mountains, coals as small as hills, coals the size of the Salt Sea, and coals that are no larger than big boulders. Also in Gehenna are rivers of pitch and sulphur flowing in boiling suds, continuously boiling and boiling.

The decree upon a wicked man: angels of destruction push him down on his face, and other such angels receive him from them and shove him farther toward the fire of Gehenna, which opens its mouth and swallows him. But he who possesses Torah and good deeds and has suffered numerous afflictions is delivered from the judgment of Gehenna, as is said, "Even when I walk through the valley of deepest darkness, I will fear no evil. . . . Thy rod and Thy staff, they comfort me" (Ps. 23:4). "Thy rod" refers to afflictions and "Thy staff" to Torah.

R. Joshua ben Levi said: Once, as I was walking on a road, Elijah the Prophet, ever remembered on good occasions, encountered me and said, "Would you like me to set you at the gate of Gehenna?" I replied, "Yes." He [did so and] showed me men suspended by their noses, men suspended by their hands, men suspended by their tongues, men suspended by their feet.[7] He showed me

---

1. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §404.
2. As the cloud covered Moses at Sinai.
3. Yalkut, Bereshit, §2.
4. PRKM 28:3.
5. In Hebrew: Ge-Hinnom ("Valley of Hinnom").
6. Transposing Hinnom [spelled Hnm] into nhm[h].
7. The torments in Gehenna resemble in many ways the kinds of punishment meted out by the Romans at that time. See Saul Lieberman, "Roman Legal Institutions in Early Rabbinics and in the Acta Martyrum," JQR 35 (1944): 1–55, in particular pp. 14ff.

women suspended by their teats, men suspended by their eyes, men suspended by their ears. He showed me men made to eat their own flesh, men made to eat [live] coals of broom, men brought back to life and made to sit while worms devoured their flesh. Then he said to me, "These are the ones of whom it is written, 'Their worm shall not die' " (Isa. 66:24). He showed me further men forced to eat sand, which breaks their teeth, while the Holy One says to them, "O wicked ones, when you ate what was stolen, it tasted sweet in your mouths. Now you will have no strength to eat [anything]!"

R. Yohanan said: Each and every angel is appointed to exact punishment for a single transgression. So one angel comes, punishes the sinner, and goes away. Then a second, then a third, and so, too, all the others, until they exact punishment for all the transgressions the man has committed. By what parable may the matter be illustrated? By the one of a man who had many creditors. When they took him to the king, the king said to them, "What am I to do for you? Go and divide him up among yourselves."

Those who go down to Gehenna and are not allowed to come up out of it are, however, taken every Sabbath eve to two mountains of snow and left there. At the Sabbath's end, an angel goes forth and shoves them along until he returns them to their places in Gehenna. [But before leaving], some of them take a handful of snow, which they put in their armpits to keep them cool during the six weekdays. Then the Holy One says to them, "O wicked ones, woe to you, who steal even in Gehenna, as is said, '[Because of] the drought and heat they steal the snow waters—they sin even in Sheol' " (Job 24:19).

Throughout twelve months the wicked are reduced to ash, which the wind scatters under the feet of the righteous. After that, their soul returns to them and they go out of Gehenna, their faces as black as the bottom of a pot. They then declare that they deserved the decree of judgment against them, saying, "Rightly You decreed against us! Properly You punished us," as is said, "With Thee, O Lord, is the right, and the shame of face is on us to this very day" (Dan. 9:7). The nations of the world, however, are punished in seven pyres of fire, twelve months in each and every pyre, where a river of fire which flows forth from under the throne of glory comes down upon them and continues from world's end to world's end.

After all this, the Holy One has mercy on His creatures, as is said, "I will not always contend, I will not be angry forever: I who make spirits flag also create the breath of life" (Isa. 57:16).[1]

313. The Holy One will be seated in the Garden of Eden and expound [Scripture] with all the righteous seated before Him, all the heavenly household standing on their feet, the sun and the planets at the Holy One's right, and the moon and the stars at His left. The Holy One will be seated and expound a new Torah, which He is to give through the Messiah. When He finishes the lesson, Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel will stand up on his feet and say, "May He be magnified and hallowed," and his voice will go from world's end to world's end. All the world's inhabitants from one end of the world to the other will loudly respond, "Amen." Even Israel's wicked and the righteous from among the worshipers of idols still remaining in Gehenna will loudly respond out of Gehenna and say, "Amen." The world will be in such commotion that the sound of their loud response will be heard in the presence of the Holy One, who will ask, "What is this great commotion I hear?" The ministering angels will reply, Master of the universe, these are the wicked of Israel and the righteous of the nations of the world still in Gehenna, who respond with "Amen" and declare their punishment to be just. Then the mercies of the Holy One will surge up mightily for them, and He will say, "What more am I to do about the judgment imposed on them? The impulse to evil is responsible for what has happened to them."

In that instant, in the presence of all the righteous, the Holy One will take the keys to Gehenna, give them to [the angels] Michael and Gabriel, and say to them, "Go, open the gates of [all the] Gehenna[s] and bring them up." Right away, Michael and Gabriel will go with the keys and open the eight thousand gates of Gehenna, each Gehenna being three hundred parasangs in length, three hundred parasangs in width, a thousand parasangs in thickness [of its walls], and a hundred parasangs in depth.[2] Once a wicked man falls into it, he cannot get up out of it. What will Michael and Gabriel do at that time? They will take hold of the hand of each one of them and bring them up, just like a man who brings his fellow up out of a pit by lifting him with a rope. Then the two angels will stand over them, bathe them, anoint them, heal them of the wounds sustained in Gehenna, clothe them in comely vestments, and bring them, thus vested gloriously like priests, before the Holy One and to all the righteous, as is said, "Like Thy priests they will be vested in righteousness, and Thy holy ones [welcoming them] will sing for joy" (Ps. 132:9).

When they are about to arrive at the entrance to the Garden of Eden, Michael and Gabriel will come in first to seek permission from the Holy One, who will respond, saying, "Allow them to come in, that they may behold My glory." When they come in, they will fall on their faces, prostrate themselves before Him, and bless and praise the Name of the Holy One. At once the wholly righteous and upright, who sit in the presence of the Holy One, will voice thanksgivings and exaltation before the Holy One, as is said, "Surely the righteous shall give thanks unto Thy Name, the upright who dwell in Thy presence" (Ps. 140:14); and again, "Let them exalt Him also in the assembly of the people, and praise Him in the seat of the elders" (Ps. 107:32).[3]

314. "This has come to you from My hand. You shall sit down in sorrow" (Isa. 50:11). R. Phinehas said in the

---

1. Massekhet Gehinnom, BhM 1:147–49.

2. The interpretation was provided to the translator by Professor Philip J. Davis of the Mathematics Department of Brown University.

3. Yalkut, Isa., §429.

name of R. Reuben: By what parable may the verse be understood? By the one of a king who arranged a banquet and invited guests to come to him. The king issued an order, saying, "Let each and every man bring something to sit on." Some brought rugs, some brought mats, some brought pillows and bolsters, some brought chairs, some brought logs, and some brought stones. Irritated [at the sight of logs and stones in the palace], the king said, "Every man shall sit on what he brought." Those who were commanded to sit on logs or stones grumbled at the king, saying, "Is such the honor the king is conferring on us, that we have to sit on logs or stones?" When the king heard the complaint, he said brusquely, "It is not enough that you have disfigured with logs and stones the palace erected by me at great cost, but you have the impudence to join in criticism of me. The only honor you will be accorded is the honor you have already accorded yourselves."

So, too, in the time-to-come, when the wicked are condemned to Gehenna, they will grumble at the Holy One, saying, "Behold, we looked for salvation from the Holy One, and this is what happens to us!" The Holy One will reply to them, "In the world in which you spent your lives, were you not men given to bickering, to slander, and to all kinds of evil? Were you not men of strife and violence? 'You are all kindlers of fire, lighters of firebrands' [Isa. 50:11]. Therefore, 'walk by the blaze of your fire, by the brands that you have lit' [ibid.]. And should you say, 'This has come to us from My hand' [ibid.]: not at all! You did it, you did it to yourselves. This has come to you from your own hand. Therefore 'you are to sit down in sorrow' " (ibid.).

R. Simeon ben Lakish used to be greatly absorbed studying Torah in a cave at Tiberias, where every day a potter would place a jar of water for him to drink. Whenever R. Simeon came into the cave feeling very tired, he would take the water jar and drink from it. On one occasion, the potter entered, sat down by R. Simeon, and stayed with him a while to rest. Then he said to R. Simeon, "Master, do you remember when you and I used to go to the same school? But you had the merit [of becoming a student of Torah], while I had no such merit. Pray for me that my portion may be with you in the world-to-come." R. Simeon replied, "How can I pray for you since [it will be your lot to] come in the company of your fellow craftsmen? Because there, in the world-to-come, a man is not allowed to dwell except with the fellows in his craft."[1]

315. R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Eleazar: The fire of Gehenna has no power over disciples of the wise. Infer it a fortiori from reflecting upon a salamander. The salamander is no more than an offspring of fire, but the man who anoints himself with its blood is not affected by fire. How much and more is such immunity to fire true of disciples of the wise, whose entire body is fire, as is written, "Is not My word as fire? saith the Lord" (Jer. 23:29).

R. Simeon ben Lakish said: The fire of Gehenna has no power over Israel's transgressors. Infer it a fortiori from reflecting upon the golden altar. If the golden altar, whose gold is no more than an overlay of a denar's thickness, was not affected through so many years by fire, how much more and more is this true of Israel's transgressors, all of whose being is as full of good deeds as a pomegranate is of seeds. For in the verse "Thy temples are like a pomegranate split open" (Song 4:3), read not, "Thy temples [rakkatekh]," but, "Thy worthless ones [rekatekh]": even the worthless ones in your midst are as full of good deeds as a pomegranate is of seeds.[2]

316. R. Akiva used to say: The punishment of the wicked in Gehenna lasts [no more than] twelve months.[3]

317. We have been taught: For a full twelve months, the human body remains in existence while the soul ascends and descends [to join the body]. After twelve months, the body ceases to exist, and the soul ascends [to the treasury of souls] and descends no more.[4]

318. There is the story of R. Akiva, who, while walking along a road, encountered a man blackened by soot, carrying on his shoulders a huge load of fagots and running with them like a horse. R. Akiva ordered him to stop. He said, "I adjure you to tell me whether you belong to the human race or to the demons?" The man replied, "Master, I was a man, and I have already departed from that world. Every day I chop up logs of wood and bring back a load [of fagots] as huge as this one, with which I am incinerated three times every day." R. Akiva asked him, "What did you do during your earthly life?" The man replied, "Nothing prohibited did I overlook. And now guards are appointed over me who give me no rest." R. Akiva asked him, "Did you leave a son?" The man replied, "By your life, do not detain me, for I am afraid of the angels who, while lashing me with thongs of fire, will ask me, 'Why were you delayed?' " R. Akiva: "Answer my question, so that I may be of help to you." The man: "In such-and-such a city, I left a wife, who was pregnant." So R. Akiva went from city to city until he came to that particular city. When he got there, its inhabitants went out to meet him. He asked them, "Where is So-and-so and his house?" They replied, "May the name of the wicked rot" (Prov. 10:7). When R. Akiva asked about the man's wife, they replied, "May her name and her memory be wiped out." When he inquired about the man's son, they replied, "He is uncircumcised—they did not bother even with the precept of circumcision." R. Akiva: "Nevertheless, bring me his son." When they brought him, R. Akiva ordered that he be circumcised; then he had him seated before him to study and taught him the blessings. On the Sabbath, R. Akiva arranged to have the man's son called to read from the Torah scroll. The instant the man's son recited, "Bless ye the Lord who is to be blessed forever and ever," his father was taken out of Gehenna and brought into the Garden of Eden.

---

1. Eccles. R. 3:9, §1.

2. B. Hag 27a; B. Er 19a.

3. Ed 2:10.

4. B. Shab 152b–153a.

That night the man came to R. Akiva in a dream and said, "Let your mind be at rest, because you have now delivered me from the punishment of Gehenna."[1]

319. R. Joshua ben Levi, associating with sufferers of raatan,[2] studied Torah with them. Quoting "A lovely hind and a graceful doe" (Prov. 5:19), he said, "If Torah bestows grace upon those who study it, should it not also protect them from infection?"

When R. Joshua ben Levi was about to die, the angel of death was instructed, "Go and do whatever he wishes." The angel came and revealed himself to R. Joshua, who said to him, "Show me my place in Eden." [The angel: "Very well."] R. Joshua: "But give me your knife, since you might terrify me with it on the way." The angel gave it to him. When they arrived in the Garden of Eden, the angel lifted up R. Joshua and showed him his place. At that, R. Joshua jumped over and landed on the other side [of the wall]. The angel of death seized hold of him by the hem of his cloak, but R. Joshua exclaimed, "I swear, I will not leave!" Then the Holy One said, "If R. Joshua ever had an oath of his annulled, he must return; but if not, he need not return." [Thus, without experiencing death, R. Joshua remained in Eden.] The angel of death said to him, "Give me back my knife," but R. Joshua would not return it to him. A divine voice then went forth, saying to R. Joshua, "Give it back to him, since mortals have need of it."

Elijah the Prophet heralded R. Joshua's arrival, calling out, "Make room for the son of Levi, make room for the son of Levi!" As R. Joshua proceeded on his way, he found R. Simeon ben Yohai seated on thirteen golden mats.[3] R. Simeon: "Are you the son of Levi?" R. Joshua: "Yes." R. Simeon: "Has a rainbow ever appeared in your lifetime?"[4] R. Joshua: "Yes." R. Simeon: "If that is so, you are not the son of Levi."[5]

320. When R. Hanina bar Papa, who had served as escort at R. Joshua ben Levi's wedding,[6] was about to die, the angel of death was instructed, "Go and do whatever he wishes." So he went to R. Hanina's house and revealed himself to him. R. Hanina said, "Allow me thirty days to go over my studies, for the sages have said, 'Happy is he who comes up there in full possession of his learning.' " The angel of death left him and after thirty days appeared to him again. R. Hanina said, "Show me my place [in Eden]." "Very well," the angel replied. R. Hanina: "But give me your knife, since otherwise you might terrify me with it on the way." The angel: "Are you about to play the same trick on me as your friend has done?" R. Hanina: "Bring a Torah scroll and see if there is anything written in it that I have not fulfilled." The angel: "Have you attached yourself to sufferers of raatan and engaged in the study of Torah with them, as R. Joshua ben Levi did?"[7]

Nevertheless, when R. Hanina departed, a pillar of fire came between him and the world.[8] And we have a tradition that such a pillar of fire comes to set apart only one person in a generation, or at most two persons in a generation.

Approaching as close as he could to R. Hanina's bier, R. Alexandri said, "Remove the pillar out of deference to the sages." But R. Hanina ignored him. "Remove it out of deference to your father." But again R. Hanina ignored him. "Remove it," R. Alexandri finally pleaded, "out of deference to your own person."[9] And the pillar of fire departed.[10]

321. Rabbah bar Abbahu encountered [the prophet] Elijah standing in a non-Jewish cemetery. Rabbah asked Elijah, "Why are you standing in a cemetery? Are you not a priest [one forbidden to come in contact with the dead]?" Elijah answered, "Did you not study the division Tohorot (Things Clean), where we have been taught, 'The graves of non-Jews do not defile'?" Rabbah: "If I have been unable to learn even four divisions of Mishnah,[11] how can I learn all six?"[12] Elijah: "Why not?" Rabbah: "I am hard pressed to earn a living." So Elijah led him until he brought him into the Garden of Eden, where he said to him, "Take off your cloak, collect some of these leaves, and put them into the cloak." Rabbah gathered them and took them; as he was going out, he heard a voice say, "Who dares consume his [share in the] world-to-come, as [Rabbah bar] Abbahu has just done?"[13] At that, he shook out his cloak and threw away the leaves.

However, he did bring back the cloak that had absorbed the fragrance of the leaves. He sold it for twelve thousand denars, which he divided among his sons-in-law.[14]

322. Even as praise of the Holy One ascends to Him out of the Garden of Eden from the mouths of the righteous,

---

1. Ka R. 2; Midrash Aseret ha-Dibberot, in Eisenstein, p. 457; Tanhuma, Noah, as quoted in Menorat ha-Maor.
2. A skin disease causing nervous trembling and extreme weakness (Jastrow). It was so contagious that most people shunned its victims.
3. Persian kings used to sit on no more than seven mats woven with gold thread. Thus Simeon ben Yohai was singled out for much greater distinction (see Daniel Sperber, in Shaul Shaked, ed., Irano-Judaica [Jerusalem, 1982], p. 91, and the Hebrew introduction, p. 9). BR mistranslate taktiki as "chairs" or "thrones."
4. The rainbow in the sky, the token of God's pledge never again to bring a deluge, does not, according to R. Simeon ben Yohai, appear in the sky during the lifetime of one like himself, wholly righteous, whose presence shields his generation from extinction by floodwaters.
5. That is to say, "You are not wholly righteous." B. Ket 77b.
6. Or, "at whose wedding the angel of death had served as escort." So Rashi, ad loc. The translator follows the Munich ms.
7. "You were not even as pious and staunch in your faith as was R. Joshua ben Levi, who trusted in Torah's power to protect him from all evil. If R. Joshua, despite his extreme piety, did not hesitate to outwit me, the angel of death, how much more likely are you to do so?" (Ket, Soncino, p. 489, n. 2).
8. To show that the rest of mankind are not worthy of being near him.
9. So that you may be eulogized.
10. B. Ket 77b.
11. Festivals, Women, Damages, Things Holy.
12. The remaining two being Seeds and Things Clean.
13. He was about to benefit in this world from what was to be allotted to him in the world-to-come.
14. B. BM 114a–b.

so too it ascends out of Gehenna from the mouths of the wicked, as is said, "Passing through the valley of weeping,[1] they make it a place of fountains" (Ps. 84:7). What is meant by "They make it a place of fountains"? They make their tears flow like fountains until they cool Gehenna with their tears, so that even from there praise goes up, as is said, "Even there, praises clothe the Teacher[2] [ibid.]." What do they say? They say, so taught R. Yohanan, "You spoke well! You judged well! You declared what was clean well! You declared what was unclean well! You taught well! You instructed well! But we would not heed!"[3]

1. JV: "Bakha," a proper noun. But in this comment, bakha is taken as a form of bkh ("to weep").

2. Usually translated "early rain." But moreh can also mean "teacher."

3. Exod. R. 7:4; MTeh 84:3.

PART V

CHAPTER ONE

MAN AND HIS NEEDS

Man at His Birth, in His Old Age, and at His Death

1. Our masters taught: For two and a half years the school of Shammai and the school of Hillel were divided: The first school said: It would have been better for man not to have been created than to have been created. The other said: It is better for man that he was created than it would have been had he not been created. They finally voted and decided: it would have been better for man not to have been created than to have been created. But now that he has been created, let him search his past deeds. Some say: Let him examine what he is about to do.[1]

2. R. Akiva used to say: Beloved is man, for he was created in God's image. Still greater was the love shown him inasmuch as it was made known to him that he was created in God's image, for it is written, "In the image of God made He man" (Gen. 9:6).[2]

3. R. Nehemiah said: What is the proof that one man is equal in worth to all the work of creation? From Scripture: "This is the book of the generations of Adam: In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made He him" (Gen. 5:1). And earlier: "These are the generations of the heaven and the earth, when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made heaven and earth" (Gen. 2:1). Even as the words "created" and "made" are used in the second verse [which speaks of all the works of creation] so the words "created" and "made" are used in the first verse, which speaks of man.[3]

4. There are four exalted beings in the world: the ox among cattle, the lion among wild beasts, the eagle among birds, and man, who is more greatly exalted than all the others.[4]

5. Our masters taught: six attributes are ascribed to human beings. In regard to three, they are like ministering angels; in regard to three others, like animals. Three like ministering angels: they have understanding like the ministering angels, they walk erect like the ministering angels, they can use the sacred tongue like the ministering angels. Three like animals: they eat and drink like animals, they procreate like animals, and they defecate like animals.[5]

6. R. Hanina bar Papa expounded: The angel in charge of conception, who is called Night, takes the drop of semen, places it before the Holy One, and asks: Master of the universe, what is to happen to this drop? Will it become a strong man or a weak man? A sage or a fool? A rich man or a poor man?[6]

7. Before the formation of the embryo in its mother's womb, the Holy One decrees what it is to be in the end—male or female, weak or strong, poor or rich, short or tall, ungainly or handsome, scrawny or fat, humble or insolent. He also decrees what is to happen to it. But not whether it is to be righteous or wicked, a matter He places solely in the man's power. He beckons the angel in charge of spirits and says to him. "Bring Me such-and-such a spirit, which is in the Garden of Eden, is called So-and-so, and whose appearance is thus-and-so." At once, the angel goes and brings the spirit to the Holy One. When the spirit arrives, it bows and prostrates itself before the King who is King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He. In that instant the Holy One says to the spirit, "Enter the drop that is in such-and-such an angel's hand." The spirit opens its mouth and says, "Master of the universe, the world in which I have been dwelling since the day You created me is enough for me. Why do You wish to have me, who am holy and pure, hewn from the mass of Your glory, enter this fetid drop?" The Holy One replies, "The world I will have you enter will be more beautiful for you than the one in which you have dwelled. Indeed, when I formed you, I formed you only for this drop." With that, the Holy One makes the spirit enter the drop against its will. Then the angel returns and has the [drop of semen with the] spirit enter the mother's womb. Moreover, two angels are designated for the spirit to guard it, so that it will not leave the embryo or fall out of it. There a lamp is lit over its head, and it is able to look and see from world's end to world's end. The angel takes it from there, leads it to the Garden of Eden, and shows it the righteous seated in glory with crowns upon their heads. The angel asks the spirit, "Do you know who these are?" The spirit: "No, my lord." The angel says, "At the beginning, these that you see were formed like you in their mother's womb; then they went forth into the world and kept the Torah and its commandments. Therefore, they earned the merit of this happiness in which you see them. Know then that in the end you, too, will leave the world. If you succeed in keeping the Holy One's Torah, you will merit like reward and will be seated with these. But if not, know and bear in mind that you will merit another kind of place."

In the evening the angel leads the spirit to Gehenna, where he shows it the wicked, whom angels of destruction

---

1. Past misdeeds cannot be undone; one can only repent and repair any harm caused by them. Future misdeeds can be foreseen and left undone. B. Er 13b.
2. Avot 3:14.
3. ARN 31.
4. Exod. R. 23:13; Yalkut, Exod., §243.
5. B. Hag 16a.
6. B. Nid 16b.

flog with staves of fire. Though the wicked cry out, "Woe, woe!" the angels show them no mercy. The angel asks the spirit, "Do you know who these are?" The spirit: "No, my lord." The angel: "These who are being punished by fire were formed like you, and when they went forth into the world, they did not keep the Holy One's Torah and statutes. Therefore, they came to the disgrace in which you see them. Again I say, know that in the end you are to go forth into the world. Be righteous, be not wicked, and you will merit life in the world-to-come."

Then the angel strolls with the spirit from morning till evening and shows it the place where it is to die and the place where it is to be buried. The angel continues strolling with it throughout the world, showing it the righteous and the wicked, and finally shows it everything. In the evening the angel returns the spirit to its mother's womb, and there the Holy One provides bolted gates for it. The embryo lies in its mother's womb for nine months: the first three months the embryo dwells in the lower compartment of its mother's womb; the next three months in the middle compartment; and the final three months in the upper compartment. And when its time comes to emerge into the air of the world, it rolls down in one instant from the upper compartment to the middle one and then to the lower one. Of all that its mother eats and drinks during this first period, the embryo eats and drinks, but it excretes no feces.

In the end, its time comes to go forth into the world. The same angel appears and says to the spirit, "Your time to go forth into the air of the world has come." The spirit: "Why do you wish to take me out into the air of the world?" The angel: "My son, know that you were formed against your will; know, too, that you will be born against your will, will die against your will, and against your will are to give an account and reckoning before the King who is King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He." But the spirit refuses to go out of the womb, so that the angel has to beat it and put out the lamp that has been burning over its head, and then he brings it forth into the world against its will. Instantly the infant forgets all that he had seen as he was going forth, and all that he had known. Why does the infant weep as he goes forth? Because he lost a place of repose and comfort—[he weeps] for the world which he was compelled to leave.

When a man's time to die comes, the same angel appears to him and asks, "Do you recognize me?" The man answers, "Yes," and proceeds to inquire, "Why did you come this day and not on any other day?" The angel: "To take you out of the world—your time to depart has arrived." The man begins to weep and makes his voice heard from world's end to world's end. But his fellow creatures are not aware of it, because they cannot hear his voice—except for the cock: he alone can hear it. The man pleads with the angel, "You have already taken me out of two worlds and made me enter this world." The angel: "Have I not told you that you were formed against your will, were born against your will, were alive against your will, and against your will are destined to give an account and reckoning before the Holy One, blessed be He?"[1]

[1] Tanhuma, Pekudei, §3.

8. R. Simlai delivered the following discourse: What does an embryo in the womb of its mother resemble? A ledger that stays folded up. The embryo's hands rest on its two temples, its elbows on its two knees, and its heels against its buttocks. Its head lies between its knees, its mouth is closed, and its navel is open. It eats what its mother eats and drinks what its mother drinks, but produces no feces, because otherwise it would kill its mother. (As soon as it goes forth into the air of the world, however, that which has been closed is opened and that which has been open is closed. Otherwise, the embryo could not live one single hour.)

[During the period of gestation] light burns above its head, and it gazes and is able to see from one end of the world to the other. There is no time during which man abides in greater happiness than during those days. At that time he is taught the entire Torah, all of it. But as he comes into the air of the world, an angel appears, strikes him on his mouth, and makes him forget the entire Torah.

The embryo does not leave the womb until it is made to swear an oath. What is the oath it is made to swear? "Be righteous, be not wicked; even if the entire world, all of it, tells you, 'You are righteous,' consider yourself wicked. Always bear in mind that the Holy One is pure, that His ministers are pure, and that the soul I placed in you is pure; if you preserve it in purity, well and good; but if not, I will take it from you."[2]

9. Therefore man was created unique, in order to proclaim the greatness of the Holy One, blessed be He. For if a man strikes many coins from one die, they are all exactly alike. But though the King of kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, has fashioned every man in the stamp of the first man, Adam, not a single one of them is exactly like his fellow. And why are men's faces not like one another? So that no man would see a beautiful dwelling or a beautiful woman and say, "She is mine."[3]

10. Even as men's faces are not alike, so their understanding is not alike. Each man has an understanding that is his very own.[4]

11. We have been taught that R. Meir said: A man differs from his fellow in three ways—in voice, in appearance, and in understanding.[5]

12. The verse "He hath made thee, and placed thee on settings" (Deut. 32:6)[6] implies that the Holy One created in man many organs, each in its own setting, and if any change is made in an organ's setting, the man will die.[7]

13. "For Thou art great, and doest wondrous things" (Ps. 86:10). R. Tanhum said: Should a leather bottle have a

[2] B. Nid 30b.
[3] B. Sanh 37b–38a.
[4] Tanhuma, Pinhas, §10.
[5] B. Sanh 38a.
[6] JV: "He hath made thee, and established thee."
[7] B. Hul 56b.

hole in it as small as a needle's eye, all of its air will escape. Yet, though man is formed with many cavities and many orifices, his breath does not escape through them.[1]

14. Our masters taught: The kidneys counsel, the heart discerns, the tongue shapes [words], the mouth articulates them, the windpipe produces the voice, the gullet takes in all kinds of food, the lungs absorb moisture [from the stomach], the liver is the seat of anger, the gall lets a drop fall into the liver and allays the anger, the spleen produces laughter, the large intestine grinds food, the maw produces sleep, and the nose awakens. Should the sleep-inducing organ induce wakefulness, or the wakefulness-inducing organ induce sleep, the man will pine away. The sages taught: Should both induce sleep or both induce wakefulness, the man will die at once.[2]

15. "And He closed up the place with flesh tahtennah [instead thereof]" (Gen. 2:21). R. Hanina bar Isaac read tahtennah as made up of noy, "seemly," and le-tahtito, "for the nether part," that is, by a flesh cover the Holy One provided a seemly outlet at man's nether parts, so that [the anus] would not be exposed like that of an animal. Some say: God provided cushions at man's nether part, so that he would feel no pain when sitting down.[3]

16. R. Levi said: Six organs serve a man—three are under his control, and three are not under his control. The ones under his control: the mouth, the hands, and the feet. The ones not under his control: the eyes, the ears, and the nose. And when the Holy One wishes it, even the ones under his control cease to be under it.[4]

17. The face the Holy One created in man is no larger than a sit [the distance between the tip of the thumb and the tip of the index finger when held apart]. But though it has many fountains, their fluids do not mingle. The fluid of the eyes is salty, the fluid in the ears is oily, the fluid in the nose is foul, the fluid in the mouth is sweet. Why is the fluid in the eyes salty? Because if a man were to weep over the dead for a long time, his eyes would soon be blinded. But because the fluid is salty,[5] the man stops and weeps no more. Why is the fluid in the ears oily? Because when a man hears bad news, if he should retain it in his ears, it would coagulate in his heart and [cause such pressure] that he might die. However, because the ear fluid is oily, he receives the news in one ear and lets it out at the other. Why is the fluid in the nose foul? Because when a man inhales a bad odor, were it not for the foul fluid in the nose which arrests it, the man would die. Why is the fluid in the mouth sweet? Because sometimes a man eats food that is revolting to him, so that he throws it up, and were the fluid in his mouth not sweet, he would not recover [from his revulsion].[6]

18. R. Tahalifa of Caesarea said in the name of R. Pilla: Pause and consider how many miracles the Holy One performs for man and yet he is not aware of them. If a man swallowed hard bread, it would lacerate his innards as it went down into his bowels. So the Holy One created a fountain [of saliva] in his throat, which conveys the bread down safely.[7]

19. Whatever was created during the six days of creation needs further doing: mustard needs sweetening, lupines need sweetening, wheat needs grinding, even man needs finishing.[8]

20. The tyrant Rufus asked R. Akiva: Whose works are more comely—those of the Holy One or those of flesh and blood? R. Akiva: Those of flesh and blood are more comely. The tyrant Rufus: But think of heaven and earth—can man make anything like them? R. Akiva: Do not speak to me of matters that are above mortals and over which they have no power, but only of matters that are to be found among human beings. The tyrant Rufus: Why do you have yourselves circumcised?[9] R. Akiva: I knew that you were going to ask me this question. That is why I anticipated you by saying, "The works of flesh and blood are more comely than those of the Holy One." [To prove his point] R. Akiva brought Rufus ears of grain and delicate breads, saying, "The ears of grain are the work of the Holy One, the breads the work of flesh and blood—are not the loaves of bread more comely?" Then R. Akiva brought him flax stalks and garments made in Beth-shean, saying, "The first are the work of God; the second, the work of man. Are not the garments more to be admired?" Then the tyrant Rufus asked, "Assuming that He desires circumcision, why does the infant not emerge from his mother's womb circumcised?" R. Akiva replied, "Why does the umbilical cord emerge with the infant? Should not the mother have had the infant's umbilical cord cut off [in the womb]? As to your question of why an infant does not emerge circumcised, it is because the Holy One gave the precepts to Israel to purify them."[10]

21. "The God of Israel said, The Rock of Israel spoke to me" (2 Sam. 23:3). [In thus giving God His full titles], King David meant to intimate: I will thus call attention to the kingship, the greatness, and the might of the Holy One. Every day a man is formed [by Him], every day a man is born; every day a man lives, every day a man dies; every day a man's spirit is taken from him [in sleep] and deposited with the spirit's true Owner; every day he is fed out of the fruit of his deeds, just as the infant is fed out of his mother's breast.[11]

22. R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said in the name of R. Simon ben Eleazar: The seven times Koheleth mentioned "vanity"

---

1. Gen. R. 1:3.
2. B. Ber 61a–b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. Gen. R. 17:6; Eccles. R. 3:18, §1.
4. Gen. R. 67:3: Tanhuma B, Va-yikra, §18.
5. And causes the eye to smart when shed for a long time.
6. Tanhuma B, Hukkat, §1; Num. R. 18:22.
7. Exod. R. 24:1.
8. Circumcision.
9. And thus mutilate a member created by God.
10. Tanhuma B, Tazria, §7; Tanhuma, Tazria, §5.
11. TdEZ 15 (JPS, p. 463).

correspond to the seven worlds a man beholds. At the age of one, he is like a king lounging in a canopied litter, being hugged and kissed by everyone. At two and three, he is like a pig, sticking his hands into the gutters and putting whatever he finds into his mouth. At ten, he leaps about like a kid. At twenty, he is like a neighing horse, making himself attractive as he goes looking for a wife. Once wed, he has a saddle put upon him, and he works like an ass. After he brings children into the world, he has to brazen his face like a dog in order to provide food for himself and his children. When grown old, he is [bent] like an ape.[1]

23. Judah ben Tema used to say: At the age of five, one is fit for Scripture; at ten, for Mishnah; at thirteen, for [fulfilling the] precepts; at fifteen, for Gemara; at eighteen, for the bridal chamber; at twenty, to pursue [a calling]; at thirty, for the peak of strength; at forty, for understanding; at fifty, for counsel; at sixty, for mature age; at seventy, for a hoary head; at eighty—a sign of exceptional strength; at ninety—bent [beneath the weight of years]; at a hundred—as one that is already dead, who has passed away and ceased to be in this world.[2]

24. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: If the old say to you, "Demolish," while the young say, "Build," demolish and do not build, because demolition by the old is building, while building by the young is demolition, and the example is Rehoboam son of Solomon.[3]

25. R. Jonathan said, "Solomon first wrote Song of Songs, then Proverbs, and then Ecclesiastes," inferring the order in which these books were written from the way of the world. When a man is young, he utters words of song; when mature, he speaks in proverbs; when old, he talks of [life's] vanities.[4]

26. Old men lack sagacity, and children perspicacity.[5]

27. R. Isaac said: The verse "The vanity of youth leads to blackening" (Eccles. 11:10)[6] implies that the things a man does in his youth blacken his face [with shame] in his old age.[7]

28. R. Joshua bar Nahmani said: Four causes bring old age prematurely to a man: anxiety, provocation by children, a bad wife, and wars.[8]

29. Being steeped in lewdness brings on old age prematurely.[9]

30. "Before the days of sorrow come" (Eccles. 12:1), meaning: the days of old age.[10]

31. "Therefore let every pious man pray unto Thee when hard times befall"[11] (Ps. 32:6), "hard times" being old age, according to R. Abba. Concerning his old age, a man should pray that his eyes may [continue] to see, his mouth to eat, and his feet to walk. For when a man grows old, all his functions desert him.[12]

32. Old men's intelligence changes [for the worse], their lips tremble [so that they cannot enjoy their food], and their ears grow hard [of hearing].[13]

33. To an old man, even a tiny mound is like the highest of mountains.[14]

34. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] asked R. Simeon ben Halafta: Why did we not have the pleasure of receiving you during the [recent] festival, as my forebears had the pleasure of receiving your forebears? R. Simeon replied: [Little] rocks have become tall, near things have become distant, two [legs] have become three, and that which makes peace in the house has ceased to be.[15]

35. A Caesar once asked R. Joshua ben Hananiah: Why did you not attend Be Avidan?[16] He replied: The mountain is covered with snow; it is surrounded by ice; its dogs no longer bark; and its stones no longer grind.[17]

In the school of Rav, it was said [of old age]: What I did not lose, I seek.[18]

We have been taught that R. Yose ben Kisma said: Two are better than three.[19] Alas for the one thing that goes and does not return. What is that? R. Hisda said: One's youth.

When R. Dimi came [from the Land of Israel], he said: Youth is a wreath of roses, old age a wreath of thorns.[20]

36. Happy is our youth if it has not disgraced our old age.[21]

---

1. Eccles. R. 1:2, §1; Yalkut, Eccles., §966.
2. Avot 5:21.
3. See 1 Kings 12. B. Meg 31b.
4. Song R. 1:1, §10.
5. B. Shab 89b.
6. JV: "For youth and the prime of life are vanity." But shaharut ("prime of life") also means "blackness."
7. B. Shab 152a.
8. Tanhuma, Hayye Sarah, §2.
9. B. Shab 152a.
10. B. Shab 151b.
11. JV: "at a time when Thou mayest be found (metzo)." But metzo, whose meaning is uncertain, has been translated "trouble, anxiety."
12. Tanhuma, Mi-ketz, §10.
13. B. Shab 152a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
14. Ibid.
15. I have become old: walking uphill has become harder; my eyes, which once could see far in the distance, barely see at close range; I now walk with the help of a third leg [a walking stick]; my sexual potency is no more. B. Shab 152a.
16. A gathering place for the sages of Rome. For other meanings, see above, part 2, chap. 1, §123.
17. My hair and beard are white, my voice is barely audible, and my teeth are worn to the gums.
18. I walk about bent as though looking for something lost on the ground.
19. Two legs than two legs and a stick.
20. B. Shab 152a.
21. B. Suk 53a.

37. "And Abraham became old" (Gen. 24:1). Until Abraham, there was no old age, so that one who wished to speak with Abraham might mistakenly find himself speaking to Isaac, or one who wished to speak with Isaac might mistakenly find himself speaking to Abraham. But when Abraham came, he pleaded for old age, saying, "Master of the universe, You must make a visible distinction between father and son, between a youth and an old man, so that the old man may be honored by the youth." God replied, "As you live, I shall begin with you." So Abraham went off, passed the night, and arose in the morning. When he arose, he saw that the hair of his head and of his beard had turned white. He said, "Master of the universe, if You have given me white hair as a mark of old age, [I do not find it attractive]." "On the contrary," God replied, "the hoary head is a crown of glory" (Prov. 16:31).[1]

38. "And Abraham was old" (Gen. 24:1). Why does Scripture say it again? Has it not already been said that "Abraham and Sarah were old" (Gen. 18:11)? R. Ammi explained: In the earlier verse, old age combined with virility is meant; while in the latter verse, old age without virility is intended.[2]

39. The glory of a face is its beard.[3]

40. A beard is beauty in a man—in a woman, a blemish.[4]

41. When is a woman old? When she is called "Mother" and doesn't mind.[5]

42. An old man in a house is an obstacle in the house. An old woman in a house is a treasure in the house.[6]

43. "We are strangers before Thee. . . . Our days on the earth are as a shadow" (1 Chron. 29:15). Would that it were as the shadow of a wall or of a tree! But it is as the shadow of a bird in flight, for Scripture also says, "As a shadow that passeth away" (Ps. 144:4). "And without hope" (1 Chron. 29:15)—no one can hope that he will not die, for all know and affirm with their mouth that they will die.[7]

44. "His days are as a passing shadow" (Ps. 144:4). Had Scripture said, "As the shadow of a wall"—that has staying power; "As the shadow of a date palm"—that, too, has staying power. But like what kind of shadow? Like the shadow of a bird, said R. Huna in the name of R. Aha: as it passes, its shadow, too, passes.[8]

45. Mankind are like grasses in the field—while some blossom, others wilt.[9]

46. Flesh and blood: here today tomorrow no more.[10]

47. "Who art thou, that thou art afraid of man?" (Isa. 51:12). R. Judah the son of R. Simeon said: The question may be illustrated by the parable of a man who saw a worm which terrified him—it looked to him like a glowing coal, and we call it night coal [firefly]. He was told: Is this what terrifies you? At night it looks like a fiery burning coal, but when morning comes, you find that it is nothing more than a worm.[11]

48. R. Yohanan said: The word "man" [adam] is an acrostic of "dust," "blood," and "gall."[12] The word "flesh" [basar] is an acrostic of "shame, "stench," and "worm";[13] according to some, the words are "shame," "Sheol," and "worm."[14]

49. "A time to be born, a time to die" (Eccles. 3:2). At the time one is born, the time he is to die is set. When a man is born, it is decreed for him how many years he is to live. If he merits it, he completes the years given him; if not, their number is diminished. So taught R. Akiva. But the sages said: If he merits it, more years are given him. If not, his years are diminished.

The following story supports the sages.

One of the notables of Sepphoris had occasion to celebrate the circumcision of his son, and the inhabitants of En Te'enah came up to honor him [with their presence], among them R. Simeon ben Halafta. Upon arriving at the gate of the city, they noticed youngsters standing and playing in front of a courtyard. When the youngsters saw R. Simeon ben Halafta, who was both distinguished and handsome, they exclaimed, "We will not let you go until you do a little dance for us." He said to them, "Such is not for me—I am an old man." Though he rebuked them, they were neither frightened nor cowed. He lifted up his face and saw the house in the courtyard about to collapse on the youngsters for their impertinence, so he said to them, "Will you first do what I tell you? Go tell the owner of this courtyard that if he is asleep, he had better wake up, because while the beginning of sin is sweet, its end is bitter."

At the sound of their conversation, the owner of the house woke up. He came out and fell at R. Simeon ben Halafta's feet, saying, "My master, I beg of you, pay no attention to their words—they are but children, and foolish." R. Simeon: "But what can I do, seeing that the decree [that the house collapse] has already been issued? I will, however, postpone it for you until you remove everything

---

1. B. BM 87a; Gen. R. 65:9; Tanhuma, Hayye Sarah, §1.
2. Gen. R. 48:16.
3. B. Shab 152a.
4. P. Kid 2:6, 62d.
5. B. Nid 9b.
6. B. Ar 19a.
7. Gen. R. 96:2.
8. Eccles. R. 1:2, §1.
9. B. Er 54a.
10. P. Sanh 6:12, 23d.
11. PR 33:4 (YJS 2:638).
12. The initial letters of these Hebrew words (efer, dam, marah) combine to form adam.
13. The initial letters of the three (bushah, seruhah, rimmah) combine to form basar.
14. B. Sot 5a.

that you own in this courtyard." As soon as the man had removed all that he owned in the courtyard, the [house] tottered and collapsed.

R. Simeon and his companions then went on to share in the celebration of the circumcision. The child's father served them seven-year-old wine, saying, "Drink some of this superb wine; I trust that at the child's wedding feast, the God of heaven will let me serve you some more of the same vintage, which I intend to age." They responded, "As you have brought this child into the covenant [of Abraham], so may you bring him to Torah and to the nuptial canopy." They went on feasting until midnight.

At midnight R. Simeon ben Halafta, who relied on his [spiritual] strength, set out [with his companions] to walk to his hometown. On the road, the angel of death met him and asked, "Is it because people like you rely on your good deeds that you venture out at a time that is not the time [to be abroad]?" R. Simeon: "And you, who are you?" The angel of death, [smiling]: "I am the emissary of Him who is everywhere." R. Simeon: "Why are you smiling?" The angel: "At the talk of mortals, who say, 'Thus-and-thus shall we do,' though not one of them knows when he may be summoned to die. The same man in whose home you have just feasted, who has said to you, 'I am aging more of this wine to serve at my son's wedding feast'—look, his son's name tag is with me. After thirty days, I am to take him."

R. Simeon ben Halafta then said to the angel of death, "As you live, show me my tag." The angel: "I have no power over you or the likes of you." R. Simeon: "Why not?" The angel: "Because day after day, as you labor in Torah and at precepts, and perform deeds of mercy, the Holy One keeps adding years to your years." R. Simeon: "May it be the Holy One's will that, even as you have no power over our name tags, so shall you have no power to counter our prayers." They besought mercy, and the infant remained alive.

However, R. Akiva said: What relevance does such a story have? The story is of no consequence to me, since there is the explicit verse "The number of thy days I will fulfill" (Exod. 23:26). Consider now: Moses performed so many precepts, so many deeds of charity. Yet in the end he was told, "The time is drawing near for thee to die" (Deut. 31:14). It thus follows: "A time to be born, and a time to die" (Eccles. 3:2).[1]

50. R. Joshua ben Korhah said: When one comes close to his parents' age, let him think of death five years before and five years after.[2]

51. Though a plague may last seven years, no one dies before his time.[3]

52. Our masters taught: One who falls sick and is close to death should be told, "Confess, for all who are sentenced to death should confess." Let one who goes out into the marketplace regard himself as turned over to a Roman officer [for execution]. Let one who has a headache regard himself as restrained with an [iron] collar. Let one who falls down while going up to his couch regard himself as being taken up to the torturer's scaffold for examination. He who is taken up to the scaffold is saved if he has persuasive advocates, but if not, he is not saved. And these are one's advocates: repentance and good deeds. Even if nine hundred and ninety-nine argue for his condemnation and only one argues in his favor, he is saved, for it is said, "If there be for him an angel, an intercessor, one among a thousand, to vouch for the man's uprightness; then He is gracious unto him, and saith: 'Deliver him from going down to the pit, I have found a ransom' " (Job 33:23–24). R. Eliezer son of R. Yose the Galilean said: The verse means that if, in the angel who argues for condemnation, nine hundred and ninety-nine parts tend to condemn but one part argues in the man's favor, he is saved, for the text may be read, "One intercessor who is a thousandth part."[4]

53. The life of any sick person is deemed to be in danger.[5]

54. R. Alexandri said in the name of R. Hiyya bar Abba: The miracle wrought for a sick man is greater than the miracle wrought for Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah. The miracle for Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah involved an ordinary fire lit by a human being, but the [fevered] fire of a sick man is from Heaven—who can extinguish that?[6]

55. "God hath heard the voice of the lad because [he prayed] there"[7] (Gen. 21:17), because of his prayer for himself. A sick man's prayer in his own behalf is more effective than those of anyone else.[8]

56. "For this [an easy death] shall everyone that is godly pray unto Thee in the time of finding" (Ps. 32:6). "The time of finding," said R. Nahman bar Isaac, refers to death, as in the verse "Death has many findings (totzaot)" (Ps. 68:21).

We have likewise been taught: Nine hundred and three kinds of death have been created in the world, a number intimated in the numerical value of the letters in the world totzaot. The most painful of them all is the croup, and the least painful of them all is "the kiss," which is like drawing a bit of hair out of milk.

R. Yohanan said: "The time of finding"—this refers to burial, as is said, "When they can find the grave" (Job 3:22).[9]

57. Our masters taught: If one dies suddenly, that is "death by snatching away." If he is sick one day and then

---

1. Eccles. R. 3:2, §3; Deut. R. 9:2–3.
2. Gen. R. 65:12.
3. B. Sanh 29a.
4. B. Shab 32a.
5. Eccles. R. 3:2, §2.
6. B. Ned 41a.
7. JV: "the voice of the lad where he is."
8. Gen. R. 53:14.
9. B. Ber 8a.

dies, that is "death by being hustled away." R. Hananiah ben Gamaliel said: That is "death by a stroke." If one dies after two days' illness, that is "delayed death." After three days, it is "death by reproof." After four, it is "death by reprimand." After five, it is "normal death of all men."

If one dies before fifty, that is "premature death."[1] At sixty, it is "death at the hands of Heaven." At seventy, it is "death of a hoary head." At eighty, it is "death at a ripe old age." Rabbah said: From fifty to sixty is "premature death."

When R. Joseph turned sixty, he made a festive day for the sages, saying: I have just passed beyond the age of premature death.

R. Huna died suddenly. When the sages were concerned about the meaning of his death, a pair of sages from Adiabene said to them: What we were taught concerning such a death applies only to one who has not yet reached ripe old age [eighty]. After one has reached it, even sudden death is "death by a kiss."[2]

58. We have been taught: If a man dies smiling, it is a good omen for him; if he dies weeping, it is a bad omen for him. If his face is turned upward, it is a good omen for him; if it is turned downward, it is a bad omen for him. If he faces the people around him, it is a good omen for him; if he faces the wall, it is a bad omen for him. If his face is greenish, it is a bad omen; if bright and ruddy, it is a good omen. If he dies on Sabbath eve, it is a good omen; if at the Sabbath's outgoing, a bad omen. If he dies on the eve of the Day of Atonement, it is a bad omen; if at the outgoing of the Day of Atonement, it is a good omen. If he dies of a disease of the bowels, it is a good omen, because most of the righteous die of such a disease.[3]

59. It is said of the angel of death that he is full of eyes [being, so to speak, everywhere]. Accordingly, when a sick man is about to die, the angel of death stands over the man's pillow, in his hand a drawn sword, a drop of gall hanging from its tip. When the sick man sees him, he trembles and opens his mouth [in terror]. Just then, the angel of death drops the gall into his mouth, and from it he dies—from it, his corpse begins to emit a stench and his face turns green.[4]

60. When the soul leaves the body, its cry [of anguish] goes from one end of the world to the other.

When R. Samuel brother of R. Phinehas son of R. Hama died in Sikhnin,[5] R. Phinehas's associates were sitting with him [in Sepphoris]. Something amusing occurred to them, and they began to laugh. At this, R. Phinehas said to them: The cry of my brother's soul is now breaking cedars and uprooting oaks, and yet you sit here unaware.[6]

61. R. Sheshet, who was blind, sensed the angel of death in the marketplace and said to him: Will you seize me in the marketplace as though I were a beast? Come to my house!

The angel of death appeared to R. Ashi in the marketplace. R. Ashi said to him: Give me thirty days' respite, so that I may go over my studies, inasmuch as it is said [in heaven], "Happy is he who comes here with his learning in hand."

When the angel of death came back on the thirtieth day, R. Ashi asked him: What is the urgency? The angel of death replied: R. Huna [bar Nathan] is close on your heels,[7] and remember, "No sovereignty may encroach upon another even by as little as a hairsbreadth."[8]

62. While seated at the bedside of R. Nahman, Rava saw him lapsing into the sleep of death. Yet R. Nahman managed to say to Rava, "Tell the angel of death not to torment me." Rava replied, "But are you not important enough [to tell him yourself]?" R. Nahman: "Who is sufficiently important, esteemed, or vigorous enough [on his deathbed to make such a request]?" Then Rava implored R. Nahman, "Show yourself to me [in a dream]." When he did show himself [after he died], Rava asked him, "Did you suffer any pain?" and he replied, "As little as taking a hair from milk. Still, if the Holy One were to say to me, 'Go back to that world,' I would not consent, the fear of death being so great."[9]

63. Once, as workers were digging in R. Nahman's ground, R. Ahai bar Josiah [who was buried there] snorted at them. They went and told R. Nahman, "Someone snorted at us." So R. Nahman went to the place and asked him, "Who are you?" "I am Ahai bar Josiah." R. Nahman: "But did not R. Mari say that [even] the righteous will someday become dust?" R. Ahai bar Josiah: "Who is this Mari? I do not know him." R. Nahman: "Yet surely there is the verse 'And the dust shall return to the earth as it was' " (Eccles. 12:7). R. Ahai: "He who taught you Ecclesiastes did not teach you Proverbs, where it is written, 'But envy is rot to the bones' [Prov. 14:30]: he who has envy in his heart—his bones rot away; but he who has no envy in his heart—his bones do not rot away." R. Nahman then felt R. Ahai's person and perceived that it had physical substance. So he said, "Let my master arise and come to my house." R. Ahai: "You now show evidence that you have not studied even the Prophets, for it is written, 'And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves' " (Ezek. 37:13). R. Nahman: "But it is also written, 'For dust art thou, and unto dust thou shalt return' " (Gen. 3:19). R. Ahai: "That will happen only one hour before the resurrection of the dead."[10]

---

1. Literally, "death by excision."
2. B. MK 28a.
3. B. Ket 103b.
4. B. AZ 20b.
5. As in Midrash Sam. 9:30. R. Phinehas lived in Sepphoris, which, like Sikhnin, was in Galilee.
6. B. Yoma 20b; Midrash Sam. 9:3; Gen. R. 6:7.
7. Waiting to succeed you as head of the academy.
8. B. MK 28a.
9. Ibid.
10. It is suggested that the conversation between R. Nahman and R. Ahai bar Josiah took place in a dream (so Pardes Rimmonim, cited by Adin Steinsaltz, in his edition of Shab, ad loc.). B. Shab 152b.

64. R. Nathan said: It is a good omen for a dead person if he is punished immediately after death. Thus, if one dies and is not mourned or not buried properly, or a wild beast drags away his body, or rain wets his bier, it is a good omen for him.[1]

65. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: He who stands by a dying man at the moment of the soul's departure is obligated to rend his garments [even on the Sabbath]. To what may the moment of a soul's departure be likened? To the moment when a Torah scroll is consumed by fire.[2]

66. Our masters taught: There are three partners in man—the Holy One, his father, and his mother. His father inseminates the white substance, out of which are formed the child's bones, sinews, and nails, the brain in his head, and the white of his eye. His mother inseminates the red substance, out of which are formed the child's skin, flesh, and hair, and the black of his eye. The Holy One implants in him spirit, soul, beauty of countenance, eyesight, the capacity to hear, the capacity to speak, and the capacity to walk, as well as knowledge, understanding, and intelligence. When man's time to depart from the world approaches, the Holy One takes away His part and leaves to the father and mother the parts contributed by them.[3]

67. When a man's time comes to die, the Holy One takes His part and leaves the parts contributed by the father and mother before them, and they weep. The Holy One asks them, "Why do you weep? Have I taken anything of yours? I have only taken what belongs to Me!" They reply, "Master of the universe, so long as Your part was mingled with ours, our part was preserved from worms and maggots. But now that You have taken away Your part, behold, our part is exposed and laid open to worms and maggots."

R. Judah [I] the Patriarch used to tell a parable to illustrate what has just been said. A king who owned a vineyard turned it over to a tenant. The king said to his servants, "Go harvest the grapes in my vineyard; take away my share and leave behind the share that belongs to the tenant." They went at once and did what the king ordered, but the tenant began to lament and weep. So the king asked him, "Have I taken anything of yours? Have I not taken only my own?" The tenant replied, "My lord king, so long as your share was with mine, my share was guarded from spoliation and theft. But now that you have removed your share, look, my portion is exposed to spoliation and theft!"[4]

68. R. Judah used to say: Ten strong things have been created in the world. A mountain is strong, but iron cleaves it. Iron is strong, but fire melts it. Fire is strong, but water quenches it. Water is heavy, but clouds carry it. Clouds are heavy, but a wind scatters them. The wind is strong, but the body withstands it. The body is strong, but fear crushes it. Fear is strong, but wine dissipates it. Wine is strong, but sleep works it off. Stronger, however, than all of these is death.[5]

69. In the [margin of] R. Meir's Torah scroll, at the verse "And behold, it was very (meod) good" (Gen. 1:31), there was found written: "And behold, death (mot) was very good."

R. Samuel bar Nahman said: While perched on my grandfather's shoulder, coming up by way of Beth Shean from my own town to Kefar Hanan, I heard R. Simeon ben Eleazar expounding from a teacher's chair in the name of R. Meir: "And behold, it was very good"—and behold, death was very good.[6]

70. What is the difference between the death of young men and that of old men? R. Judah said: When a lamp goes out of itself, it is good for it and good for the wick; but if it does not go out of itself, it is bad for itself and bad for the wick. R. Nehemiah said: When a fig is gathered at the proper time, it is good for the fig and good for the fig tree; but if it is gathered prematurely, it is bad for itself and bad for the tree.

In this regard, the following story: R. Hiyya the Elder and his disciples—some say R. Akiva and his disciples; others say R. Yose ben Halafta and his disciples—used to rise early and sit and study under a certain fig tree, whose owner rose early to gather its fruit. So they said, "He may well suspect us [of stealing his fruit]." What did they do? They changed their place [of study to someone else's tree]. At that, the owner went to them and said, "My masters, this one merit that you have been conferring upon me by sitting and studying under my fig tree, you have now deprived me of." The sages: "We thought you might suspect us [of stealing your figs]." The owner reassured them, and they returned to their former place. Thereafter, what did the owner do? Upon rising in the morning, he no longer gathered the figs, so when the sun beat down upon them, they became wormy. At that, the sages said, "Even as the owner of the fig tree knows when it is ripe for plucking and plucks it, so the Holy One knows when the time has come for the righteous to be removed from the world and removes them." With regard to such removal, Scripture says, "My Beloved is gone down to His garden . . . to browse in the gardens, and to pick lilies" (Song 6:2).[7]

71. A story of a woman who, grown very old, came before R. Yose ben Halafta and said to him, "Master, I have grown so very old that my life has become hideous. I find no taste in food or drink, and I wish to depart from the world." He asked, "How did you extend your life for so long?" She replied, "Whenever I have something to do, however enjoyable it may be, I am in the habit of putting it aside early every morning and going to the synagogue."

---

1. B. Sanh 47a.
2. Since a soul released from the dead body and the words in a burned Torah scroll both rise to heaven. B. Shab 105b.
3. B. Nid 31a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
4. Eccles. R. 5:10, §2.
5. B. BB 10a.
6. Gen. R. 9:5.
7. Gen. R. 62:2; Eccles. R. 5:11, §2; P. Ber 2:8, 5b–c.

He said, "For three days, one after another, keep yourself away from the synagogue." She went off and did as he advised, and on the third day she took sick and died.[1]

72. [The city of] Luz[2]—even the angel of death has no authority to enter it. But when the old men in it grow weary of living, they go outside its wall and die.[3]

73. Two Cushites stood in the presence of King Solomon—"Elihoreph and Ahijah sons of Shisha, who were [Solomon's] scribes" (1 Kings 4:3). One day, observing that the angel of death looked distressed, Solomon asked him, "Why are you distressed?" The angel of death replied, "Because the two Cushites seated here are about to be summoned by me." So [to thwart the angel of death] Solomon had spirits take charge of the two and convey them to the city of Luz.[4] But as soon as they reached its wall, they died. The following day, Solomon observed that the angel of death was cheerful. When Solomon asked him, "Why are you so cheerful?" he replied, "You sent them to the very place where they were to be summoned by me."

At that, Solomon spoke up, saying, "A man's feet are responsible for him. They lead him to the place where he is about to be summoned."[5]

74. At the hour of death, a man does not jest, and so the words of a dying man are regarded as signed, sealed, and delivered.[6]

75. The sages taught in the name of R. Meir: When a man comes into the world, his fists are clenched, as though to say, "The whole world is mine, and I shall inherit it." But when he departs from the world, his hands are spread open, as though to say, "I have inherited nothing from this world."[7]

76. "As he came forth of his mother's womb, naked shall he go back as he came" (Eccles. 5:14). Geniva said: The verse is to be understood by the parable of a fox who found a vineyard fenced in on all sides, except for one gap, through which he tried to enter but could not [squeeze himself through it]. What did he do? He fasted for three days, until he became lean and slender, and thus squeezed himself through the gap. But after he had eaten [of the grapes], he became fat again, and when he wished to go out through that gap, he could not. He fasted another three days, until he became lean and slender. Returning to his former size, he was able to go out. After getting out, he turned his face to the vineyard and, gazing at it, said, "O vineyard, O vineyard, how goodly are you, and how goodly is your fruit! All that is within you is beautiful and comely, but what benefit can one derive from you? As one goes into you, so must one come out." Such also is the world.[8]

77. "Though he has not seen the sun . . . the other is better off than the one" (Eccles. 6:5). R. Phinehas said: The verse may be understood by the parable of two men sailing on a ship. When they came to a harbor, one got off the ship, went into the city, and saw much food and much drink there. On returning to the ship, he asked the other, "Why did you not go into the city?" The other: "And you, who did go into the city—what did you see?" "I saw much food and much drink." The other: "Did you enjoy any of it?" "No." The other: "I, who did not go into the city, am much better off than you." Hence, "the other is better off than the one."[9]

78. "A good name is better than precious oil, and the day of death better than the day of one's birth" (Eccles. 7:1). When a person is born, all rejoice; when he dies, all weep. It should not be so. When a person is born, all should not rejoice over him, because it is not known what he will be like when grown and what his deeds will be—whether righteous or wicked, good or evil. When he dies, however, if he departs with a good name and leaves the world in peace, people should rejoice.

R. Levi said: The matter may be illustrated by the parable of two vessels sailing the Great [Mediterranean] Sea, one leaving the harbor and the other entering it. As the one left the harbor, all rejoiced over it, but as the other entered the harbor, all did not rejoice. A clever man who was there said to the people, "As I see it, things should be the other way. When a vessel leaves the harbor, all should not rejoice, because they do not know what its lot will be—what seas it will encounter, what storms it will face. But when a vessel enters the harbor all should rejoice over it, for they then know that it has come back safely from the sea and has safely entered the harbor."

It was of this that Solomon said, "The day of death is better than the day of one's birth."[10]

79. R. Berekhiah said: "The time when one is born is to be like the time when one dies" (Eccles. 3:2). Happy is the man who at the time of his death is [as free of sin] as at the time of his birth.[11]

80. When a man's time to die comes, all have power over him, as Cain said, "It will come to pass, that whosoever findeth me will slay me" (Gen. 4:14).[12]

81. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: For a day-old infant, alive, the Sabbath may be desecrated. But for David, king of Israel, dead, the Sabbath may not be desecrated.

R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: A day-old infant, alive,

---

1. Yelammedenu in Yalkut, Prov., §943.
2. See Judg. 1:26.
3. B. Sot 46b.
4. A city where people live forever.
5. B. Suk 53a.
6. B. BB 175a.
7. Eccles. R. 5:14, §1.
8. Ibid.
9. Eccles. R. 6:5, §1; Yalkut, Eccles., §972.
10. Exod. R. 48:1; Eccles. R. 7:1, §4.
11. P. Meg 1:9, 71c.
12. B. Ned 41a.

requires no protection from a weasel or from rats. But Og, king of Bashan, dead, must be protected from a weasel or from rats, for Noah and his children were told, "The fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth" (Gen. 9:2)—as long as a man is alive, the fear of him is laid upon creatures; once he is dead, such fear ceases.[1]

82. "The dead cannot praise the Lord" (Ps. 115:17). A man should always occupy himself with Torah and good deeds before he dies. Once he is dead, the obligation of Torah and good deeds ceases, and the Holy One gets no praise from him. With regard to this, R. Yohanan cited the verse "Among the dead I am released"[2] (Ps. 88:6)—when a man dies, he is released from the obligation of Torah and good deeds.[3]

83. At the time of a man's departure from the world, nothing but Torah and good deeds accompany him.[4]

84. In his lifetime, a man has three friends: his sons, his wealth, and good deeds. At the time of his departure from the world, should he gather his sons and say to them, "I beg of you, come and save me from the punishment of death," they will reply, "Have you not heard that there is no prevailing over the day of death? Is it not written, 'No man can by any means redeem his kin' [Ps. 49:8]? Therefore, go in peace and rest on your couch." At this, he gathers his wealth and says, "For you I labored night and day; I beg of you, redeem me from death." But his wealth replies, "Have you not heard that 'wealth is of no avail on the day of passing away' [Prov. 11:4]?" Then he gathers his good deeds, to whom he says, "Come and save me from death—do not let me depart from the world." They reply, "Go in peace. Even before you arrive [in heaven], we shall have come before you, as is said, 'Thy charity shall go before thee' " (Isa. 58:8).[5]

85. "Give ear, all ye weasellike inhabitants"[6] (Ps. 49:2). Why does the psalm liken the inhabitants of the world to a weasel? Because, just as a weasel drags things in and stores them without knowing for whom it is storing them, so the inhabitants of the world drag things in and store them without knowing for whom they store them. "He heapeth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them" (Ps. 39:7).[7]

86. "He hath made everything beautiful in its time; also He hath caused to be hidden from their hearts" (Eccles. 3:11). The word ha-'olam [h-'vlm], "world," spelled here defectively without the letter vav, is to be read he'elim [h'lm], "caused to be hidden." Had not the Holy One hidden the day of death from the heart of man, no man would build a house or plant a vineyard, for he would say, "Tomorrow I may die—why should I get up and weary myself for the sake of others?" Therefore the Holy One hid the day of death from human beings, in order that a man will go on building and planting. If he merits it, it will be his; if he does not merit it, it will be for others.[8]

87. The sons of R. Hiyya went out regularly to cultivate their fields. Consequently, they forgot their studies to such an extent that they had trouble remembering anything. So one asked the other, "Does our [deceased] father know of our trouble?" The other replied, "How could he know? Does not Scripture say, 'Even if his sons are burdened by trouble, he does not know' (Job 14:21)?"[9] The one objected, "But does it not also say, 'He still feels the pain of his flesh, and his spirit mourns in him' [Job. 14:22], regarding which R. Isaac said, 'Worms in a corpse's flesh are as painful as a needle in the flesh of the living'?"

The dead feel their own pain, but they do not feel the pain of others.[10]

88. Zeiri was in the habit of depositing his money with his landlady. [One day] during the time he went to the house of study and came back, she died. So he went seeking her in the cemetery and asked, "Where is my money?" She replied, "Go and take it from under the door socket in such-and-such a place. And tell my mother to send me a comb and a kohl tube with such-and-such a woman, who [will die] tomorrow and come to be with me."[11]

89. Whenever R. Yohanan finished reading the book of Job, he would say: The end of man is to die, and the end of an animal is to be slaughtered. All are doomed to death. Happy is he who was brought up on the Torah, whose labor was in the Torah, and who thus gave pleasure to his Creator; [happy is he] who grew up to earn a good name and who departed from the world with a good name. Of him, Solomon said, "A good name is better than precious oil, and the day of death than the day of one's birth" (Eccles. 7:1).[12]

Man's Soul

90. "Neither root nor branch" (Mal. 3:19). "Root" is the soul, and "branch" is the body.[13]

91. Antoninus [Caesar] asked Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]: When is the soul placed in a man—at the time of the [heavenly] decree [commanding conception] or at

---

1. B. Shab 151b.
2. JV: "set apart among the dead."
3. B. Shab 30a.
4. Avot 6:9.
5. Cf. the medieval morality play Everyman. PRE 34.
6. JV: "inhabitants of the world." But heled ("world") also means "weasel."
7. P. Shab 14:1, 14c.
8. Tanhuma, Kedoshim, §8; Yalkut, Eccles., §968.
9. JV: "His sons came to honor and he knoweth it not." But the stem kbd may mean "burdened by trouble" as well as "honor."
10. B. Ber 18b.
11. Ibid.
12. B. Ber 17a.
13. B. Sanh 110b.

the time of the embryo's creation? Rabbi: At the time of its creation. Antoninus: Can a piece of unsalted meat remain three days without becoming putrid? It must therefore be at the time conception is decreed. Later, Rabbi used to say: Antoninus taught me this matter, and Scripture supports him, for it says, "My spirit preserves me at the time of Thy decree" (Job 10:12).[1]

92. With regard to whom did David say five times, "Bless the Lord, O my soul"? He said these words with regard to the Holy One and with regard to the soul. As the Holy One fills the entire world, so the soul fills the entire body. As the Holy One sees but is not seen, so the soul sees but is not seen. As the Holy One sustains the entire world, all of it, so the soul sustains the entire body. As the Holy One is pure, so the soul is pure. As the Holy One dwells in chambers that are innermost, so the soul dwells in chambers that are innermost. Therefore let him [i.e., man] who has these five characteristics come and praise Him who has these five characteristics.[2]

93. The breath of life is known by five names: life, spirit, soul, the solitary, the one that lives on. "Life" refers to the blood, as is said, "For the blood is the life" (Deut. 12:23). "Spirit" refers to its capacity to go up and down, as is said, "Who knoweth the spirit of man whether it goeth upward" (Eccles. 3:21). "Soul" refers to man's distinctive character. "The solitary": while all other parts of the body are pairs, this one is solitary in the body. "The one that lives on": while all other parts die, it lives on in the body.

The soul fills the entire body, and when a man is asleep, it goes up and draws new life for him from above.[3]

94. The words "Unto Thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul" (Ps. 25:1) are to be considered in the light of the verse "Into Thy hand I commit my spirit. Thou restorest . . . for Thou, O Lord, art God of truth" (Ps. 31:6). As matters go in the world, a man with whom things are left for safekeeping may confuse one man's things with a second man's things, and the second man's things with the first man's, for some things are not easily told apart. But with the Holy One, there is no such confusion, for "Thou, O Lord, art God of truth" (ibid.). Thus, is it conceivable that a man could rise in the morning and seek his spirit but not find it? Or that he could find his spirit in another's possession, or another's spirit in his possession? Hence it is said, "Thou restorest [what is left with Thee for safekeeping], for Thou, O Lord, art God of truth."

R. Alexandri said: A mortal in whose possession new things are left for safekeeping and with whom the things remain a long time returns them worn and used. Not so the Holy One: With Him, things worn and used are left for safekeeping, and He returns them as good as new. You can see for yourself that this is true: a worker labors the whole day, and his spirit within him grows weary and worn. But when he goes to sleep, he deposits his spirit with the Holy One, and at dawn it returns to his body a new creation, as is said, "[Spirits] are new every morning; great is Thy faithfulness" (Lam. 3:23).[4]

1. God's decree to the spirit to enter a particular drop of semen at the time of conception. See above in this chapter, §6. JV: "Thy providence hath preserved my spirit." B. Sanh 91b.
2. B. Ber 10a.
3. Gen. R. 14:9.

Man's Delight

95. Rav said to R. Hamnuna: My son, if you have the means, treat yourself well. For in Sheol there is no delight, and death is not to be postponed. Should you say, "I will make provisions for my children"—who can tell in what order people will arrive in Sheol?[5] Human beings are like the herbs of the field—some may be blossoming at the time others are wilting.

Samuel said to R. Judah: Keen scholar, snatch and eat, snatch and drink. The world, which we all must leave, lasts no longer than a wedding feast.[6]

96. R. Yose said: A person may not mortify himself by fasting, lest [he fall ill and] become a charge on the community, which will then have to maintain him.

R. Judah said in the name of Rav: What is R. Yose's reason? Because in saying, "And let man become a live soul" (Gen. 2:7), Scripture means: Keep alive the soul I gave you.[7]

97. We have been taught that R. Eleazar ha-Kappar Berabbi said: "And he shall make atonement for him for that he sinned against a soul" (Num. 6:11). But against what soul has the Nazirite sinned?[8] Rather, the verse means that because he afflicted himself through abstention from wine [he sinned against his own soul]. The matter may be argued a fortiori: if one who has afflicted himself only by abstaining from wine is called a sinner, how much more by far one who afflicts himself by abstaining from everything. Hence, it follows that one who keeps fasting is called a sinner.[9]

98. We have been taught that Simeon the Righteous said: I have never eaten of the guilt offering brought by a Nazirite who had become defiled,[10] except once. On that occasion a Nazirite [who had become defiled] came up from the south [to bring his guilt offering and shave off the hair of his head].[11] When I saw that he had beautiful eyes, was handsome in appearance, and his curly hair was arranged in symmetrical locks, I asked him, "My son, what was your reason [for becoming a Nazirite, so that now, having become unclean], you must destroy the beautiful hair of

4. MTeh 25:2.
5. Your children may precede you. Cf. Ecclesiasticus 14:11–12.
6. B. Er 54a.
7. B. Ta 22b; Tos Ta 2:12.
8. He did not hurt anyone's soul—he merely denied his body some pleasure.
9. B. Ned 10a.
10. He regarded as a sin the abstention from wine, which Naziriteship required, and therefore would not partake of the guilt offering a Nazirite who had inadvertently become ritually unclean had to bring.
11. See Num. 6:9.

your head?" He replied, "While grazing my father's sheep in my town, I went to draw water from a well and looked at my reflection in the water, whereupon my impulse to evil rushed upon me and endeavored to drive me out of the world [by tempting me to admire my hair]. But I said to it, " 'Wicked one! Why, in a world that is not yours, do you vaunt yourself over one who is destined to turn into worms and maggots? By the Temple service, I swear that I will shave off [the hair on my head] for the sake of Heaven.' "[1] I immediately arose and kissed him on his head, saying, "My son, may there be many Nazirites like you in Israel! Of your [vow to be a Nazirite], Scripture says, 'A Nazirite's vow to set himself apart belongs to the Lord' " (Num. 6:2).[2]

99. Who is a pious fool? He who sees a ripe fig and says, "[Instead of enjoying it myself], I will give it to the first man I meet."[3]

100. Sages said in the name of Rav: A man will have to give reckoning and account for everything that his eye saw and he did not eat.

So concerned was R. Eleazar with carrying out this tradition that he used to collect small change and use it [to purchase bits of new produce]. Thus, throughout the year he was able to taste every kind of food at least once.[4]

101. He who destroys anything from which enjoyment may be derived transgresses "Thou shalt not destroy" (Deut. 20:19).[5]

102. Three things restore a man's spirit: [beautiful] sounds, sights, and scents. Three things increase a man's self-esteem: a beautiful home, a beautiful wife, and beautiful clothes.[6]

103. Spend less on your food and drink, and more on your dwelling.[7]

104. "I forgot what happiness was" (Lam. 3:17) refers, said R. Isaac Nappaha, to a beautiful bed and the beautiful spread on it.[8]

105. At the sight of comely human beings and beautiful trees, one should say, "Blessed be He who has created beautiful creatures."[9]

106. At the sight of beautiful creatures and beautiful trees, one should say, "Blessed be He who has such in His world."[10]

107. "As when new wine is present in the cluster, one saith: 'Destroy it not—a blessing is to be spoken over it' " (Isa. 65:8). There is the story of a pious man who went out to his vineyard on the Sabbath and saw a ripe cluster. [Though he could not pick it because of the Sabbath], he spoke a blessing over it, saying, "This cluster deserves to have a blessing said over it."[11]

108. If a man says no more than "How beautiful is this bread! Blessed be He who is everywhere for having created it," that is sufficient blessing over the bread.[12]

109. There is the story of Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel, who, while standing on an ascent to the Temple Mount, saw a very beautiful gentile woman. He exclaimed, "How noble are Thy works, O Lord" (Ps. 104:24).

On the other hand, when R. Akiva saw the wife of the wicked tyrant Rufus, he spat, laughed, and wept: spat, because she came from a putrid drop; laughed, because she was eventually to become a proselyte, and he was to wed her; wept, because such beauty would waste in the dust.[13]

110. R. Abbahu taught: What is the proof that the Holy One admires men of high stature? The verse "I destroyed the Amorite . . . whose height was like the height of the cedars" (Amos 2:9).[14]

111. R. Judah said: He who goes outdoors in the days of Nisan and sees trees blooming should say, "Blessed be He who has His world lack nothing and who has created in it goodly creatures and goodly trees for the joy of mankind."

Mar Zutra bar Tobiah said in the name of Rav: What is the proof that one must say a blessing over a fragrant aroma? The verse "Let every breath praise the Lord" (Ps. 150:6). What is the thing that breath enjoys? A fragrant aroma.[15]

112. "No one to converse with (siah, 'tree') in the field" (Gen. 2:5). All trees converse (mesihin),[16] as it were, with one another. Indeed, one may add, all trees converse with mortals; all trees—created, as trees were, to provide fellowship[17] for mortals.[18]

113. "He that is dead is to be put to death" (Deut. 17:6). While still alive, the wicked is considered the same as dead, because he sees the sun shining but does not say the blessing "He that forms light"; he sees it set but does

---

1. As required at the end of the period of Naziriteship. Num. 6:13–18.
2. B. Ned 9b.
3. P. Sot 3:4, 19a.
4. P. Kid 4:9, 66d.
5. Midrash Aggadah, Shofetim (ed. Buber [Vienna, 1894], p. 199).
6. B. Ber 57b.
7. B. Pes 114a.
8. B. Shab 25b.
9. Tos Ber 6:4.
10. B. Ber 58b.
11. Gen. R. 29:2.
12. Tos Ber 4:4.
13. B. AZ 20a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
14. B. Bekh 45b.
15. B. Ber 43b.
16. The usual word for "tree" is etz. Hence siah ("conversation"), used instead, is construed in a dual sense: "tree" and "converse, provide fellowship." JV: "Every tree (siah) in the field."
17. "Fellowship"—Gen. R. TA; BR: "benefit."
18. Gen. R. 13:2.

not say the blessing "Who bringest on evenings." He eats and drinks but does not say grace. The righteous, however, bless God for each and every thing they eat and drink, see and hear.[1]

Food and Drink

114. R. Avdimi of Haifa said: Before a man eats and drinks, he [being distraught] has two hearts [as it were]. After he eats and drinks, he has but one heart.[2]

115. "He who does good to his own person is a man of mercy" (Prov. 11:17), as may be inferred from what Hillel the Elder once said. After bidding farewell to his disciples, he kept walking along with them. His disciples asked him, "Master, where are you going?" He replied, "To do a good turn to a guest in my house." They said, "Every day you seem to have a guest." He replied, "Is not my poor soul a guest in my body—here today and tomorrow here no longer?"[3]

116. Even if you do no more than go up to the roof [of your own house], take your victuals with you. Even if a hundred pumpkins cost but one zuz in town, be sure to have some under your skirts [before you set out to go there].[4]

117. The sages taught in the name of R. Meir: Chew well with your teeth, and you will find [strength] in your legs.[5]

118. A proverb says: The stomach carries the legs.[6]

119. He who prolongs the meal at his table has his days and years prolonged. Why? Because a poor man may come along and the host will give him something to eat. In this connection, it is written, "The altar of wood three cubits high" (Ezek. 41:22), and also, "He said unto me: 'This is the table that is before the Lord' " (ibid.). Why does the verse begin by calling it an altar and end by calling it a table? Because, as R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar both said, as long as the Temple stood, the altar made expiation for Israel, but now a man's table makes expiation for him.[7]

120. Our masters taught: "When the Lord thy God shall enlarge thy border, as He hath promised thee, and thou shalt say, I want to eat meat" (Deut. 12:20). The Torah here teaches the rule of conduct that a person should not eat meat unless he has an urge to eat it. One might suppose that a person may buy meat in the market and eat it; Scripture therefore states, "Thou mayest slaughter of thy cattle and of thy sheep" (Deut. 12:2) [but not those bought in a market]. One might then suppose that he may slaughter all his cattle and eat, all his sheep[8] and eat; the text therefore states, "Of thy cattle," and not all your cattle; "of thy sheep," and not all your sheep. Hence R. Eleazar ben Azariah said, A man whose entire possessions amount to a maneh may buy a litra of vegetables for his stew; if he has ten maneh, he may buy a litra of fish for his stew; if he has fifty maneh, he may buy a litra of meat for his stew; if he has a hundred maneh, he may have a full pot of meat put on for him every day. And how often are the others to cook meat? Only on Sabbath eve.

Rav said: We must defer to the opinion of the venerable [R. Eleazar].

R. Yohanan said: Abba[9] comes from a healthy family [and can get along without meat]. But as for us, he who has a penny in his purse should hasten with it to the shopkeeper [to buy meat].

R. Nahman said, As for us, we must even borrow to eat [meat].

"The lambs are for thy clothing" (Prov. 27:26). Your clothing should be of the fleece of your own lambs. "The he-goats, the price of a field" (ibid.). It is better for a person to sell his field and buy he-goats [with the proceeds] than to sell his he-goats and buy a field. "The goats' milk will suffice" (Prov. 27:27). The man will then find the goats' milk and the lambs in his house sufficient to provide for his sundry needs [and he need not slaughter the mothers for meat]. "For thy food, for the food of thy household" (ibid.)—your own sustenance thus has priority over the sustenance of your household. "And life for thy maidens" (ibid.). Mar Zutra son of R. Nahman said: [By disciplining] your maidens, give them life. Here the Torah teaches the rule of conduct that a parent should not accustom his child to meat and wine.[10]

121. A stubborn and rebellious son is condemned because of what he will become in the end.

We have been taught that R. Yose the Galilean said: Is it conceivable that merely because the young man ate a tartemar[11] of meat and drank a log of Italian wine, the Torah would decree that he be brought before the High Court and put to death by stoning? However, the Torah foresaw the ultimate end of the young man sentenced as a disloyal and defiant son. For in the end, after dissipating his father's possessions, he would continue to seek what he had become accustomed to and, when unable to get it, would go out to a crossroads and commit robbery. Therefore the Torah said, "Let him die while yet innocent, and let him not die guilty." For the death of the wicked benefits themselves and the world, while the death of the righteous injures themselves and the world. Sleep and wine of the

---

1. Tanhuma, Berakhah, §7.
2. B. BB 12b.
3. Lev. R. 34:4.
4. B. Pes 113a.
5. B. Shab 152a.
6. Gen. R. 70:8.
7. B. Ber 54b–55a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. If, say, he has only one head of cattle or sheep.
9. Rav's given name. The name Rav, by which he is generally referred to, means "the master."
10. B. Hul 84a.
11. Half a litra.

wicked benefit themselves and the world;[1] sleep and wine of the righteous injure themselves and the world.[2]

122. People say: Your belly you fill, all kinds of ill.[3]

123. If a man is not privileged to have words of Torah enter his innards, let him entreat God's mercy that not too much food and drink enter his innards [so that poverty, if not Torah, will purify him], as is said, "I have purged thee through the furnace of poverty" (Isa. 48:10). As you can put into a furnace every kind of wood there is in the world, and the furnace will burn them all up and consume them, so you can put into a man's gullet every kind of food in the world, and the gullet will take it all in.[4]

124. R. Hisda said: He who can eat barley bread but eats wheat bread [is guilty of waste, and therefore] violates "Thou shalt not destroy" (Duet. 20:19).

R. Papa said: He who can drink beer but drinks wine [is guilty of] waste and therefore violates "Thou shalt not destroy."

But neither of the two opinions is right. The injunction [to care for and] not to destroy one's body has priority.[5]

125. In the west [the Land of Israel], there is a proverb: "He who devours the fat-tail (aliata) must hide in the loft (illita);[6] but he who is content to eat cress (kikule) may lie in a place as public as a dunghill (kikele)."[7]

126. A certain man turned his slave over to a friend to have him teach the slave how to prepare a thousand kinds of dishes. Since the friend taught the slave only eight hundred, the man summoned him to a lawsuit before Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch]. But Rabbi [dismissing the complaint] remarked [to the plaintiff]: Our fathers said, "We have forgotten prosperous living" (Lam. 3:17) [so they conceivably knew such abundance of dishes]. But as for us, we have never even laid eyes on such abundance [so it is remarkable that your friend has taught as many as eight hundred dishes to your slave].[8]

127. The world can live without wine, but the world cannot live without water. The world can live without pepper, but the world cannot live without salt.[9]

128. "From all toil there is some gain," etc. (Prov. 14:23), as may be seen, said R. Simeon bar Abba, from the difference between one who drinks water he took the trouble to boil first and one who drinks water that is cold.[10]

There was a certain man in Sepphoris—some say that it was R. Simeon bar Abba—who used to gather bones [to give them proper burial]. When he saw black bones, he would say, "These are of persons who drank [cold] water." When they were reddish, he would say, "These are of persons who drank wine."[11] When they were white, he would say, "These are of persons who drank hot water."[12]

129. R. Helbo said: It was Phrygian wine and the baths of Emmaus that cut off the ten tribes from Israel.[13] R. Eleazar ben Arakh happened to visit there. He was attracted to its luxuries, and his learning was forgotten. Upon his return, when he arose to read in the Torah scroll, instead of reading, "Ha-hodesh ha-zeh lakhem" (Exod. 12:1), he read, "Ha-horesh hayah libbam."[14] The sages besought mercy in his behalf, and his learning was restored to him.[15]

130. We have been taught that R. Meir said: The tree whose fruit Adam ate was a vine, for nothing brings as much woe to man as wine.[16] R. Judah said: It was the wheat plant, for an infant cannot say "Papa" or "Mama" before he has savored the taste of wheat. R. Nehemiah said: It was a fig tree, for, with the very plant with which they disgraced themselves, they were enabled to set themselves right, as is said, "And they sewed fig leaves together" (Gen. 3:7).[17]

131. "Wine (yayin) and new wine (tirosh) destroy the mind" (Hos. 4:11). Why is wine called yayin, and why is it called tirosh? It is called yayin, said R. Isaac, because it brings (yelalah) woe to the world; it is called tirosh because he who debauches himself with it becomes poor (rosh).[18]

132. "A man who ogles the cup believes himself to be walking on smooth ground" (Prov. 23:31).[19] When a man [lovingly] ogles his cup, the world before him, all of it, appears to be smooth [with neither hollows nor hills].

R. Yohanan said: The ketiv [the text as written] is

---

1. Since they are incapable of inflicting injury while asleep or sodden with wine.
2. B. Sanh 71b–72a.
3. B. Ber 32a.
4. Yalkut, Va-et'hannan, §830; TdE, p. 133 (JPS, pp. 328–29).
5. B. Shab 140b.
6. Because he has squandered his money on costly food, he fears his creditors.
7. Not being in debt, he fears no one. B. Pes 114a.
8. B. Ned 50b.
9. P. Hor 3:6, 48c.
10. Heated water aids digestion and, when boiled, is free from pollution.
11. The color was taken to indicate that, because of the wine, the blood had so increased in the body that it had even suffused the bones.
12. Gen. R. 89:1; Yalkut, Prov., §950.
13. Preoccupied with such luxuries, they neglected the study of Torah and lost their faith.
14. The words mean: "This month shall be unto you." What R. Eleazar came up with made no sense: "The plowman was their heart." He could not even distinguish any longer between letters that appear similar.
15. B. Shab 147b.
16. Here there may be a play on words: yayin ("wine") and taniyya ve-aniyya ("mourning and moaning").
17. B. Sanh 70a–b.
18. "The first is a play on 'ya, ya,' exclamation of woe, the second on the second syllable of tirosh, which is connected with rosh, 'to become poor,' as if tirosh meant, 'You will become poor' " (Yoma, Soncino, p. 372, n. 1). B. Yoma 76b.
19. JV: "When it giveth its color in the cup, when it glideth down smoothly." But ayin ("color") also means "eye."

kis, "the wallet," while the keri [the text as read] is kos, "cup," implying that even as the drunkard ogles the cup, the wine seller ogles the drunkard's wallet.[1]

133. As wine enters each and every part of a man's body, it grows lax, and his mind is confused. Once wine enters, reason leaves. Wherever there is wine, reason is no more. When wine comes in, a secret (sod) goes out, as intimated by the fact that the numerical value of the letters in yayin, "wine," equals seventy,[2] and the numerical value of the letters in sod likewise equals seventy.[3]

Man's sources of conscience and reason are distributed in four areas of the body: two portions in the two kidneys,[4] one portion in the heart, and one portion in the mouth. The sources of both conscience and reason are thus located in these four organs. Correspondingly, the sages have given the number four as the measure of drunkenness, that is, four fourths of a log of undiluted wine, which is the same as four cups. After a man drinks one cup, which equals one-fourth of a log, he loses one-fourth of his intellect. After he drinks two cups, one-half of his intellect leaves him. After he drinks three cups, three-fourths of his intellect leaves him, and his mind is so confused that he begins to speak incoherently. After he drinks the fourth cup, all his intellect leaves him, all his reins are dulled, his mind is confused, and his tongue is tied. He tries to speak but cannot, for his tongue is weighted down.[5]

134. R. Tanhuma said: Wine—its own mother [the vine] cannot stand up under the weight of the juice in the grapes, and you expect to stand up under it? Though the vine is propped up with many reeds and many pronged rods, it cannot stand up [and sags] under the weight of the juice in the grapes. And you expect to stand up under wine?[6]

135. As Noah was about to plant a vineyard, the demon Shamdon met him and suggested: Take me into partnership, but beware, do not trespass into my part. If you do, I will do you harm.[7]

136. When Noah began planting, Satan came by, stationed himself before him, and asked, "What are you planting?" Noah: "A vineyard." Satan: "What is its nature?" Noah: "Its fruit, whether fresh or dried, is sweet, and from it wine is made, which gladdens a man's heart." Satan: "Would you like the two of us, me and you, to plant it together?" Noah: "Very well."

What did Satan do? He brought a ewe lamb and slaughtered it over the vine; then he brought a lion, which he likewise slaughtered over the vine; then a monkey, which he also slaughtered over the vine; and finally a pig, which he again slaughtered over the vine. And with the blood that dripped from them, he watered the vineyard.

The charade was Satan's way of saying that when a man drinks one cup [of wine], he acts like a ewe lamb, humble and meek. When he drinks two, he becomes as mighty as a lion and proceeds to brag extravagantly, saying, "Who is like me?" When he drinks three or four cups, he becomes like a monkey, hopping about, dancing, giggling, and uttering obscenities in public, without realizing what he is doing. Finally, when he becomes blind drunk, he is like a pig, wallowing in mire and coming to rest among refuse.[8]

137. One cup is becoming for a woman; two degrade her. After three, she brazenly solicits sex. After four, she will demand it without a scruple, even of an ass in the marketplace.[9]

138. Wherever you find wine, you will find downfall.[10]

139. Do not get drunk, and you will not sin.[11]

140. R. Isaac said: What is meant by "Look not upon the wine because it reddens" (Prov. 23:31)? Look not upon the wine, because it reddens the faces of the wicked in this world but makes them pale [with shame] in the world-to-come.

Rava read the verse "Look not upon the wine, because it yitaddam; in the end it leads to the shedding of blood (dam)."[12]

141. There was a man who used to drink twelve jugs of wine every day. One day, after having drunk only eleven, he lay down, but sleep did not come to him. So he got up during the night, went to the keeper of the tavern, and said to him, "Sell me a jug of wine." The keeper of the tavern: "I will not open the inn for you. It is now night, and I am afraid of the town's watchmen." As the man raised his eyes, he saw a hole in the [front] door, so he said to the keeper of the tavern, "Give me some wine through this hole—you pour it out from within, and I shall drink it from without." The keeper did that for the man, who drank and fell asleep in front of the tavern door. The watchmen passed by, took him for a thief, and beat and bruised him. To this man applies the passage "Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath bleary eyes? Those whom the wine keeps till the small hours" (Prov. 23:29–30)—those who are the first to enter a tavern and the last to leave it.[13]

---

1. On ketiv and keri, see the Glossary. B. Yoma 75a; Tanhuma, Shemoni, §5. Midrash Prov. 23:29 (ed. Buber, p. 95).
2. Yod (10) + Yod (10) + nun (50) = 70.
3. Samekh (60) + vav (6) + dalet (4) = 70.
4. The kidneys are conceived in the Bible and in the Talmud as the seat of moral conscience as well as of intellectual deliberation. See H. A. Wolfson, Philo (Cambridge, Mass., 1947) 2:185 and n. 124.
5. Num. R. 10:8; Tanhuma, Shemoni, §5.
6. Lev. R. 12:4.
7. Gen. R. 36:3 and 31:14.
8. All the above befell Noah. Tanhuma, Noah, §13.
9. B. Ket 65a.
10. Tanhuma, Noah, §21.
11. B. Ber 29b.
12. B. Sanh 70a.
13. Lev. R. 12:1.

142. A little wine is fine; a lot is not.[1]

143. At the head of all healing [when taken in moderation] am I—wine. At the head of all death [when not taken in moderation] am I—wine. Only where there is no wine are drugs required.[2]

144. R. Kahana explained an inconsistency: the word for "wine" is spelled tirash but pronounced tirosh. If a man merits it, wine makes him rosh, "chief"; if not, it makes him rash, "a poor man."

Rava explained another inconsistency: as spelled, the text reads, "Wine that desolates [yeshammah]" (Ps. 104:15), but we pronounce the last word "yesammah [that maketh glad]." If a man merits it, wine makes him glad; if not, it desolates him. That is what Rava meant when he said: Wine and spices stimulate my mind.[3]

145. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: What is the proof that [the Levites'] song of praise [to God] is sung only over wine?[4] From the verse "And the vine said unto them: Should I leave my wine, which cheereth God and men?" (Judg. 9:13) we understand how wine cheers men, but how does it cheer God? We must therefore conclude that the words "cheereth God" refer to the song of praise [to God], which is to be sung only over wine.[5]

146. No rejoicing [before God] is possible except with wine.[6]

147. Samuel said to R. Judah: Keen scholar, open your feed bag and until you are forty, while food is beneficial, let your food come in; from then on, drink is more beneficial.[7]

148. Aged wine delights the palate of aged men.[8]

149. R. Aha said: There is the story of a man who kept selling his household goods and drinking up the proceeds in wine. So, saying, "[At this rate] our father will leave nothing for us," his sons plied him with drink, made him drunk, took him out of the city, and left him in a cemetery. Just then, some wine merchants happened to pass the gate of the cemetery. When they heard that in the city there was a roundup for compulsory labor service, they left their loads in the cemetery and went to see what was going on in town. In the meantime, the man woke up from his sleep and, seeing a wineskin above his head, untied it and put its opening to his mouth. Three days later, the man's sons said, "Should we not go see what our father is doing?" They got to the cemetery, found him with the wineskin at his mouth, and said, "Even here your Creator has not forsaken you. Since it is He who provides you with wine, we really don't know what to do about you." So they came to an understanding among themselves that each of them in turn was to provide him daily with wine to drink.[9]

150. There was a pious man whose father drank much wine, and every time he collapsed in the marketplace, boys would come, pelt him with stones and pebbles, and mock him: "Look at the drunk!" When his pious son saw this, he was so humiliated that he wanted to die. So every day he would say to his father, "Papa, I will send word and have delivered to your own home all the kinds of wine that are sold in this city, just so you won't have to go to the tavern to drink, for you bring shame upon me and upon yourself." Every day he spoke this way once and twice, until finally the father promised him that he would not go to drink in the tavern. Thereafter, every morning and evening, the pious son would prepare food and drink for his father, put him to sleep in his bed, and then leave him. One time, when it was raining, the pious son went out in the marketplace on his way to the synagogue for prayer and saw a drunkard lying in the marketplace. A stream of rainwater was pouring down upon him, and older and younger boys were pelting him with stones and pebbles, and throwing mud at his face, even into his mouth. When the pious son saw this, he said to himself: I will go get Papa, bring him here, and show him this drunkard and the shame children and teenagers heap upon him—perhaps he will learn to restrain his mouth from drinking in taverns and getting drunk. And so he did: he brought him to the marketplace and showed him the drunkard. But what did his old father do? He went over to the drunkard and asked him in what tavern he had drunk the wine that got him so drunk.[10]

Proper Order and Manners at a Feast

151. What is the proper order at a feast? The guests enter [the waiting room] and sit down on benches or high-backed chairs until all the guests have arrived. After all have arrived, water is brought for washing the hands, each guest washing only his [right] hand.[11] A cup of wine is mixed for them, and each one says the blessing by himself. Then appetizers are brought, and each one says the blessing by himself. After that, they go up to the dining area and recline. Again water is brought to wash the hands. Even though each guest has already washed one hand, he now washes again—both hands. Another cup of wine is mixed for the guests. Even though each guest had already said a blessing over the first cup, another blessing is said over the second cup, but now one guest says it for all the others. More appetizers are brought. Even though each guest had already said a blessing at the first serving, an-

---

1. DEZ 7.
2. B. BB 58b.
3. B. Yoma 76b.
4. When poured on the altar as a libation at the daily offering.
5. B. Ber 35a.
6. B. Pes 109a.
7. B. Shab 152a.
8. B. Meg 16b.
9. Lev. R. 12:1
10. Tanhuma, Shemini, §11.
11. The hand used to pick up the appetizers served before the meal.

other blessing is said over the second serving, but now one guest says it for all the others. After three servings of appetizers, no additional guest may enter.[1]

R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: In Jerusalem there was the strict custom that, as long as napkins were draped over the door, guests might continue to enter. Once the napkins were removed, no more guests were permitted to enter.

There was another strict custom in Jerusalem. The preparation for the feast was turned over to a caterer. If any item in the feast was spoiled, he was fined, the fine varying with the status of the host and that of the guests.

Pieces of bread [served to the guests] were an important sign for them. As long as the guests saw such pieces of bread, they knew that another course would follow. But when they saw a whole loaf,[2] they knew that no more courses were to follow at this feast.[3]

152. What is the order of reclining? When there are two couches, the senior person reclines first on the first couch and the junior one on the second couch, next to the senior's feet. When there are three couches, the senior reclines first on the middle couch, the junior on the couch next to the senior's head, and the third in seniority on the couch next to the senior's feet. The same order is followed if there are more than three couches.

What is the order for washing one's hands [before the meal]? If there are fewer than five guests, the washing begins with the senior guest. If there are five guests or more, the washing begins with the junior guest, until the fifth guest's turn. Then the customary order is resumed, the washing of hands beginning with the senior. So, too, with the washing of the hands after the meal—the person with whom the customary order of washing the hands resumes is the one who pronounces the appropriate blessing.

What is the order of mixing the cup of wine? During the meal, it begins with the senior. After the meal, it begins with the person who leads in the saying of grace. If he wishes to yield the honor to his teacher or to his senior, he may do so.

When there are two guests, they must wait for each other in taking food from the bowl. If there are three, they need not wait. He who says the blessing [over the bread] may reach first for the food, but if he wishes to yield the honor to his teacher or his senior, he may do so.[4]

153. The scrupulous among the people of Jerusalem would not go to a feast until they learned who was to recline with them.[5]

154. One should break off a piece of bread only from the crusty part [of the loaf] and not from the soft part; nor should one seize with his hand a piece of bread the size of an egg, because one who does so is a glutton and a greedygut. Neither should one drain his cup of wine in one draft; if he does, he is a tippler and a greedygut. How many times should one pause before draining it? Twice, if he has good manners; three times, if he is a show-off.

A man should not start eating a head of garlic or onion before removing its peel. If he starts with the head unpeeled, he is both a glutton and a greedygut. He should not drink two cups [of wine] in reciting grace after meals, because it makes him appear like a tippler.[6]

155. A man should not be given to picking up [and eating] crumbs, emptying his bowl [to the last drop], and tippling.[7]

156. When two sit at a table, the senior guest should reach first for the food, and then the junior; if the junior reaches first, he is a glutton.

The story is told of R. Akiva, who prepared a meal for his disciples. Two dishes were served, one raw and the other cooked. When a raw vegetable was served, the well-mannered disciple took hold of its stalk with one hand and, with the other, tried to pluck it from its stem. When the stalk did not come off, he withdrew his hand and ate only the bread before him. But the ill-mannered disciple took hold of the stalk in one hand and bit it off with his teeth. R. Akiva said to him, "Don't do just that, my son—go ahead and put your foot on the vegetable in the dish!" After that, a cooked dish was served to them, of which they ate their fill. Then R. Akiva said to them, "My sons, I have served [the meal] the way I did only to test whether or not your manners are proper."[8]

157. R. Yose and R. Judah ate porridge [out of the same bowl]. One ate with his finger [as his spoon] and the other with a palm leaf. He who was eating with the palm leaf asked the one who ate with his finger, "How long will you make me eat the filth of your finger?" The one who ate with his finger replied to the one who ate with a palm leaf, "How long will you make me eat your spittle?"[9]

158. A man should not bite into a piece of bread and then give it to his fellow, because people's sense of delicacy varies.[10]

159. R. Abbahu said: Whoever eats bread without scouring his hands is as though he were eating food that is ritually unclean.[11]

160. Foodstuffs are not to be treated with contempt.[12]

161. Our masters taught: Four things have been said concerning bread. Raw meat should not be placed on

1. So that the host will not find himself short of food and be embarrassed.
2. Apparently they kept an unsliced loaf on the table for grace after meals.
3. Tos Ber 4:8–10 and 4:14; P. Ber 6:6, 10d.
4. B. Ber 46b–47a; Tos Ber 5:5–7.
5. B. Sanh 23a.
6. DER 6.
7. DEZ 6.
8. DER 7.
9. B. Ned 49b.
10. DER 9.
11. B. Sot 4b.
12. Sof 3.

bread; a full cup should not be passed along over bread;[1] bread should not be thrown; and a dish should not be propped up on bread.

There is the story of R. Akiva staying with a certain man who took a piece of bread and propped up his bowl with it. R. Akiva snatched up that piece of bread and ate it. The man asked: Master, have you no bread to eat other than the piece I was using to prop up my bowl? R. Akiva: I thought you would be "scalded" with tepid water,[2] but I now see that you are not scalded even with boiling water.[3]

162. It is unbecoming for a host to eat in his guest's presence without asking the guest to join him. It is more unbecoming for a guest to invite another guest. It is even more unbecoming to eat in the presence of a disciple of the wise [without inviting him to join]. More unbecoming than these three is for a guest to cause trouble to his host.[4]

163. R. Yohanan said: One should not talk during a meal, lest the windpipe precede the gullet [in swallowing the food] and thus endanger one's life.[5]

164. R. Huna son of R. Nathan visited the home of R. Nahman bar Isaac. When he was asked, "What is your name?" he replied, "Rav Huna." They said to him, "Will the master sit on the couch?" After he sat down, he was offered a cup, which he accepted at once and drained in two drafts. They then asked him, "Why did you call yourself Rav Huna?" "That is my rightful name." "Why, when you were told, 'Sit on the couch,' did you sit down without hesitation?" "Because whatever your host tells you to do, you must do, except depart." "Why, when you were offered a cup, did you accept at once?" "Because one must appear to be reluctant before a host who is his inferior, but not before a host who is his superior." "Why did you drain the cup in two drafts?" "Because we have been taught: 'He who drains his cup in one draft is a tippler; in two, is well bred; in three, is a show-off.' "[6]

165. The presumption is that no man would drink out of a cup without first examining it thoroughly.[7]

166. A man should not drink from a cup and then pass it to his fellow, because it may endanger his fellow's life. It is told that R. Akiva was staying at the inn of a certain man who offered him a cup of wine after first tasting it. R. Akiva said to him, "Keep it and drink it [all]." The innkeeper then offered R. Akiva another cup of wine, again tasting it first, and again R. Akiva said to him: "Keep it and drink it [all]." Finally Ben Azzai spoke up to the innkeeper: "How long will you keep offering R. Akiva cups of wine that you have tasted first?"[8]

167. A man should not drink from a cup and give that cup to his fellow, because people's sense of delicacy varies.[9]

168. Rav said to his son Hiyya: Wipe [the cup] before drinking, and wipe it again before putting it down. And when you drink water, pour some out,[10] and then you may give it to your disciple.

It once happened that a sage drank some water and, without pouring any out, gave [the cup] to his disciple. But the disciple, being delicate in such matters, would not drink from that cup and died of thirst. Then the sages said: A man should not drink water and give [the cup] to his disciple without first pouring out some of the water [over the rim he drank from].[11]

169. R. Ammi said: At a session of study, precedence is to be given to wisdom; in reclining at a feast, to age.[12]

170. Our masters taught: He who eats in the marketplace is like a dog. Some say, he is unfit to give testimony.[13]

171. "And he shall put off his garments, and put on other garments" (Lev. 6:4). Sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: The Torah teaches you good manners. The garments in which one cooks a dish for his teacher,[14] he should not wear when he mixes a cup of wine for him.[15]

A Man's Clothing

172. R. Avira expounded: What is meant by the verse "Well is it with the man that dealeth graciously and lendeth freely, but matters concerning his own person he orders fittingly" (Ps. 112:5)? A man should always eat and drink less than his means allow, but clothe himself in keeping with his means.[16]

173. For your belly, count your pence; for your back, spare no expense.[17]

174. R. Yohanan called his garments "my aggrandizers."[18]

---

1. It might spill.
2. Get the hint that bread should not be treated disrespectfully.
3. B. Ber 50b; DER 9.
4. DEZ 8.
5. B. Ta 5b.
6. B. Pes 86b.
7. B. Ket 75b.
8. DER 9.
9. Tos Ber 5:9.
10. To clean the rim.
11. B. Tam 27b.
12. B. BB 120a.
13. B. Kid 40b.
14. A chore during which one's garments may become soiled.
15. B. Shab 114a.
16. B. Hul 84b.
17. Or: For your stomach, what is adequate; for your back, what is exquisite. B. BM 52a.
18. B. Shab 113a.

175. "Then these men were bound in their cloaks, their tunics, and their robes, and their other garments, and were cast into the midst of the burning fiery furnace" (Dan. 3:21). From this you may infer that even in a time of danger, one should not give up the dignity of one's bearing, for behold, these men were going out to be burned, yet they adorned themselves [with their finery].[1]

176. We have been taught: If a man who is in debt for a thousand maneh wears a robe worth a hundred maneh, he may be stripped of it. But he must still be provided with a robe that fits his standing, for, as we have been taught in the name of R. Ishmael and of R. Akiva: Everyone in Israel deserves such a robe.[2]

177. "David went and stealthily cut off the corner of Saul's cloak" (1 Sam. 24:5). R. Yose son of R. Hanina said: He who treats garments with contempt ends up by deriving no benefit from them, as is said, "King David was now old, well advanced in years; and though they covered him with bedclothes, he never felt warm" (1 Kings 1:1).[3]

178. The adornment of humans—their garments.[4]

179. In my town, my name's my fame; elsewhere, it's what I wear.[5]

180. He who has only one shirt—his life is no life.[6]

181. "I will provoke them with a vile nation" (Deut. 32:21)—the people of Barbaria[7] and Mauretania, who go about naked in the marketplace. There is none more vile and more abominable than he who goes about naked in the marketplace.[8]

182. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: One should sell even the beams in his house in order to buy shoes for his feet.[9]

Bathing and Anointing

183. The sages said in the name of Rav: It is forbidden to live in a city that has no bathhouse.[10]

184. "I have forgotten that which is good" (Lam. 3:17)—a bathhouse, said R. Jeremiah; washing one's hands and feet in warm water, said R. Yohanan.[11]

185. There are three kinds of sweat that benefit the body: the sweat of sickness, the sweat in a bathhouse, and the sweat of work. The sweat of sickness causes healing, but the sweat in a bathhouse—no [cure] equals it.[12]

186. We have been taught: A man should wash his face, his hands, and his feet every day for the sake of his Maker, as is said, "The Lord hath made everything for His own purpose" (Prov. 16:4).[13]

187. "He who does good to his own person is a man of piety" (Prov. 11:17).[14] Such a one was Hillel the Elder. After taking leave of his disciples, he proceeded to walk along with them. His disciples asked him, "Master, where are you going?" He answered, "To perform a precept." "What precept?" "To bathe in the bathhouse." "But is this a precept?" "It is indeed. Kings' statues set up in theaters and circuses are scoured and washed down by the official specially appointed to look after them, who receives a salary for the work. More—he is esteemed as one of the notables of the empire. How much more and more am I required to scour and wash myself, who have been created in God's image and likeness, as is written, 'In the image of God made He man' [Gen. 9:6]!"[15]

188. Samuel said: A drop of cold water in the morning and washing hands and feet in hot water in the evening are better [for the eyes] than all eye salves in the world.[16]

189. He who bathes in hot water with no cold shower to follow it is like iron heated in the fire but not quenched in cold water to temper it.[17]

190. Samuel said: Neglected and filthy hair causes blindness; neglected and filthy garments cause wit's dulling; a neglected and filthy body causes boils and pimples.[18]

191. "The delights of the children of men" (Eccles. 2:8). These are pools and bathhouses.[19]

192. Proclus son of Philosophus put a question to Rabban Gamaliel, who was bathing in Acco in the bath of Aphrodite.[20] Proclus asked, "It is written in your Torah, 'And there shall cleave nought of the devoted thing to thy hand' [Deut. 13:18]; why then are you bathing in the bath devoted to Aphrodite?" Rabban Gamaliel replied, "Questions [relating to Torah] may not be answered in a bath."[21] When he came out, he said to Proclus, "I did not come

---

1. Tanhuma, Noah, §10.
2. B. Shab 128a.
3. B. Ber 62b.
4. DEZ 10.
5. B. Shab 145b.
6. Since he cannot have it washed, he is tormented by lice. So Rashi. B. Betz 32b.
7. Tunis.
8. B. Yev 63b.
9. B. Shab 129a.
10. P. Kid 4:12, 66d.
11. B. Shab 25b.
12. ARN 41.
13. B. Shab 50b.
14. JV: "The merciful man doeth good to his own soul."
15. Lev. R. 34:3.
16. B. Shab 108a.
17. B. Shab 41a.
18. B. Ned 81a.
19. B. Git 68a.
20. Baths were frequently adorned with statues of deities.
21. Where people are naked.

into her domain—she has come into mine.[1] People do not say, 'The bath was made as an adornment for Aphrodite'; they say, 'Aphrodite was made as an adornment for the bath.' "[2]

193. R. Zerika said in the name of R. Eleazar: He who belittles the washing of hands [before a meal] will be rooted out of the world.[3]

194. [Failure to observe the practice of] washing hands before the meal caused one to eat swine's meat. [Failure to observe the practice of] washing hands after the meal slew a person.

The story is told that, during a period of religious persecution, an Israelite shopkeeper used to cook not only ritually clean meat, but pork as well, and sell them, so that it might not be suspected that he was a Jew. Here is how he went about it: when a customer entered his shop [to eat] and did not wash his hands, the shopkeeper, certain that he was a heathen, would place pork before him; but if the customer washed his hands and recited the blessing, the shopkeeper, certain that he was a Jew, fed him kosher meat. One time, a Jew entered the shop to eat and did not wash his hands, so the shopkeeper supposed that he was a heathen and placed pork before him. The man ate and did not say the grace after meals. He then asked to settle the account with the shopkeeper for the bread and meat [he had eaten]. Now pork, it should be said, sold at a higher price. So the shopkeeper said to the man, "You owe me so-and-so much, on account of the meat you ate, each piece of which comes to ten maneh." The man said, "Yesterday you served it to me for eight maneh, and today you charge me ten?" The shopkeeper replied, "The piece of meat you ate [today] was pork." As soon as the shopkeeper said this to the man, the man's hair stood on end, he fell into a great fright and said under his breath to the shopkeeper, "I am a Jew, and you have fed me pork!" The shopkeeper replied, "May your breath be blasted out! When I saw you eat without washing your hands and without [reciting] a blessing, I thought you were a heathen!"

Another story is told of a man who ate pulse without washing his hands afterward and then went down to the marketplace, his hands still soiled by the pulse. A companion, seeing him, went and said to the man's wife, "Your husband instructs you to send him such-and-such a ring, and in evidence that you may take my word, he told me to say that he had just eaten pulse. She gave him the ring. When after a while her husband returned, he asked her, "Where is the ring?" She replied, "So-and so came with the token you told him to mention to me, and I gave it to him." Filled with rage, he killed her. Hence, when a man does not wash his hands after partaking of food, he may well be like one who kills a human being.[4]

195. Though anointing [oil] and bath[water] do not enter the body, the body benefits from them.[5]

196. If a man bathes but does not anoint himself, it is like water on top of a [covered] cask.[6]

197. It was told of R. Hanina that, when he was eighty years old, he could take his shoe off or put it on while standing on one foot.

[Speaking of robust old age], R. Hanina said: Warm baths and oil, with which my mother anointed me in my youth, stood me in good stead in my old age.[7]

198. He who wishes to anoint his entire body should first anoint his head, because it is king over all other parts of his body.[8]

Healing the Body

199. "[The Lord will] make strong thy bones" (Isa. 58:11). R. Eleazar said: This is the most perfect of blessings.[9]

200. The sages said in the name of Rav: It is forbidden to live in a city where there is no physician.[10]

201. In a human body, the component parts are dependent on one another. When one ceases to function, so does the other. When they break apart one from the other, the body is stricken and the person dies, like a house that has four sides—if one side breaks away, the house collapses.[11]

202. The sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: "He shall cause him to be thoroughly healed" (Exod. 21:19). From this verse we infer that permission has been given [by Heaven] to the physician to heal.[12]

203. It is told of R. Ishmael and R. Akiva that, while they were walking through the streets of Jerusalem accompanied by a certain man, a sick person confronted them and said, "Masters, tell me, how shall I be healed?" They replied, "Take such-and-such, and you will be healed." The man accompanying the sages asked them, "Who smote him with sickness?" They replied, "The Holy One." The man: "And you bring yourselves into a matter that does not concern you? God smote, and you would heal?" The sages: "What is your work?" The man: "I am a tiller of

---

1. The bath existed before the image of Aphrodite was set up in it, and it was constructed for human use.
2. B. AZ 44b.
3. B. Sot 4b.
4. B. Yoma 83b; Tanhuma, Balak, §15: Num. R. 20:21.
5. B. Ber 57b.
6. Since it is not possible for the water to penetrate the body, the body does not benefit from it. B. Shab 41a.
7. B. Hul 24b.
8. B. Shab 61a.
9. B. Yev 102b.
10. P. Kid 4:12, 66d.
11. Midrash Sam. 4 (ed. Buber [Cracow, 1903], p. 54).
12. B. Ber 60a.

the soil. You see the sickle in my hand." The sages: "Who created the vineyard?" The man: "The Holy One." The sages: "Then why do you bring yourself into a matter that does not concern you? God created it, and you eat the fruit from it!" The man: "Don't you see the sickle in my hand? If I did not go out and plow the vineyard, prune it, compost it, and weed it, it would have yielded nothing." The sages: "You are the biggest fool in the world! Have you not heard the verse 'As for man, his days are as grass' [Ps. 103:15]? A tree, if it is not composted, weeded, and [the area around it] plowed, will not grow; and even if it does grow, if not given water to drink, it will die—will not live. So, too, the human body is a tree, a healing potion is the compost, and a physician is the tiller of the soil."[1]

204. When a man has a pain, he should visit a physician.[2]

205. R. Eleazar said: Honor your physician even before you have need of him.[3]

206. A physician who heals for nothing is worth nothing.[4]

207. A physician not nigh is [as good as] a blind eye.[5]

208. Hapless is the city whose physician has gout.[6]

209. Physician, heal your own lameness![7]

210. The best physician deserves Gehenna.[8]

211. Hezekiah hid away the Book of Cures, and the sages approved.[9]

212. Rav said to his son Hiyya:[10] Don't fall into the habit of taking drugs, don't leap over a sewer,[11] don't have your teeth pulled,[12] don't provoke serpents.[13]

213. "The saving sun with healing in its wings" (Mal. 3:20). Abbaye said: This proves that the shining sun brings healing.[14]

1. Midrash Sam. 4.
2. B. BK 46b.
3. P. Ta 3:6, 66d.
4. B. BK 85a.
5. Ibid.
6. And can't get about. Lev. R. 5:6.
7. Gen. R. 23:5.
8. Either because he is haughty or because he occasionally endangers life. B. Kid 82a.
9. For people would no longer trust only in medical treatment. B. Ber 10b.
10. Who was not in good health.
11. So B. Pes 113a; BR: "Don't leap feet-first."
12. Wait for them to get better.
13. B. Pes 113a.
14. B. Ned 8b.

214. People say: When the sun rises, the sick man rises.[15]

Care of the Body

215. Beware of three things. Do not sit too long, for sitting aggravates hemorrhoids. Do not stand too long, for standing too long is harmful to the heart. Do not walk too much, for too much walking is harmful to the eyes. It is best to spend a third of one's time sitting, a third standing, and a third walking.

As for sitting without support at one's back, standing with such support is far more comfortable.[16]

216. "The Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and languishing of spirit" (Deut. 28:65). Nothing causes greater failing of eyes and languishing of spirit than hemorrhoids.[17]

217. Long steps take away one five-hundredth of a man's sight.[18]

218. Ben Azzai said: Lie on anything, but not on the ground.[19] Sit on anything, except on a beam.[20]

219. Eight things are harmful in large quantities but beneficial in small ones: travel and sexual intercourse, riches and trade, wine and sleep, hot baths and bloodletting.[21]

220. Three things sap a man's strength: anxiety, travel, and sin.[22]

221. R. Tanhum son of R. Hiyya said: Four things sap a man's strength: sin, travel, fasting, and the oppressor's rule. R. Tanhuma said: Trouble also saps a man's strength.[23]

222. Rav said: A sigh breaks half a man's body.[24]

223. "And the Lord will take away from thee all that causes sickness" (Deut. 7:15)—the evil eye. So, in keeping with his opinion, Rav stated that he visited a cemetery and, using certain charms [to determine what caused the death of those buried in it], found that ninety-nine died because of the evil eye and only one from natural causes. But Samuel said, "The verse refers to vapors," and, in keeping with his opinion, Samuel maintained that all sick-

15. B. BB 16b.
16. B. Ket 111b.
17. B. Ned 22a.
18. B. Ber 43b.
19. For fear of serpents.
20. B. Ber 62b.
21. B. Git 70a.
22. Ibid.
23. MTeh 31:9.
24. B. Ber 58b.

ness was caused by miasma. R. Hanina said, "The verse refers to chilly drafts." R. Eleazar said, "The verse refers to diseases of the gall."[1]

224. The sages said in the name of Rav: Better any complaint than a complaint of the bowels, any pain than heart pain, any ache than headache.[2]

225. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: "And, behold, it was very good" (Gen. 1:31) refers even to sleep. But is there any sleep that is very good? I wonder. After all, have we not been taught: "Only when it is the wicked who indulge in wine and sleep is it comely for them and comely for the world"? What R. Simeon in fact meant was that, because a man sleeps a bit, he is able to get up and labor long at the study of Torah.[3]

226. R. Yohanan said: If one says, "I swear that I will not sleep for three nights," he should be flogged,[4] and afterward he may go right to sleep.[5]

227. R. Judah said: The night was created for no other purpose than sleep.[6]

228. Samuel said: Sleep at the break of dawn is as important for the body as tempering is for iron.[7]

229. Our masters taught: Many things were said of the morning bread. It is an antidote against heat, against cold, against winds, and against demons. It instills wisdom into the simple. It helps a man to be acquitted in a lawsuit. It helps him to study Torah and to teach it; his words are heeded, and he retains what he has learned. His body does not steam [after bathing]. The bread he eats in the morning kills the worms in his intestines. Some say that it also expels jealousy and induces love.

Rabbah asked Rava bar Mari: What is the authority in Scripture for the proverb "Sixty runners speed along but cannot overtake him who breaks bread in the morning" and for the rabbinic dictum "Arise early and eat—in summer, on account of the heat; in winter, on account of the cold"? Rava replied: The verse "When they do not hunger nor thirst, neither cold nor sun shall smite them" (Isa. 49:10).

Rabbah said: You find authority in that verse, but I find it in this one: "When you serve the Lord your God, He shall bless thy bread, and thy water" (Exod. 23:25). "When you serve the Lord your God" refers to the reading of the Shema and the [morning] Tefillah. "He shall bless thy bread and thy water" refers to bread seasoned with salt, and a jug of water. Then "I will take sickness away from the midst of thee" (ibid).

We have been taught: By mahalah, "the sickness," [illness caused by] the gall is meant. Why is it called "the sickness"? Because it sickens man's entire body.

Another explanation: Because eighty-three[8] sicknesses stem from the gall, and all of them may be eliminated by salted bread and a jug of water taken in the morning.[9]

230. Our masters taught: The first hour of the day[10] is the time for the principal meal for gladiators; the second hour, for brigands; the third, for heirs; the fourth, for the generality; the fifth, for workmen;[11] the sixth, for disciples of the wise.[12] After that, it is like throwing a stone into a bottle.[13]

Abbaye said: What was just asserted is true only if a man has eaten nothing in the morning. But if he has eaten something, there is no objection [to postponing the meal].[14]

231. "Who fed you in the wilderness with manna . . . in order to test you by hardships" (Deut. 8:16). R. Ammi and R. Assi differed [in explaining what hardships were experienced in connection with manna]. One said: The feelings of a man who has bread in his basket are not like the feelings of one who has not.[15] The other said: The feelings of one who sees what he eats are not like the feelings of one who does not see what he eats.[16]

R. Joseph[17] said: In this verse there is the intimation that when the blind eat, they are not satisfied. Therefore, added Abbaye, when a man has a feast, he should have it only in daytime.[18]

232. R. Yose son of R. Bun said: It is forbidden to live in a city that does not have a vegetable garden.[19]

233. R. Hisda said: A young scholar whose provisions are limited should not eat vegetables, because they whet the appetite.

R. Hisda also said: I ate no vegetables, either when poor or when well off. When poor, because they whet the appetite; when well off, because I figured, where vegetables enter, let meat and fish enter instead.[20]

---

1. B. BM 107b.
2. B. Shab 11a.
3. Gen. R. 9:6.
4. Since it is impossible not to sleep for three nights, the man is judged guilty of taking a false oath.
5. He is released from any obligation to try to fulfill his oath. B. Suk 53a.
6. B. Er 65a.
7. B. Ber 62b.
8. The numerical value of the letters that spell the word mahalah add up to eighty-three.
9. B. BM 107b; B. BK 92b.
10. Six A.M.
11. Who get through at that time.
12. After they conclude sessions at court.
13. No benefit is derived.
14. B. Shab 10a.
15. They always had to trust that God would send down manna the next day.
16. The variety of foods Israelites tasted when they ate manna was not evident in its outer appearance. See part 1, chap. 5, §8.
17. He was blind.
18. B. Yoma 74b.
19. P. Kid 4:12, 66d.
20. B. Shab 140b.

234. Rav said: Adda the Fisherman told me, "Roast the fish with its brother (salt), plunge it into its father (water), eat it with its son (juice), and after, drink its father (water)."[1]

235. R. Yannai said in the name of Rav: An egg is superior [in food value] to the same quantity of any other kind of food. When Ravin came [from the Land of Israel], he said: A soft-roasted egg is superior to six log of fine flour. When R. Dimi came, he said: A soft-roasted egg is superior to six log of fine flour; a hard-roasted egg to four log of fine flour; and as for a boiled egg, it is superior to any other food of the same quantity except meat.[2]

236. Our masters taught: Milt is good for the teeth but bad for the bowels; bitter vetch is bad for the teeth but good for the bowels. All raw vegetables make the complexion pale, and all things not fully grown retard growth. Living creatures [when eaten] restore vitality, even as the part of a body [such as the neck] that is near the vital organs restores vitality. Cabbage is for sustenance, and beets are for healing. Woe unto the house[3] through which turnips are always passed.[4]

237. We have been taught: Eat salt after every food and drink water after every beverage, and you will come to no harm.

One who has eaten any kind of food without taking salt after it or drunk any kind of beverage without taking water after it is liable to be troubled with bad odor in the mouth during the day and with croup during the night.

Our masters taught: A man who washes down his food with water will not suffer in his bowels. How much should he drink? R. Hisda said: A ladleful to a loaf of bread.

R. Mari said in the name of R. Yohanan: He who is accustomed to eat lentils once in thirty days will keep croup away from his house. He should not, however, eat them every day. Why not? They cause bad odor in the mouth.

R. Mari said further in the name of R. Yohanan: He who customarily uses mustard once in thirty days keeps sickness away from his house. He should not, however, use it every day. Why not? It is bad for the heart.

R. Hiyya bar Ashi said in the name of Rav: He who regularly eats small fish will not suffer in his bowels. Not only that, but small fish stimulate fertility and give nourishment and health to a man's entire body. R. Hama bar R. Hanina said: One who regularly uses black cumin will not suffer from pain in the heart. The sages objected, R. Simeon ben Gamaliel pointing out that black cumin is one of sixty deadly poisons and that even if a man merely sleeps east of a place where black cumin is stored, his blood will be on his own head.[5] There is no contradiction here, however: R. Simeon's statement refers to [inhaling] the odor of black cumin, while R. Hama's statement refers to its taste [when eaten].

R. Jeremiah's mother used to bake bread for him, stick some black cumin on it,[6] and then scrape it off.[7]

238. The sages said in the name of R. Judah bar Ilai: Eat inexpensive onions [batzel] and you will afford to live in the shade [be-tzel] of your own home. Do not eat geese and fowls, lest your craving for them hound you [out of your house].[8]

239. Radish helps to dissolve food; lettuce, to digest it; cucumbers, to expand the intestines. But did not the sages in the school of R. Ishmael teach that cucumbers are called kishuim because they are as injurious [kashim] to the body as swords? There is no contradiction: The second statement refers to large cucumbers; the first, to small ones.[9]

240. R. Jeremiah took sick. When the physician who came to heal him saw a pumpkin lying in his house, he left him and went away, saying: This man has the angel of death in his house,[10] yet I am expected to heal him![11]

241. Our masters taught: Five things were said of garlic: it is filling, it keeps the body warm, it brightens the face, it increases semen, and it kills parasites in the bowels. Some say, it brings love and removes jealousy.[12]

242. Our masters taught: Asparagus brew[13] is good for the heart and good for the eyes, and, it goes without saying, also good for the bowels. If one uses it regularly, it is good for the whole body, but if one gets drunk with it, it is bad for the whole body.[14]

243. We have been taught: Three things—coarse bread, new beer, and vegetables—increase feces, bend one's stature, and take away one five-hundredth of a man's vision.[15]

244. Dates are wholesome in the morning and in the evening. They are bad in the afternoon, but at noon there is nothing to match them. Besides, they do away with three things: evil thoughts, sickness of the bowels, and hemorrhoids.[16]

245. The late figs we ate in our childhood were more tasty than the [ripe] peaches we eat in our advanced years.[17]

---

1. During the meal, only wine was drunk. B. MK 11a.
2. B. Ber 44b.
3. That is, the stomach.
4. B. Ber 44b.
5. Because the west wind may carry the odor to him and poison him.
6. So that the bread would absorb the taste of the cumin.
7. To remove the odor. B. Ber 40a.
8. B. Pes 114a.
9. B. AZ 11a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. The pumpkin is like poison.
11. B. Ned 49a.
12. B. BK 82a.
13. A beverage made by soaking certain roots in beer or wine.
14. B. Ber 51a.
15. B. Er 55b–56a.
16. B. Ket 10b.
17. P. Pe 7:4, 20a.

246. Our masters taught: One seized by a ravenous hunger should be given honey and all kinds of sweet things to eat,[1] for honey and sweet food light up a man's eyes.

R. Yohanan said: Once, when I was seized by a ravenous hunger, I—mindful of "Wisdom preserveth the life of him who hath it" (Eccles. 7:12)—ran to the eastern [sunny] side[2] of a fig tree and ate its fruit, for R. Joseph taught: He who wishes to savor the fig's full taste should turn to its eastern side.

While R. Judah and R. Yose were walking along a road, ravenous hunger seized R. Judah, who overpowered a shepherd and devoured his bread. R. Yose reproached him: "You overpowered the shepherd!" As they reached the city, ravenous hunger seized R. Yose, and the people of the city plied him with flagons [of honey] and bowls [of sweet food]. At that, R. Judah said, "I overpowered a shepherd, but you overpowered an entire city!"[3]

247. People say: For a tasty bit, there is always room.[4]

248. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: The following acts cause a man to forfeit his life, and his blood is on his own head: eating peeled garlic, peeled onion, or a peeled egg [left to spoil overnight]; drinking liquids that were left [uncovered] overnight;[5] spending the night in a graveyard; and cutting one's fingernails and throwing them into a public thoroughfare.[6]

249. Three kinds of liquids are forbidden when they have been left uncovered: water, wine, and milk.[7]

250. Our masters taught: A man should not drink water from rivers or pools at night. If he drinks, his blood is on his own head—so great is the danger.[8]

251. R. Ammi said: One should be cautious about things that people are cautious about: for example, one should not put small coins into the mouth, a dish of food under a bed, or bread in an armpit; nor should one thrust a knife into a radish or an etrog.[9]

252. R. Yohanan said: It is forbidden to walk four cubits to the east of a leper. R. Simeon [ben Lakish] said: Even a hundred cubits. They did not contradict each other. The one who said four cubits referred to a time when no wind is blowing; the one who said a hundred cubits referred to a time when a wind is blowing.

R. Meir ate no eggs that came from a lepers' alley. R. Ammi and R. Assi would not even enter a lepers' alley. When Resh Lakish saw a leper in the city, he would throw stones in his direction as he said to him, "Go to your own place and do not pollute others!" When R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon saw one of them, he would hide himself from him.[10]

253. R. Yannai said: The verse "All the days of a man poor [in health] are evil" (Prov. 15:15) refers to a man who is finicky about his food. "But he that hath a continual feast is of a merry heart" (ibid.) refers to one whose appetite is robust.[11]

254. Samuel said: Any change in one's regular diet is the beginning of disease of the bowels.

On this subject, if with regard to "All the days of a poor man are evil," one should ask, "But are there not sabbaths and festivals?" the answer lies in Samuel's opinion.[12]

255. We have been taught: If a man eats without drinking, it is as if he ate blood—such eating will bring on stomach trouble. If he eats and does not walk [at least] four cubits, his food will rot within him and bring on a foul odor [from his mouth]. If he feels a need to relieve himself but [suppresses it and] eats, he resembles an oven in which fuel is thrown on top of ashes [from previous heatings] still within it, and this brings on unpleasant [body] odor.[13]

256. Elijah [the Prophet] advised R. Nathan: Fill a third of your stomach with food, a third with drink, and leave a third. Otherwise, should you get angry, the anger will pack your stomach so full [of humors that it will burst].

R. Hiyya taught: One who wishes to avoid stomach trouble should regularly, summer and winter, take bread dipped in wine or in vinegar as a relish. When you are enjoying a meal, withdraw your hand from it just enough for it [not to fill you up]. Do not delay when you feel an urge to relieve yourself.[14]

257. R. Ahai said: He who delays relieving himself violates "Ye shall not make your persons filthy [by retaining waste matter]" (Lev. 20:25).[15]

258. R. Huna asked his son Rabbah, "Why are you not to be found in the presence of R. Hisda, whose traditions are so keen?" Rabbah replied, "Why should I go to him? When I go to him, he treats me to inconsequential matters![16] For instance, he tells me that one who enters a privy

---

1. Even on the Day of Atonement.
2. Where the fig tree's fruit ripens first.
3. B. Yoma 83b.
4. Or: "There is always room for sweets on a spoon" (Pearl F. Braude). B. Er 82b.
5. A snake might have spit his venom into them.
6. B. Nid 17a.
7. Ter 8:4.
8. B. Pes 112a.
9. The knife might go right through and cause injury. P. Ter 8:3, 45d.
10. Because the man was evil and given to slander, he became a leper, and one should not gaze at the countenance of an evil man. Lev. R. 16:3.
11. B. BB 145b.
12. Rich food on Sabbaths and festivals would effect such a change in the poor man's diet that his health would be harmed. B. Ket 110b.
13. B. Shab 41a.
14. B. Git 70a.
15. B. Mak 16b.
16. I.e., not Torah.

should not sit down abruptly, nor strain overmuch, for the rectum is supported by three toothlike glands, and should these toothlike glands prolapse, his health would be endangered." R. Huna: "R. Hisda discusses matters of health, and you call them inconsequential? All the more reason for you to go to him!"[1]

259. A certain heretic said to R. Judah: Your face is as fat as the faces of those who lend money on interest or raise swine. R. Judah: The two occupations are forbidden to Jews. However, between my home and the house of study there are twenty-four privies, and [as soon as I require it], I enter any one of them.[2]

260. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yose ben Ketzartah: There are six kinds of tears, three beneficial and three harmful. Those induced by smoke, by weeping [in grief], and by [pain in] the privy are harmful; those induced by spices, laughter, or plants[3] are beneficial.[4]

261. Excretions from the nose and the ear in excessive quantities show poor health; in small quantities, good health.[5]

262. Regulations concerning danger to life are more stringent than ritual prohibitions.[6]

263. Everything is in the power of Heaven, except the effect on a man of heat and cold, as is said, "Cold and heat are in the path of the contrary person; he who values his life will keep far from them" (Prov. 22:5).[7]

264. One should not depend on a miracle.[8]

265. Miracles are not to be cited as an argument.[9]

266. Miracles do not take place on the hour.[10]

267. Where injury is likely, one should not rely on a miracle.[11]

268. Satan is sure to make accusations in a time of danger.[12]

---

1. B. Shab 82a.
2. And thus my body is healthier than that of a usurer or a swineherd. B. Ned 49b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. Such as onions or mustard.
4. B. Shab 151b–152a.
5. B. BM 107b.
6. B. Hul 10a.
7. JV: "Thorns and snares are in the way of the froward; he that keepeth his soul holdeth himself far from them." But tzinnim ("thorns") also means "cold," and pahim ("snares") also means "fiery coals." It is within man's own power to avoid extremes of heat or cold. B. Ket 30a.
8. Based on B. Pes 64b.
9. B. Ber 60a.
10. B. Meg 7b.
11. B. Kid 39b.
12. P. Shab 2:3, 5b; Gen. R. 91:12.

269. Satan is apt to make accusations in three situations: when a man lives in a dilapidated house, when he walks [alone] on a road, or when he sets out on a sea voyage.[13]

270. R. Isaac said: Three things cause a man's sins to be remembered [in heaven]: passing dangerously near a tottering wall, expecting the fulfillment of prayer,[14] and calling on Heaven to inflict punishment on his fellow.[15]

271. R. Yose ben Halafta entered an alley, his ass drover behind him. When they reached a ditch with water in it, the drover said, "I would like to bathe." R. Yose: "Don't court danger." The drover: "I wish to wash off my uncleanness." R. Yose: "Nevertheless, don't court danger." When the drover still refused to heed him, R. Yose said, "He will go down and is not likely to come up again." Indeed, this is what happened.[16]

272. R. Yannai said: A man should never stand in a place of danger in the expectation that a miracle will be wrought in his behalf. Perhaps it will not be wrought, or if it is wrought, his merits will be diminished as a result. And the proof? R. Hanin's interpretation of "I am become diminished by all the kindness that Thou hast so steadfastly shown Thy servant" (Gen. 32:11)[17] as meaning that Jacob said to the Holy One: I fear that because of the miracle You will perform for me, You will diminish my merits, so that, as a result of all the kindnesses so steadfastly shown me, I will come to be deemed quite unworthy.[18]

273. In Nehardea there was a dilapidated wall beside which Rav and Samuel would not walk, even though it had been standing this way for thirteen years [without collapsing]. Once, when R. Adda bar Ahavah happened to visit there, Samuel said to Rav, "Let us make a detour around it." Rav replied, "No need for it now. Since we have with us R. Adda bar Ahavah, whose merit is so great, I am not afraid.[19]

274. R. Huna had wine stored in a dilapidated building. When he wanted to remove the wine, he took R. Adda bar Ahavah into the building and kept him occupied in a learned discussion until the wine had been removed. Then, the moment they left the building, it collapsed. When R. Adda realized that he had been used for such a purpose, he was annoyed, for he agreed with R. Yannai's view [that one should not stay in a place of danger in the hope that a miracle will be wrought].[20]

275. In all journeys, there is the presumption of mortal danger.[21]

---

13. Eccles. R. 3:2, §2.
14. In heaven, there will be close scrutiny of the man's deserts.
15. Such a prayer will lead Heaven to compare the two men. B. Ber 55a.
16. P. Ber 3:4, 6c.
17. JV: "I am not worthy of all the mercies and of all the truth which Thou hast shown unto Thy servant."
18. B. Shab 32a; B. Ta 20b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
19. B. Ta 20b.
20. Ibid.
21. P. Ber 4:4, 8b.

276. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: A man should always leave [a place] in [daylight—daylight, which Scripture describes as] "how good" (Gen. 1:4), and enter it in daylight, in keeping with "As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent off" (Gen. 44:3).[1]

277. He who sets out on a journey before cockcrow—his blood is on his own head.[2]

278. Be sure to enter a city in company with [dawning] sunlight.[3]

279. Rav said to R. Assi: Do not live in a city whose mayor is a physician,[4] or in which no horse neighs[5] or no dog barks.[6]

Man's Sustenance—Poverty and Riches

280. "I will make a helpmeet for him" (Gen. 2:18). When the earth heard God's words "I will make a helpmeet for him," it quaked and trembled, saying: Master of the universe, I have not the power to feed the multitudes of mankind [whom the two will generate]. God replied: I and you together will feed them.

Thus they agreed to divide the responsibility equally between them [God sustaining man in the night hours during sleep, while the earth does so in the daytime].[7]

281. R. Joshua ben Levi said: When the Holy One told Adam, "Thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee" (Gen. 3:18), Adam's eyes flowed with tears. He spoke up to Him, "Master of the universe, am I and my ass to eat out of the same crib?" But when God replied, "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou get bread to eat" (Gen. 3:19), his anxiety was set at rest.

Resh Lakish said: Happy are we that we did not remain subject to the first curse.[8]

Abbaye demurred: But we were not saved from it altogether, for we still eat herbs of the field.[9]

282. R. Yohanan said: Man's task of earning his daily bread is twice as difficult as a woman's of giving birth, for while a woman giving birth is told, "In pain (etzev) shalt thou bear children" (Gen. 3:16), with regard to one's daily bread, man is told, "In great pain (itzavon) shalt thou eat of it" (Gen. 3:17).

R. Yohanan said: To maintain man in his daily bread demands more power than to give redemption, for of his redemption Jacob said, "The angel who hath redeemed me from all evil" (Gen. 48:16), but of his daily bread, he said, "The God who fed me all my life long unto this day" (Gen. 48:15).

R. Shezbi said in the name of R. Eleazar ben Azariah: The maintenance of man in his daily bread is as awesome as the splitting of the Red Sea, for the verse "Who giveth bread to all flesh" (Ps. 136:25) is aligned as being of equal weight with "Who split apart the Red Sea" (Ps. 136:13).[10]

283. R. Eleazar said: Scripture likens redemption to earning a livelihood, for the verse "He hath redeemed us from our adversaries" (Ps. 136:24) is followed immediately by "He giveth food to all flesh" (Ps. 136:25). As redemption requires [God's working] wonders, so earning a livelihood requires [God's working] wonders.[11]

284. Our masters taught: It happened once that a certain man's wife died and left an infant who had to be suckled. But the man did not have the wherewithal to pay a wet-nurse. So a miracle was wrought for him: nipples opened up in his breast, and he gave suck to his child.

R. Joseph said: Pause and consider how great is this man, to have such a miracle performed for him. On the contrary, said Abbaye, how inferior is this man, to have the order of creation changed because of him.[12]

R. Judah said: Pause and consider how difficult earning a livelihood is, since the order of creation was changed for the sake of it.[13]

285. "He hath known thy walking through the great wilderness" (Deut. 2:7) means that God knows of your traveling, your travailing in the grime, your suffering to get a living.[14]

286. A man does not know from what he will earn his living.[15]

287. R. Nathan bar Abba said in the name of Rav: The world is dark for him who must look to the table of others, as is said, "He who has to wander abroad for bread—'Where [is it?]'—becomes aware of the day of darkness as being ready at hand" (Job 15:23). Indeed, said R. Hisda, his life is no life.

Our masters taught: There are three whose life is no life: he who must look to the table of others, he whose wife rules him, and he whose body is racked by suffering. And some say: he who possesses but one shirt.[16]

288. R. Ahai ben Josiah said: He who eats of his own is [as much at ease] as an infant raised at his mother's breast.

---

1. B. Ta 10b.
2. B. Yoma 21a.
3. B. Ta 10b.
4. Or "a scholar," as both are too busy to attend to the city's needs.
5. The presence of a horse will warn thieves of the likelihood of being pursued.
6. B. Pes 113a.
7. MhG Gen., p. 84; PRE 12.
8. Or we would have had to live on thorns and thistles.
9. B. Pes 118a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. Ibid.
11. Gen. R. 20:9.
12. For the child's sake, while no means were provided for the father to dispose of for his own needs.
13. B. Shab 53b.
14. Yalkut, Ps., §690.
15. B. Pes 54b.
16. Since he cannot wash it, he is consumed by vermin. B. Betz 32b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

He also used to say: When a man eats of his own, his mind is at ease. But a man's mind is not at ease when he eats even at his father's table, his mother's table, or his children's table, let alone at a stranger's table.[1]

289. Our masters taught: He who looks to the earnings of his wife or the earnings of his mill[2] will never see a sign of blessing.[3]

290. A man prefers one kav of his own food to nine kav of his neighbor's.[4]

291. "In her mouth an olive leaf freshly plucked" (Gen. 8:11). Where did the dove bring it? R. Bebai said: The gates of the Garden of Eden were opened for her, and she brought it there. R. Abbahu said to him: Had she brought it from the Garden of Eden, would it not have been something finer, such as a stick of cinnamon or a leaf of balsam? But in truth the dove's olive leaf was a hint to Noah: it is better to have this bitter leaf from the hand of the Holy One than something sweet from your hand.[5]

292. R. Jeremiah ben Eleazar said: What is meant by "And lo, in her mouth an olive leaf freshly plucked" (Gen. 8:11)? That the dove said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, may my sustenance be as bitter as this olive leaf, just so it is proffered by You, rather than be sweet as honey but dependent upon creatures of flesh and blood.[6]

293. Treat your Sabbath like a weekday rather than depend on the [handouts of] others.[7]

294. Sell yourself to work that is alien to you rather than depend on the handouts of others.[8]

295. R. Yohanan and R. Eleazar both said: As soon as a man becomes dependent upon others, his face changes into as many colors as does a kerum, as is said, "As a kerum, he finds himself disdained among the sons of men" (Ps. 12:9).[9] What is the kerum? When R. Dimi came down [from the Land of Israel] he said: There is a bird in cities across the sea, called kerum, and when the sun shines on it, it changes into many colors.

Both R. Ammi and R. Assi said: [A man who must depend on others] is as one chastised by two diametrically opposed punishments—fire and water—as is said, "When Thou didst cause men to ride over our heads, it was as though we came through fire and water" (Ps. 66:12).[10]

296. Poverty in one's house is harder to bear than fifty lashes.[11]

297. No portion in life is harder to bear than poverty, for he who is crushed by poverty is as one beset by all the afflictions in the world, indeed, as one stricken by all the curses listed in Deuteronomy.[12]

Our masters added: Were all afflictions in the world gathered on one side and poverty on the other, poverty would outweigh them all. Come and see: when Satan was pressing charges against Job with the Holy One, he said: You have given Job possessions and children, and You are solicitous about them. At that, the Holy One said to Job: What will you have—poverty or afflictions? Job replied to the Master of the universe: I would rather accept all the afflictions in the world, but not poverty.[13]

298. Immikantron[14] wrote to Hadrian Caesar, "If it is the circumcised you hate, there are also the Ishmaelites. If it is Sabbath observers you hate, there are also the Cutheans.[15] Apparently [it is not their religion but] the people of Israel that you hate. May her God requite a man like you." At that, Hadrian had it proclaimed that the man who had written the missive should make himself known to Caesar, because Caesar wished to give him a gift. Presently a certain man came and represented himself as the writer of the missive. [Though aware that he was not the writer], Caesar ordered, "Let him be beheaded." But [before that was done], he asked the man, "Why did you say such a thing?" The man replied, "Because I knew you would free me from three miserable anxieties." Caesar: "What are they?" The man: "My appetite demands food from me morning and evening, and I have nothing to give it; and my wife and my children make the same demand." Hadrian: "Since he leads such a miserable life, let him go." Then the man applied to himself the verse "So I hated life" (Eccles. 2:17).[16]

299. Poverty is like death. A poor man is like one dead.[17]

300. The torments of poverty deprive a man of his good sense and of the capacity to acknowledge his Creator.[18]

301. We have been taught that R. Eleazar ha-Kappar said: A man should always beseech God's mercy concerning the state of poverty, for if he does not come into it, his son may; and if his son does not come into it, his son's son may, as is said, "Thou shalt surely give thy needy brother . . . because that for (bi-gelal) this thing . . ." (Deut. 15:10), the word bi-gelal being taken to suggest—so taught sages in the school of R. Ishmael—

---

1. ARN 30.
2. In which others grind their wheat, while the miller does nothing.
3. B. Pes 50b.
4. B. BM 38a.
5. Gen. R. 33:6; Yalkut, Noah, §58.
6. B. Er 18b.
7. B. Shab 118a.
8. P. Ber 9:3, 13d.
9. JV: "When vileness is exalted among the sons of men." But kerum ("is exalted") is also the name of a bird found in equatorial and western Africa.
10. B. Ber 6b.
11. B. BB 116a.
12. See Deut. 28:15–58.
13. Exod. R. 31:12.
14. A Jew otherwise unknown.
15. Yet you do not persecute the Ishmaelites or the Cutheans.
16. Having been made to live against his will. Eccles. R. 2:17, §1.
17. B. Ned 7b and 64b.
18. B. Er 41b.

that poverty is a wheel (galgal) that goes around and around in the world.[1]

302. "For God is a judge; He putteth down one, and lifteth up another" (Ps. 75:8). To what may this world be compared? To a garden's waterwheel: its clay dippers below come up full, and those above go down empty. So, too, not everyone who is rich today will be rich tomorrow, and not everyone who is poor today will be poor tomorrow, for the world is a wheel.[2]

303. A Roman noblewoman asked R. Yose ben Halafta: In how many days did the Holy One create His world? R. Yose replied: In six days, for it is written, "In six days the Lord made heaven and earth" (Exod. 20:11). She asked: And what has He been doing since?[3] R. Yose replied: He has been busy making ladders, having this one ascend and that one descend, making this one rich and that one poor.[4]

304. R. Eleazar ben Pedat was a very poor man. Once, after having himself bled, he had nothing to eat [to regain his strength]. So, coming upon a garlic skin, he put it into his mouth, but he grew faint and fell asleep. The sages, who came in to visit him, found him weeping and smiling [in his sleep], and tongues of fire were issuing from his forehead. When he woke up, they asked him: Why did you smile and weep, and why did tongues of fire issue from your forehead? He replied: [I wept] because I saw the Holy One sitting at my side, and when I asked Him, "How long will I suffer such poverty in this world?" He replied, "Eleazar, My son, would you rather I turn the world back to its very beginnings? Perhaps you might then be born in a more bountiful hour?" I replied, "All this, and then only 'perhaps'?" [I smiled because] when I went on to ask, "Which is the longer part of my life—the one that I have already lived, or the one I am still to live?" He replied, "The one that you have already lived." I said to Him, "If so, I do not want what is left." He replied, "In reward for saying, 'I do not want what is left,' I will give you in the world-to-come thirteen rivers of balsam oil as clear as the Euphrates and the Tigris, which you will be able to enjoy." Finally, tongues of fire issued from my forehead, because when I asked, "Master of the universe—nothing more?" He replied, "And what do you wish Me to give to your fellow men?" I said, "Am I asking a boon from a mere mortal who has nothing to give?" He [playfully] tapped my forehead and exclaimed, "Eleazar, My son, I shall pelt you with My arrows!"[5]

305. "All the days of the poor are evil" (Prov. 15:15). But are there not Sabbaths and festivals?

[However, the verse may be understood in the light of what Samuel had to say, for] he said: A change in diet [which Sabbath and festival fare entails] is the beginning of disease in the bowels.

Ben Sira added: [Not only the days of the poor are evil]—the nights also. For > Lower than all roofs is a poor man's roof.

> And his vineyard is on the mountain's highest [and least fertile] summit.
> The rain from other roofs pours down on his roof.
> Even as the soil of his vineyard washes down to other vineyards.[6]

306. Poverty dogs a poor man's footsteps.[7]

307. The weasel and the cat [make peace to] have a feast on the fat of the luckless.[8]

308. At the gate to emporia, kin and friends are many; at the gate to penury, there are neither kin nor friends.[9]

309. Ben Zoma said: Who is rich? He who delights in his lot.[10]

310. Our masters taught: Who is wealthy? He who is content with his wealth—so said R. Meir. But R. Tarfon said: He who has one hundred vineyards, one hundred fields, and one hundred slaves working in them. R. Akiva said: He who has a wife comely in deeds. R. Yose said: He who has a privy not far from his table.[11]

311. "In want of all things" (Deut. 28:48). R. Ammi said in the name of Rav: This means with neither lamp nor table. R. Hisda said: Without a wife. R. Sheshet[12] said: Without an attendant. R. Nahman said: Without knowledge. Other sages taught: Without salt or fat.[13]

312. Abbaye said: We have a tradition that only he who lacks knowledge is poor.[14]

313. R. Joshua ben Levi said: "All the days of a poor man are evil" (Prov. 15:15) if he is irascible; "but contentment is a feast without end" (ibid.), [even for a poor man] when he is content.[15]

314. Where there is wealth, there should be no penny-pinching.[16]

---

1. B. Shab 151b.
2. Exod. R. 31:3.
3. Apparently an ironical shaft directed at the Jewish idea that creation was a single act of God in the distant past.
4. Tanhuma, Va-yishlah, §10.
5. "You win!" B. Ta 25a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. The citation from Ecclesiasticus, evidently found among the fragments of the Cairo geniza, is not found in current texts, which are all based on the Greek translation. B. Ket 110b.
7. B. BK 92a.
8. B. Sanh 105a.
9. Avot 4:1.
10. B. Shab 32a.
11. At that time, privies were out in the fields. B. Shab 25b.
12. He was blind (see above, part 2, chap. 1, §632.).
13. B. Ned 41a.
14. Ibid.
15. B. BB 145b.
16. B. Shab 102b.

315. Should you hear that your neighbor is dead, believe it; that your neighbor got rich, do not believe it.[1]

316. All parts of the body depend on the heart. But the heart depends on what's in the purse.[2]

317. Three things are distressing to the body. Disease of the heart is distressing to the body. More distressing than disease of the heart is disease in the bowels. More distressing than either is lack of money in the purse.[3]

318. "And everything in their train that made them stand up" (Deut. 11:6). R. Eleazar said: The verse refers to a man's money, which enables him to stand up on his feet.[4]

319. R. Yohanan said: I remember the time when four seah [of wheat] cost as little as one sela, yet for lack of a mere issar many people in Tiberias were swollen with hunger.[5]

320. A man must not squander his possessions.[6]

321. The Torah wishes to spare Israel unnecessary expense.[7]

322. Scripture says, "And the priest shall command that they empty the house," etc. (Lev. 14:36). What is it that the Torah seeks to spare? Man's earthenware vessels, even his cruse and his ewer.[8] If the Torah is so concerned about property that is of least worth, how much more about property that one prizes most; if about the property of a wicked man,[9] how much more about the property of a righteous man.[10]

323. "And Jacob remained alone" (Gen. 32:25). R. Eleazar said: He remained behind for the sake of some small narrow-necked jugs.[11] From this incident it follows that their property is more precious to the righteous than their body. Why so? Because they do not reach out to seize what is not theirs.[12]

324. Crumbs [scattered] in a house lead to poverty.[13]

325. The angel of poverty was following a certain man but could not get hold of him, because the man was extremely careful about picking up crumbs. One day he ate some bread while he was seated on a grassy spot, and the angel of poverty said: This time he is sure to fall into my hands. But after eating, the man brought a mattock, dug up the blades of grass, and threw them into the river.[14] The man then heard the angel's voice crying: Alas! This man has driven me out of his home!

Abbaye said: At first I used to think that one should pick up crumbs [from the floor] because one should be tidy, but recently my master told me that it was because not doing so leads to poverty.[15]

326. The [heavenly] prince in charge of sustenance is called Nakid, one who picks up crumbs. The prince in charge of poverty is called Naval, one who is wasteful.[16]

327. A man's possessions should not be more precious to him than his person.[17]

328. The presumption is that no man will readily assent to the loss of his money.[18]

329. The reason property is called nekhasim is because it conceals itself (nikhsin) from one person, and makes itself available to another. Why are certain coins called zuzim? Because they remove themselves (zazim) from one and give themselves to another. Why is money called mamon? Because what you count (moneh) so carefully is nothing at all.[19]

330. R. Isaac said: Blessing is possible only in that which is hidden from the eye, as is said, "The Lord will command the blessing for thee only in that which is hidden[20] from thee" (Deut. 28:8).

Sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: Blessing is possible only in things not under the direct control of the eye, as is said, "The Lord will command the blessing for thee [only] in that which is hidden from thee."

Our masters taught: One who enters his barn to measure the new grain should recite the prayer "May it be Your will, O Lord our God, to send blessing upon the work of our hands." Once he begins to measure, he should say, "Blessed be He who sends blessing into this heap." If, however, he measures and then recites the prayer, it is a prayer in vain—blessing cannot be found in anything already weighed, anything already measured, anything already counted, but only in what is hidden from sight.[21]

---

1. B. Git 30b.
2. P. Ter 8:10, 46b.
3. Eccles. R. 7:26, §2.
4. B. Pes 119a.
5. B. BB 91b.
6. B. Ar 24a.
7. B. RH 27a.
8. Since they cannot be cleansed by immersion, they must be broken if the priest declares the house unclean.
9. Leprosy in a house is considered punishment for the sin of slander.
10. Neg 12:5.
11. Since he had already taken across the ford "that which he had" (Gen. 32:24), he must have come back for some odds and ends left behind.
12. So what they have earned by honest work is more precious to them. B. Hul 91a.
13. Jacob risked his life to save his odds and ends; the righteous earn their property by hard and long labor, not easily by robbery. But cf. below in this chapter, §327. B. Pes 111b.
14. To prevent the crumbs being trod upon and thus wasted, the man threw them into the river for the fish.
15. B. Hul 105b.
16. B. Pes 111b.
17. B. BK 117b.
18. B. Shab 153a.
19. Num. R. 22:8.
20. The word asamekha ("thy barns") is here associated with samuy ("hidden").
21. B. Ta 8b.

331. He who sees a pot in his dream may anticipate well-being, as is said, "When thou puttest on [a pot], there will be well-being for us" (Isa. 26:12).[1]

332. When the barley is quite gone from the jar, strife comes knocking at the door.[2]

333. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Attend to what comes to hand, what you have the means for, and what is still within your power. If you defer today's needs and its obligations to the morrow, the morrow will have [more than] enough to cope with its own needs and obligations—how can it cope with those of yesterday?[3]

334. We have been taught that R. Eliezer the Elder said: He who has a loaf of bread in his basket but says, "What will I eat tomorrow?" is one of those who are lacking in faith.[4]

335. It is written in the book of Ben Sira: "Be not distressed about tomorrow's trouble, for you do not know what the morrow will bring." When the morrow comes, you may be no more, so that you will have worried about a world that is not yours.[5]

336. "Sustenance for each day on its day" (Exod. 16:4). He who created the day creates the sustenance for it. From this verse R. Eleazar of Modiim infers: He who has enough to eat today but wonders, "What will I eat tomorrow?" is lacking in faith.[6]

337. The Holy One sits at the height of the world and apportions sustenance for each creature.[7]

338. The Holy One sits and nourishes the entire world, all of it, from the horns of wild oxen to the eggs of vermin.[8]

339. There is the story of a priest who was reduced to poverty and wanted to go outside the Land. So he called his wife and said to her, "Since people are in the habit of coming to me to have me examine the plague spots on their bodies, come and I will teach you, so that you will know how to examine such spots. When, in examining a man's hair, [you find that] its oil well is dried up, you will know that the man is stricken, because for each and every hair the Holy One created a well of its own from which to drink. When its well is dried up, the hair dries up." His wife responded, "If for each and every hair the Holy One created a well from which to drink, is it not more fitting by far that the Holy One should provide sustenance for you—a man from whom his children derive their sustenance?" So she did not let him go outside the Land.[9]

340. R. Tahalifa the brother of Rabbannai of Hozae taught: Between New Year's Day and the Day of Atonement, all of a man's sustenance [for the coming year] is fixed for him, except his expenses for Sabbaths and festivals, and his expenses for his children's instruction in Torah. If he diminishes any of these, his sustenance is reduced; if he increases these, his sustenance is increased.[10]

341. Rava said: Length of life, children, and sustenance depend not on one's merit, but on one's mazzal.[11] Consider Rabbah and R. Hisda. Both were saintly sages—when one prayed for rain, it came; when the other prayed for rain, it also came. Yet R. Hisda lived to the age of ninety-two, but Rabbah only to the age of forty. In R. Hisda's house, sixty wedding feasts were celebrated; in Rabbah's house, sixty bereavements. In R. Hisda's house, there was bread of the finest flour even for dogs, and it went to waste; in Rabbah's house, barley[12] bread was for human beings, and even that was hardly to be had.[13]

342. Sages taught in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: The loaf and the rod, wrapped together, were handed down from heaven. Thus the Holy One said to Israel: If you keep the Torah, here is a loaf to eat; if not, here is a rod to be chastised with.[14]

343. Our masters taught: When there is famine in the city, take to your legs, for it is said, "And there was a famine in the Land, and Abram went down to Egypt" (Gen. 12:10).[15]

344. Wealth in abundance—bad; in moderation—good.[16]

345. The more you get, the more you fret.[17]

346. "And Di-zahav"[18] (Deut. 1:1). What is meant by Di-zahav? The sages in the school of R. Yannai taught: Moses protested to the Holy One, saying, "Master of the universe, it is the silver and gold (zahav) You showered upon Israel until they said, 'Enough' (dai)—it is that which led them to make the [golden] calf." In explaining Moses' protest, sages in the school of R. Yannai quoted the proverb, "A lion roars [in pleasurable delight] not over

---

1. JV: "Lord, Thou wilt establish peace for us." But the stem shfi means "establish" as well as "put on [a pot]." B. Ber 56b; Yalkut, Isa., §429.
2. B. BM 59a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
3. B. Shab 151b, as it appears in the Arukh.
4. B. Sot 48b.
5. B. Yev 63b.
6. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yassa, 2.
7. B. Pes 118a.
8. B. Shab 107b; B. AZ 3b.
9. Tanhuma B, Tazria, §8.
10. B. Betz 15b–16a.
11. Star.
12. Barley was fodder for animals.
13. B. MK 28a.
14. Lev. R. 35:6.
15. B. BK 60b.
16. Based on B. Git 70a.
17. Avot 2:7.
18. An unidentified place.

a heap of straw but over a heap of [freshly killed] flesh."

[In illustrating Moses' protest], R. Oshaia told the parable of a man who had a heifer that was lean but leggy. When he fed her tasty vetches, the heifer kicked him [in sheer delight]. So the man said: What led you to kick me, if not the tasty vetches I myself fed you?

[In explaining Moses' protest], R. Hiyya bar Abba told in the name of R. Yohanan still another parable: A man had a son. He bathed and anointed him, gave him ample food and drink, and hung a purse about his neck. Then he set him down at the door of a brothel. How could the young man do other than sin? R. Sheshet said: This bears out the proverb "A full belly leads to rebellious deeds."

R. Samuel bar Nahmani taught in the name of R. Jonathan: How do we know that in the end the Holy One reversed Himself and admitted to Moses that He was wrong? Because God said, "I multiplied unto her silver and gold, which [I should have known] they would use for Baal" (Hos. 2:10).[1]

The Labor of Man's Hands

347. "That the Lord thy God may bless thee" (Deut. 14:29). Lest it be thought that God's blessing comes to a man who sits in idleness, the verse ends with the injunction "In all the work of thy hand which thou must do" (ibid.). If a man works, he is blessed; if not, he is not blessed.[2]

348. R. Dostai bar Yannai said in the name of R. Meir: In Scripture, Isaac is told, "And I will bless thee" (Gen. 26:24). So, expounding these words,[3] Isaac said: Clearly blessing rests only on the work of one's hands. So he set about sowing, as is said, "And Isaac sowed in that land, and found in the same year a hundredfold" (Gen. 26:12).[4]

349. "God hath seen mine affliction, and the labor of my hands, and gave judgment yesternight" (Gen. 31:42). Because of the labor of Jacob's hands, God warned Laban not to do harm to Jacob. Thus Scripture teaches that a man should not say, "I will eat and drink and enjoy what is good, but will impose no burden on myself, and mercy will be shown [me] from Heaven." Hence Scripture: "Thou hast blessed the work of his hands" (Job 1:10). A man must toil, work with both his hands. Then the Holy One sends His blessing.[5]

350. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways and be wise" (Prov. 6:6). R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: It was sufficient humiliation for man that he had [to be told] to learn from an ant. Had he learned [from her] and done likewise, he would have been sufficiently humbled, but since he was to have learned from her ways and did not, [the humiliation is all the greater].[6]

351. "And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon the man" (Gen. 2:21). R. Joshua of Sikhnin said in the name of R. Levi: The beginning of man's downfall is sleep. When he sleeps, he does not occupy himself with Torah; when he sleeps, he does no work.[7]

352. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Even Adam tasted nothing before he worked, for Scripture says, "And He put him into the Garden of Eden to till it and to tend it" (Gen. 2:15), and only after that, He told him, "Of every tree of the Garden of Eden thou mayest freely eat" (ibid.).

R. Tarfon said: The Holy One did not cause His Presence to dwell among Israel until they did some work, for Scripture says, "And let them make Me the Sanctuary, then shall I dwell among them" (Exod. 25:8).

R. Judah ben Betera said: He who has no work to do—what should he do? If he has a run-down courtyard or a run-down field, let him go and busy himself with it, for Scripture says, "Six days shalt thou labor, and do any kind of thy work" (Exod. 20:9). What is signified by Scripture's saying, "any kind of thy work"? To include him who has run-down courtyards or run-down fields—let him go and busy himself with them.

R. Yose said: Man dies only out of idleness.[8]

353. A parable of a man who had a filly, a she-ass, and a sow. He measured out barley to the she-ass and the filly, but let the sow eat as much as she wanted. The filly complained to the she-ass, "What is the idiot doing? To us, who do the work of the master, he rations food, but to the sow, who does nothing, he gives as much as she wants." The she-ass replied, "The time will come when you will see the sow's downfall, for she is stuffed with fodder not out of deference to her but to her own harm." When the Calends[9] came, they took the sow and stuck her. Later, when barley was placed before the youngling of the she-ass, she sniffed at it without eating it. So her dam said to her: My daughter, not the eating but the idleness leads to being slaughtered.[10]

354. Idleness leads to unchastity. Idleness leads to dull wits.[11]

355. "And when ye come into the Land, ye shall plant" (Lev. 19:23). The Holy One said to Israel: Even though you find it full of all kinds of good, you are not to say, "We will stay put and not plant." But be sure to plant saplings. Even as, when you entered, you found saplings that others planted, so you are to plant for your children.

"He hath made everything beautiful in its time; also

---

1. B. Ber 32a.
2. TdE 14 (JPS, p. 70).
3. The verse reads: "Will bless thee and multiply thy seed." So Isaac inferred that even as multiplication of kind requires sexual intercourse, so growth in possessions requires sowing.
4. Tos Ber 7:8.
5. Tanhuma, Va-yetze, §13.
6. Sif Deut., §306.
7. Gen. R. 17:5; Yalkut, Bereshit, §26.
8. ARN 11.
9. The first day of the Roman month, usually observed as a feast.
10. Esther R. 7:1; Yalkut, Esther, §1053.
11. B. Ket 59b.

He hath caused to be hidden (ha-'olam) for their heart" (Eccles. 3:11). The word ha-'olam [h-'vlm], spelled here defectively, without the letter vav, is to be read he'elim "caused to be hidden"—[that is, the Holy One hid the day of death from the heart of man]. Had the Holy One not hidden the day of death from the heart of man, no man would have built or planted, for he would have said, "Tomorrow I may die—why should I get up and weary myself for the sake of others?" Therefore the Holy One hid the day of death from the heart of man, so that a man would build and plant. If he merits it, it will be his; if not, it will be for others.

A story is told of Emperor Hadrian when he was on his way to war, proceeding with his troops to fight a certain province that had rebelled against him. On the road, he encountered an old man who was planting fig saplings. Hadrian asked him, "How old are you now?" The old man: "A hundred years old." Hadrian: "You are a hundred years old, yet you go to all this trouble to plant fig saplings! Do you expect to eat from them?" The old man: "My lord emperor, I am indeed planting. If I am worthy, I shall eat the fruit of my plantings; and if not, then even as my forebears have labored for me, so I labor for my children." After spending three years at war, Hadrian returned and found that old man in the same place. What did the old man do? He took a basket, filled it with beautiful first-ripe figs and presented it to Hadrian, saying, "My lord king, pray accept this from your servant. I am the same old man whom you found busy planting saplings on your march. Behold, He who is everywhere granted me the privilege of eating the fruit of my saplings. The figs in the basket are some of that fruit." Hadrian ordered his servants, "Take the basket from him and fill it with gold coins." His servants did so, and the old man took the basket filled with gold coins and went home. Boasting of it to his wife and children, he told them the entire story. Now, the wife of that old man's neighbor, who was standing there, heard what the old man told and, taunting her husband, said, "All other people get about, and the Holy One provides them with good things, while you stay home in the dark [of poverty]. Look, our neighbor presented the emperor with a basket of figs, and the emperor filled it for him with gold coins. Now you get busy. Take a big basket, fill it with all kinds of good things—apples, figs, and other delicious fruit which he loves very much. Then go and present them to him—perhaps he will fill your basket with gold coins as he did for our old neighbor." Heeding his wife, the man took a big basket, filled it with figs, hoisted it on his shoulder, and approached the emperor on a side road. He stood before him and said, "My lord emperor, I hear that you are fond of fruit, and so I came to present some figs to you." The emperor said to his officers, "Take the figs and pelt his face with them." They promptly stripped him naked and proceeded to pelt his face with the figs until his face swelled up. The officers all but blinded him in their endeavor to make an example of him. Finally, he went home sobbing in despair. When his wife saw him, his face swollen, his body bruised and battered, she asked, "What happened to you?" He replied, "I'll get even with you for all the 'honor' accorded me." She then said to him, "Go and exult before your mother that what was thrown at you was figs and not citrons, and that they were ripe and not green."[1]

356. If a man does not prepare on the eve of the Sabbath, what will he eat on the Sabbath?

If a man does not plow and sow, harvest and vintage during the sunny season, what will he eat during the rainy season?[2]

357. R. Hanina ben Pazzi said: Thorns get neither hoeing nor sowing, yet they grow of themselves and rise up high. Wheat, on the other hand—how much pain and labor is required before it comes up.[3]

358. R. Tarfon used to say: Do not remove yourself from the norm that has no limit and from the task that has no end.[4] By what parable may the matter be understood? By the one of a man who keeps drawing water from the sea and pouring it on dry land—the sea is not diminished, and the dry land is not filled. So, too, if a man grows impatient [about the amount of Torah he acquires], he should be told: Numskull, why are you impatient? [However little you learn], every day you gain the equivalent of a gold denar.[5]

359. R. Sheshet said: Work is excellent for warming up the body [before one sits down to eat].[6]

360. On his way to the house of study, R. Judah used to carry a pitcher on his shoulder, saying, "Great is labor, for it honors the laborer."

R. Simeon used to carry a basket on his shoulder, saying, "Great is labor, for it honors the laborer."[7]

361. R. Meir said: Pause and consider how important is the capacity to work. For an ox [stolen and slaughtered or sold by a thief], the penalty is fivefold, because he took it from its work; but for a lamb [stolen and slaughtered or sold], the penalty is only fourfold, because the thief did not take it away from work.[8]

362. Sages of the school of R. Ishmael taught: "Choose life" (Deut. 30:19) means: choose a craft.[9]

363. Rabban Gamaliel said: To what may he who has a craft be compared? To a vineyard encompassed by a hedge or to a ditch surrounded by a fence. But to what may he who has no craft be compared? To a vineyard not encompassed by a hedge, to a ditch not surrounded by a fence.

R. Eleazar bar Zadok said in the name of Rabban Gamaliel: To what may he who has a craft be likened? To

---

1. Tanhuma, Kedoshim, §8; Lev. R. 25:5.
2. Eccles. R. 1:15, §1; Midrash Prov. 6:6.
3. Gen. R. 45:4.
4. Study of Torah.
5. ARN 27.
6. B. Git 67b.
7. B. Ned 49b.
8. B. BK 79b.
9. P. Pe 1:1, 15c.

a hedged vineyard, into which neither cattle nor beast can enter; what is in it, no passersby can eat, and what is in it, no passersby can see. But to what may he who has no craft be compared? To a vineyard whose fence is breached—cattle and beasts can enter it; passersby can eat and see all that is in it.[1]

364. Though the famine lasted seven years, it never so much as passed the craftsman's door.[2]

365. Shemaiah said: Love work, and avoid holding public office.[3]

366. Rabban Gamaliel son of R. Judah [I] the Patriarch said: Study of Torah combined with an occupation is good, for labor at both keeps sin out of one's mind. But study of Torah alone, without an occupation, will in the end come to naught, and even occasion sin.[4]

367. He who is versed in Scripture, Mishnah, and a worldly occupation will not easily sin, for it is said, "A threefold cord is not easily broken" (Eccles. 4:12). But he who is versed in neither Scripture nor Mishnah nor a worldly occupation is not part of the civilized world.[5]

368. R. Ishmael bar R. Nahman said: Worldly occupation preceded the giving of Torah by twenty-six generations. The words "To maintain the way [and then] the tree of life" (Gen. 3:24) refer to this precedence: "the way—that is, the way of an occupation—first, and then "the tree of life," the [giving of] Torah.[6]

369. Our masters taught: "And thou shalt gather in thy corn" (Deut. 11:14). What is the intent of these words? Since Scripture says, "This book of Torah shall not depart out of thy mouth" (Josh. 1:8), we might suppose that the injunction [not to allow Torah's words to depart from one's mouth] is to be taken literally. Therefore Scripture says, "And thou shalt gather in thy corn," a way of saying [that one must combine study of Torah with] a worldly occupation. Such was the view of R. Ishmael. But R. Simeon ben Yohai differed. Is it possible? he asked. If a man plows when plowing is called for, sows when sowing is called for, reaps when reaping is called for, threshes when threshing is called for, and winnows when the wind is blowing, what is to become of the Torah? However, what Scripture means is that when Israel obey the will of Him who is everywhere, their work is performed by others, in keeping with the promise "Strangers shall stand and feed your flocks" (Isa. 61:5). But when Israel do not obey the will of Him who is everywhere, their work must be done by themselves, as Scripture says, "And thou shalt gather in thy corn." Nor is this all: the work of others will also be done by Israel, in keeping with "And thou shalt serve thine enemy" (Deut. 28:48).

Abbaye observed: Many followed R. Ishmael's advice and succeeded [in Torah and in their worldly occupation]; others followed R. Simeon ben Yohai's advice and succeeded in neither.

Rava said to the scholars [who studied with him]: I beg of you not to appear before me during Nisan and Tishri,[7] so that you will not need to worry about your sustenance during the other months of the year.

Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Yohanan, who quoted R. Judah bar Ilai: Pause and consider the difference between the earlier and later generations. The earlier generations made the study of Torah a primary concern and their daily work a secondary one, and both prospered in their hands. The later generations made their daily work a primary concern and their study of Torah a secondary one, and neither prospered in their hands.[8]

370. R. Joshua said: If a man recites two Halakhot in the morning and two Halakhot in the evening, and the rest of the day is occupied with his work, it is imputed to him as though he [meditated upon it day and night, and thus] fulfilled the entire Torah, all of it.

"Thou shalt meditate therein day and night" (Josh. 1:8)—[a precept that is impossible to fulfill]. Hence R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Only to men who ate manna[9] was the Torah given to study intensely, since such men had no need to engage in craft or business. Otherwise, could a man sit and study Torah, not knowing where his food and drink would come from or where he would get his clothes or coverings? One must conclude that the Torah was given to be studied intensely only by men who ate manna, and secondly by [priests], who ate heave offerings.[10]

371. R. Hiyya bar Ammi said in the name of Ulla: He who lives from the labor of his hands is greater than he who fears Heaven.[11] For of him who fears Heaven, it is written, "Happy is the man that feareth the Lord" (Ps. 112:1). But of him who lives from the labor of his hands, it is written, "When thou eatest the labor of thy hands, happy shalt thou be; and it shall be well with thee" (Ps. 128:2). "Happy shalt thou be" in this world; "and it shall be well with thee" in the world-to-come.[12]

372. R. Hana the Moneychanger said: Once, Bar Nappaha [came to my banker's table and stood] over me. He asked me for a Gordian denar with which to measure a defect.[13] When I tried to stand up before him, he would

---

1. Tos Kid 1:11.
2. He could always barter his wares for food. B. Sanh 29a.
3. Avot 1:9.
4. Avot 2:2.
5. B. Kid 40b.
6. Adam was placed in the Garden of Eden to till it and tend it (Gen. 2:15), and twenty-six generations later—ten from Adam to Noah, ten from Noah to Abraham, six from Isaac to Moses—in the generation of Moses, the Torah was given. Lev. R. 9:3.
7. The season of reaping and vintage.
8. B. Ber 35b.
9. Whom God Himself provided with sustenance.
10. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yassa, 3; Tanhuma, Be-shallah, §20.
11. And depends on others for his livelihood.
12. B. Ber 8a.
13. In an animal's windpipe or skull, to determine whether the animal was kosher.

not allow me, saying: Sit down, my son, sit down—craftsmen engaged in their work are not expected to stand up before disciples of the wise.[1]

373. "It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth" (Lam. 3:27)—the yoke of Torah, the yoke of a wife, the yoke of work.[2]

374. R. Judah said: He who does not teach his son a craft is as though he were teaching him to be a brigand.[3]

375. R. Meir said: A man should teach his son a craft that is honorable[4] and unburdensome; and he should pray to Him to whom riches and possessions belong, for there is no craft in which there are not both poverty and wealth. In truth, poverty does not come from one's craft, nor does wealth; all comes according to one's merit.

R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Have you ever seen a beast or a fowl practicing a craft? Yet both get their sustenance without toil. Now, were they not created solely to serve me, even as I was created to serve my Maker? Is it not proper then that I also should make my living without toil? The answer is that I have acted evilly and so forfeited my right to sustenance without toil.

We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: I have never seen a lion who was a porter, a gazelle who was a harvester of figs, a fox who was a shopkeeper, a wolf who was a seller of pots—yet they are sustained without toiling. Now, these were created solely to serve me, while I was created to serve my Maker. If these, which were created solely to serve me, are sustained without toil, surely I, who was created to serve my Maker, should make my living without toil. The answer is that I acted evilly and so forfeited my right to sustenance without toil. As Scripture says, "Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withholden the bounty from you" (Jer. 5:25).[5]

376. Abba Gorion of Zidon said in the name of Abba Guria: A man should not teach his son to be an ass driver, a camel driver, a potter, a mariner, a shepherd, or a shopkeeper, for their craft is the craft of robbers.[6]

R. Judah said in Abba Guria's name: Most ass drivers are crooks. Most camel drivers are honest folk. Most mariners are pious folk. The best of physicians deserves Gehenna.[7] The most law-abiding of butchers is Amalek's partner.[8]

377. Our masters taught: He whose business is with women has a bad character. For example, goldsmiths, carders, hand-mill sharpeners, peddlers, wool dressers, hairdressers, laundrymen, bloodletters, bath attendants, and tanners.[9] From these, neither a king nor a high priest should be appointed. Why? Not because they are [personally] unfit, but because their craft is held in low esteem.

Our masters taught: Ten things are said of a bloodletter. He walks with his arms akimbo, is arrogant, sits [in lordly fashion], is niggardly with his means, begrudges others, and eats much rich food so that he excretes little; he is suspected of unchastity, cheating, and [unwitting] murder.[10]

378. We have been taught that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: Of course, no craft will ever disappear from the world. But happy is he who sees his parents engaged in a superior craft, and alas for him who sees his parents engaged in a mean craft. The world cannot get along without both perfumer or tanner—happy is he whose craft is the perfumer's, and alas for him whose craft is the tanner's.[11]

379. R. Zutra bar Tobiah said in the name of Rav: The verse "He hath made everything beautiful in its time" (Eccles. 3:11) suggests that the Holy One made every trade seem beautiful in the eyes of him who plies it.[12]

380. "And they turned aside thither, and they said unto [the Levite]: 'Who brought thee hither?' " (Judg. 18:3). They asked him, "Are you not a descendant of Moses? And now would you become a priest for the worship of an idol?" He replied, "I have a tradition from my grandfather's house: a man should hire himself out to officiate at idol-worship rather than be dependent on fellow creatures."

The Levite supposed that they were referring to actual avodah zarah (idol-worship). But in fact they were not—they meant work that was strange and uncongenial to him.[13] As Rav said to R. Kahana: Flay a carcass in the marketplace to earn a wage and do not say, "I am a priest, I am an important man, and such work is degrading to me."[14]

381. "The Lord is my shepherd" (Ps. 23:1). R. Hama bar Hanina said: You find no occupation more despised than that of the shepherd, who all his days walks about with his staff and his pouch. Yet David called the Holy One a shepherd![15]

382. Should a man say, "I am a descendant of the fathers of the world, of important stock, and it is not proper that I do menial work and be degraded," he should be told, "Fool, He who has formed you has already anticipated

---

1. B. Hul 54b.
2. Lam. R. 3:27, §9.
3. B. Kid 29a.
4. Literally, "clean," where the temptations to cheat are few.
5. B. Kid 82a; Tos Kid 5:14.
6. Each has an opportunity to steal.
7. Either because of their being haughty before God or because their treatment at times proves fatal.
8. Because he at times sells meat that is not kosher or his temperament is cruel. So Tosefot Yom Tov, ad loc. B. Kid 82a.
9. All these tradesmen make trinkets or garments, repair household tools, or deal in other ways with women.
10. B. Kid 82a.
11. Ibid.
12. B. Ber 43b.
13. Avodah zarah may mean either "strange worship" (i.e., idol-worship) or "strange, uncongenial work."
14. B. BB 110a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
15. Yalkut, Ps., §690.

you. For He did work before you came into the world, as is said, 'From all His work that He had done' " (Gen. 2:2).[1]

383. "And all the labor of my hands God saw" (Gen. 31:42). R. Jeremiah said: Labor is more precious than the merit of ancestors, for the merit of ancestors saved wealth, while labor saved lives. Merit of ancestors saved wealth, as Jacob told Laban: "Except the God of my father . . . surely now hadst thou sent me away empty" (ibid.). But labor saved life, as Jacob went on to say, "God hath seen my affliction and the labor of my hands, and gave judgment yesternight" (ibid.).[2]

384. The merit of work stands by a man even where the merit of ancestors cannot.[3]

Work on the Land and the Give-and-Take of Business

385. R. Eleazar stated: There will be a time when all craftsmen will take up work on the land, for it is said, "All the oarsmen, the mariners, and all the pilots of the sea, shall come down from their ships, they shall stand upon the land" (Ezek. 27:29).

R. Eleazar stated further: No occupation is inferior to that of work on the land, for of the aforementioned, it is said, "And they shall come down" (Ezek. 27:29).

Once, when R. Eleazar saw a plot of land that was plowed across its width, he said to it, "Even if you had been plowed across your length as well, turning over merchandise is still preferable."

Once, when Rav entered among growing ears of corn and observed their swaying, he said to them, "Sway, sway, as much as you will; turning over merchandise is still preferable."

Rava said: A hundred zuz in merchandise—meat and wine every day; a hundred zuz in land—only salt and vegetables. Furthermore, work on the land compels one to sleep on the ground[4] and be embroiled in strife.[5]

386. Better off is the man who has a vegetable patch, manures it, hoes it, and sustains himself from it than he who rents other people's vegetable patches as a sharecropper. As the proverb puts it: "Who rents one patch eats birds; who rents many patches—birds eat him."[6]

387. R. Eleazar said: A man who owns no parcel of land is not a man, for it is said, "The heavens are the heavens of the Lord; but the earth hath He given over to men" (Ps. 115:16).[7]

388. R. Eleazar said: Land is given only to strong men [who can defend it], as is said, "As a strong man, who hath land" (Job 22:8).

Resh Lakish said: The verse "He that labors on his land like a slave shall have food in plenty" (Prov. 12:11) means that if he makes himself a slave to his land, he will have food in plenty; if not, he will not have food in plenty.[8]

389. "A king maketh himself a slave to the fields" (Eccles. 5:8). Even if the king rules from world's end to world's end, he still must make himself a slave to his fields, for he has to keep asking, "Have the fields produced? Have the fields not produced?" Therefore, "he that loveth silver cannot be satisfied with silver, nor he that loveth abundance, unless there be produce [of the fields]" (Eccles. 5:9). He who huffs and puffs after wealth,[9] but owns no land—what joy can be his?[10]

390. There were three who had a passion for land, but no good came to them from it: Cain, tiller of the soil; Noah, the husbandman; and Uzziah, who loved husbandry.[11]

391. "Blessed art thou [if thou hast several crops] in the field" (Deut. 28:3). Your crops should be of three kinds: a third of the field in produce, another third in olives, and still another third in vines.[12]

392. Our masters taught: The verse "And of Asher he said: . . . Let him dip his foot in oil" (Deut. 33:24) speaks of the land of Asher, which, like a spring, flowed with oil.

It is told that when the people of Laodicea were in need of oil, they appointed an agent and instructed him, "Go and purchase for us a hundred myriads' worth of oil." He went first to Jerusalem, where he was told, "Go to Tyre." When he went to Tyre, he was told, "Go to Gush Halav." He went to Gush Halav and was told, "Go to So-and-so, who is out in the field." He went there and found the man breaking up the earth under his olive trees. The agent asked, "Do you have a hundred myriads' worth of oil?" The man replied, "Wait until I finish my work." The agent waited until he finished his work. Then the man slung his tools over his back and proceeded on his way, kicking stones from his path as he went. The agent asked himself: Is it likely that such a man would have a hundred myriads' worth of oil? It seems that the Jews are making sport of me. When the man got to his hometown, his maidservant brought him a kettle of hot water, and he washed his hands and feet in it. Then she brought him a

---

1. Zohar, Midrash Ne'elam.
2. Gen. R. 74:12.
3. Tanhuma, Va-yetze, §13.
4. Since he must remain in his field during the night to guard the crops.
5. With the owners of adjoining fields. B. Yev 63a.
6. Since he cannot possibly watch all the patches, birds devour his crops. Lev. R. 3:1.
7. B. Yev 63a.
8. B. Sanh 58b.
9. In the Hebrew, there is a play on the words homeh u-mehammeh ("huffs and puffs") and mamon ("wealth").
10. Eccles. R. 5:8, §1.
11. Cain was sentenced to become a wanderer (Gen. 4:12); Noah got drunk and his nakedness was exposed (Gen. 9:20); and Uzziah became a leper (2 Chron. 26:20). Gen. R. 22:3.
12. So that if one crop fails, you will still have the others. B. BM 107a.

golden bowl full of oil, and he dipped his hands and feet in it, in fulfillment of "Let him dip his foot in oil." After they ate and drank, the man measured out to the agent a hundred myriads' worth of oil and then asked, "Do you perhaps need more oil?" The agent: "Yes, but I have no more money with me." The man: "If you wish to buy more, take it, and I will go back with you for the money." The man measured out an additional eighteen hundred myriads' worth of oil. It is said that there was not a horse, a mule, a camel, or an ass in the Land of Israel that the agent did not hire [to transport the oil]. When he got back to his city, the citizens came out to give him a hero's welcome. He said to them, "Do not give such a welcome to me; rather, give it to this man who has come [with me], for he has measured out a hundred myriads' worth of oil, and I still owe him for an additional eighteen myriads' worth."

The story illustrates the verse "There is he that pretendeth himself rich, yet hath nothing; there is he that pretendeth himself poor, yet hath great wealth" (Prov. 13:7).[1]

393. Samuel said: In one matter I am to my father as vinegar is to wine. For my father used to inspect his property twice a day, whereas I do so only once a day. Samuel here followed his own maxim, for Samuel used to say: He who inspects his property [at least once] daily is sure to find at least one sela.[2]

Abbaye used to inspect his property daily. One day he met his tenant carrying off a bundle of twigs. Abbaye: "Where is this going to?" The tenant: "To my master's house." Abbaye: "Long have the sages anticipated you."[3]

R. Assi, who used to inspect his property daily, asked, "Where are all those sela Master Samuel promised?" One day, when he saw that a water pipe had burst in his field [and inundated it], he took off his cloak, rolled it up, stuffed it into the hole, and began to shout, so that people came and stopped up the break in the pipe. Then he said, "Now I see all those sela Master Samuel promised."[4]

394. R. Yohanan said: He who wishes to become rich should occupy himself with [breeding] small cattle. R. Hisda added: The verse "The young (ashtarot) of thy flock" (Deut. 7:13) implies that the young of small cattle enrich (measherot) their owners.[5]

395. "The lambs will provide you with clothing" (Prov. 27:26). Your clothing should be of the fleece of your own lambs. "The he-goats, the price of a field" (ibid.). It is better for a person to sell his field and buy he-goats [with the proceeds], than to sell his he-goats and buy a field. "The goats' milk will suffice for your food" (Prov. 27:27). The man will then find the goats' milk and the lambs in his house sufficient to provide for his sundry needs [and he need not slaughter the mothers for meat].[6]

396. "The Lord hath delivered me into the hands of those I cannot withstand" (Lam. 1:14). In the west [the Land of Israel], they said: The speaker in the verse is one whose sustenance depends solely on his money.[7]

397. R. Isaac said: A man should always have his money in his hand [so to speak], in keeping with "Bind up the money in thy hand" (Deut. 14:25).

R. Isaac also said: A man should divide his money into three parts: one-third in land, one-third in merchandise, and one-third at hand.[8]

398. "And he divided the people . . . into two camps" (Gen. 32:8). The Torah teaches good sense—a man should not put all his eggs in one basket.[9]

399. R. Judah said: One should always be careful that there is produce in his house, for strife is apt to arise in a man's house largely because of disputes about food, as is said, "He bringeth peace into thy borders, when He satisfieth thee with choice wheat" (Ps. 147:14). R. Papa said: Hence the proverb "When barley is gone from the jar, strife comes knocking at the door."

R. Hinena bar Papa said: A man should always see to it that there is produce in his house, because only when they had no produce left were Israel called "impoverished," as is said, "After Israel had done their sowing, [the foes] would attack them, destroy the produce of the land . . . and Israel was greatly impoverished" (Judg. 6:3–4 and 6:6).[10]

400. R. Hanin said: The words "And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee" (Deut. 28:66) apply to one who purchases produce year after year. "And thou shalt fear night and day" (ibid.) apply to one who purchases produce from Sabbath eve to Sabbath eve. "And shalt have no assurance of thy life" (ibid.) apply to one who depends on a bakeshop [for his bread].[11]

401. R. Ahai ben Josiah said: To whom may he who buys produce in the marketplace be compared? To an infant whose mother has died, and although he is brought around from door to door to different wetnurses, he is never satisfied.[12]

402. Rav said to his son Aibu: I have labored to teach you Halakhah, but without success. So come, and I will teach you worldly wisdom: sell your wares while the sand

---

1. B. Men 85b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. The meaning is that he who inspects his property daily will be ahead, for he will make sure that everything is in proper order and that no workman takes advantage of him during his absence.
3. By their advice to inspect one's property daily, whereby pilfering and thievery is stopped.
4. By being on the spot, he was able to halt serious damage to his crop. B. Hul 105a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. B. Hul 84b.
6. B. Hul 84a.
7. Since he has no land, he must buy his daily food from others. B. Yev 63b.
8. B. BM 42a.
9. Literally, "all his money in one corner." Gen. R. 76:3.
10. B. BM 59a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. B. Men 103b.
12. ARN 30.

is still on your feet.[1] Everything you sell, you may regret,[2] except wine, which you may sell without regret.[3] Drop the money into your purse, then open your sack.[4] Better a kav from the ground than a kor from the roof.[5] [Once the dates are in your bag, run to the brewery.][6]

403. When you buy, you gain; when you sell, you lose.[7]

404. When merchandise is held in low esteem, its price at rock bottom, go and buy it up, for in the end its price will rise.[8]

405. When merchandise is cheap, hasten to collect [money] and buy some.[9]

406. When a horn is sounded [in the marketplace] in Rome [inquiring about figs], you who are the son of a fig seller, [take advantage of the scarcity and] sell your father's figs [even without his permission].[10]

407. It is the way of the world for people to bring merchandise to a place where there is a demand for it.[11]

408. Bring herbs to Herbtown.[12]

409. R. Papa said: Sow, and you will not need to buy. Sell [even your household effects] to avoid the disgrace of beggary. Stop up [a small hole], and you will not need to repair. Repair, and you will not need to rebuild, for when a man engages in rebuilding, he will be reduced to beggary.[13]

410. R. Yohanan said: He whose father leaves him a great deal of money and wishes to lose it—let him wear linen garments, use glassware, and hire workmen and not be with them [so that they will be idle].[14]

411. "And will do that which is right in His eyes" (Exod. 15:26) while engaged in the give-and-take of business. The verse implies that when a man gives and takes in his business with integrity, and the spirit of his fellow creatures delights in him, it is accounted to him as if he had fulfilled the entire Torah, all of it.[15]

412. While R. Giddel was negotiating the purchase of a field, R. Abba came along and bought it. So R. Giddel went and lodged a complaint against R. Abba before R. Zera, who then went and reported the complaint to R. Isaac Nappaha. R. Isaac Nappaha responded, "Wait until R. Abba comes up to us for the next festival." When R. Abba came up, R. Isaac confronted him and asked, "If a poor man is turning a [wheat] cake over the coals, and another person comes along and takes it away from him, what would you call such a person?" R. Abba: "I would call him a scoundrel."

R. Isaac: "Then why, master, did you behave as you did?"

R. Abba: "I did not know that R. Giddel was negotiating the field's purchase."

R. Isaac: "Then let the master turn it over to R. Giddel right now."

R. Abba: "I will not turn it over to him through sale, because it is the first field I have ever bought, and when a man sells his first field, it is a bad omen for him. However, if he is willing to accept it as a gift, he may have it."

Now, R. Giddel refused to take possession of the field, because it is written, "He that hateth gifts shall live" (Prov. 15:27). Nor would R. Abba take possession of the field, because R. Giddel had negotiated its purchase. And so, since neither would take possession, it came to be called the Sages' Field.[16]

413. A seller interprets the terms of a sale liberally.[17]

414. This is the way of traders: they show the inferior wares first, and then display the best.[18]

415. Even he who buys and sells [at the same price] is called a merchant.[19]

416. The profit is mortgaged for the principal.[20]

417. Samuel said: When a man profits, he should profit no more than one-sixth above his cost.[21]

418. Do not pretend to be interested in a purchase if you do not have the money.[22]

419. An article bought has charm in the eyes of its buyer.[23]

420. When a person has made a bad purchase in the marketplace, should one praise it in his presence or disparage it? Surely one should praise it in his presence.[24]

---

1. After buying, sell quickly.
2. Since the price may go up.
3. Had you waited, it might have turned into vinegar.
4. Be sure to get the money for the merchandise before delivering it to the purchasers.
5. Rather earn a little near home than much far away.
6. To brew beer out of them—otherwise, you may eat them or they may deteriorate. B. Pes 113a.
7. B. BM 51a.
8. Tanhuma, Mishpatim, §5.
9. B. Ber 63a.
10. B. Ber 62b.
11. Exod. R. 9:6.
12. Since people come there to buy them. B. Men 85a.
13. B. Yev 63a.
14. B. BM 29b; B. Hul 84b.
15. Such a man will be regarded as "giving ear to His commandments and keeping all His statutes" (Exod. 15:26). So Nahmanides, ad loc. Mek, Be-shallah, Va-yassa, 1.
16. B. Kid 59a.
17. Consequently, all parts of the property, unless specifically excluded, are presumed to have been sold or included in the terms of sale. B. BB 37a.
18. Tanhuma, Shelah, §6.
19. B. BM 40b.
20. And cannot be collected before it is due for distribution—it may be offset by a loss. B. BM 105a.
21. B. BM 40b.
22. B. Pes 112b.
23. B. Sot 47a.
24. B. Ket 17a.

421. Our masters taught: They who dispose of merchandise at inflated prices[1] with a hullabaloo of false advertising, they who raise small cattle [which destroy crops],[2] they who cut down goodly fruit trees [for kindling], and they who greedily eye the better portion [when sharing with their neighbors] will never see a sign of blessing. Why not? Because people look askance at them.[3]

422. R. Joshua ben Levi said: The Men of the Great Assembly observed twenty-four fasts [to implore Heaven] that they who write Torah scrolls, tefillin, and mezuzot should not get rich, for if they got rich, they would not continue writing.

Our masters taught: They who write Torah scrolls, tefillin, and mezuzot, and those who trade in such articles, and those who trade with those who trade in them—indeed, all who engage in trade with sacred articles, which includes the sellers of blue dye for fringes—will never see a sign of blessing.[4]

423. Our masters taught: Four kinds of small change never bring a sign of blessing: the wages of Torah scribes, the wages of interpreters,[5] the profits of [the money of] orphans [held in trust], and coins that come from a city across the sea.[6]

424. Our masters taught: He who earns his money from trade in reeds and jars will never see a sign of blessing.[7]

425. They who lend money on interest deny the Root of the universe.[8]

426. We have been taught that R. Yose said: Pause and consider the blindness of usurers! When a man calls his neighbor a scoundrel, the neighbor resents it so much that he might even deprive him of his livelihood. But usurers bring witnesses, a scribe, and pen and ink, and they record and seal [a document that in effect declares], "That so-and-so [the usurer] denies the God of Israel."

We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: When a man has money and lends it without interest, Scripture says of him, "He who hath never lent money on interest, or taken a bribe against the innocent—he who acts thus shall never be shaken" (Ps. 15:5). From this verse you may infer that if a man lends money on interest, his possessions shall be shaken.[9]

427. A man should sell his daughter [into servitude] rather than lend money on interest.[10]

428. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: He who has money and lends it without witnesses transgresses "Thou shalt not put a stumbling block before the blind" (Lev. 19:14). And Resh Lakish said: He brings a curse upon himself, for [when he comes to collect without adequate proof, and the borrower denies the loan], people say, "Strike dumb those lying lips, so insolent in pride and scorn against an innocent man" (Ps. 31:19).

The sages said to R. Ashi: Ravina fulfills all that the sages have said. So [to test Ravina], late one Friday afternoon, R. Ashi sent word to Ravina: "Please, master, send me ten zuz as a loan, because I have a chance to buy a parcel of land." Ravina replied, "Let the master bring witnesses and draw up a writ of debt." R. Ashi: "Even I?" Ravina: "You, master, immersed as you are in your studies, all the more; for you may forget [that you have borrowed] and cause me to curse you."[11]

429. When R. Dimi came [from the Land of Israel], he said: How do we know that when a man is his neighbor's creditor for a maneh, and he knows that his neighbor does not have the money to repay it, he may not even pass in front of him? From the verse "Do not act toward him as a creditor" (Exod. 22:24).[12]

430. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Yohai said: What is the proof that when a man is his neighbor's creditor, he may not greet him, if such is not his usual practice? The verse "Usury—even a word that may remind one of money owed" (Deut. 23:20).[13] Hence, a word of greeting [by a creditor] is forbidden.[14]

431. R. Simeon said: Usury is indeed grave, if even a greeting is regarded as usury.[15]

432. "Unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon interest" (Deut. 23:21). What is signified by this verse? Has it not already been stated in the verse just preceding, "Thou shalt not lend upon interest to thy brother" (Deut. 23:20)? However, there is advance interest and there is delayed interest. For example: If a man makes up his mind to borrow money from a neighbor and sends him [a gift], saying, "This is to induce you to lend me"—that is advance interest. If a man borrows from his neighbor, repays

---

1. See Liebermann, TKF 3:854, n. 71. BR: Simta ("narrow streets [that abut public thoroughfares])." But the meaning of simta here is obscure.
2. See B. BK 80a.
3. B. Pes 50b.
4. Ibid.
5. The sages spoke in a low voice to these officials, who then repeated the sages' words in a loud voice.
6. The sea voyage being so risky. B. Pes 50b.
7. Because reeds and jars are so bulky, people think the trade is enormous and the profit so high that they begrudge it to traders in such wares.
8. Tos BM 6:17.
9. B. BM 71a.
10. B. Kid 20a.
11. B. BM 75b.
12. Ibid.
13. JV: "interest of anything that is lent upon interest." But R. Simeon construes davar ("thing") as though written dibbur ("word").
14. B. BM 75b.
15. P. BM 5:10, 10d.

the money, and then sends him [a gift], saying, "This is on account of your money, which lay idle with me"—that is delayed interest.[1]

433. We have been taught that R. Simeon said: They who lend money on interest lose more than they gain [because eventually their wealth will be lost].[2] And more: Presuming to regard Moses our teacher as a fool and his Torah as a lie,[3] they say, "Had Moses our teacher known that in this business [of usury] there is great profit, he would not have set down its prohibition."[4]

434. To what may interest be likened? To a man bitten by a serpent, who is not aware of the bite until a swelling sets in. So, too, with interest—a borrower is not aware of it until it swells up all about him.[5]

1. B. BM 75b; Sif Deut., §263.
2. See above in this chapter, §426.
3. The text reads euphemistically: "to regard Moses our teacher as a sage and his Torah as truth."
4. B. BM 75b.
5. Tanhuma, Mishpatim, §9; Exod. R. 31:6.

CHAPTER TWO

A MAN'S HOUSEHOLD

Marriage

1. R. Eleazar said: A man who has no wife is not a [complete] man, for Scripture says, "He created them male and female . . . and He [only then] called their name 'man' [Adam]" (Gen. 5:2).[1]

2. "With the Lord's help I brought a man into being" (Gen 4:1).[2] Prior to Eve's saying this, Adam had been created out of the earth, and Eve had been created out of [the rib of] Adam. Henceforth, [Eve went on], it is to be "in our [joint] image, after our [joint] likeness" (Gen. 1:26)—no man can come into being without a woman, and no woman can come into being without a man, and neither of them can come into being without the Presence.[3]

3. R. Tanhum said in the name of R. Hanilai: When a man is without a wife, he lives without joy, without blessing, without good. In the west [the Land of Israel], they added: Also without Torah, without a [protecting] wall. Rava bar Ulla added: Also without peace.[4]

4. "In want of everything" (Deut. 28:48) means, said R. Hisda, in want of a wife.[5]

5. [In referring to the high priest's] "house" (Lev. 16:6), Scripture means his wife.[6]

6. R. Yose said: I never spoke of my wife as "my wife," or of my ox as "my ox," but always referred to my wife as "my house" and to my ox as "my field."[7]

7. Our masters taught: "A man that hath built a new house . . . a man that hath betrothed a wife" (Deut. 20:5 and 20:7). The Torah teaches proper conduct: a man should first build a house and plant a vineyard, and only after that take a wife. In his wisdom, Solomon also said, "Prepare thy work without, and make it fit for thyself in the field; and afterward build thy house" (Prov. 24:27). "Prepare thy work without"—build a house; "and make it fit for thyself in the field"—plant a vineyard; "and afterward build thy house"—take a wife.[8]

8. We have been taught that R. Simeon reasoned: Why does the Torah say, "If a man sets out to take a wife" (Deut. 22:13), and not simply, "If a wife be taken by a man"? Because it is a man's way to set out in search of a woman, and not a woman's way to set out in search of a man, as may be illustrated by the parable of a man who lost something. Who seeks whom? Clearly the one who lost seeks what he has lost.[9]

9. A Caesar said to Rabban Gamaliel [II], "Your God is a thief, for Scripture says, 'The Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept, and He took one of his ribs' " (Gen. 2:21). Rabban Gamaliel's daughter said to her father, "Leave him to me, and I will answer him." She said to Caesar, "Give me one [of your] military commanders." Caesar: "Why do you need him?" The daughter: "Robbers came during the night, took a silver ladle from us, and left us one of gold."

Caesar: "Would that such a thief came to us every day."

The daughter: "Wasn't it wonderful for Adam that one [of his] ribs was taken from him and he was given instead a wife to serve him?"

Caesar: "I agree with you. But God should have taken the rib from Adam openly."

The daughter: "Bring me a piece of meat." When it was brought to her, she put it under the hot ashes, then took it out and, placing it before Caesar, said to him, "Eat some." Caesar: "I find it repugnant." The daughter: "Even so Adam—had the rib been taken from him openly, Eve would have been repugnant to him.[10]

10. "The Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept, and He took one of his ribs" (Gen. 2:21). A Roman noblewoman asked R. Yose, "Why by way of thievery?" R. Yose: "Consider a parable. If a man deposits one ounce of silver with you in secrecy, and you in plain sight return to him one litra of gold—would that be thievery?" The noblewoman: "But why in secrecy?" R. Yose: "At first God created her in plain sight, but Adam saw her full of various discharges and blood [and found her repulsive]. So God removed her from him. Then He returned and created her a second time in secrecy." The noblewoman: "I can corroborate what you said. I was spoken for to be wed to my mother's brother. But because I grew up with him in the same house, I seemed unattractive to him. So he went and took another wife, even though she is not as comely as I."[11]

---

1. Hence, an unmarried man is only half a man. B. Yev 63a.
2. JV: "I have gotten a man with the help of the Lord." But knh ("get") may also mean "bring into being."
3. Gen. R. 8:9 and 22:2.
4. B. Yev 62b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. B. Ned 41a.
6. B. Yoma 2a.
7. B. Shab 118b.
8. B. Sot 44a.
9. Man lost the rib that God made into a woman. B. Kid 2b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. B. Sanh 39a.
11. Gen. R. 17:7.

11. At eighteen, a young man should marry.[1]

12. The sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: Until a young man reaches the age of twenty, the Holy One sits and waits expectantly: "When will this man take a wife?" But when the young man reaches the age of twenty and has still not wed, He says, "May the bones of this one be blasted."

R. Hisda said: Why am I superior to my colleagues [in learning]? Because I wed at sixteen.[2] Had I wed at fourteen, I would have been able to say to Satan, "An arrow in your eye!"[3]

Rava said to R. Nathan bar Ammi: While you have power over your son,[4] when he is between sixteen and twenty-two (some say, between eighteen and twenty-four), get him married.[5]

13. R. Hisda praised R. Hamnuna before R. Huna as a great man. So R. Huna said, "When he visits you, bring him to me." When R. Hamnuna came, R. Huna noticed that he was not wearing the distinctive turban[6] of scholars. "Why," R. Huna asked, "are you not wearing your turban?" R. Hamnuna: "Because I am not married." R. Huna turned his face away from him and said, "See to it that you do not appear before me again until you are!"[7]

14. R. Huna said: He who at twenty is not married will spend all his days in sinful thought.[8]

15. R. Yohanan said: A bachelor who lives in a large city and does not sin—the Holy One Himself daily proclaims his virtue. Now, R. Safra was just such a bachelor living in a large city. When a Tanna repeated [R. Yohanan's dictum] before Rava and R. Safra, R. Safra's face lit up. But Rava said to him: The dictum does not apply to such as you, sir, but to such as R. Hanina and R. Oshaia, who were cobblers in the Land of Israel and lived in the street of harlots. They made shoes for the harlots, which they would deliver to the brothel. The harlots would gaze [provocatively] at the two sages, but the sages would not so much as lift their eyes to look at them. Henceforth, the oath of those harlots came to be "By the life of the holy sages of the Land of Israel."[9]

16. "The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever" (Ps. 19:10). R. Hanina said: The verse applies to him who studies Torah in cleanness. Just what does that mean? That he first marries and then studies Torah.[10]

17. Our masters taught: If there is a question whether to study Torah or take a wife, a man should first study Torah and then take a wife. But if the man cannot live without a woman, he may take a wife and then study Torah. R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: The ruling is: a man must first take a wife and then study Torah. R. Yohanan retorted, With a millstone around his neck, is he expected to study Torah?[11]

18. "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth. . . . But know thou that for all these things God will bring thee to judgment" (Eccles. 11:9). R. Simeon ben Yohai said: The verse may be understood by the parable of one who, finding fault with women, became a profligate. He used to say, "Where can I find a wife good enough for me?" When he grew old and sought to get married, he was told, "You ill-fated wretch! With your nose dripping, your ears hard of hearing, and your eyes dim, what woman will be willing to have you?"[12]

19. R. Hiyya bar Abba said: The words "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick" (Prov. 13:12) refer to a man who betroths a woman and weds her only after some time. "But desire fulfilled is a tree of life" (ibid.) refers to a man who betroths a woman and weds her right away.[13]

20. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] was engaged in arranging the marriage of his son into the family of R. Hiyya, and when the time came to write out the ketubbah, the bride died. Rabbi was troubled: "Was there, God forbid, anything improper [in the proposed union]?" They carefully examined the lineage of the two families and found that Rabbi was descended from Shephatiah the son of Abital,[14] while R. Hiyya was descended from Shimei, a brother of [King] David.[15]

Later, when Rabbi was engaged in having his son marry into the family of R. Yose ben Zimra, it was agreed that the son was first to spend twelve years in the academy. When the girl was led before Rabbi's son, he said, "Let the period of study be reduced to six years." When the girl was led before him a second time, he said, "Let me marry her now, and then I will go to the academy." But [as he made this request] he was embarrassed by the presence of his father, who [to reassure him] said to him, "My son, the intelligence of your Creator resides in you. For in Scripture it is said first, 'Thou bringest them in, and plantest them in the mountain of Thine inheritance, the place which Thou hast made for Thee to dwell in' [Exod. 15:17],[16] and only subsequently did God request, 'Let them make Me the Sanctuary, that I may dwell among them' " (Exod. 25:8). [After his marriage] Rabbi's son went and sat twelve years in the academy. By the time he returned, his wife had lost the capacity to conceive chil-

---

1. Literally, "a young man is ready for the huppah [wedding canopy]." Avot 5:21.
2. And was thus able to devote myself entirely to study.
3. "You can't incite me to sinful thoughts!"
4. Literally, "your hand is upon his neck."
5. B. Kid 29b–30a.
6. The sudarium.
7. B. Kid 29b.
8. Ibid.
9. B. Pes 113a.
10. B. Yoma 72b.
11. B. Kid 29b.
12. Eccles. R. 11:9, §1.
13. PR 15:3.
14. And of King David. See 2 Sam. 3:4.
15. Since the bride was not of direct royal stock, the proposed union was improper.
16. Thus God also hastened the day of His union with Israel.

dren. Rabbi pondered: What are we to do? Shall we have him divorce her? Then people will say, "This poor soul waited in vain." Shall we have him wed another woman? Then people will say, "The other is his [real] wife, and this one is merely his mistress." So Rabbi sought mercy in her behalf, and she was healed.[1]

21. R. Samuel bar Isaac said: When Resh Lakish began to expound on the theme of a wife suspected of infidelity, he would say, "A man is paired with a woman in keeping with the kind of person he is. Thus it is said, 'The rod of wickedness shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous' " (Ps. 125:3). Rabbah bar Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Yohanan: Pairing a man and a woman is as difficult as the splitting of the Red Sea, as is said, "When God bringeth single people to dwell together [in marriage, it is as awesome as when] He brought forth the imprisoned [Israelites] into prosperity" (Ps. 68:7). But is it so? Did not R. Judah say in the name of Rav: Forty days before the formation of a child, a divine voice goes forth and proclaims, "The daughter of So-and-so is to be given to So-and-so, the house of So-and-so to So-and-so, the field of So-and-so to So-and-so"? There is no contradiction, however, for R. Judah's statement refers to a first marriage; the preceding two statements to a second marriage.[2]

22. A [Roman] noblewoman asked R. Yose ben Halafta, "In how many days did the Holy One create His world?" R. Yose replied, "In six days." She asked, "And what has He been doing since?" R. Yose replied, "The Holy One has been busy making matches: the daughter of So-and-so to So-and-so." The noblewoman said, "If that is all He does, I can do the same thing. How many menservants, how many maidservants do I have! In no time at all, I can match them up." R. Yose: "Matchmaking may be a trivial thing in your eyes; but for the Holy One, it is as awesome an act as splitting the Red Sea."

R. Yose ben Halafta left the noblewoman and went away. What did she do? She took a thousand menservants and a thousand maidservants, lined them up in row upon row facing one another, and said, "This man shall marry that woman, and this woman shall be married to that man," and so she matched them all up in a single night. In the morning, the ones thus matched came to the lady, one with his head bloodied, one with his eye knocked out, one with his shoulder dislocated, and another with his leg broken. She asked, "What happened to you?" One replied, "I don't want that woman," and another replied, "I don't want that man."

The noblewoman promptly sent to have R. Yose ben Halafta brought to her. She said to him, "Master, your Torah is completely right, excellent and worthy of praise. All you said is exactly so."[3]

23. Rava overheard a young man seeking [God's] mercy and pleading, "May a certain girl become my wife." Rava said to him, "Do not seek mercy in this way. If she is meant to be yours, she will be yours; and if not, you may [in your frustration be tempted to] deny the Lord." Later [after the young man married the girl], Rava overheard him seeking God's mercy that either he die before her or she die before him. Rava said to the young man, "Did I not tell you that you should not have prayed as you did?"[4]

24. Rav said in the name of R. Reuben the Pinecone Dealer: From the Five Books, from the Prophets, and from the Writings it can be shown that a particular wife is appointed for a man by the Lord. From the Five Books: "Then Laban and Bethuel answered and said: 'The thing proceedeth from the Lord' " (Gen. 24:50). From the Prophets: "But his father and his mother knew not that it was of the Lord" (Judg. 14:4). And from the Writings: "House and riches are the inheritance of fathers; but a prudent wife is from the Lord" (Prov. 19:14).[5]

25. A man's marriage partner is from the Holy One. At times, a man is guided to his spouse's home; at other times, the spouse is guided to the man's home.[6]

26. It is told that King Solomon had a most beautiful daughter, whose like could not be found in the whole Land of Israel. When he gazed at the stars to find out who was her appointed spouse and who was to wed her, he saw that he who was to wed her would be a certain poor man—there was none poorer in Israel than he. What did Solomon do? He built a lofty tower in the open sea and surrounded its four sides with [high] walls. Then he took his daughter and placed her in that lofty tower, in the company of seventy eunuchs selected from the elders of Israel. Solomon provided no doorway into the tower, so that no man would be able to enter. After stocking the tower with ample provisions, he said, "Now I shall see what the acts and doings of His Name will be!"

After a while, the poor man who was to be the maiden's spouse set out by night on a journey. He was naked and barefoot, he was hungry and thirsty [and thoroughly chilled]. When he saw the carcass of an ox cast out in the field, he crept in between its ribs to lessen the chill which overcame him. As soon as he fell asleep, a huge bird came, picked up the carcass, and carried it to the roof of the tower above the maiden's chamber. There the bird ate away the flesh of the carcass, and there, on the roof, the poor man remained.

At daybreak the maiden came out of her chamber, as was her daily custom, to walk on the roof. And there she saw the young man. "Who are you," she asked, "and who brought you here?" The young man: "I am a Jew, of the city of Acco. A bird brought me here." What did she do then? She took him into her chamber, where she had him clothed, bathed, and anointed. And then he appeared so handsome that his like could not be found in all the territories of Israel.

The maiden fell in love with him with all her heart

---

1. B. Ket 62b.
2. B. Sot 2a.
3. Gen. R. 68:4; Lev. R. 8:1; Num. R. 3:6.
4. B. MK 18b.
5. B. MK 18b.
6. E.g., Jacob to Rachel, and Rebekah to Isaac. Gen. R. 68:3.

and soul. It should be added that the young man was keen, perceptive, and witty, besides being a [skilled] scribe. One day she asked him, "Are you willing to hallow me as your wife?" The young man: "O that such a thing were possible!" What did he do then? He let some blood out of a vein, wrote out the marriage contract for her with his blood, and hallowed her as his wife, saying, "This day the Lord is witness, even as the angels Michael and Gabriel are witnesses." Presently she conceived from him.

When the elders noticed her pregnancy, they said to her, "It seems to us that you are bearing a child." She: "Yes, I am." "And from whom did you conceive?" "Why do you have to know?" At that, the faces of the elders fell, for they feared King Solomon. Then they sent word for him to come. Solomon boarded a ship and came to them [with dispatch]. They said to him, "Our lord king, this is the situation. Let our lord not blame his servants!" Upon hearing the elders' account Solomon summoned his daughter and asked her what had happened. She answered, "The Holy One brought me a handsome and kind youth, who is both scholar and scribe, and he hallowed me as his wife." She summoned the young man, who appeared before the king and showed him the marriage contract he had drawn up for the king's daughter. The king inquired about the young man's father and mother, his family, and the city he came from. From the answers, Solomon understood that this was the one he had seen in the stars. With that, Solomon rejoiced greatly and said, "Blessed be He who is everywhere! It is He who provides a man with the wife meant to be his."[1]

27. R. Papa said: Leap to buy land, lag to place a wedding band. Step down for the woman who'll be your bride; step up for the escort who'll bring you pride.[2]

28. R. Eleazar said: One should always marry into a better family, for take note: from Moses, who wed Jethro's[3] daughter, there issued Jonathan;[4] while from Aaron, who wed Amminadab's daughter, there issued Phinehas.[5]

29. Rava said: He who is about to take a wife should inquire about her brothers, as intimated in Scripture's saying, "Aaron took Elisheba, the daughter of Amminadab, the sister of Nahshon" (Exod. 6:23). Since she is spoken of as the daughter of Amminadab, is it not obvious that she is also the sister of Nahshon? Why, then, is it added that she was also the sister of Nahshon? To intimate that when a man takes a wife, he should inquire about [the character] of her brothers.

The sages taught: Most children take after their maternal uncles.[6]

30. Who is rich? R. Akiva said: He who has a wife comely in her deeds.[7]

31. There is a proverb: Ewe follows ewe—as the deeds of the mother, so are the deeds of the daughter.[8]

32. When a man weds a wife who is right for him,[9] [the prophet] Elijah kisses him and the Holy One loves him.[10]

33. Rabbah bar R. Adda said in the name of Rav: He who weds a wife for the sake of money will have unworthy children, as is said, "Since they have dealt treacherously against the Lord, they have begotten children who are estranged" (Hos. 5:7). Should you suppose that their money at least will go unscathed, the verse goes on, "Now shall a moon devour them and their portions." What do these words imply? R. Nahman bar Isaac said: That a moon comes and a moon goes, and their money is lost.

Rabbah bar R. Adda also said (according to some, R. Salla said it in the name of R. Hamnuna): When a man weds a wife who is not fit for him, [the prophet] Elijah binds him and the Holy One flogs him. And the sages taught: Of all such, Elijah writes and the Holy One countersigns: Woe to him who blemishes his seed and dishonors his family.[11]

34. R. Meir used to say: When a man weds a wife who is not right for him, he violates five commandments negative [and positive. Three negative]: "Thou shalt not take vengeance; Thou shalt not bear a grudge" (Lev. 19:18); "Thou shalt not hate thy brother" (Lev. 19:17). [Two positive]: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Lev. 19:18); "Thy brother shall live with thee" (Lev. 25:36). Moreover, he prevents the birth of children in the world.[12]

35. Our masters taught: Let a man always sell all that he has in order to marry the daughter of a disciple of the wise, for if he should die or be taken into exile, he can be certain that his sons will be disciples of the wise. Let him not marry the daughter of an am ha-aretz [an ignorant man], for should he die or be taken into exile, his sons will be ignorant.

Our masters taught also: Let a man always sell all that he has in order to marry the daughter of a disciple of the wise or to have his daughter marry a disciple of the wise, which is like mingling the grapes of one vine with the grapes of another vine, a proper and acceptable procedure. But let him not marry the daughter of an am ha-aretz, which is like mingling the grapes of a vine with berries of a thornbush, an improper and unacceptable procedure.

Our masters taught further: Let a man always sell all he has in order to marry the daughter of a disciple of the wise. If he does not find the daughter of a disciple of

---

1. Tanhuma B, introduction, p. 136.
2. A wife of lesser family will look up to her husband; an escort (a best man) of superior lineage will enhance the bridegroom's status. B. Yev 63a.
3. A Midianite priest at an idolatrous shrine.
4. Hired as a priest for Micah's idol. See Judg. 18.
5. Who became a zealous and respected high priest. B. BB 109b.
6. B. BB 110a.
7. B. Shab 25b.
8. B. Ket 63a.
9. One whose character and lineage are right.
10. DER 1.
11. B. Kid 70a.
12. Such a misalliance is likely to prove unfruitful. Tos Sot 5:11.

the wise, let him marry the daughter of one of the notables of the generation. If he does not find the daughter of one of the notables of the generation, let him marry the daughter of the head of a synagogue. If he does not find the daughter of the head of a synagogue, let him marry the daughter of a collector of funds for charity. If he does not find the daughter of a collector of funds for charity, let him marry the daughter of a teacher of young children. But let him not marry the daughter of an am ha-aretz, because such are detestable, their wives are vermin, and of their daughters it is said, "Cursed be he that lieth with any manner of beast" (Deut. 27:21).[1]

36. "Now Joshua [the High Priest] was clothed with filthy garments" (Zech. 3:3). Was it indeed Joshua's practice to wear filthy garments? No, but the verse indicates that his sons wed women unfit to marry priests, and he did not prevent them from doing so.[2]

37. Our masters taught: A little boy may be trusted if he says, "My daddy told me that this family is fit [to marry into priestly families], while that family is unfit, and we ate at the Ketzatzah [the cutting off] when the daughter of So-and-so was married to So-and-so."

What is Ketzatzah? If one of several brothers has wed a wife who is not fit for him, the other members of his family come around and bring a jar full of parched corn and nuts, and in the presence of the children break it in the open space [before the house], saying, "Our brethren of the House of Israel, hear! Our brother So-and-so has wed a wife who is not fit for him, and we fear that his issue will commingle with our issue. Come and take some of these as a token for future generations, so that his issue will not commingle with our issue." The children pick up [what has been scattered], saying, "So-and-so has been cut off from his family."

Should the brother divorce such a wife, his family would perform the same ceremony, saying, "So-and-so has returned to his family."[3]

38. We have been taught: "Then the elders of the city shall call him, and impart advice to him" (Deut. 25:8) implies that the brother-in-law who is asked to marry the widow is given suitable advice. If he is young and the widow is old, or if he is old and the widow is young, he should be told, "What will you do with a young girl?" or "What will you do with an old woman? Marry someone your own age, and don't bring disharmony into your household."[4]

39. Resh Lakish said: An unusually tall man should not marry an unusually tall woman, lest their offspring turn out to be as tall as a mast. A dwarf should not marry a dwarf, lest their offspring turn out to be finger-sized. A man whose complexion is abnormally white should not marry a woman whose complexion is abnormally white, lest their offspring turn out to be albino. A man whose complexion is abnormally dark should not marry a woman whose complexion is abnormally dark, lest their offspring turn out to be pitch-black.[5]

40. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: A man may not marry a woman until he has first seen her.[6]

41. "Thine eyes are dovelike" (Song 1:15). As long as a bride's eyes are normal, her body requires no examination [by the prospective husband's kinswomen]; but if her eyes are bleary, her body does require examination.[7]

42. R. Eleazar said: A man may not give his daughter in marriage while she is a minor. He must wait until she grows up and says, "I want So-and-so."[8]

43. When a man sees to it that his sons and daughters are married at the age of their puberty, Scripture says of him, "Thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace" (Job 5:24).[9]

44. Once your daughter has come of age, then [if you cannot find anyone better] free your slave and give him to her [for a husband].[10]

45. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: He who weds his daughter to an old man or takes an adult woman for his immature son, "to the utter ruin of the sated or of the thirsty—him," says Scripture, "the Lord will never forgive" (Deut. 29:18–19).[11]

46. "Profane not thy daughter to make her a harlot" (Lev. 19:29). R. Eliezer said: The verse applies to one who weds his daughter to an old man. R. Akiva said: It also applies to one who lets his grown-up daughter remain unmarried.[12]

47. We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: He who weds his daughter to an am ha-aretz [an ignorant person] is as though he bound her and placed her before a lion. As a lion tears and then brazenly devours, so an am ha-aretz will beat her and then brazenly copulate with her.[13]

48. There is the story of a woman who, when wed to an associate scholar [haver], would tie the thongs of tefillin to his arm, and subsequently, when wed to a tax collector, would tie to his arm the tax collector's seals.[14]

---

1. Lacking, as they do, piety, moral sense, and intellectual perception. B. Pes 49a–b.
2. B. Sanh 93a.
3. B. Ket 28b; P. Kid 1:5, 60c.
4. B. Yev 101b.
5. B. Bekh 45b.
6. B. Kid 41a.
7. B. Ta 24a.
8. B. Kid 41a.
9. B. Yev 62b.
10. B. Pes 113a.
11. B. Sanh 76b.
12. B. Sanh 76a.
13. B. Pes 49b.
14. He would remove and distribute these as receipts for taxes paid. B. AZ 39a.

49. There is the story of a maiden whose father was very friendly with a heathen. Once, as they ate and drank and made merry, the heathen said to the maiden's father, "Give your daughter to my son for a wife." The father said, "Very well." Though the maiden heard of the matter, she said nothing until the time of her wedding. When the day of her wedding came, she went up to the roof and jumped to her death.[1]

50. There is the story of a young girl who was walking [one morning] to her father's home. She was very beautiful, and her beauty was further enhanced by gold and silver ornaments. But she lost her way and wandered into uninhabited places. By midday she grew thirsty, for she had brought no water with her. At the sight of a well with a bucket rope hanging at its side, she took hold of the rope and lowered herself [into the well]. After she drank, she wished to go up but could not; so she wept and shouted for help.

A young man passing by heard her voice and stopped at the well. He looked down at her and asked, "Who are you—human or spirit?" "I am human," she cried out. He asked, "What happened to you?" She told him the whole story. The young man: "If I pull you up, will you be my wife?" She replied, "Yes," and he pulled her up.

He wished to mate with her at once. But she asked him, "From what people do you come?" He replied, "I come from the people of Israel, from such-and-such place, and I am a priest." She said to him, "The Holy One chose you, hallowed you out of all Israel, yet now, without ketubbah, without marriage rites, you would mate like an animal? Follow me to my father and mother, who are of such-and-such a family, eminent and of noble lineage in Israel, and I shall be betrothed to you." So they pledged faithfulness to each other. When she asked, "But who will act as witness?" a weasel happened to be passing by, so she said, "Let this weasel and this well act as witnesses to our pledge." Then he went his way, and she went hers.

Now, the girl remained true to her pledge, and when anyone came to seek her hand in marriage, she would turn him down. But after her family began pressing her [to accept someone], she proceeded to act like an epileptic, ripping up her own garments and the garments of anyone who touched her. Finally, people left her alone.

As for the young man, as soon as he came back to his city, he violated his pledge, wed another woman, and begot two sons. But one fell into a well and died, and the other died after being bitten by a weasel. The young man's wife asked him, "What is the cause of this, that both our sons have died unnatural deaths?" He told her, "Such-and-such a thing happened." At that, she demanded that he divorce her, saying, "Go to the portion the Holy One has given you."

He went away and, inquiring about the girl in her city, was told, "She is an epileptic, and anyone who wishes to wed her is treated in such-and-such a way." The young man went to her father's house, told him all that had happened, and declared, "I am willing to take her with any blemish she may have." The father called witnesses [to attest the young man's declaration]. When the young man went to see her, she began to act in what had become her customary manner. So he reminded her of the incident with the weasel and the well. Then she said, "Indeed, I have been faithful to my pledge," and immediately became her normal self. She married him, and the two were blessed with many children and possessions. To her apply the words "Mine eyes are on those who are faithful in the Land" (Ps. 101:6).[2]

51. Our masters taught: How does one praise a bride while dancing attendance upon her? The school of Shammai says: Describe the bride as she is. The school of Hillel says: Describe the bride as beautiful and full of grace. The school of Shammai retorted to the school of Hillel: But suppose she is lame or blind. Is one to say, "O bride, beautiful and full of grace," seeing that Scripture declares, "Keep thee far from a false word" (Exod. 23:7)? The school of Hillel replied to the school of Shammai: In your opinion, if a man has made a bad purchase in the marketplace, should a friend praise it to his face or belittle it? Surely he should praise it to his face. Hence, the sages inferred that a man should always endeavor to be pleasant to other people.

It is said of R. Judah bar Ilai that he used to take a myrtle twig and dance before the bride, chanting, "O bride, beautiful and full of grace."

R. Samuel bar R. Isaac used to dance holding three twigs. When R. Zera saw him, [he was so embarrassed that] he tried to keep out of sight, saying, "Look at this old man, how he embarrasses us!" However, when R. Samuel died, there were peals of thunder and lightning for three hours, and finally a divine voice came forth and proclaimed, "R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, the lavish dispenser of kindness, is dead. Let everyone come out to show kindness to him." [When they came out], a pillar of fire stood between him and the rest of the people (and we have a tradition that such a pillar intervenes only for one man, or at most for two, in a generation). R. Zera said: Shoto, his twig, benefited the old man. According to some, R. Zera said: Shetuto, his folly, benefited the old man. According to others, R. Zera said: Shitato, his custom, benefited the old man.

R. Aha used to lift the bride upon his shoulder and dance.

When R. Dimi came [from the Land of Israel], he said: In the west, they sang before a bride, "No kohl, no paint, no waving [of the hair], and still as graceful as a gazelle."[3]

52. Our masters taught: Wine may be drawn through pipes for a groom and a bride.[4] Parched corn and nuts may be thrown before them during the summer, but not during the winter. Fancy cakes are not to be thrown before them either during the summer or during the winter.[5]

---

1. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 116 (JPS, p. 293); Yalkut, Balak, §766.

2. Rashi on B. Ta 8a; Arukh, s.v. heled.

3. B. Ket 16b–17a; P. Pe 1:1, 15d.

4. Either as a prayer for prosperity or to diffuse a pleasant odor. At the pipes' outlet, there is a vessel into which the wine flows.

5. Fancy cakes thrown on the ground would go to waste. B. Ber 50b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

53. It is said of King Agrippa that he made way for a bridal procession and the sages praised him for it. When asked, "Why did you do this?" he replied, "I wear my crown every day, while she will wear hers but a single hour."[1]

54. A groom is [to be treated] like a king.[2]

55. A husband is liable for the maintenance of his wife. For we have been taught that in Scripture's "Her meat [she'er] . . . he shall not diminish" (Exod. 21:10), she'er refers to a wife's maintenance.[3]

56. If a man maintains his wife through a trustee, [every week] he must give her not less than two kav of wheat or four kav of barley. R. Yose remarked, "It was R. Ishmael who stipulated the larger amount of barley, because he lived near Edom [where barley is of poor quality]." A man must also give his wife half a kav of pulse, half a log of oil, and a kav of dried figs or a maneh of pressed figs. And if he has no [such produce of his own], he must supply her with a corresponding quantity of produce from some other place. He must also provide her with a bed and a mattress, or at least a rush mat. [Once a year] he must also give her a cap for her head and a girdle for her loins; on each major festival, a pair of shoes; and each year, clothing valued at fifty zuz. He should not give her new clothes in the summer [because they are too warm] or worn-out clothes in the winter [because they do not provide sufficient protection from the cold]. Rather, he should give her new clothes valued at fifty zuz in the winter, so she can wear them the following summer, when they will have been worn thin [and become cool]; these worn-out clothes remain her property. [Every week] he must also give her a silver maah for her [other] requirements, and she is to eat with him on every Sabbath eve. If he does not give her a silver maah for her other requirements, [the earnings of] her handiwork belong to her.

And what [is the quantity of work that] she must do for him? [She must spin] five sela of warp in Judea, which equals ten sela in Galilee,[4] or ten sela of weft in Judea, which equals twenty sela in Galilee. If she is nursing [her child], her handiwork must be reduced and her maintenance increased. All this applies to the poorest in Israel; with more affluent folk, all should be in keeping with the honor due the husband.[5]

57. The following are the kinds of work a wife must perform for her husband: grinding wheat, baking bread, washing clothes, cooking, nursing her child, making her husband's bed, and working in wool. If she brought him one bondwoman [in her dowry], she need not grind, bake, or wash. If she brought two bondwomen, she need not cook or nurse her child. If three, she need not make her husband's bed or work in wool. If four, she may lounge [all day] in an easy chair. R. Eliezer said: Even if she brought him a hundred bondwomen, he may compel her to work in wool, for idleness leads to unchastity. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: If a man forbids his wife under a vow to do any work, he must divorce her and pay her the amount stipulated in the ketubbah, for idleness leads to stupefaction.[6]

58. In the west [the Land of Israel], when a man married, they used to ask, "Matza or motze?" By matza, they alluded to "Whoso findeth (matza) a wife findeth a great good" (Prov. 18:22), and by motze, they alluded to "I find (motze) more bitter than death the woman" (Eccles. 7:26).[7]

59. It is written in the book of Ben Sira: "A good wife is a precious gift—she is put in the bosom of one who fears God. A bad wife is a plague to her husband. A beautiful wife is a joy to her husband—she doubles the length of his life."[8]

60. R. Akiva expounded: When a husband and wife are worthy, the Presence abides between them; when not worthy, fire consumes them.[9]

61. The sages taught in the name of R. Meir: A husband and a wife: the Presence—the Divine Name YH—is between them: the yod in ish ("husband") and the he in ishah ("wife"). If they are worthy, the Presence abides between them, and they are blessed; if they are not worthy, the Presence departs from between them, and the two ishot ("fires") in ish and ishah cling together, so that a fire consumes both husband and wife.[10]

62. R. Yose met [the prophet] Elijah and asked him: It is written, "I will make him a help" (Gen. 2:18). But how does a woman help a man? Elijah: "If a man brings wheat, does he chew the raw wheat? If he brings flax, does he put on the green flax?[11] Does not the woman bring light to his eyes and help him stand on his own two feet?"[12]

63. R. Eleazar said: The verse "I will make him a help over against him" (Gen. 2:18) means: if he is worthy, she is a help to him; if he is not worthy, she is against him.

Others say: R. Eleazar pointed to an apparent inconsistency. The word is written ke-negdo, "meet for him," but it can be read ke-nigdo, "at him." The answer is that if he is worthy, she is meet for him; if not, she lashes out at him.[13]

---

1. B. Ket 17a; Sem 11:6.
2. Literally, "resembles a king." PRE 16.
3. B. Ket 46b–47b.
4. The Judean sela was twice as heavy as the Galilean.
5. B. Ket 64b.
6. B. Ket 59b.
7. B. Ber 8a.
8. Cf. Ecclesiasticus 26:3 and 26:1. B. Yev 63b.
9. "The letters of the word for 'husband' are alef, yod, and shin, and for 'wife' alef, shin, and he. The yod and the he form the Divine Name; but if they are omitted, only alef and shin are left, which form the word esh, 'fire' " (Sot, Soncino, p. 89, n. 3). B. Sot. 17a.
10. Lekah Tov, Bereshit, ed. Buber, p. 23.
11. Clearly not. She grinds and bakes the wheat, and spins and weaves the flax.
12. B. Yev 63a.
13. Ibid.

64. R. Hanina said: "All the days of the poor are evil" (Prov. 15:15). "The poor" applies to a man who has an evil wife. "But he that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast" (ibid.). "A merry heart" applies to him who has a good wife.[1]

65. Rava said: A bad wife is as troublesome as a stormy day.

What is a bad wife? Abbaye said: One who sets out a tray for him,[2] and then belittles him. Rava said: One who sets out a tray for him and then turns her back on him.[3]

66. On account of a bad wife, old age comes to a man quickly.[4]

67. Once, when Rav was taking leave of R. Hiyya, R. Hiyya said to him: May He who is everywhere deliver you from something that is worse than death. "But is there," Rav wondered, "anything worse than death?" He went out to investigate the matter and found the verse "I find more bitter than death the woman" (Eccles. 7:26).[5]

68. R. Judah said: There are fourteen things of which one is stronger than the other, so that each one of these dominates another. The ocean's depth is strong, but earth dominates it. The earth is strong, but mountains dominate it. A mountain is strong, but iron splits it. Iron is strong, but fire penetrates it. Fire is strong, but water quenches it. Water is strong, but clouds carry it. Clouds are strong, but wind disperses them. The wind is strong, but a wall withstands it. A wall is strong, but man demolishes it. Man is strong, but trouble shatters him. Trouble is strong, but wine helps one forget it. Wine is strong, but sleep evaporates it. Sleep is strong, but illness drives it off. Illness is strong, but the angel of death [dominates it and] takes life away.

But a bad wife is stronger than all of these.[6]

69. The sages quoted Rav: Any disease, but not disease of the bowels; any pain, but not pain in the heart; any ache, but not headache; any evil, but not an evil wife.[7]

70. Rav was constantly tormented by his wife. When he said to her, "Prepare some lentils for me," she would prepare beans; if he said, "Beans," she would prepare lentils. After Rav's son Hiyya grew up, he took to reversing his father's requests, until finally Rav said to his son, "Your mother has grown kind [to me]." R. Hiyya said, "It was I who reversed your requests." Rav said, "What you have done bears out the proverb 'Your offspring in season may teach you reason.' Nevertheless, do not continue to do so, lest you become like those of whom Scripture says, 'They have trained their tongues to speak falsely' " (Jer. 9:4).[8]

71. It is unbecoming for a man to walk behind a woman.[9]

72. Rav said: A man who follows his wife's advice will fall into Gehenna, as is said, "But there was none like unto Ahab . . . whom Jezebel his wife stirred up" (1 Kings 21:25).[10]

73. R. Avimi of Hagronia said in the name of Rava: A man whom women have done to death—there is neither judgment nor judge in his behalf.[11]

74. The story of a pious man who was wed to a pious woman, and they did not beget children. Both said, "We are of no use whatever to the Holy One." So he went ahead and divorced her. The husband then married a wicked woman, and she made him wicked, while the divorced wife went and married a wicked man, whom she made righteous. This proves that it all depends on the woman.[12]

75. "Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good" (Prov. 18:22). Yet in another place it is written, "I find more bitter than death the woman" (Eccles. 7:26). What Scripture means is that if she is a good wife, there is no end to her goodness, but if she is a bad wife, there is no end to her badness.[13]

76. Rava said: Pause and consider how precious is a good wife and how baneful is a bad wife. "How precious is a good wife," for it is written, "Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good" (Prov. 18:22). Now, if "wife" here means literally a woman, then how precious must a good wife be, since Scripture praises her; if "wife" here means the Torah, then how precious must a good wife be, since Torah is likened to her. "How baneful is a bad wife," for it is written, "I find more bitter than death the woman" (Eccles. 7:26). Now, if "the woman" here means literally a woman, then how baneful must a bad wife be, since Scripture reprehends her; if "the woman" here means Gehenna, then how baneful must a bad wife be, since Gehenna is likened to her.[14]

77. R. Helbo said: A man must always be careful about the deference he shows his wife, for blessing is found in a man's home only on account of his wife, as is said, "And He treated Abram well on account of her" (Gen. 12:16). For this reason, Rava said to the people of Mahoza: Defer to your wives, that you may prosper.[15]

---

1. B. BB 145b.
2. Offers herself.
3. B. Yev 63b.
4. Tanhuma, Hayye Sarah, §2.
5. B. Yev 63a.
6. Eccles. R. 7:26, §2.
7. B. Shab 11a.
8. B. Yev 63a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. It might stimulate indecent thoughts in him. Gen. R. 60:14.
10. B. BM 59a.
11. Since he had not been man enough to stand up to the women. B. BM 97a.
12. Gen. R. 17:7 and Yalkut, Bereshit, §23.
13. MTeh 59:2.
14. B. Yev 63b.
15. B. BM 59a.

78. Our masters taught: He who loves his wife as his own person, who honors her more than his own person, who directs his sons and his daughters onto the right path, and marries them off at puberty—of him, Scripture says, "And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace" (Job 5:24).[1]

79. People say: If your wife is short, bend down and whisper to her [to solicit her counsel].[2]

80. A man should always be careful about wronging his wife. Since her tears come quickly, punishment for wronging her is quick to come.[3]

81. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: One's impulse, a child, and a woman—the left hand may thrust them off, but the right hand should bring them near.[4]

82. R. Rehumi used to study Torah in the school of Rava in Mahoza, and he would come home on the eve of the Day of Atonement. Once he became [unusually] involved in his study. His wife, who was expecting him, [kept solacing herself], "He'll be here any minute, he'll be here any minute," but he did not come. She was so disheartened that a tear fell from her eye. R. Rehumi was [at that moment] seated on the roof [of the house of study]—the roof collapsed under him, and he was killed.[5]

83. R. Hiyya was constantly tormented by his wife. Nevertheless, if he came upon something that might please her, he would wrap it in his turban and bring it home. Rav said to him, "But she torments the master." R. Hiyya: "It is enough for us that they rear our children and deliver us from sin."[6]

84. A woman has charm for her husband.[7]

85. Rav said to R. Hiyya, How do women earn merit? By making their sons go to the synagogue to learn Scripture, making their husbands go to the house of study to recite Mishnah, and waiting up for their husbands until they return from the house of study.[8]

86. "It is vain for you that ye rise early, and sit up late, ye that eat the bread of toil! Thus He gives to those that let sleep wander"[9] (Ps. 127:2). R. Isaac said: The verse refers to wives of disciples of the wise who deliberately let sleep wander from their eyes in this world and so merit life in the world-to-come.[10]

87. A story of R. Akiva's son when he got married. How did he conduct himself? After he brought his wife into the nuptial chamber, he stayed awake the whole night reading in the Torah. He said to her, "Fetch a lamp and light it for me." She took a lamp and stood [holding it] over him from evening until morning. In the morning, R. Akiva approached his son and asked him, "My son, [is she] well found or ill found?"[11] His son replied, "[She is] well found."[12]

88. If a man places his wife under a vow that she neither borrow nor lend a winnow, a sieve, a mill, or an oven, he must divorce her and pay her the amount stipulated in her marriage settlement, because [if she were to abide by the vow] he would give her a bad name among the neighbors. So, too, if she herself vows that she will neither borrow nor lend a winnow, a sieve, a mill, or an oven, or that she will not weave beautiful garments for his children, she must be divorced, with forfeiture of the amount due her under her marriage settlement, because [if he allowed her vow to stand], she would give him a bad name among his neighbors.[13]

89. There is the story of a man who vowed to derive no benefit from marriage with his sister's daughter. She was then taken into R. Ishmael's house and adorned to look beautiful. Afterward, when R. Ishmael asked the man, "My son, did you vow not to benefit from this beautiful girl?" the man replied, "Oh, no!" At that, R. Ishmael permitted her to marry him.

At that moment, R. Ishmael wept and said: The daughters of Israel are beautiful, but poverty makes them seem ugly.

The sages taught: She had a false tooth, and R. Ishmael had a gold tooth made for her at his own expense.

When R. Ishmael died, the daughters of Israel raised a lament, saying, "O daughters of Israel, weep for R. Ishmael!"[14]

90. There is the story of a man who said to his wife: "I vow that you are not to benefit from me until you make R. Judah and R. Simeon taste your cooking." R. Judah consented to taste it, reasoning: One may argue the matter a fortiori: if, in order to make peace between husband and wife, the Torah quotes God as saying, "Let My Name which is written in sanctity be erased by the water of bitterness, even when the guilt of the woman who is to drink it is in doubt"—how much less should I stand on my dignity [and refuse to taste the food]. R. Simeon, however, did not taste the woman's cooking, exclaiming, "Even if this woman should be widowed and all her children perish, R. Simeon will not budge from his position. Besides, [people should be taught a lesson] not to fall into the habit of making vows."[15]

---

1. B. Yev 62b.
2. B. BM 59a.
3. Ibid.
4. B. Sot 47a.
5. B. Ket 62b.
6. B. Yev 63a.
7. B. Sot 47a.
8. B. Ber 17a.
9. JV: "So He giveth unto His beloved in sleep." But the word yedido ("His beloved") is here associated with the stem ndd ("wander").
10. B. Yoma 77a.
11. R. Akiva quoted the key words matza ("findeth . . . a great good") and motze ("find . . . bitter") in Prov. 18:22 and Eccles. 7:26 respectively. See above in this chapter, §58.
12. Yalkut, Prov., §958.
13. B. Ket 72a.
14. B. Ned 66a.
15. B. Ned 66a.

91. There is the story of a Babylonian who went up to the Land of Israel and wed a wife there. When he said to her, "Boil me a couple of lentils," she boiled exactly two lentils for him. He angrily reproved her. The next day, he said to her, "Boil me a bushel of lentils," and she boiled him an entire bushel.[1] Then he said to her, "Bring me two butzini,"[2] and she brought him two lamps. He told her, "Smash them against the top of the bava [the threshold]." Now, just then Bava ben Buta was seated at the door, engaged in judging a lawsuit. So she broke the lamps over his head. When Bava asked her, "Why are you doing this [to me]?" she replied, "This is what my husband commanded me to do." He said, "You have obeyed the wish of your husband—may He who is everywhere bring forth from you two sons like Bava ben Buta."[3]

92. It once happened that a man said to his wife: I vow that you are to receive no benefit from me until you manage to show R. Ishmael son of R. Yose that at least one of your features is beautiful. So R. Ishmael said to those who reported the incident to him, "Perhaps her head is beautiful?" "It is round," they replied. "Perhaps her hair is beautiful?" "It is like limp stalks of flax." "Perhaps her eyes are beautiful?" "They are bleary." "Perhaps her ears are beautiful?" "They are deformed." "Perhaps her nose is beautiful?" "It is bloated." "Perhaps her lips are beautiful?" "They are thick." "Perhaps her neck is beautiful?" "It is squat." "Perhaps her belly is beautiful?" "It protrudes." "Perhaps her feet are beautiful?" "They are as broad as a duck's." "Perhaps her name is beautiful?" "It is Likhlukhit ['marred']." He said to them, "She is beautifully called likhlukhit, marred as she is by her many defects." And he absolved her husband of his vow.[4]

93. The story is told of a woman in Sidon who lived ten years with her husband without bearing a child. Deciding to part from each other, the two came to R. Simeon ben Yohai, who said to them, "By your lives, even as you were paired over food and drink, so must you be parted over food and drink." They followed his advice and, declaring the day a festal day for themselves, prepared a great feast, during which the wife gave her husband too much to drink. In his resulting good humor, he said to her, "My dear, pick any desirable article you want in my home, and take it with you when you return to your father's house." What did she do? After he fell asleep, she beckoned to her menservants and maidservants, and said to them, "Pick him up, couch and all, and carry him to my father's house." At midnight, he woke up from his sleep. The effects of the wine had left him, and he asked her, "My dear, where am I?" She replied, "You are in my father's house." He: "But what am I doing in your father's house?" She: "Did you not say to me last night, 'Pick any desirable article you like from my home and take it with you when you return to your father's house'? There is no desirable article in the world I care for more than for you." So they again went to R. Simeon ben Yohai, and he stood up and prayed for them, and they were remembered [by God and granted children].[5]

94. R. Eleazar said: When a man divorces his first wife, even the altar sheds tears, as is said, "And this further ye do: Ye cover the altar with tears, with weeping, and with sighing, so that He regardeth not the offering any more, neither accepteth what you offer. But you ask, 'Because of what?' Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously, though she is thy companion and the wife of thy covenant" (Mal. 2:13–14).[6]

95. "And this ye do a second time: Ye cover the altar with tears, with weeping, and with sighing, so that He regardeth not the offering any more" (Mal. 2:13). R. Haggai said: When Israel came up from the land of exile, the women's faces were blackened by the sun, so that their husbands abandoned them, and went and married heathen wives. The abandoned women would go around the altar weeping. That is why Malachi said of the cause of their weeping, "And this ye do a second time"—a second time, as at Shittim,[7] the Holy One said: Who would accept offerings from husbands who are responsible for the weeping and sighing [of their wives]? Because each of you robbed your wife, did violence to her, and despoiled her of her beauty, and finally you cast her off![8]

96. "For a detested one, divorce" (Mal. 2:16) means, said R. Judah, that when you detest your wife, you may divorce her. [Reading the verse "Detested, the one divorcing"],[9] R. Yohanan said: The man who divorces his wife is to be detested.[10]

97. The school of Shammai says: A man may not divorce his wife unless he has found unchastity in her, for Scripture says, "Because he hath found in her indecency in anything" (Deut. 24:1). But the school of Hillel says: [He may divorce her] even if she has merely spoiled his stew, for Scripture says, "Because he hath found in her indecency in anything." R. Akiva said: Even if he finds another more beautiful than she, for Scripture also says, "It cometh to pass, if she find no favor in his eyes" (ibid.).[11]

98. A wife who transgresses Jewish practice is liable to divorce with forfeiture of her due under her marriage settlement. And what [conduct is deemed to be transgression of] Jewish practice? If she goes out with her hair loose,

---

1. She boiled a seah, the equivalent in volume of 144 eggs.
2. The word means "melons" in the Babylonian dialect and "lamps" in the dialect of the Land of Israel.
3. B. Ned 66b.
4. Ibid.
5. Song R. 1:4, §2.
6. B. Git 90b.
7. See Num. 25.
8. Gen. R. 18:5.
9. Since the two verbs sane ("detest") and shallah ("divorce") are absolute infinitives, the meaning is ambiguous, making possible two differing interpretations.
10. B. Git 90b.
11. B. Git 90a.

spins in the marketplace [and so exposes her arms], or converses with everybody and anybody. Abba Saul said: Also if she curses his parents in his presence. R. Tarfon said: Also if she is given to shouting. And what kind of woman is deemed a shouter? One whose voice can be heard by her neighbors when she talks in her house.[1]

99. We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: As men differ in their attitude toward food and drink, so they differ in their attitude to women. There is a man who, should a fly fall into his cup, will throw away the cup and not drink from it. This is like the way of Pappus ben Judah, who, upon leaving the house, would lock his wife indoors. There is another man who, should a fly fall into his cup, will toss it away and drink from the cup. This is the way of most men, who do not mind if their wives talk with their brothers and other kinfolk. Then there is the man who, should a fly fall into his soup, will squash it and eat it. This is the way of a bad man who sees his wife go out with her hair loose, spin in the marketplace with her arms and shoulders bare, and bathe in the same place as men. [That husband is unaware that] it is a precept in the Torah to divorce such a wife, as Scripture says, "Because he hath found in her indecency in anything, he is to divorce her" (Deut. 24:1).

"And she goeth and becometh another man's wife" (Deut. 24:2). Scripture calls him "another" to indicate that this one is not a kindred spirit to her first husband. That one put a bad woman out of his house, while this one brought a bad woman into his house. If he is worthy, the second husband too will divorce her, in keeping with "and the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement" (Deut. 24:3). If not, she will bury him, in keeping with "If the latter husband die" (ibid.). He deserves to die for having brought a bad woman into his house.[2]

100. A bad wife is a plague to her husband. What remedy does he have? He should divorce her and thus be healed of his plague.[3]

101. "The Lord hath delivered me into the hands of one against whom I am not able to stand" (Lam. 1:14). R. Hisda said in the name of Mar Ukba bar Hiyya: The verse refers to a bad wife whose marriage settlement is substantial.[4]

102. Rava said: A bad wife whose marriage settlement is substantial should be given a rival at her side. As people say: A woman will be chastened quicker by another woman than by a thorn.[5]

103. R. Yohanan said: A man whose first wife has died grieves as much as if the Temple had been destroyed in his lifetime, for Scripture says, "Son of man, behold, I take away from thee the delight of thine eyes with a stroke . . . and at even my wife died" (Ezek. 24:16 and 24:18), and says also, "Behold, I will profane My Sanctuary, the pride of your power, the delight of your eyes" (Ezek. 24:21).

R. Alexandri said: The world grows dark for him whose wife dies during his days [on earth], as is said, "When the light grows dark in his tent [i.e., his wife dies], his lamp over him shall be put out" (Job 18:6). R. Yose bar Hanina added: His steps become unsteady, as the verse goes on to say, "The steps of his strength shall be straitened." And R. Abbahu added: His wits fail him, as the verse concludes, "His own counsel shall cast him down" (ibid.).[6]

104. R. Samuel bar Nahman said: All things can be replaced, except the wife of one's youth, as Scripture says, "A wife of [one's] youth, can she be rejected?" (Isa. 54:6). R. Judah taught his son R. Isaac: Only in his first wife does a man find utter joy, as Scripture says, "Have joy in the wife of thy youth" (Prov. 5:18). R. Isaac asked, "What wife, for example?" R. Judah: "Your mother, for example."[7]

105. We have been taught: A husband's death is felt by none but his wife, and a wife's death is felt by none but her husband. A husband's death is felt by none but his wife, as intimated in "Elimelech, Naomi's husband, died" (Ruth 1:3). A wife's death is felt by none but her husband, as intimated in "And as for me, when I came from Paddan, Rachel died unto me" (Gen. 48:7).[8]

106. He who eyes his wife [in the hope] that she will die, so that he may become her heir, will in the end be buried by her.[9]

107. The sages taught in the name of Rav: The verse "Thy sons and thy daughters shall be given to another people, while thine eyes look on" (Deut. 28:32) refers to a stepmother.[10]

A Woman's Character

108. Women—they are a people unto themselves.[11]

109. "And the Lord God built (va-yiven) the rib" (Gen. 2:22). [The text says va-yiven, which can also mean], "He considered well (hitbonen)[12] out of what part to create her." God said: I will not create her out of Adam's head, lest she be conceited; nor out of the eye, lest she be a coquette; nor out of the ear, lest she be an eavesdropper; nor out of the mouth, lest she be a gossip; nor out of the heart,

1. B. Ket 72a.
2. B. Git 90a–b; Tos Sot 5:9.
3. B. Yev 63b.
4. Ibid.
5. Ibid.
6. B. Sanh 22a.
7. Ibid.
8. Ibid.
9. ARN 3.
10. B. Ber 56a.
11. B. Shab 62a.
12. The commentator regards va-yiven as a form of bin ("understand").

lest she be prone to jealousy; nor out of the hand, lest she be light-fingered; nor out of the foot, lest she be a gadabout—but rather out of the rib, from a place within Adam's body. And as He was creating each and every part of the woman, He kept saying, "Be a woman [who is capable of 'withinness'], who is retiring." Nevertheless, "ye have set at naught all My counsel" (Prov. 1:25), for all the undesirable qualities mentioned earlier are in her.[1]

110. Our masters taught that women are said to have four traits; they are gluttonous, eavesdropping, slothful, and envious. R. Judah son of R. Nehemiah said: They are also querulous and talkative. R. Levi said: They are also pilferers and gadabouts.[2]

111. R. Dostai son of R. Yannai was asked by his disciples: Why is it that a man goes looking for a woman, but a woman does not go looking for a man? He replied with the parable of a man who lost an article.[3] Who looks for whom? Clearly, he who lost the article goes looking for what he lost.

Why is a man readily pacified, but a woman is not readily pacified? Because he [derives his nature from the yielding earth] out of which he was created, while she [derives her nature from the unyielding bone] out of which she was created.

Why is a woman's voice sweet while a man's voice is not sweet? Because he [derives his voice from the nonresounding earth] out of which he was created, while she [derives hers from the resounding bone] out of which she was created.[4]

112. R. Joshua was asked: Why does a man [at birth] come forth with his face turned downward, while a woman comes forth with her face turned upward? He replied: The man looks down toward the [earth], the place of his creation, while the woman looks up toward [the rib], the place of her creation.

And why must a woman use perfume, while a man does not need to use perfume? He replied: Man was created from the earth, and the earth never becomes putrid, while Eve was created from a bone.[5] Thus, to explain by a parable, if you leave meat unsalted for three days, it will surely become putrid.

And why is a man easily appeased, while a woman is not easily appeased? He replied: Man was created from the earth, and when you pour a drop of water on it, it is absorbed at once; while Eve was created from a bone, which, even if soaked in water many days, will not become saturated.

Why does a man solicit a woman, while a woman does not solicit a man? He replied: The matter may be illustrated by the parable of a man who lost an article—he will be seeking the lost article; the lost article will not be seeking him.

Why does a man go out with head bare, while a woman goes out with head covered? He replied: One who committed a transgression is ashamed before people. It is for that reason that a woman goes out with her head covered.

Why are women first to pass in front of a corpse? He replied: Because they brought death to the world. Therefore they are the first to pass in front of a corpse.[6]

113. Restrained by feminine delicacy, a woman solicits with her heart, whereas a man solicits with his mouth.[7]

114. Ten kav of talk came down to the world; women took nine, and the rest of mankind one.[8]

115. Women seek to know everything.[9]

116. A woman is suspected of uncovering her neighbor's pot to find out what she is cooking.[10]

117. The more wives, the more witchcraft.[11]

118. The most worthy of women is a mistress of witchcraft.[12]

119. There is no wisdom in woman except with the distaff. Thus Scripture says, "And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands" (Exod. 35:25).[13]

120. Women are lightheaded.[14]

121. Women are incapable of giving legal decisions, and so one is not to rely on what they say.[15]

122. A woman prefers having beautifully decorated rooms and beautifully embroidered clothes to eating fatted calves.[16]

123. "That which I long for" (Hos. 2:7)[17]—the things a woman longs for. And what are they? Adornments.[18]

124. During the week of a festival, a woman may use such adornments of her toilet as our masters taught are permitted, namely, apply kohl to her eyes, braid her hair, and put rouge on her face. [In order to show what may or may not be done], R. Hisda's wife made her toilet in front of her daughter-in-law. R. Huna bar Hinena, who was seated before R. Hisda, said, "The adornments

---

1. Gen. R. 18:2; Tanhuma, Va-yeshev, §6.
2. Gen. R. 45:5.
3. The rib that God took.
4. B. Nid 31b.
5. The bone decomposes, however slowly, and is subject to putrefaction.
6. Gen. R. 17:8.
7. B. Er 100b.
8. B. Kid 49b.
9. Yalkut, Esther, §1049.
10. Toh 7:9.
11. Avot 2:7.
12. Sof 15.
13. B. Yoma 66b.
14. B. Shab 33b.
15. Num. R. 10:5.
16. Esther R. 3:10.
17. JV: "My water." But shikkuyo ("my water") may also be a form of shokak ("to long for").
18. B. Ket 65a.

permitted apply only to a young woman and not to an elderly woman." R. Hisda replied, "By God! Even to your mother, even to your mother's mother, even if she were standing at the brink of the grave. As the proverb has it: At sixty as at six, the sound of the timbrel makes her nimble."[1]

125. "The daughters of Zion are haughty" (Isa. 3:16): that is to say, making themselves erect like spears, they moved about with overweening arrogance. "And walk with stretched-forth necks" (ibid.): when one of them adorned herself, she would bend her neck in one direction and then in another to display her ornaments. "And painted eyes" (ibid.): they painted their eyes with sikra—a red dye, according to R. Mani of Caesarea, or, collyrium, according to Resh Lakish—and winked [at men]. "Walking with mincing steps" (ibid): walking heel to toe. A woman who was tall would get two short women to accompany her, one on each side of her, in order to make her appear [by contrast] even taller than she was; on the other hand, a woman who was short would put on shoes with thick soles and get two short women to accompany her, one on each side of her, in order to make herself look tall. "And they beserpent their feet" (Isa. 3:16): as R. Abba bar Kahana explained, each woman used to have the figure of a serpent embossed upon her footwear. According to R. Isaac, the women used to fill their shoes with myrrh and balsam, and thus promenaded in the streets of Jerusalem; when they got close to a group of young men, they would stamp their feet on the ground in order to spray the young men with the fragrance in their shoes, thus injecting them with the evil impulse just as a serpent injects his venom.

The Holy One kept saying to Isaiah, "What are these women doing here? They must be banished hence." And so Isaiah kept telling them, "Vow penitence, so that Israel's foes do not come at you." They replied, "If Israel's foes do come at us, what can they possibly do to us? An officer may see me and take me, a prefect may see me and take me, or even a general may see me and seat me in his carriage."[2]

126. R. Hiyya taught: A wife should be taken mainly for her beauty; a wife should be taken mainly for the sake of bringing children [into the world].

And R. Hiyya taught further: A woman's femininity is brought out by the ornaments she wears.[3]

127. R. Hiyya also taught: He who wishes his wife to look graceful should clothe her in linen garments. He who wishes his daughter to have a light complexion—let him, on the approach of her maturity, feed her with young fowls and give her milk to drink.[4]

128. R. Joshua said: A woman prefers skimpy fare with sexual indulgence to ample fare with continence.[5]

129. Two women in a house, strife in the house.[6]

130. A woman is jealous only of another woman's thighs.[7]

131. "She induced [Othniel] to ask [Caleb] her father for some property—[she did so] by crying out as she pointed to her donkey[8] (Josh. 15:18). Just what did she cry out and say? She said, so taught Rava in the name of R. Isaac: Even as a donkey, when it has no fodder in its trough, will cry out at once, so a woman who knows that she will have no food in her house must cry out at once.[9]

132. [When Abraham asked Sarah to make cakes, he first said], "Of flour" (Gen. 18:6), [then added], "Of choice flour" (ibid.). From Abraham's instructions to his wife, R. Isaac said, one may infer that a woman is more apt than a man to be stingy with guests.[10]

133. "And she said unto her husband: 'Behold now, I perceive that it is a holy man of God' " (2 Kings 4:9). From this verse, said R. Yose son of R. Hanina, one may infer that a woman perceives a guest's character better than a man.

"A holy man." How did she know? Because she never saw a fly pass over his table.[11]

134. "And the Lord God endowed the rib with understanding"[12] (Gen. 2:22). The verse indicates that the Holy One endowed woman with more understanding than man.[13]

135. Daughters of Israel are not wont to be loud-voiced, or given to strutting, or unrestrained in jesting.[14]

136. "Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine and as the [altar's] sides[15] in your house" (Ps. 128:3). R. Phinehas the Priest bar Hama said: So long as a wife is retiring in

---

1. B. MK 9b.
2. Lev. R. 16:1; Lam. R. 4:18; B. Shab 62b.
3. So apparently two sources cited in Ket, ed. Moshe Hirshler (Jerusalem, 1977) 2:39. BR: "A wife should be taken mainly for the ornaments she wears." B. Ket 59b.
4. Ibid.
5. B. Sot 20a.
6. Tanhuma, Ki Tetze, §1.
7. B. Meg 13a.
8. JV: "she alighted from off her ass." But to the commentator, the act seems unnecessary. Hence, he construes va-titznah not as "alighted" but as "cried out" and interprets me-al ha-hamor not as "from off her donkey" but as "pointed to her donkey" by way of strengthening her plea to be given a dowry, since Othniel, who was to be her husband, was a poor man.
9. B. Tem 16a.
10. B. BM 87a.
11. Even as no fly was ever seen over the altar (Avot 3:2). B. Ber 10b.
12. The commentator takes va-yiven ("made") as derived from bin ("to understand").
13. B. Nid 45b.
14. Tanhuma, Naso, §2.
15. The use of the unusual word yarkete ("sides") suggests to the commentator the wife's being compared to the altar, against whose yerekh, ("side") the blood of expiation is to be dashed (Lev. 1:11). Tanhuma, Va-yishlah, §6.

demeanor in her house, then even as the altar procures forgiveness, so she procures forgiveness for her household.[1]

137. R. Nahman said: Haughtiness does not become women. There were two haughty women, and their names were appropriately odious, one being called Hornet (Deborah), and the other Weasel (Huldah). Of the one called Hornet, Scripture says, "And she sent and called Barak" (Judg. 4:6)—she would not deign to go to him. The one called Weasel, Scripture quotes as saying, "Tell ye the man that sent ye unto me" (2 Kings 22:15)—she would not say, "Tell the king."[2]

138. It is a woman's way to stay in her home. It is a man's way to go out into the marketplace and acquire understanding from other people.[3]

139. It is not a woman's way to sit idle.[4]

140. While a woman talks, she spins.[5]

141. It is not seemly for a woman to keep coming to courts of justice.[6]

142. It is not proper for a woman to go about begging at doorways.[7]

143. Women are merciful.[8]

144. Even more than a man wishes to marry does a woman wish to be married.[9]

145. Better a husband who's not much good than to live alone in widowhood.[10]

146. R. Samuel bar Onia said in the name of Rav: [Before marriage] a woman is an unshaped lump, and she enters into a covenant with him who makes her a [useful] vessel, as is said, "Thy maker is thy husband" (Isa. 54:5).[11]

147. "May ye find ease, each of you in the house of her husband" (Ruth 1:9). From this we infer that a woman has a sense of ease only in her husband's house.[12]

148. "Thy desire shall be to thy husband" (Gen. 3:16). The story is told of a woman of the family of Tabrinus[13] who was married to a brigand, and her husband abused her. When the sages heard of it and came to reprimand her [for remaining with him], she brought forth a golden lampstand with an earthen vessel on top of it.[14]

149. R. Simeon ben Yohai was asked by his disciples: Why does the Torah ordain that after childbirth a woman must bring an offering? He replied: Because when she kneels to give birth, she impetuously swears that she will never again submit to her husband. And since she later violates this oath, the Torah says that she must bring an offering.

"Thy desire shall be to thy husband" (Gen. 3:16). When a woman sits on the birthing stool, she swears, "Never again will I submit to my husband." And the Holy One says to her, "You will return to your desire—you will return to your desire for your husband."[15]

150. A wife longs for her husband when he sets out on a journey.[16]

151. Even if the husband is no larger than an ant, his wife feels she could place her chair among the great.

Though the husband be a mere carder, his wife invites him to the threshold of their home, where she [proudly] sits with him.[17]

152. When a husband moves among pumpkins, the wife will do likewise among melons.[18]

153. One may presume that no wife will dare act insolently in the presence of her husband.[19]

154. A wife is like one's own person.[20]

155. The wife of an associate scholar [haver] is like the associate scholar.[21]

156. The wife of a brigand is like the brigand.[22]

157. Whatever a wife acquires belongs to her husband.[23]

158. The sages of the school of R. Eliezer taught: In the verse "These are the ordinances which Thou shalt set before them" (Exod. 21:1), Scripture makes a woman equal to a man in regard to all the ordinances governing relations between one person and another.[24]

The sages of the school of R. Ishmael taught: In the

---

1. B. Meg 14b.
2. Gen. R. 18:1.
3. P. Ket 5:6, 30a.
4. B. Meg 14b.
5. B. Git 41a.
6. B. Git 41b.
7. B. Ket 67a.
8. B. Meg 14b.
9. B. Yev 113a.
10. B. Yev 118b.
11. B. Sanh 22b.
12. Ruth R. 2:15.
13. Or, Tiberinus. A wealthy family of noble stock.
14. By way of saying that she, a golden article, is willing to submit to "an earthen vessel," her husband. Gen. R. 20:7.
15. B. Nid 31b; Gen. R. 20:7.
16. B. Yev 62b.
17. B. Yev 118b.
18. If one is unfaithful, so will the other be. B. Meg 12b.
19. B. Yev 116a.
20. B. Men 93b.
21. B. AZ 39a.
22. P. Ket 2:9, 26d.
23. B. Git 77b.
24. The inference is not from this verse, but from verse 28 in this chapter, which speaks of "a man or a woman."

verse "When a man or woman commit any sin" (Num. 5:6), Scripture makes a woman equal to a man in regard to all penalties prescribed in the Torah.[1]

Matters between Husband and Wife

159. "Who teacheth us by the beasts of the earth, and maketh us wise by the fowls of heaven" (Job 35:11). R. Yohanan said: Had Torah not been given [to us], we could have learned modesty from the cat, avoiding seizure of others' property from the ant, avoidance of infidelity from the dove, and good manners from the rooster, who first coaxes and only then mates.

How does he go about coaxing? R. Judah said in the name of Rav: [As he lowers his wings, he seems to be saying], "I will buy you a cloak that will reach down to your feet." After the mating, [he lowers his head], as if to say, "May my crest fall off if I have [the money]—I cannot buy you the cloak [I promised]."[2]

160. "And Balaam lifted up his eyes, and he saw Israel dwelling tribe by tribe [in such a way that] he was impelled to exclaim, 'The spirit of God should rest upon Israel' "[3] (Num. 24:2). What did he see? He saw that the entrances to Israel's tents did not face one another [thus ensuring privacy]. So he exclaimed, "These people deserve to have the Presence rest on them."[4]

161. R. Huna said: Israel are holy, and so they do not indulge in sexual intercourse during the day.[5]

162. R. Benjamin bar Japheth said in the name of R. Eleazar: He who sanctifies himself [in his purpose] during sexual intercourse will have male children, as indicated by the fact that the verse "Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy" (Lev. 11:44) is followed by "If a woman be delivered, and bear a male" (Lev. 12:2).[6]

163. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Jerusalemites were given to obscenities obscurely worded. One of them would inquire of another: On what did you dine today—on well-kneaded bread or on bread not well-kneaded? On weak-bodied white wine or on full-bodied tawny wine? [Did you recline] on a wide couch or a narrow couch? With a good fellow diner or a poor fellow diner?

All the foregoing expressions, said R. Hisda, allude to the satisfaction of lust.[7]

164. Imma Shalom[8] was asked: Why are your children so handsome? She replied: Because my husband does not cohabit with me at the beginning of the night or at the end of the night, but only at midnight. And when he cohabits with me, he uncovers a handbreadth of my body even as he covers another handbreadth, and he acts as though a demon is driving him. When I ask him, "Why at midnight?" he replies, "So that I give no thought to another woman,"[9] for in that case his children would be [in a manner of speaking] bastards.[10]

165. The sages said: [During intercourse], a man may do with his wife whatever he pleases. An analogy suggests itself with meat that comes from the slaughterhouse: a man may eat it any way he wishes: [raw] with salt, roasted, or stewed. And likewise with fish from the fish market.[11]

166. Do not cook in a pot in which your neighbor has cooked. What does that mean? Do not marry a divorced woman while her husband is still living. For a master said: When a divorced man marries a divorced woman, there are four yearnings in the bed.[12]

167. "That you do not follow your heart . . . in your lustful urge" (Num. 15:39). From this verse it follows, said Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], that one should not drink out of one goblet while thinking of another.[13]

168. Yose ben Yohanan of Jerusalem said: Do not gossip with a woman. The sages said: This applies to one's own wife . . . how much more so to another man's wife. Hence, say the sages, whoever gossips with a woman will bring harm to himself, for he neglects the study of Torah, and in the end will inherit Gehenna.[14]

169. R. Akiva said: Jesting and levity predispose a man to lewdness.[15]

170. R. Yohanan said: It is better to walk behind a lion than behind a woman.

R. Nahman said: Manoah was an unlearned person [am ha-aretz], for it is said, "Manoah walked behind his wife" (Judg. 13:11).[16]

171. Samuel said: Even a woman's voice stimulates sexual longing.

R. Sheshet said: Even [the sight of] a woman's hair stimulates sexual longing.[17]

172. Resh Lakish said: Do not suppose that only he who commits the act with his body is called an adulterer. He who commits it merely with his eyes is also called an

---

1. B. BK 15a.
2. B. Er 100b.
3. So interpreted by Tosafot, ad loc.
4. B. BB 60a.
5. B. Nid 17a.
6. The purpose should be procreation, not mere lust. B. Shevu 18b.
7. B. Shab 62b–63a.
8. The wife of R. Eliezer ben Hyrcanus. See above, part 2, chap. 1, §98.
9. At the beginning of the night and in the early hours of morning, loose women are apt to be abroad.
10. B. Ned 20b.
11. Ibid.
12. B. Pes 112a.
13. B. Ned 20b.
14. Avot 1:5.
15. Avot 3:14.
16. Walking behind a woman arouses a man's lust. B. Ber 61a.
17. B. Ber 24a.

adulterer, for it is said, "The eyes also of the adulterer" (Job 24:15).[1]

173. Our masters taught: If a wife is alone with her husband and is engaged in intercourse with him, while her heart is with another man whom she met on the road, no act of adultery is greater, for it is said, "The wife that committeth adultery, taketh strangers while under her husband" (Ezek. 16:32).[2] But how can a wife who is under her husband commit adultery? Here, however, the verse refers to a woman who has met another man and set her eyes on him, and while she is engaged in intercourse with her husband, her heart is with that man.[3]

174. Our masters taught: He who counts money out of his hand into a woman's hand slowly, so as to gaze at her, even if he possesses as much Torah and as many good deeds as Moses, will not escape the punishment of Gehenna, as is said, "Hand to hand—he shall not be unpunished" (Prov. 11:21): not be unpunished in Gehenna.[4]

175. "And Israel attached itself unto the Baal of Peor" (Num. 25:3). R. Eleazar ben Shammua said: Just as it is impossible for a wooden nail to be wrenched from a door without loss of some wood, so it was impossible for Israel to be wrenched from Peor without loss of some souls.[5]

176. R. Simlai said: Wherever you find lust, you also find pestilence come to the world, slaying the good and the bad. R. Joshua ben Levi added: The Holy One is slow to anger about everything except yielding to lust.[6]

177. The story is told of a certain man who set his eyes on a certain woman and a passion so vehement seized him [that it threatened his life]. People went and consulted physicians, who said: There is no cure for him unless she yields to him. But the sages declared: Let him die rather than have her yield to him. The physicians: Then let her stand before him nude. The sages: Let him die rather than have her stand before him nude. The physicians: Then have her at least converse with him from behind a screen. The sages: Let him die rather than have her converse with him from behind a screen.

But why such rigidity? To prevent, said R. Papa, disgrace to the young woman's family. To prevent, said R. Aha son of R. Ika, dissolute behavior among daughters of Israel.[7]

178. There is no guardian against unchastity.[8]

179. The sages taught: Even the most pious of the pious is not to be appointed guardian where there is the possibility of unchastity.[9]

180. R. Idi said: A woman carries upon herself the weapons of her sex [to protect her from murder].[10]

181. The sages taught: A woman is a leather bag full of excrement, her orifice full of blood, yet all men run after her.[11]

182. The words "Adam knew his wife yet more" (Gen. 4:25) imply that Adam's desire for his wife was increased by much more desire than before: formerly he had felt no desire when he did not see his wife, but now he felt desire for her whether he saw her or not.[12]

183. R. Yohanan said: A man has [on his body] a small member. If he starves it, it is satisfied; if he satisfies it, it is starved.[13]

184. R. Isaac said: Ever since the Temple was destroyed, sexual pleasure has been taken [from those who obey the Torah] and given to those who transgress it, as is said, "Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant" (Prov. 9:17).[14]

185. The story is told of a certain woman who was propositioned by a certain man. She told him, "Go to such-and-such a place [and I will meet you there]. What did the woman do? She went to the man's wife and told her what had been arranged. So the wife went to the place of assignation, and her husband copulated with her.[15] After that, he regretted what he had done so much that he wished to die. His wife said to him, "You have eaten of your own bread and drunk of your own cup. The trouble with you is that you are presumptuous. You should be satisfied with your own wife, like other men!"[16]

186. "And a spirit of jealousy[17] came upon him, and he accused his wife" (Num. 5:14). The sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: A man makes such an accusation to his wife only if a spirit enters into him. What kind of spirit? A spirit of impurity, say the sages. On the contrary, says R. Ashi: a spirit of purity.

---

1. Cf. Matthew 5:28. Lev. R. 23:12.
2. JV: "Thou wife that committest adultery, that takest strangers instead of thy husband."
3. Num. R. 9:34; Tanhuma, Naso, §7.
4. B. Ber 61a.
5. Abraham, it is said, manages to bring out of Gehenna all kinds of sinners, except such as had intercourse with daughters of idolaters. B. Er 19a. (Reference provided by Johanan Eisenberg in his Yanhenu [Warsaw, 1899], ad loc.). Sif Deut., §131.
6. P. Sot 1:5, 17a; Gen. R. 26:5.
7. B. Sanh 75a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. B. Ket 13b.
9. P. Ket 1:8, 25d.
10. A man is more likely to rape a woman than murder her. B. Yev 115a.
11. B. Shab 152a.
12. Until the stronger desire was added, Adam—according to rabbinic tradition—was able to live apart from Eve for a hundred and thirty years. Gen. R. 23:5.
13. B. Suk 52b.
14. B. Sanh 75a.
15. Without knowing that it was his own wife.
16. Num. R. 9:3.
17. The commentator's question: Is the husband's jealousy prompted by a spirit of purity that will not put up with immorality or by a wish to make his wife miserable?

It stands to reason that it is a spirit of purity. For we have been taught [in a Baraita]: "And he accused his wife"—it is his option to do so, in the opinion of R. Ishmael; it is his religious duty to do so, in the opinion of R. Akiva. Hence, we must conclude that the husband is moved by a spirit of purity. For should you suppose that he was moved by a spirit of impurity, how can one contend that being moved by such a spirit is an option or a religious duty?[1]

187. How did the husband deal with a wife suspected of infidelity? First, he took her to the local court. Then they brought her to the High Court in Jerusalem, where the judges solemnly admonished her in the way that witnesses in capital cases were admonished. The judges said to her: Daughter, wine does much, levity does much, youth does much, bad neighbors do much. Many preceded you and were swept away. Confess for the sake of the great Name which is written in holiness, so that it will not have to be obliterated by the water of bitterness. They went on to tell her tales of events set down in the early parts of Scripture[2] and uttered blunt warnings, which neither she nor the family of her father's house would otherwise have heard.

Even as she was admonished not to drink the water of bitterness, so was she admonished to drink it.[3] The judges said to her: Daughter, if it is clear to you that you are pure, stand on your innocence and drink, for the waters of bitterness will be no more than a dry salve placed on healthy flesh. If there is a sore in it, the salve will [dissolve and] penetrate deep [into the flesh]; if there is no sore, the salve will have no effect.

If she said, "I am defiled," she forfeited her marriage settlement,[4] [was divorced], and departed. If she insisted, "I am innocent," she was taken to the east gate, in front of the entrance into Nicanor's gate,[5] where women suspected of infidelity were made to drink the waters of bitterness.

A priest roughly gripped her garments—if they tore, they were torn; if the stitches ripped, they were ripped—until he uncovered her bosom and loosened her hair. R. Judah said: If her bosom was comely, he did not uncover it, and if her hair was beautiful, he did not loosen it, to protect young priests [from being stimulated sexually by her]. If she had been clothed in white, the priest clothed her in black; but if black became her, she was stripped and clothed in shabby garments. If she wore golden ornaments and neck chains, earrings and finger rings, they were removed, in order to make her unattractive. R. Yohanan ben Baroka said: Daughters of Israel should not be made unattractive in ways other than those set down in the Torah.

A sheet of byssus linen was then spread between the priest and the people. The priest turned to stand behind her and undid the braids of her hair, to fulfill the precept of undoing them. Afterward, the priest brought an Egyptian[6] rope and tied it above her breasts. Whoever wished to look at her was allowed to come and do so, except her menservants and maidservants, because she felt superior to them [and so would not have been humiliated in front of them]. All women were encouraged to look at her, in keeping with the verse "That all women may be taught not to do after your lewdness" (Ezek. 23:48).

The husband brought her meal offering in an Egyptian basket and made her hold it in order to tire her.[7]

[The priest] next took a new earthenware bowl and poured a log of water into it from the laver. Then he entered the Temple Hall and turned right, where there was a place one cubit square, with a marble flagstone to which a ring was attached. Pulling on the ring, he raised the flagstone and from beneath it took some dust, which he put in the bowl—just enough dust to be visible on the surface of the water.

Then the priest entered the Outer Hall leading into the Temple's interior to write out the curses in the scroll. A gold tablet [containing the text of the curses] was affixed on the outside wall of the Temple Hall, which could be seen from the Outer Hall. The priest looked at it as he copied out the text, letter for letter and word for word. He wrote only with ink—writing that can be erased. [After examining carefully what he had written], he went out, stood beside the woman suspected of infidelity, and read [the text of the scroll], expounding it and setting it forth in whatever language she understood, so that she might know exactly why she was being made to drink [the water of bitterness].

If, before [the writing on] the scroll was blotted out [in the water], she said, "I refuse to drink it,"[8] the scroll was hidden [put away] and her meal offering was scattered over the ashes.[9] If, after [the writing on] the scroll was blotted out, she said, "I am defiled," the water was poured out and her meal offering was scattered over the ashes.

If, however, [after the writing on] the scroll was blotted out, she said, "I refuse to drink,"[10] she was compelled and made to drink against her will. R. Judah said: Her mouth was forced open with iron tongs.

She scarcely finished drinking when her face turned yellow, her eyes bulged, and her veins swelled. Everyone cried, "Take her away, so that she may not make the Temple Court unclean."[11]

188. With regard to the woman suspected of infidelity, we find measure for measure—as she measured out, so it was measured out to her. She stood at the doorway of her house to show herself to her lover; therefore the priest

---

1. B. Sot 3a; Num. R. 9:12.
2. The stories of Reuben and Judah, each of whom confessed his error.
3. Before a wife suspected of infidelity can be made to drink the bitter water, the husband must accuse her in the presence of two witnesses on the evidence of two additional witnesses that she had secreted herself with another man (Sot 1:11).
4. She executed a deed renouncing all claims to it.
5. The place is between the Women's Court and the Court of the Israelites. See above, part 1, chap. 9, §5.
6. Perhaps to show that she followed the Egyptians' proneness to lewd living.
7. And induce her to confess.
8. Conceding her guilt.
9. Of the Temple offerings.
10. Refusing to confess.
11. Sot 1–3; Tos Sot 1–2; Sif Num., §11–12.

stood her at the Nicanor gate to show her disgrace to everyone. She wound beautiful scarves about her head for him; therefore the priest removed the covering from her head and put it under the soles of her feet. She made her face beautiful for him; therefore her face turned yellow. She applied kohl to her eyes; therefore her eyes bulged. She braided her hair for him; therefore the priest undid her hair. She beckoned to him enticingly with her finger; therefore her fingernails fell out. She supported her breasts with a band of fine netting to make herself more alluring to him; therefore the priest fetched Egyptian rope and bound it above her breasts. She thrust her thigh toward her lover; therefore her thigh sagged. She received him on her belly; therefore her belly swelled. She gave him the world's delicacies to eat; therefore her offering consisted of cattle fodder. She gave him rare wine to drink in precious goblets; therefore the priest gave her bitter water to drink in a broken cup of clay. She acted in secret; therefore He who is everywhere exposed her in public.[1]

189. The sages said: A story is told of two sisters who looked exactly alike. One of them was married and settled in one town, and the other married and settled in another town. The husband of one grew so suspicious of her that he wished to have her drink the bitter water in Jerusalem. So she went to the town where her sister had settled. Her sister asked her, "Why did you come here?" She replied, "My husband wishes to make me drink the bitter water, and I am defiled." At this, her sister said, "I will go in your place and drink [the water]." So she said, "Go and do so." What did her sister do? She put on the garments of her adulterous sister, went in her place, drank the bitter water, and was found innocent. When she came back home,[2] the adulterous sister went out to meet her. They embraced and kissed. But as they kissed each other, the adulterous sister got a whiff of the bitter water and died instantly.[3]

190. Once a woman came to Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] and said to him, "I have been raped." R. Judah: "But did you not find the experience pleasing?"[4] The woman: "Suppose someone dipped his finger [in honey] and stuck it in your mouth on the Day of Atonement, would not the experience distress you at first, but after a while please you?"

So R. Judah accepted what she had to say.[5]

191. "A twisted thing cannot be made straight" (Eccles. 1:15). R. Simeon ben Menasya said: He who steals from a man may return what he stole and straighten out matters. He who robs a man may return what he has stolen and straighten out matters. Who, then, is meant by "A twisted thing cannot be made straight"? He who copulates incestuously with a woman and begets a bastard from her.[6]

---

1. B. Sot 8b–9a.
2. "When she came back home": Num R. 9:9. BR follows Tanhuma, Naso, §6: "When she came back to her sister's house."
3. Num. R. 9:9; Tanhuma, Naso, §6.
4. If you were a willing partner, you are forbidden to your husband.
5. He declared her permitted to her husband. Num. R. 9:10.
6. B. Hag 9b.

192. "The eye of the adulterer anticipateth the twilight" (Job 24:15). "Saying: 'No eye shall see me' " (ibid.)—neither an eye below nor an eye above—the adulterer keeps asking in anticipation: When will twilight come? When will evening come? "But He who dwells in secret limns a face" (ibid.): the adulterer does not know that He who dwells in the secret place of the world—that is to say, the Holy One—draws the adulterer's features in the newly formed embryo's face, in order to expose him.

R. Levi said: In this connection, consider the parable of a potter's apprentice who stole a lump of his master's clay. When the master detected the theft, what did he do? He proceeded to shape the lump of clay into a vessel, which he hung up before the apprentice. Why all this? To make it known to the apprentice that his master had detected his theft.

R. Judah bar Simon taught in the name of R. Levi ben Perata: "The Artist who begot thee thou dost weaken" (Deut. 32:18). You adulterers weaken the power of the Creator. Consider the parable of an artist who was drawing the features of a sovereign with special care. Even as he was about to complete his work, someone came and said to him: There has been a change of sovereigns. At once the artist's hands grew slack as he said: Whose features am I now to draw? That of the former sovereign or that of the present one? Like the artist, the Holy One occupies Himself with drawing the features of the embryo throughout the first forty days of the woman's pregnancy. But then, at the end of the forty days, she goes off and sins with another man, and thus confuses the paternity of the embryo. At once the hands of the Lord grow slack, if one dare say such a thing, and He says: Whose features am I now to draw? Those of him who possessed her first or of him who possessed her second? Hence, "the Artist who begot thee thou dost weaken."

R. Isaac said: With regard to all other transgressors, we find that the thief gains, while the victim of the theft loses; the robber gains, while his victim loses. In adultery, however, both transgressors benefit. Who loses? The Holy One, for [in order to expose adultery] He destroys the features [He used to indicate the original paternity of the embryo].[7]

193. A king of the Arabs asked R. Akiva, "I am black and my wife is black. Yet she gave birth to a white son. Shall I kill her for having been unfaithful to me?" R. Akiva: "Are the paintings in your house portraits of white or black persons?" The king: "White." R. Akiva: "When you cohabited with her, she fixed her eyes on the portraits of white persons and as a result gave birth to a white child. If you are astonished by what I say, consider our father Jacob's flocks, which were influenced in their conception by rods set up in front of them."[8]

The king of the Arabs agreed that R. Akiva was right.[9]

---

7. Lev. R. 23:12; Num. R. 9:1.
8. Gen. 30:37–40.
9. Num. R. 9:34.

194. "I further observed all the oppression" (Eccles. 4:1). Daniel the Tailor construed this verse as applying to bastards. "Behold the tears of the oppressed" (ibid.)—if the parents were the transgressors, why should their offspring be subjected to oppression? Let us say the father of one such committed incest with a woman and begot him; in what way did the child sin? "And on the side of their oppressors, there was power" (ibid.)—on the side of Israel's Great Sanhedrin, which, coming at them with the power conferred on them by the Torah, removed them from Israel's fold. "And they have no comforter" (ibid.)—accordingly, the Holy One said: It is for Me to comfort them. For in this world they are deemed dross, but of the time-to-come, Zechariah [speaking of Israel] says, "I have seen, and behold a lampstand all of gold" (Zech. 4:2).[1]

Children and the Rearing of Children

195. We have been taught: He who has no son is as though he were dead, utterly demolished. As though he were dead, for Rachel said, "Give me children, or else I am dead" (Gen. 30:1). As though utterly demolished, for Sarah said, "It may be that I shall be rebuilt through her" (Gen. 16:2), and only that which has been utterly demolished requires rebuilding.[2]

196. "And Isaiah . . . came to him and said unto him: . . . 'Thou shalt die, and not live' " (2 Kings 20:1)—"thou shalt die" in this world "and not live" in the world-to-come. When Hezekiah asked him, "Why punishment so severe?" Isaiah replied, "Because you did not try to have children." Hezekiah: "[I do not] because it was shown to me by the holy spirit that children issuing from me will not be worthy." Isaiah: "What have you to do with the secrets of the Holy One? What you have been commanded, you should have done, and let God do what He pleases."[3]

197. The world was created only for fruition and increase, as is said, "He created it not a waste. He formed it to be inhabited" (Isa. 45:18).[4]

198. We have been taught that R. Eliezer said: He who does not engage in fruition and increase is as though he shed blood, for the verse "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed" (Gen. 9:6) is followed at once by "Be ye fruitful and multiply" (Gen. 9:7). R. Akiva said: Such a one is as though He diminished God's image, for the verse "In the image of God made He man" (Gen. 9:6) is followed at once by "Be ye fruitful and multiply." Ben Azzai said: He is as one who both sheds blood and diminishes God's image.

R. Eliezer said to Ben Azzai: "Such words sound well when they issue from the mouths of those who practice them. There are some who preach well and practice well; others practice well but do not preach well. You preach well but do not practice well." Ben Azzai replied, "But what shall I do, seeing that my soul yearns for Torah? The world can continue through others."[5]

199. Our masters taught: The verse "And when [the Presence] rested, [Moses] said: 'Return, O Lord, unto the myriads and thousands of Israel' " (Num. 10:36) implies that the Presence rests on no fewer than two thousand and two myriads[6] of Israel. Should the number of Israelites happen to be two thousand and two myriads less one, because this one person has not engaged in fruition and increase, does not that person thereby cause the Presence to stay away from Israel?[7]

200. "To be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee" (Gen. 17:7). When there exists "seed after thee," the Presence dwells among them; but when there is no "seed after thee," among whom is it to dwell? Among sticks and stones?[8]

201. "They who have no successors, fear not God" (Ps. 55:20) applies to one who has no son.[9]

202. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: When a man does not leave a son to inherit from him, the Holy One is filled with wrath at him, for it is said, "You fill Him with wrath[10] when a man's property goes to his daughter [for want of a son]" (Num. 27:8).[11]

203. "The Lord supporteth all that fall" (Ps. 145:14), such as barren women, who fall [in esteem] in their own homes. "And maketh all who are bent stand erect" (ibid.): as soon as the Holy One remembers them with children, they are enabled to stand erect. You can see for yourself that it is so: Leah had been the disdained one in the house, but as soon as the Holy One remembered her with children, she was enabled to stand erect.[12]

204. Our masters taught: If a man takes a wife and lives with her for ten years, and she bears no child, he is to divorce her and return her marriage settlement, for it is possible that it is he who does not merit siring children by her. Even though there is no proof in Scripture for such a requirement, there is an intimation: "And Sarai . . . took Hagar . . . after Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, and gave her to Abram" (Gen. 16:3).[13]

205. We have been taught that R. Joshua ben Levi said: If a man married in his youth, he should marry again in

---

1. Lev. R. 32:8; Eccles. R. 4:1, §1.
2. Gen. R. 45:2.
3. B. Ber 10a.
4. Ed 1:13.
5. B. Yev 63b; Tos Yev 8:7.
6. The plurals "thousands" and "myriads" are taken to signify at least two of each.
7. B. Yev 63b–64a.
8. B. Yev 64a.
9. B. BB 116a.
10. The word ve-haavartem ("cause to pass") is here derived from the word evrah ("wrath").
11. B. BB 116a.
12. Gen. R. 71:2.
13. B. Yev 64a.

his old age; if he had children in his youth, he should also have children in his old age, for it is said, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand" (Eccles. 11:6).[1]

206. R. Joshua ben Levi did not go to a house of mourning unless it was the house of one who had left no sons, for it is written, "Weep sore for him that goeth hence" (Jer. 22:10), which, R. Judah said in the name of Rav, means one who goes hence without leaving male children.

R. Phinehas ben Hama expounded: In the verse "When Hadad heard in Egypt that David slept with his fathers, and that Joab the captain of the host was dead" (1 Kings 11:21), why does Scripture use "sleep" with regard to David and "death" with regard to Joab? "Sleep" is used of David because he left a son; "death" is used of Joab because he left no son.[2]

207. "And the Lord had blessed Abraham with everything" (Gen. 24:1). What is meant by "with everything"? That he had no daughter [but only sons], said R. Meir; that he had a daughter [in addition to sons], said R. Judah.[3]

208. It is written in the book of Ben Sira: "A daughter is a deceptive treasure to her father. Because of anxiety on her account, he cannot sleep at night—when she is young, lest she be seduced; when she reaches puberty, lest she play the harlot; after she is grown up, lest she fail to marry; after she is married, lest she have no children; after she has grown old, lest she practice witchcraft" (Ecclesiasticus 42:9–10).[4]

209. R. Hisda said: [The birth of] a female child first is a good sign for the male children [to come].[5]

210. After R. Simeon Berabbi's wife gave birth to a girl, R. Hiyya the Elder happened to see R. Simeon and said to him, "The Holy One has begun to bless you." R. Simeon: "Why do you say that [with regard to the birth of a girl]?" R. Hiyya: "Because Scripture says, 'And it came to pass when man began to multiply . . . daughters were born unto them.' " (Gen. 6:1). Later, when R. Simeon went to see his father [R. Judah], R. Judah asked him, "Did the Babylonian [R. Hiyya] make you feel happy?" R. Simeon: "Yes, and this is what he said to me." "Nevertheless," said R. Judah, "though both wine and vinegar are needed, wine is needed more than vinegar; though wheat and barley are needed, wheat is needed more than barley. Then, too, when a man gives his daughter in marriage and pays the expense for it, he says to her, "May you never need to return here."[6]

211. After a daughter was born to R. Simeon Berabbi, he was disappointed. His father [R. Judah], seeking to comfort him, said, "The possibility for further increase has now come into the world." But Bar Kappara said to R. Simeon, "Your father has offered you vain comfort. The fact is, as we have been taught, the world cannot endure without both males and females. Nevertheless, happy is he whose children are males, and alas for him whose children are females."[7]

212. There are three things a man would rather not have: grass in his standing grain, vinegar in his wine, and a female among his children. Yet all three were created for the world's need.[8]

213. There is a story about a man who made out his will with this provision: my son shall not inherit anything of mine until he acts the fool. R. Yose bar Judah and Rabbi went to R. Joshua ben Korhah to get an opinion about this [strange] provision. When they peeked in from outside [R. Joshua's house], they saw him crawling on his hands and knees, with a reed sticking out of his mouth, and being pulled along by his child. Seeing him thus, they discreetly withdrew, but they came back later and asked him about the provision in the will. He began to laugh and said, "As you live, this business you ask about—acting the fool—happened to me a little while ago." Hence the aphorism "When a man looks on his children, his joy makes him act like a fool."[9]

214. "And to the woman He said: I will greatly multiply thy trouble, and the pain in thy travail" (Gen. 3:16). "Thy trouble" refers to the trouble in rearing children; "the pain in thy travail" to the pain of pregnancy.[10]

215. A woman who eats meat and drinks wine [during her pregnancy] will have healthy children. One who eats eggs will have children with large eyes. One who eats fish will have charming children. One who eats parsley will have exceptionally handsome children. One who eats coriander will have fleshy children. One who eats etrog will have fragrant children.

King Shapur's daughter, whose mother had eaten etrog [while pregnant with her], used to be lifted in front of her father to provide his favorite perfume.[11]

216. A woman should give suck to her child. [Disagreeing with the Mishnah just cited], the school of Shammai says that if a woman has vowed not to give suck to her child, she must pull the nipple out of the infant's mouth.[12] But the school of Hillel maintains that her husband may compel her to nurse the child. If she has been divorced [in the meantime], he may not compel her. If, however, the infant recognizes her [and refuses to be suckled by a wetnurse], the husband is to pay his divorced wife a fee and compel her to give suck, in order to avert harm [to the infant].

---

1. B. Yev 62b.
2. B. BB 116a.
3. B. BB 16b.
4. B. Sanh 100b.
5. B. BB 141a.
6. Gen. R. 26:4.
7. B. BB 16b.
8. Tanhuma, Hayye Sarah, §3.
9. MTeh 92:13; Yalkut, Ps. §846.
10. B. Er 100b.
11. B. Ket 60b–61a.
12. For the woman's vow is valid.

A divorced woman [who refused to give suck to her infant] once appeared before Samuel. He instructed R. Dimi bar Joseph, "Go and determine whether the child recognizes her." R. Dimi arranged to have her sit in a row with other women, then picked up the child and carried it in front of them. When he reached the mother, the child gazed longingly at her face. Wishing to evade him, she covered her eyes, but R. Dimi said to her, "Uncover your eyes, stand up, and take your child."[1]

217. He who brings up a child is called "Father," not he who merely begot him.[2]

218. "Happy are they . . . who do charity at all times" (Ps. 106:3). But is it possible to do charity at all times? Our masters in Yavneh (some say, R. Eliezer) expounded the words as applying to one who sustains his sons and daughters when they are small.[3] R. Samuel bar Nahmani applied these words to him who brings up an orphan boy or an orphan girl in his house and enables them to marry.[4]

219. The sages said in the name of R. Yose bar Hanina: In Usha, an ordinance was enacted that a man is required to maintain his sons and daughters while they are small.[5]

When the question came up before R. Judah, he [concurred with the ordinance of Usha], saying: The sea monster brought forth young and expects the people of the town to maintain them!

When the same question came up before R. Hisda, he would say: Turn a mortar upside down in public, and have the delinquent father stand on it and declare: Even a raven craves to have young, but I do not care for children.

When such a person came to Rava, Rava would ask him: You do not mind having your children maintained by public charity?[6]

220. R. Yose bar Honi said: A man will envy anyone, except his son or his disciple.[7]

221. Is there a father who hates his son?[8]

222. Grandchildren are like one's own children.[9]

223. R. Judah bar Ilai said: Daughters of sons are reckoned as sons, but sons of daughters are not reckoned as sons.[10]

224. "That thou wilt not deal falsely with me, nor with my son, nor with my son's son" (Gen. 21:23). A father's compassion for his son reaches only thus far [down the generations].[11]

225. When a man guides his sons and daughters in the right path, Scripture says of him, "And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace" (Job 5:24).[12]

226. "Train up a child in the way he should go" (Prov. 22:6). R. Eliezer and R. Joshua differed. R. Eliezer said: The verse means that if you train your son with words of Torah until he becomes a young man, he will continue growing in allegiance to them, as the verse concludes, "Even when he is old, he will not depart from it" (ibid.). But R. Joshua said: The child may be compared to a heifer—if she is not taught to plow when young, it will be difficult for her to do so in the end; or to a wine branch—if you do not bend it when it is full of sap, once it hardens, you can do nothing with it.[13]

227. In the main, what children do is bungled.[14]

228. Whatever was created during the six days of creation needs further perfecting. . . . Every man needs finishing.[15]

229. "And when the boys grew up" (Gen. 25:27). R. Levi said: [At first], they were like a myrtle and a wild rose growing side by side. But when they grew up, the former yielded its characteristic fragrance (reho), and the latter its thorns (hoho). For the first thirteen years, both went together to school and together came home from school. But at the end of the thirteen years,[16] one went to houses of study and the other to shrines of idolatry.

R. Eleazar said: A father must hold himself responsible for his son until the age of thirteen. After that, he should say, "Blessed be He who has freed me of liability for this boy."[17]

230. "Train a lad in the way he should go" (Prov. 22:6). R. Judah and R. Nehemiah differed. One said: "Lad" means from the age of sixteen to twenty-two. The other said: From the age of eighteen to twenty-four.[18]

231. "When you plant any tree . . . ye will find its fruit to be uncircumcised" (Lev. 19:23). These words allude to an infant [whose lips are uncircumcised, not having the capacity to speak]. "For the first three years [of an infant's life], he continues to be for you 'uncircumcised' " (Lev. 19:23), since he cannot converse nor even speak. "But in the fourth year, all its fruit [the infant's speech] shall be

---

1. B. Ket 59b–60a.
2. Exod. R. 46:5.
3. They have no legal claim upon him for maintenance.
4. B. Ket 50a.
5. Prior to that time, during Hadrian's persecution (135 C.E. and the years that followed), poverty was so widespread that fathers abandoned their children. See EJ, s.v. "Usha."
6. B. Ket 49b.
7. B. Sanh 105b.
8. Ibid.
9. B. Yev 62b.
10. In the list of Jacob's descendants (Gen. 46:8–27), the sons of Dinah, Jacob's daughter, are not mentioned. Hence it is concluded that, insofar as the right to inherit is concerned, the sons of a man's daughter(s) are not considered a man's children, belonging as they do to the family of the daughter's husband. Gen. R. 94:6.
11. Gen. R. 54:2.
12. B. Yev 62b.
13. Midrash Prov. 22:6 (ed. Buber, p. 91).
14. B. Hul 86a.
15. Circumcision. Gen. R. 11:6.
16. Maturity is reached at thirteen years and one day.
17. Gen. R. 63:10.
18. B. Kid 30a.

holy, for giving praise unto the Lord" (Lev. 19:24)—his father should hallow him for study of Torah.[1]

232. "And ye shall teach them to your children by speaking of them" (Deut. 11:19). From this verse, the sages inferred that once an infant begins to speak, the father should speak to him in the holy tongue [Hebrew] and teach him Torah. And if he does not speak to him in the holy tongue and does not teach him Torah, it is as though he were burying him.[2]

233. Our masters taught: A child who knows how to shake the lulav cluster is required to use the lulav cluster. If the child knows how to wrap himself in a prayer shawl, he is required to wrap himself in a prayer shawl. If a child knows how to care for tefillin,[3] his father must acquire tefillin for him. If he knows how to speak, his father must teach him the Shema, Torah, and the holy tongue. If the father does not, it is as though the child had not come into the world.[4]

What is meant here by Torah? R. Hamnuna said: The verse "Moses commanded us Torah, the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob" (Deut. 33:4).

And what is meant here by Shema? Its first verse ["Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God, the Lord is one" (Deut. 6:4)].[5]

234. R. Nahman said: A boy who knows to whom a benediction is addressed may be invited by the partakers to participate in grace after the meal.

[When they were still very young], Abbaye and Rava sat in the presence of Rabbah, who asked them, "Whom do you address when you pronounce a benediction?" The two: "The Holy One, blessed be He."

"And where does the Holy One dwell?"

Rava pointed to the ceiling, while Abbaye went outside and pointed to the sky. At that, Rabbah said to them, "Both of you will grow up to be sages."

Hence the proverb "Each young pumpkin can be told by its stalk."[6]

235. R. Ketina said: When a father has brought a child under the age of six [to school], then later on, even if he runs after the child [to try to restore his failing health], he will not succeed. Others say: If the child's classmates scamper after him [to catch up with his learning], they will not succeed. In fact, both opinions are correct. Such a child's health will be feeble, but he will be learned.[7]

236. R. Joshua ben Levi said: When a man teaches Torah to his grandson, Scripture regards him as though he had received it from [God Himself] at Mount Sinai, for the verse "Make them known to thy children and children's children" (Deut. 4:9) is followed at once by "The day thou stoodest before the Lord thy God at Horeb" (Deut. 4:10).

[Upon learning what R. Joshua ben Levi had said], R. Hiyya bar Abba would not taste meat before going over the Scripture [studied the preceding day] with his child and adding a verse to it. Rabbah bar R. Huna would not taste meat until he brought his child to school.[8]

237. Every Friday afternoon, R. Joshua regularly listened to his grandson's reading of the Scripture lesson [studied during the week]. Once, he forgot to do so, and, when he had already entered the baths of Tiberias, leaning on the shoulder of R. Hiyya bar Abba, he remembered that he had not listened to his grandson's reading of Scripture. So he turned around and left. R. Hiyya bar Abba asked him: Master, did you not teach us that if one has begun [at the bath], one may not interrupt [even for prayer]? R. Joshua answered: Hiyya, my son, is it a small matter to you that he who listens to his grandson's reading of Scripture is as though he were hearing it at Mount Sinai? For it is said, "Make them known unto thy children and thy children's children, as if it were the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb" (Deut. 4:9–10).[9]

238. Our masters taught: With regard to his son, a father is obligated to circumcise him, to redeem him [if he is the firstborn], to teach him Torah, to teach him a craft, and to get him married. Some say: Also to teach him how to swim. R. Judah said: When a man does not teach his son a craft, it is as though he taught him brigandage.

To teach him a craft—what is the proof? Hezekiah said: The verse "See to a livelihood as eagerly as to the woman whom thou lovest" (Eccles. 9:9). If the term "woman" here refers literally to a wife, then even as a father is required to get a wife for his son, so is he required to teach him a craft [by which to make a livelihood]. If the term "woman" here refers figuratively to Torah, then even as a father is required to teach his son Torah, so is he required to teach him a craft.

Some say: Also to teach him how to swim. The reason? His life may depend on it.

R. Judah said: He who does not teach his son a craft is as though he taught him brigandage. What is the difference between the anonymous teaching [cited at the beginning of this section] that a father should teach his son a craft and R. Judah? They differ in an instance where a father teaches commerce to his son.[10]

Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: A father is also required to teach his son civic obligations.

Whatever a father is required to do for his son, should he fail to do it, the son must do it on his own.[11]

---

1. Tanhuma B, Kedoshim, §14. The translator is indebted to Professor Jakob J. Petuchowski for the interpretation of this passage.
2. Sif Deut., §46.
3. To stay clean while wearing them.
4. In all these cases, the child is not obligated, but his father should train him to observe the commandments.
5. Tos Hag 1:2; B. Suk 42a.
6. B. Ber 48a.
7. B. Ket 50a.
8. B. Kid 30a.
9. P. Shab 1:1, 3a.
10. The anonymous teaching, without predicting dire consequences, regards a father's teaching the craft of commerce to his son as sufficient; but R. Judah, who predicts dire consequences if a father does not teach his son a craft, does not regard such instruction as sufficient, because commerce is too precarious.
11. B. Kid 29a and 30b; Mek, Bo, Pis'ha, 18.

239. When R. Joshua was asked, "May a man teach his son Greek?" he replied, "He may teach it to him at a time that is neither day nor night, for it is said, 'Thou shalt meditate therein [on the Torah] day and night.' " (Josh. 1:8).

If so, a man may not even teach his son a craft. But did not R. Ishmael instruct us that "Choose life" (Deut. 30:19) means teaching a craft?

In the name of R. Yohanan, the sages said: [The prohibition of teaching Greek was imposed only] to lessen the effectiveness of informers.[1]

240. Ben Azzai said: A man is required to teach his daughter Torah.

But R. Eliezer said: Anyone who teaches Torah to his daughter is as though he taught her lechery.[2]

241. R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan: A man may teach his daughter Greek, because it is an ornament for her. When Simeon bar Abba heard this, he said: Because R. Abbahu wishes to teach his daughter Greek, he hangs the giving of permission on R. Yohanan.

When R. Abbahu heard the charge, he said: May such-and-such befall me if I have not heard it from R. Yohanan![3]

242. R. Akiva used to say: a father transmits to his son good looks, physical strength, wealth, wisdom, and length of years.[4]

243. The son of a sage is [already] half a sage.[5]

244. An heir steps into his father's shoes.[6]

245. Ewe follows ewe—what the mother does, the daughter does.[7]

246. "Like mother, like daughter" (Ezek. 16:44). A heifer gores, her calf kicks.[8]

247. A child's talk in the marketplace is his father's talk or his mother's.[9]

248. As the garden, so the gardener.[10]

249. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: A wicked child in a man's household works greater havoc than the wars of Gog and Magog.[11]

250. A rebellious and defiant son (Deut. 21:18–21) is condemned because of what he will become in the end.

We have been taught that R. Yose the Galilean said: Is it conceivable that merely because the young man ate a tartemar[12] of meat and drank half a log of Italian wine, the Torah would decree that he be brought before the High Court and put to death by stoning? However, the Torah foresaw the ultimate destiny of the young man sentenced as a rebellious and defiant son. For in the end, after dissipating his father's possessions, he will continue to seek what he has become accustomed to and, unable to get it, will go out to a crossroads and rob people. Therefore the Torah said, "Let him die while yet innocent, and not die guilty."

R. Simeon said: Is it conceivable that just because this one ate a tartemar of meat and drank half a log of Italian wine, his father and mother should take him out to be put to death by stoning? In truth, the rebellious and defiant son never existed and never will exist. Why, then, was the account about him written? So that you will expound the possible reasons for such misconduct and receive a reward doing so.

R. Jonathan, however, said: I saw one such and sat by his grave.[13]

251. R. Huna, in the name of R. Yohanan, told the parable of a certain man who opened a perfume shop for his son in the street of harlots. The street plied its trade, the perfume business plied its trade,[14] and the lad, like any young male, plied his natural inclination—he strayed into depraved ways. When the father came and caught him with a harlot, he began to shout, "I'll kill you!" But the father's friend was there, and he spoke up. "You yourself ruined your son, and now you are yelling at him! You ignored all other occupations and taught him to be a perfumer; you ignored all other streets and deliberately opened a shop for him in the street of harlots!"[15]

252. A story is told of a man who was standing with his son in a synagogue. When all the congregation responded to the reader with "Hallelujah," the man's son responded with some flippant words. "See here," the people said to the father, "your son is responding with flippant words." He replied, "What can I do with him? He is only a child—let him amuse himself." The next day, the same thing happened: as all the congregation responded to the reader with "Hallelujah," the man's son again responded with flippant words. "See here," the people said to the father, "your son is once more responding with flippant words." He replied again, "What can I do? He is only a child—let him amuse himself." All through the eight days of the festival, the son kept on responding with flippant words and the father did not say anything to stop him. Not one year passed by, nor two, nor three, said the sages, but that the father died, his wife died, his son died, his grandson died, and all together fifteen souls departed from his

---

1. P. Pe 1:1, 15c; P. Sot 9:15, 24c.
2. The laws concerning sexual aberrations may excite her sensuality (so Jastrow). B. Sot 20a.
3. P. Pe 1:1, 15c; P. Sot 9:15, 24c.
4. Ed 2:9.
5. Yalkut, Va-yera, §95.
6. Literally, "is his father's leg." B. Er 70b.
7. B. Ket 63a.
8. Gen. R. 80:1; Yalkut, Va-yishlah, §133.
9. B. Suk 56b.
10. Gen. R. 80:1.
11. B. Ber 7b.
12. Half a litra, whose volume equals an egg and a half.
13. B. Sanh 71a and 72a.
14. Since harlots favor perfume.
15. Exod. R. 43:7; B. Ber 32a.

household. Only two sons were left, one lame and blind, the other half-witted and malicious.[1]

253. R. Hisda said: A man should never terrorize his household. The husband of the concubine of Gibeah terrorized her, and her death precipitated the death of several myriads in Israel.[2]

254. R. Abbahu said: A man should never terrorize his household. A distinguished man—who was he? R. Hanina ben Gamaliel—terrorized his household, and he was served food it is a great sin to eat. What kind of food? A limb cut from a living animal.[3]

255. A man should not threaten a child even with as little a thing as boxing his ears. He should spank him at once or say nothing.

It happened in Lod that when the son of Gorgos ran away from school, the father threatened to box his ears. The son, terrorized by his father, went off and drowned himself in a cistern.

Then, too, it happened in Bene Berak that a child broke a flask on the Sabbath, and his father threatened to box his ears. The child, terrorized by his father, went off and drowned himself in a cistern.[4]

256. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Human instinct, a child, and a woman should be thrust off with the left hand only so long as one brings them near with the right hand.[5]

257. R. Isaac stated: In Usha, it was ordained that a man should be patient with his son until the age of twelve. After that, he may even threaten his life.[6]

258. "He that spareth his rod, hateth his son" (Prov. 13:24). The verse is to teach you that when a man refrains from chastising his son, the son will fall into evil ways, so that in the end the father will come to hate his son. Thus it happened with Ishmael, whom his father loved so much that he did not chastise him; then, when Ishmael fell into evil ways, Abraham came to hate him so much that he cast him out empty-handed from his house. What had Ishmael done? When he was fifteen, he began to bring idols from the marketplace, make merry with them, and worship them the way he saw other people worship. "When Sarah saw the son of Hagar the Egyptian making merry . . . she said unto Abraham: 'Cast out this bondwoman and her son' " (Gen. 21:9–10), lest my son learn his ways. There and then, "Abraham rose up early in the morning, and took only bread and a bottle of water" (Gen. 21:14). The meager provisions show that Abraham had come to hate Ishmael so intensely that he decided to send him and his mother away empty-handed when he cast him out of his house. And what was Ishmael's end? After Abraham had driven him out, Ishmael sat at a crossroads and robbed travelers.

The same applies to "Now Isaac loved Esau" (Gen. 25:28); Esau fell into evil ways, because Isaac did not chastise him. It was likewise with David, who did not rebuke his son Absalom or chastise him, so that he fell into evil ways, sought to slay his father, and caused him sorrows without end.[7]

259. "Put not a stumbling block before the blind" (Lev. 19:14). The verse applies to a man who beats his grown-up son.

When a maidservant in the household of Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] saw a man beating his grown-up son, she said: That man should be placed under a ban, for he is violating "Put not a stumbling block before the blind."[8]

260. Rav said: A man should not single out one of his sons for special treatment, for on account of the two sela of silk—the one thing Jacob gave to Joseph and not to his other sons—Joseph's brothers grew jealous of him, and the consequences grew until our forebears had to go down into Egypt.[9]

261. If a man bequeaths his estate to others, passing over his own children, what he did is done [valid], but the spirit of the sages finds no pleasure in him. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel, however, said: If the man's children did not behave as they should have, it is deemed to the man's credit.

Samuel said to R. Judah: Keen scholar, try to prevent alienation of inheritance, even from a bad son to a good son, because one never knows what issue will come from the bad son; and much more so [when the alienation is] from a son to a daughter.[10]

262. On his deathbed, a certain man bequeathed "the barrel of earth to one son, the barrel of bones to the second, the barrel of hackled wool to the third." They did not know what he meant, so they went to R. Banaah, who asked them, "Do you have land?" They replied, "Yes." "Do you have cattle?" "Yes." "Do you have felt cloaks?" "Yes." "If so," said R. Banaah, "this is what your father had in mind.[11]

263. A certain man overheard his wife say to her daughter, "Why are you not more discreet in your infidelities? I have ten sons, and only one of them is by your father." When the man was dying, he said, "I leave my entire estate to one son." Since they did not know which son he had in mind, they came to R. Banaah, who said to them, "Go and strike your father's grave with sticks until he rises up and tells which one of you he left his estate to." All

---

1. TdE, ed. Friedmann, pp. 65–66 (JPS, p. 188).
2. See Judg. 19–20. B. Git 6b.
3. When a limb of a slaughtered animal got lost, R. Hanina's servants cut off a limb from a living animal and brought it to him. B. Git 7a.
4. Sem 2:4–5.
5. B. Sot 47a.
6. Literally, "keep at him down to his very life" (by applying the rod, withholding food, etc.). B. Ket 50a.
7. Exod. R. 1:1.
8. The adult son may be moved to strike back, which would make him liable to the death penalty as a rebellious son. B. MK 17a.
9. B. Shab 10b.
10. The daughter's son may take after her husband. See also note to §223 above in this chapter. B. BB 133b; B. Ket 53a.
11. B. BB 58a.

of them went, except the one who was his own son. At that, R. Banaah said, "The entire estate is to go to this one."[1]

264. Happy is the man whose forebears transmit merit to him. Happy is the man who has a noble family tree to hang on to.[2]

Honoring Father and Mother

265. Ulla the Elder expounded at the entrance to the patriarch's house: What is meant by the verse "All the kings of the earth, O Lord, admitted [they were wrong] after they heard the words of Thy mouth" (Ps. 138:4), in which it is said not, "The word of Thy mouth," but, "The words of Thy mouth"? The verse means: when the Holy One said, "I am the Lord thy God" (Exod. 20:2), and "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me" (Exod. 20:3), the nations of the world observed, "He is demanding deference to His own glory." But when He said, "Honor thy father and thy mother" (Exod. 20:12), they recanted and admitted that the first words [were not merely concerned with deference to Him].

Rava said: The same conclusion may be inferred from "The beginning of Thine utterance is true" (Ps. 119:160). Only the beginning of Your utterance, and not the end of Your utterance? No, what Scripture means is that, from the end of Your utterance, its beginning is seen to be true.[3]

266. "Honor thy father and thy mother" (Exod. 20:12) and "Thou shalt not commit murder" (Exod. 20:13). What is signified by having these two commandments next to each other? That if a man has ample provisions in his house, yet refuses to give the benefit of them to his father and mother when they are young, let alone in their old age, it is as if all his days he had been commiting murder in the presence of Him who is everywhere. For this reason the commandment "Honor thy father and thy mother" is followed by "Thou shalt not commit murder."[4]

267. Our masters taught: There are three partners in a man: the Holy One, his father, and his mother. When a man honors his father and his mother, the Holy One says: I account it to them as though I were dwelling among them, and they were honoring Me.

We have been taught that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: It is revealed and known to Him who spoke and the world came into being that a son honors his mother more than his father, because she sways him with her gentle speech. That is why the Holy One put the honor of the father before the honor of the mother. It is known and revealed to Him who spoke and the world came into being that a son fears his father more than his mother, because his father teaches him Torah. That is why the Holy One put the fear of the mother before the fear of the father (Lev. 19:3).

A tanna[5] recited before R. Nahman: When a man vexes his father or his mother, the Holy One says: I do well not to live among them, for if I were living among them, they would vex Me, too.[6]

268. When a man curses his father or his mother, or strikes them, leaving bruises on them, the Holy One draws His feet back [in revulsion] under the throne of glory, if one dare say such a thing, as He declares: I made his honoring of his parents equal to his honoring of Me. Had I been dwelling with this man, he would have done the same to Me. I do well not to live in the same house with such a man.[7]

269. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: Great is the duty of honoring one's father and mother, since the Holy One set the honor due them above the honor due to Himself. For concerning the honor due to the Holy One, it is written, "Honor the Lord with thy substance" (Prov. 3:9). How is one to honor God with one's substance? One sets aside gleanings, forgotten sheaves, and the corners of the field; [one gives] heave offerings, the first tithe, the second tithe, the poor man's tithe, and the priest's share of the dough; one makes a lulav, a sukkah, a shofar, tefillin, and ritual fringes; one feeds the hungry, gives drink to the thirsty, and clothes the naked. In short, if you have substance, you are obligated to do all these things; but if you have no substance, you are not obligated to do even one of them. When it comes to honoring father and mother, however, whether you have substance or not, what does Scripture say? "Honor thy father and thy mother," even if you have to go about begging in doorways.[8]

270. Our masters taught: What is "fear," and what is "honor"? "Fear" means that the son is not to stand in his father's place, nor to sit in his place; not to contradict him, nor to tip the scales against him.[9] "Honor" means that the son must supply his father with food and drink, provide him with clothes and footwear, and assist his coming in or going out of the house.[10]

271. We have been taught: When a man's father is [unwittingly] violating a precept of Torah, the man should not say, "Father, you are violating a precept of Torah"; he should rather say, "But, Father, is what you are doing written in the Torah?"

Does it not amount to the same thing?

[Yes]. Hence he should say, "Father, the pertinent verse in Scripture reads thus."[11]

---

1. Ibid.
2. P. Ber 4:1, 7d.
3. B. Kid 31a.
4. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 134 (JPS, p. 331).
5. One who memorized Baraitas and recited them before a teacher so that he might expound them.
6. B. Kid 30b–31a.
7. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 13 (JPS, p. 331).
8. PR 23/24:2 (YJS 1:499); Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 8; P. Pe 1:1, 15d.
9. When his father is in a dispute concerning Halakhah with another sage, the son may not side against him.
10. B. Kid 31b.
11. B. Sanh 81a.

272. When R. Ulla was asked, "How far should honoring one's father and mother extend?" he replied, "Go and see what a certain heathen named Dama ben Netinah did for his father in Ashkelon. Once, the sages sought some merchandise from him involving a profit to him of sixty myriads [of gold denars]. But the key to where the merchandise was kept was under his [sleeping] father's pillow, and he would not disturb him."

R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: When R. Eliezer was asked, "How far should honoring one's father and mother extend?" he replied, "Go and see what a certain heathen named Dama ben Netinah did for his father in Ashkelon. Once, the sages sought some precious stones from him for the ephod at a profit to him of sixty myriads [of gold denars]. But the key to where the stones were kept was under his [sleeping] father's pillow, and he would not disturb him."

The following year, however, the Holy One gave him his reward. A red heifer was born to him in his herd. When the sages of Israel visited him [intending to buy it], he said to them, "I know about you. Even if I were to ask all the money in the world, you would pay me. But all I ask of you is the amount I lost because I honored my father."

R. Hanina said: If one who is not commanded [to honor his parents] and nevertheless does is rewarded thus, how much more by far one who is commanded and does so![1]

273. R. Hezekiah said: There was a heathen in Ashkelon who was the chief of the city fathers. He never presumed to sit on the stone upon which his father sat. And when his father died, he had the stone made into an idol.[2]

274. R. Abbahu said that when R. Eliezer the Elder was asked by his disciples, "How far should one go in honoring one's father and mother?" he replied, "Go and see what Dama ben Netinah of Ashkelon did. When his mother, who was feebleminded, hit him with her sandal in the presence of the entire council over which he presided, he merely said to her, 'Enough, Mother.' Moreover, when her sandal [with which she was hitting him] fell from her hand, [he picked it up and] handed it back to her, so that she would not get upset."[3]

275. When R. Dimi came [from the Land of Israel], he said: Once, while Dama ben Netinah was seated among the notables of Rome, wearing a silk garment embroidered with gold, his mother came, ripped it off him, struck him on the head, and spat in his face. Yet in no way would he put her to shame.[4]

276. When R. Eliezer was asked, "How far is a man to go in honoring his father and mother?" he replied, "So far that, should his father take a purse of denars and toss it into the sea in his presence, he would not put him to shame."[5]

277. It happened that R. Tarfon's mother went forth on the Sabbath for a walk in her courtyard. When her sandal split [and he could not sew it up then and there because it was the Sabbath], R. Tarfon held his hands under the soles of her feet, and she walked on his hands until she reached her couch.

Once, when R. Tarfon took sick and the sages came in to visit him, she said to them, "Pray for my son R. Tarfon, for he treats me with excessive honor." They asked her, "In what way?" So she told them the story. They said, "Even if he had done this a thousand thousand times, he still has not come halfway to showing you the full honor prescribed by the Torah."

R. Ishmael's mother complained to our masters about R. Ishmael. She said to them: Please rebuke my son R. Ishmael, for he does not treat me with honor. At this, the faces of our masters grew pale, and they said: Is it possible that R. Ishmael does not treat his parents with honor? So they asked her: Just what is he doing to you? She replied: When he leaves the house of study [after his daily stint of teaching], I want to wash his feet and drink the water, but he refuses to let me do so. The masters said to him: Since such is her wish, such is the honor due her [from her son].

R. Zera used to grieve, saying: "I wish I had a father and a mother whom I could honor, and thus inherit the Garden of Eden. But after hearing the two tales just told, he said: Blessed be He who is everywhere, that I have neither father nor mother. I could not have acted like R. Tarfon, and [I must confess] I could not have put up with what R. Ishmael had to put up with.

R. Avun said: I was relieved of the obligation to honor father and mother. The sages explained: As soon as his mother conceived him, his father died, and right after he was born, his mother died.[6]

278. R. Yohanan said: Happy is he who has never seen his parents.[7]

R. Yohanan's father died as soon as his mother conceived him, and his mother died right after she gave birth to him.[8]

279. R. Tarfon had an aged mother. Whenever she wished to go up to her couch, he would bend down to let her go up [by stepping on him]; and when she wished to go down, she did so [by stepping on him]. When he went and boasted about it in the house of study, he was told, "You still have not reached half the honor due a mother. Has she ever tossed a purse of gold coins into the sea in your presence, and you did not put her to shame?"[9]

280. When R. Joseph heard the sound of his mother's footsteps, he would say, "I must rise before the Presence, which is approaching."[10]

---

1. B. Kid 31a.
2. P. Pe 1:1, 15c.
3. Deut R. 1:15; P. Pe 1:1, 15c.
4. B. Kid 31a.
5. B. Kid 32a.
6. P. Pe 1:1, 15c; B Kid 31b.
7. Because it is so difficult to honor them properly.
8. B. Kid 31b.
9. Ibid.
10. Ibid.

281. R. Abbahu said: "He who is like my son Avimi fulfills the precept of honoring one's father." While R. Abbahu was still living, Avimi had five sons who were ordained. Yet, when [his father] R. Abbahu came and called out at the door, Avimi himself would run to open the door for his father, saying, "Coming, coming," until he reached it.

Once R. Abbahu said to Avimi, "Give me a drink of water." By the time Avimi brought it, R. Abbahu had dozed off. Avimi bent down and stood over R. Abbahu until R. Abbahu woke up.[1]

282. A certain widow's son asked R. Eliezer, "If my father says, 'Give me a drink of water,' and my mother says, 'Give me a drink of water,' which request takes precedence?" R. Eliezer replied, "Delay the honor due your mother and accord honor first to your father, since both you and your mother are bound to honor your father."

The widow's son appeared before R. Joshua, who gave him the same answer. He then asked, "Rabbi, what if my mother got divorced?" R. Joshua: "From your eyelids [which seem to have disappeared],[2] it is clear that you are a widow's son. So pour some water into a basin for both your parents and screech to them as to fowls to come and drink."[3]

283. If a man's own lost article and his father's lost article [are to be looked for], his own is to be looked for first. If a man's own lost article and his teacher's lost article [are to be looked for], his own is to be looked for first. And the proof? R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Scripture says, "There shall be no needy in thee" (Deut. 15:4), which implies that you are to look after your own needs before looking after the needs of others.

But R. Judah went on to say in the name of Rav: [Nevertheless], he who does so [all the time] will eventually be brought to poverty.[4]

284. Our masters taught: When a man, his father, and his teacher are in captivity, he has the first right to be ransomed before his teacher, and his teacher before his father. But his mother has the first right to be ransomed before all of them.[5]

285. Avimi the son of R. Abbahu said: There is one who gives his father force-fed birds to eat, yet will inherit Gehenna; and there is another who sets his father grinding at the mill, yet will inherit the Garden of Eden.

How is it possible that one who gives his father fattened birds to eat should inherit Gehenna? There is the story of one who used to provide force-fed chickens for his father. Once, the father said to him, "My son, where did you get these?" The son replied, "Old man, old man, eat and shut up, even as dogs shut up when they eat." Thus, though he gave his father fattened birds, he inherited Gehenna.

How is it possible for one to set his father grinding at the mill and yet inherit the Garden of Eden? There is the story of a young man whose work was grinding wheat. When the king sent word that millers be brought to work for him, the young man said to his father, "Father, you go in to the mill to grind in my stead, and I will go do the king's work. Should there be humiliation in it, I would rather be humiliated, and not you; should there be flogging, let me receive the blows, and not you." Thus, though he made his father grind at the mill, the son inherited the Garden of Eden.[6]

286. "The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth [the precept commanding not] to take[7] the mother [bird away from her fledglings], the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it." (Prov. 30:17). The ones to pick the eye out, and the others to eat it? Exactly. The Holy One said: Let the raven, who is cruel to its young, come and pick the eye out without benefiting from it; and let the eagle, who is compassionate to its young,[8] come and eat it![9]

287. "Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father" (Lev. 19:3). One might suppose [on the basis of this clause] that if a father [who is a priest] says to his son, "Defile yourself [by coming near the dead]," or "Do not return a lost article," the son must obey his father. Therefore, Scripture says, "Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father," followed immediately by "And ye shall keep My Sabbaths: I am the Lord your God" (ibid.), implying that all of you are bound to honor Me first.[10]

288. Eleazar ben Matia stated: If my father says, "Give me a drink of water," while I have a precept to perform, I must put aside the honor due to my father and perform the precept, since both I and my father are obligated by the precept. But Isi ben Judah added a reservation: If the precept can be performed by others, then let them perform it, while the son attends to his father's honor.[11]

289. The sages said in the name of R. Hisda: If a father renounces the honor due him, it is renounced.[12]

290. Our Masters taught: A man must honor his father in life and honor him in death. How in life? If he is in a

---

1. Ibid.
2. Because his eyes are so swollen from weeping.
3. Since your parents are now both dead, why waste my time with hypothetical questions? The answer is, of course, sarcastic. B. Kid 31a.
4. B. BM 33a.
5. B. Hor 13a.
6. P. Pe 1:1, 15c; B. Kid 31a–b.
7. The word lykht, usually rendered "to obey," is here taken as though spelled lkht ("to take"). As a matter of fact, the parallel in MhG Exod., p. 423, reads lkht, as do some manuscripts of the book of Proverbs.
8. On the eagle's compassion, see Mek, La, 2:202.
9. Tanhuma B, Ekev, §3.
10. B. Yev 6a.
11. B. Kid 32a.
12. Ibid.

place where people will heed him out of deference to his father, he should not say, "Allow me to go, because I must attend to my own needs," "Take care of me quickly, because I must attend to my own needs," or, "Dispose of what I require, because I must attend to my own needs." In making such requests, he should say, "Because my father needs me."

How in death? When the son reports something heard from his father, he should not say, "This is what my late father said," but, "This is what my late father, my teacher—may I provide expiation for any punishment that may be his—said." He should speak thus only within the first twelve months following his father's death.[1] After that, he is to say, "May his memory be for a blessing and for life in the world-to-come."[2]

[1] Punishment in Gehenna ends after twelve months (see above, part 4, chap. 2, §312).

[2] B. Kid 31b.

CHAPTER THREE

BETWEEN MAN AND MAN

The Right Course and a Good Name

1. Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: Which is the right course for a man to choose? That which is an honor to him and gains him honor from men.[1]

2. R. Hanina ben Dosa used to say: If a man is liked by his fellow men, he is liked by God; if he is not liked by his fellow men, he is not liked by God.[2]

3. R. Akiva used to say: If a man is satisfied with what is his, it is a good sign for him. If he is not satisfied with what is his, it is a bad sign for him.[3]

4. R. Samuel bar Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan: In the Five Books, in the Prophets, and in the Writings, we find that a man must discharge his obligations before men, even as he must discharge them before God. Where in the Five Books? In the verse "Neither the Lord nor Israel will have any fault to find with you" (Num. 32:22). In the Prophets? In "God, the Lord God, He knoweth, and Israel, too, shall know" (Josh. 22:22). In the Writings? In "So shalt thou find grace and good favor in the eyes of God and men" (Prov. 3:4). Gamaliel Zoga asked R. Yose bar Avun: What is the verse that says it most clearly? R. Yose bar Avun: "Neither the Lord nor Israel will have any fault to find with you."[4]

5. The sages said: Keep far from unseemliness, from what resembles unseemliness, even from what may appear to resemble it.[5]

6. A man should not be awake in the midst of those who are asleep, nor asleep in the midst of those who are awake. He should not weep when in the midst of those who are merry, nor be merry in the midst of those who weep. He should not remain seated in the midst of those who are standing, nor remain standing in the midst of those who are seated. He should not be reading Scripture in the midst of those who recite Mishnah, nor recite Mishnah in the midst of those who read Scripture. The sum of the matter: a man should not depart from the practice of his fellows.[6]

7. Hillel the Elder said: [When others are different in attire or in mood], do not appear naked, do not appear garbed, do not insist on standing, do not insist on sitting, do not be merry, do not be weeping, for it is said, "A time for weeping, and a time for being merry" (Eccles. 3:4).[7]

8. A man's attitude toward his fellow men should always be sympathetic.[8]

9. R. Tanhum bar Hanilai said: One should never depart from custom. Consider! When Moses when up on high, he ate no bread. When angels came down below, they ate bread.[9]

10. When you enter a town, follow its customs.[10]

11. Abbaye had a favorite saying: A man should always be resourceful in the fear of Heaven—"a soft answer turneth away wrath" (Prov. 15:1). A man should speak peaceably with his brothers, his kin, and with every man—indeed, even with a Gentile in the marketplace—so that he may be loved above, sought out below, and deemed agreeable by his fellow creatures.[11]

12. Reflect before a word issues from your mouth. Consider your actions, to have them accord with good manners, and you will be well rewarded for whatever you do. Accept divine judgment against you as right, and keep clear of grumbling.[12]

13. R. Simeon said: There are three crowns: the crown of Torah, the crown of priesthood, and the crown of royalty. But the crown of a good name surpasses them all.[13]

14. You find that a man is given three names—one that his father and his mother call him, one that his fellow men call him, and one that he acquires. The one he acquires for himself is better than all the others.[14]

15. By the name that is rightly yours, you will be called; in the place rightly yours, you will be set; and from that which is rightly yours, you will be given.[15]

16. Your own deeds will bring you near, and your own deeds will remove you far.[16]

---

1. Avot 2:1.
2. Avot 3:13.
3. Tos Ber 3:3.
4. P. Shek 3:2, 47c.
5. B. Hul 44b; Num. R. 10:8.
6. DEZ 5.
7. Tos Ber 2:21.
8. B. Ket 17a.
9. See Exod. 34:28 and Gen. 18:8. B. BM 86b.
10. Gen. R. 48:14.
11. B. Ber 17a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
12. DEZ 3.
13. Without it, the luster of the three aforementioned crowns is tarnished. Avot 4:13.
14. Tanhuma, Va-yak'hel, §1.
15. B. Yoma 38a–b.
16. Ed 5:7.

17. "A good name is better than precious oil" (Eccles. 7:1). How far does the oil's fragrance go? From the bedchamber to the dining room. But a good name goes from one end of the world to the other.[1]

The Honor to Be Accorded to One's Fellow Man

18. Ben Zoma said: Who is honored? He who honors his fellow man.[2]

19. R. Eliezer said: Let the honor of your fellow be as dear to you as your own.[3]

20. Be solicitous for the honor of your colleagues.[4]

21. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Lev. 19:18). R. Akiva said: This is a great principle of the Torah. Ben Azzai said: The verse "This is the book of the descendants of Adam . . . him whom God made in His likeness" (Gen. 5:1) utters a principle even greater: you must not say, "Since I have been humiliated, let my fellow man also be humiliated; since I have been cursed, let my neighbor also be cursed." For, as R. Tanhuma pointed out, if you act thus, realize who it is that you are willing to have humiliated—"him whom God made in His likeness."[5]

22. R. Joshua ben Levi said: When a man walks on the highway, a company[6] of angels goes before him announcing: "Make way for the image of the Holy One, blessed be He."[7]

23. R. Yohanan used to rise before aged heathens and say, "How many troubles must have come to these men!" Rava did not rise, but he showed them respect.

Abbaye used to give his arm to old men [to lean on]. Rava had an emissary of his do so. R. Nahman [bar Abba] had his eunuchs do so, saying, "But for [my learning in] Torah, how many Nahman bar Abbas would there be in the marketplace?"[8]

24. Ben Azzai used to say: Despise no man, and consider nothing as impossible, for there is not a man who has not his hour and not a thing that has not its place.[9]

25. "Thou shalt not go up by steps unto Mine altar [rather, on a ramp, slowly, respectfully]" (Exod. 20:23). Now, the matter may be argued a fortiori: the stones of the altar have no awareness of what is proper or improper, yet the Holy One said that you should not treat them disrespectfully. How much more by far does it follow that you are not to treat disrespectfully your fellow man, who is made in the image of Him who spoke and the world came into being.[10]

26. "For God will call every creature to account for all their conduct" (Eccles. 12:14 [NJV]). Rav said: It includes squashing a louse in the presence of a fellow man, who is disgusted by such an act. Samuel said: It includes spitting in the presence of his fellow man, who is disgusted by such an act.[11]

27. Our masters taught: A man should at all times be pliant as a reed and not hard as a cedar.

A story is told of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, who was once returning from his teacher's house in Migdal Eder. He was riding leisurely on his donkey by the lakeshore and felt greatly elated and thoroughly satisfied with himself, because he had studied much Torah. [While in this mood] he chanced upon an exceedingly ugly man, who greeted him, "Peace be upon you, my master." R. Simeon did not return the greeting, but instead said to him, "You worthless creature! How ugly you are! Are all the people of your city as ugly as you?"

The man replied, "What can I do about it? Go tell the Craftsman who made me, 'How ugly is the vessel You have made!' "

No sooner did R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon realize that he had done wrong than he got down from the donkey and, prostrating himself before the man, said to him, "I apologize to you; please forgive me!"

The man replied, "I will not forgive you until you go to the Craftsman who made me and tell Him, 'How ugly is the vessel You have made!' "

R. Eleazar followed him until he reached the man's city. When the people of the city came out to meet R. Eleazar, greeting him with the words "Peace be upon you, my master, my master, my teacher, my teacher," the man asked them, "Whom are you addressing as 'My master, my master'?"

They replied, "The man who is walking behind you." At that, the man said, "If he is the master, may there be no more like him in Israel!" When the people asked him, "Why?" he replied, "This is how the master behaved to me."

They said to him, "Nevertheless, forgive him, for he is a man greatly learned in the Torah."

The man replied, "For your sakes, I forgive him, but only on condition that he not make a habit of such behavior."

R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon immediately entered the house of study and preached on the subject "A man should at all times be pliant as a reed and not hard as a cedar."[12]

---

1. Exod. R. 48:1.
2. Avot 4:1.
3. Avot 2:10.
4. B. Ber 28b.
5. P. Ned 9:4, 41c; Gen. R. 24:7.
6. The Greek konnion is a closely packed formation of soldiers (Daniel Sperber, in Sinai 87 [Summer 1980]: 151).
7. There is a play here on ikonia ("image") and ikonin ("company"). MTeh 17:8; Deut. R. 4:4.
8. "R. Nahman means to say: 'I am no better than a dozen men in the marketplace, and by rights I should personally offer my arm to old men to lean on. The reason I dispatch my eunuchs to do it is my learning in Torah—I should not demean the Torah by performing a function that is ordinarily performed by servants.' R. Nahman belonged to the crème de la crème of the aristocracy, and his failure to be helpful to ordinary senior citizens would have been ascribed to sheer arrogance otherwise" (Leon Nemoy). B. Kid 33a.
9. Avot 4:3.
10. Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 11.
11. B. Hag 5a.
12. B. Ta 20a; ARN 41.

28. Why is it unusual for disciples of the wise to have disciples of the wise issue from their children? Because, said R. Ashi, they call human beings asses.[1]

29. It once happened that while R. Yannai was on a journey, he saw a man who looked particularly distinguished. So R. Yannai asked him, "Sir, will you deign to visit our home?" The man said, "Yes." R. Yannai brought the man into his house and gave him food and drink. Then R. Yannai tested him in his knowledge of Scripture, and found none; in his knowledge of Mishnah, and found none; in his knowledge of Aggadah, and found none; in his knowledge of Talmud, and found none. Finally, when R. Yannai said to him, "Take [the cup of wine] and say grace," the man said evasively, "Yannai should be the one to say grace in his own home." R. Yannai asked the man, "Can you repeat what I am about to say to you?" The man: "Yes." R. Yannai: "Then say, 'A dog has eaten Yannai's bread.' " At that, the guest stood up, took hold of R. Yannai, and said to him, "My inheritance is in your possession, and you hold it back from me." R. Yannai: "What inheritance of yours is in my possession?" The man: "Once, I passed a schoolhouse and heard the voices of young children saying, 'The Torah that Moses commanded the children of Israel is the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob' [Deut. 33:4]—not 'the congregation of Yannai,' but 'the congregation of Jacob.' " R. Yannai: "How have you merited to dine at my table?" The man: "Never in my life, after hearing evil spoken, have I brought it back to the person spoken of, nor have I seen two people quarreling without making peace between them." R. Yannai: "Your conduct is so considerate, and I called you dog!"[2]

30. Sages said in the name of R. Yose of Hutzal: How do we know that when a man is aware that his fellow surpasses him even in one matter, he must show him honor? From Scripture's saying, "Because in [Daniel] there was one surpassing quality, the kind considered setting him over the whole kingdom" (Dan. 6:4).[3]

31. "Boaz . . . said: 'Sit ye down here.' And they sat down" (Ruth 4:2). R. Alexandri commented: From this verse it may be inferred that an inferior person should not sit down [in the presence of a superior] until the superior person says to him, "Sit down."[4]

32. When R. Nehunia ben ha-Kanah was asked by his disciples, "By what merit have you lived such a long life?" he replied, "I never sought to gain honor at the cost of my fellow man's being degraded, the curse of my fellow man never came up [with me] to my couch, and I have always been liberal with my money."

"I never sought to gain honor at the cost of my fellow man's being degraded" may be illustrated by R. Huna, who was once carrying a plowshare on his shoulder. R. Hana bar Hanilai came along and was about to take it away from R. Huna, so R. Huna said, "If you regularly carry such a thing in your own city, carry it. But if not, I do not wish to gain honor at the cost of your being degraded." "The curse of my fellow man never came up [with me] to my couch" may be illustrated by Mar Zutra, who, when he went up to his couch, would say, "Everyone who vexed me is forgiven." "I have always been liberal with my money," for, as a master taught, Job was generous with his money—when [he bought half a perutah's worth of merchandise], he would leave a perutah with the storekeeper.[5]

33. R. Yose son of R. Hanina said: He who endeavors to gain honor at the price of his fellow man's being degraded has no portion in the world-to-come.[6]

34. R. Yohanan ben Zakkai said: Pause and consider in what esteem human dignity is held. The penalty for stealing an ox, which walks on its own feet at the thief's side, is fivefold;[7] while for a sheep, which [out of pity] the thief [to his indignity] carries on his shoulder, the penalty is only fourfold.[8]

35. Great is human dignity, since for its sake one may violate a negative precept of the Torah.[9]

36. "If a woman approach unto any beast, and lie down thereto, thou shalt kill the woman and the beast" (Lev. 20:16). In such a case, the human being has committed a sin, but what sin did the animal commit? [None.] However, because the animal was a stumbling block whereby a human being fell into sin, Scripture orders that the animal be stoned to death. Another reason for killing the animal is that, if it were allowed to live, people seeing it pass through the marketplace [would be reminded of the sin and] would be tempted to say, "There's the animal on account of whom So-and-so was stoned to death." The animal is therefore put to death, in order that "bringing an iniquity to remembrance against the House of Israel will not continue to be a source of satisfaction [for malicious people]" (Ezek. 29:16).[10]

37. "Thou mayest ignore them"[11] (Deut. 22:1). There are times when one may ignore such animals. When? When the one who spots them is old, and it does not befit his dignity [to go chasing after them].[12]

38. Our masters taught: On highways, on bridges, or in washing soiled hands [for the saying of grace], one need not give precedence to a superior.

While Ravin and Abbaye were traveling on a [narrow]

---

1. B. Ned 81a.
2. Lev. R. 9:3.
3. B. Pes 113b.
4. P. Ket 1:1, 25a.
5. B. Meg 28a.
6. P. Hag 2:1, 77c; Gen. R. 1:5.
7. If the ox or sheep stolen was slaughtered or sold (Exod. 21:37).
8. The thief lowers his human dignity by carrying the sheep; hence, his penalty is reduced. B. BK 79b.
9. B. Ber 19b.
10. B. Sanh 54a; Lev. R. 27:3; PRK 9:3.
11. An ox or sheep going astray.
12. JV: "hide thyself from them." B. Ber 19b.

road, Ravin's donkey got in front of Abbaye's donkey, yet Ravin did not stop and say to Abbaye, "Let the master get ahead of me." So Abbaye muttered to himself: Since this student has come up from the west [the Land of Israel], he has grown arrogant. However, when they reached the entrance to the synagogue, Ravin said to Abbaye, "Let the master enter [first]." Abbaye asked, "And have I not been master until now?" Ravin replied, "This is what R. Yohanan taught me: [While on a journey], one gives precedence to one's superior only at an entrance that has doorposts.[1]

39. The people of Galilee were particular about their honor, but not about their money. The people of Judea were particular about their money, but not about their honor.[2]

40. R. Nehorai said: He who humiliates his fellow man will himself be humiliated in the end. More: angels of destruction will thrust at him and expel him from the world as they expose his shame to all mankind.[3]

41. Do not humiliate, and you will not be humiliated.[4]

42. If upward you spit, your own face you'll hit.[5]

43. It is better to submit to being cast into a fiery furnace than to shame a fellow man in public. And the proof? Tamar, who, it is said, "was willing to be brought out [to be burned]" (Gen. 38:25).[6]

44. A tanna[7] recited before R. Nahman bar Isaac: He who shames his fellow man in public is as though he shed blood. R. Nahman replied: Well put! Because we see ruddiness depart and paleness take its place [in the face of the man who is humiliated].[8]

45. The fine [for indignity] imposed on one who wounds another is determined according to the status of the one who inflicted the wound and the status of the one upon whom it was inflicted.[9]

46. R. Hanina said: He who strikes a fellow man on the jaw is as though he had struck the jaw of the Presence.

Resh Lakish said: He who merely raises his hand against his fellow man, even if he does not strike him, is called a felon, as is written, "He said unto the felon, 'Why wouldst thou strike thy fellow?' " (Exod. 2:13). Not "Why didst thou strike?" but "Why wouldst thou strike?" indicating that though he had not struck him, he was nevertheless called a felon.[10]

47. If a man cuffs another, he must pay him a sela.[11] R. Judah, citing R. Yose the Galilean, said: [He must pay him] a maneh.[12] If he slaps him, he must pay him two hundred zuz; [if he slaps him] with the back of his hand, he must pay him four hundred zuz. If he slits his ear, pulls out his hair, spits so that the spittle reaches him, pulls his cloak off him, disarrays a woman's hair in the marketplace—for any of these, he must pay four hundred zuz. However, the general rule is that the amount of the fine must be in keeping with the standing [of the injured person]. But R. Akiva said: Even the poor in Israel, being descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, are considered freemen in reduced circumstances.

It once happened that a certain man disarrayed a woman's hair in the marketplace. When the woman came before R. Akiva, he ordered the offender to pay her four hundred zuz. The man pleaded, "Rabbi, give me time to pay," and R. Akiva gave him time. After that, the man kept following the woman, until he caught her standing outside the door of her courtyard. Then, in front of her, he broke a pitcher containing an issar's[13] worth of oil. At that, she bared her head [let her hair down], dipped her hands [in the puddle of oil], and worked the oil into her hair. The man [quickly] summoned witnesses to see what she was doing. Then he appeared with them before R. Akiva and said, "Must I give such a woman four hundred zuz?" R. Akiva replied, "Your argument has no legal standing. If a person injures himself, though forbidden to do so, he is nevertheless exempt; but if others injure him, they are liable. So, also, he who cuts down his own saplings, though forbidden to do so,[14] is exempt; but if others [cut them down], they are liable."

Even though the offender pays the fine to the victim, the offense is not forgiven until he asks the victim's pardon, as Scripture says, "Now therefore restore the man's wife and [by asking pardon] see to it that he pray in thy behalf" (Gen. 20:7). What is the proof that, should the victim refuse to forgive, he would be [stigmatized as] cruel? The word "So Abraham [not only forgave but even] prayed unto God; and God healed Abimelech," etc. (Gen. 20:17).

Our masters taught: All the aforementioned fines compensate only for the humiliation suffered by the victim. As for the hurt done to his feelings, even if the offender brings all the "rams of Nebaioth" (Isa. 60:7) in the world, the offense is not forgiven until the offender asks for pardon.[15]

---

1. If such deference were shown on a narrow road, others hurrying to work, etc., would be held back. So Menahem ha-Meiri, quoted by Adin Steinsaltz, Ber, p. 205. B. Ber 46b–47a.
2. P. Ket 4:14, 29b.
3. Ka.
4. B. MK 9b.
5. Eccles. R. 7:9, §1.
6. Though facing death, she did not divulge Judah as the father of her child. B. Ber 43b.
7. One who memorized Baraitas and recited them before a teacher so that he might expound them.
8. B. BM 58b.
9. B. BK 83b.
10. B. Sanh 58b.
11. Half a zuz.
12. One hundred zuz.
13. An issar is one twenty-fourth of a zuz.
14. Since he violates the command "Thou shalt not destroy . . . trees" (Deut. 20:19).
15. B. BK 90a–b and 92a.

Love of Fellow Man and Hatred of Fellow Man

48. "Thou shalt love thy fellow man as thyself" (Lev. 19:18). R. Akiva said: This is a great principle in the Torah.

R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: To this utterance a great oath was adjoined, "Thou shalt love thy fellow man as thyself: I the Lord"—I, the Lord, created your fellow man. If you love him, I shall faithfully requite you with ample reward. If not, I shall act as judge to punish you.[1]

49. This is what the Holy One said to Israel: My children, what do I seek from you? I seek no more than that you love one another and honor one another.[2]

50. R. Joshua said: A grudging eye, the evil impulse, and hatred of his fellow men shorten a man's life.

"Hatred of his fellow men"—exactly how is this to be understood? That a man should not set out and say: Love sages but hate disciples, or love disciples but hate the ignorant [the amme ha-aretz]. He should say: Love all of them.[3]

51. If others speak ill of you, do not answer them. Should it be a grave calumny, regard it as slight. If, however, you speak ill of others, though the calumny be slight, regard it as so grave that you will feel compelled to go and apologize for having spoken it.

Love your fellow men and honor them.

Set aside your wish in favor of your fellow man's wish, as Rachel did for Leah[4] and David did for Saul.[5]

52. Judah ben Tema used to say: Love Heaven and also be in awe of Heaven, so that you both rejoice [and tremble] in obeying all commandments. If you have done your fellow man a slight wrong, let it seem a serious offense in your eyes. If you have done him a great good, let it seem but a trifle in your eyes. On the other hand, if your fellow man has done you a good that is a mere trifle, let it seem a great thing in your eyes. But if he has done you a great wrong, let it seem a mere trifle in your eyes.[6]

53. Our masters taught: "Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart" (Lev. 19:17). You might suppose that Scripture bids you not to strike him, not to slap him, not to curse him. But in saying, "In thy heart," Scripture also bids you to have no hatred in your heart.[7]

54. Scripture says, "Thou shalt not take vengeance, nor bear a grudge against the children of thy people" (Lev. 19:18). Suppose that, while cutting meat, the knife struck your hand; would you turn around and strike the hand [that held the knife]?[8]

55. We have been taught: What is revenge, and what is bearing a grudge? Suppose A said to B, "Lend me your sickle," and B replied, "No." Then the next day, B said, "Lend me your ax," and A replied, "I will not lend you the ax, just as you did not lend me your sickle." That is taking revenge. And what is bearing a grudge? Suppose A said to B, "Lend me your ax," and B replied, "No." Then the next day, B said, "Lend me your undershirt," and A replied, "Here it is. I am not like you, who would lend nothing to me." That is bearing a grudge.[9]

56. If love depends on something transitory, once the transitory thing passes away, love also passes away; but if love does not depend on something transitory, it will never pass away. What love depends on something transitory? The love of Amnon for Tamar.[10] And what love did not depend on something transitory? The love of David and Jonathan.[11]

57. Love unaccompanied by reproof is not [true] love.[12]

58. We have been taught in the name of R. Simeon ben Eleazar: Love sets aside the conduct expected of men of consequence, as may be seen in the instance of Abraham, who, it is said, "rose early in the morning and saddled his ass" (Gen. 22:3). Did he not have ever so many servants [to do this for him]? Hatred likewise sets aside the conduct expected of men of consequence, as may be seen in the instance of Balaam, who, it is said, "rose up in the morning, and saddled his ass" (Num. 22:21). Did he too not have ever so many servants [to do this for him]?[13]

59. Love upsets usual conduct. Hatred upsets usual conduct.[14]

60. When our love was strong, we could lie on the edge of a sword. Now that our love is not strong, a bed sixty cubits wide is not wide enough for us.[15]

61. It is easy to acquire an enemy, difficult to acquire a friend.[16]

62. Who is the mightiest of the mighty? He who turns his enemy into his friend.[17]

---

1. Sif Lev., ed. Weiss, p. 89b; ARN 16.
2. TdE 26.
3. Avot 2:11; ARN 16.
4. See above, part 1, chap. 3, §71.
5. He refrained from telling Saul that Saul's rule would not be prolonged, since Saul was anointed with a cruse, whereas his, David's, rule would be prolonged, since he was anointed with a horn (see B. Meg 14a). DEZ 1.
6. ARN 41.
7. B Ar 16b.
8. P. Ned 9:4, 41c.
9. B. Yoma 23a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. 2 Sam. 13.
11. 2 Sam. 1:26. Avot 5:16.
12. Gen. R. 54:3.
13. B. Sanh 105b; Gen. R. 55:8.
14. Gen. R. 55:8.
15. B. Sanh 7a.
16. Yalkut, Va-et'hannan, §845.
17. ARN 23.

63. The proverb says: What is in your heart about your fellow man is likely to be in his heart about you.[1]

64. To the place my heart loves—there my feet lead me.[2]

65. Our masters taught: There are three who love one another: proselytes, slaves, and ravens. There are three who hate one another: dogs, cocks, and Parsee priests. Some say: also disciples of the wise who live in Babylonia.[3]

A Companion

66. "And the Lord said unto Moses: 'Acquire for thyself Joshua the son of Nun' " (Num. 27:18). The word "acquire" here implies acquisition at much cost, for a companion is acquired after difficulties upon difficulties. Hence, say the sages, a man should acquire a companion for [everything]: for reading Scripture with him, reciting Mishnah with him, eating with him, drinking with him, and disclosing all his secrets to him.[4]

67. Either companionship or death.[5]

68. Either [faithful] friends like the friends of Job or death.[6]

69. "Two are better than one" (Eccles. 4:9). When R. Meir saw a man setting out on a journey alone, he would say, "Go in peace, you man of death." When he saw two men, he would say, "May you have peace, you men who are sure to quarrel." When he saw three, he would say, "May you have peace, you men of peace."[7]

70. There is a proverb: If you lift the burden, I will help lift it. If not, I will not.[8]

71. What is the good way a man should cleave to? R. Joshua said: Being a good friend; R. Yose said: Being a good neighbor.

What is the evil way a man should shun? R. Joshua said: Pretending to be a friend; R. Yose said: Being a bad neighbor.[9]

72. Nittai the Arbelite said: Shun a bad neighbor and do not consort with a wicked man.[10]

73. "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise" (Prov. 13:20). A parable: When a man walks into a spice vendor's shop, even if he sells nothing to the vendor or buys nothing from him, nevertheless, when he leaves, his person and his garments exude a fragrant aroma. And the fragrance will not leave him the entire day.

"But he that walketh with fools shall smart for it" (Prov. 13:20). A parable: When a man walks into a tanner's shop, even if he sells him nothing or buys nothing from him, nevertheless, when the man leaves, his person and his garments reek with stench. And the vile odor from his person and his garments will not leave him the entire day.[11]

74. Rava said to Rabbah bar Mari: Where is the proof in Scripture for the proverb "A bad palm will make its way to [a grove of] barren trees"? Rabbah bar Mari replied: From what is set down in the Five Books, repeated in the Prophets, and mentioned a third time in the Writings; indeed, we have been taught the same in a Mishnah and also in a Baraita. As to what is set down in the Five Books, it is stated, "So Esau went unto Ishmael" (Gen. 28:9). As to the Prophets, it is stated, "And there gathered themselves to Jephthah idle men, and they went out with him" (Judg. 11:3). As to the Writings, it is said, "Every fowl dwells near its kind and man near his equal" (Ecclesiasticus 13:15). As to the Mishnah, "Anything attached to what is itself susceptible to uncleanness is likewise susceptible to uncleanness; anything attached to what is not susceptible to uncleanness is likewise insusceptible to uncleanness" (Kel 12:2). As to the Baraita, "R. Eliezer said, 'Not without cause did the starling follow the raven—it is its own kind.' "[12]

75. In the days of R. Hiyya the Elder, a starling came up to the Land of Israel. Some people brought it to him, inquiring, "May we eat it?" He replied, "Go and place it on a roof, and any bird that comes to rest near it will be of its kind." So they went and placed it on a roof, and an Egyptian raven came and rested near it. At that, R. Hiyya said, "The starling is not kosher, because it belongs to the species of the raven, which Scripture prohibits by saying, 'Every raven after its kind' " (Lev. 11:15). Hence the proverb "The raven went to the starling only because it is of its own kind."[13]

76. One accursed should not unite with one blessed.[14]

77. No man will live with a serpent in the same basket.[15]

78. He who joins himself to those who commit transgressions, though he does not do what they do, will nevertheless receive punishment as one of them.[16]

---

1. Sif Deut., §24; Tanhuma B, Shelah, supplement, §19.
2. Mek, Yitro, Ba-hodesh, 11.
3. B. Pes 113b.
4. Sif Deut., §305; ARN 8.
5. B. Ta 23a.
6. B. BB 16b.
7. R. Meir was confident that in the event of a quarrel, the third man would reconcile the two at odds. Eccles. R. 4:9, §1.
8. B. BK 92b.
9. Avot 2:9.
10. Avot 1:7.
11. Midrash Prov. 13:20 (ed. Buber, p. 72).
12. B. BK 92b.
13. Gen. R. 65:3.
14. Gen. R. 59:9.
15. B. Yev 112b.
16. ARN 30.

79. Abbaye said: Woe to the wicked and woe to his neighbor. It is well with the righteous and well with his neighbor.[1]

80. When the thornbush is ravaged, so is the cabbage.[2]

81. We have been taught that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: A man should never have a multitude of friends in his house, for it is said, "A man with many friends may be hurt" (Prov. 18:24).[3]

82. A man should always know with whom he is seated, with whom he stands, with whom he reclines at a meal, with whom he converses, and with whom he signs his legal papers.[4]

83. We have been taught that the scrupulous people of Jerusalem would act thus: they never signed a legal document until they knew who would sign it with them; they never sat in judgment until they knew who would sit with them; and they would not go to a banquet until they knew who would recline with them.[5]

84. R. Hiyya bar Abba said in the name of R. Yohanan: When one of several brothers dies, all the other brothers have reason to be concerned. When one member of a fellowship dies, all the others in the fellowship have reason to be concerned.[6]

85. A fellowship and a family are like a pile of stones—when you remove one stone, the pile falls apart.[7]

Rules of Conduct and Good Manners Required between a Man and His Fellow

86. Matia ben Heresh said: Be the first to greet everyone.[8]

87. It is said of R. Yohanan ben Zakkai that no man ever greeted him first, not even a Gentile in the marketplace.[9]

88. R. Helbo said in the name of R. Huna: When a man knows that his friend is in the habit of greeting him [i.e., saying, "Peace be to you"], he should greet him first, for it is said, "Seek peace and pursue it" (Ps. 34:15). If his friend greets him and he does not respond to the greeting, he is called a robber, as is said, "That which you robbed from one who is humiliated [by not being responded to] is in your houses" (Isa. 3:14).[10]

89. A man should never leave the company of his teacher or his friend unless he has previously obtained his permission. Such good manners may be learned from Him who is everywhere: He, if one dare say such a thing, asked Abraham, "May I now leave?" as is stated, "And the Lord went His way, only after having spoken [for permission] to Abraham; and Abraham returned unto his place" (Gen. 18:33).

A man should never enter his friend's home unexpectedly. Such good manners may be learned from Him who is everywhere: He stood at the entrance of the Garden [of Eden] and called to Adam, as is stated, "The Lord God called unto Adam, and said unto him: Where art thou?" (Gen. 3:9).

There is the story of the four sages Rabban Gamaliel, R. Joshua, R. Eleazar ben Azariah, and R. Akiva, who were on their way [to Rome] to attend the [Roman] Privy Council, which had among its members a certain philosopher. R. Joshua asked Rabban Gamaliel, "Master, would you like us to call on our colleague, the philosopher?" He replied, "No." In the morning, he again asked him, "Master, would you like us to call on our colleague, the philosopher?" He replied, "Yes." So they went and arrived at the entrance to the philosopher's house. R. Joshua knocked on the door. The philosopher, speculating on the visitor's identity, said [to himself]: Such manners must be those of a sage.[11] When R. Joshua knocked a second time, the philosopher got up and washed his face, his hands, and his feet. On the third knock, he arose, opened the door, and had the sages of Israel come in, Rabban Gamaliel in the middle, R. Joshua and R. Eleazar ben Azariah on his right, and R. Akiva on his left.

At the sight of them, the philosopher, in a quandary, said [to himself]: How shall I greet these sages of Israel? If I say, "Peace be upon you, Rabban Gamaliel," I will slight the [other] sages. If I say, "Peace be upon you, sages of Israel," I will slight [their chief] Rabban Gamaliel. So, as he approached them, he greeted them with the words "Peace be upon you, sages of Israel, headed by the patriarch Rabban Gamaliel."[12]

90. "And the Lord called unto Moses, and spoke to him" (Lev. 1:1). Why does Scripture put the calling before the speaking? The Torah teaches good manners: a man should say nothing to his fellow man without first calling out to him.[13]

91. R. Simeon ben Yohai said: The man who enters his own house or, needless to say, the house of his fellow man unexpectedly, the Holy One hates, and I too do not exactly love him.

Rav said: Do not enter your city nor even your own home unexpectedly.[14]

When R. Yohanan was about to go in to inquire about the welfare of R. Hanina, he would first clear his throat,

---

1. B. Suk 56b.
2. B. BK 92a.
3. B. Sanh 100b.
4. DEZ 5.
5. B. Sanh 23a.
6. B. Shab 105b–106a.
7. Gen. R. 100:7.
8. Avot 4:15.
9. B. Ber 17a.
10. B. Ber 6b.
11. Apparently most people would walk in without knocking on the door.
12. DER 5; Ka R. 7.
13. B. Yoma 4b.
14. Without informing your kin of your coming.

in keeping with "And his voice shall be heard when he goeth in" (Exod. 28:35).[1]

92. When R. Jeremiah came up to visit R. Assi, R. Assi mixed a cup of wine for him, and he proceeded to examine it. R. Assi's wife said to her husband, "Look what he is doing!" R. Assi replied, "He follows the practice of his teacher, R. Hiyya, who taught that a guest may without hesitation examine what is in the cup [offered him] or in the dish [served him].[2]

93. Shammai said: Receive all men with a cheerful countenance.[3]

94. When a man receives his fellow man with a cheerful countenance, even if he gives him nothing, Scripture credits it to him as though he had given him all the best gifts in the world.[4]

95. He who pays his respects to his fellow man is as though he were paying his respects to the Presence.[5]

96. R. Ishmael said: Receive all men joyfully.[6]

97. Three things make a man beloved by his fellow men: an open hand, a set table, and a sparkling wit.[7]

98. R. Joshua ben Levi said: When a man sees his friend after a lapse of thirty days, he is to say, "Blessed be He who has kept us alive, preserved us, and brought us to this season." After twelve months, he is to say, "Blessed be He who quickens the dead."[8]

99. While R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua were walking on a road, they met R. Hanina son of R. Ika and said to him: Whenever we see you, we recite two blessings: "Blessed be He who imparted His wisdom to them that fear Him" and "Who has kept us alive." R. Hanina replied: Whenever I see you two, who are deemed by me equal to the sixty myriads of Israel, I recite three blessings: the two you mentioned, and "Blessed be He that discerns secrets."[9]

100. R. Dimi brother of R. Safra taught: Let no man ever talk in praise of his neighbor, for while talking in his praise, he is likely to switch to disparaging him.

When R. Dimi came [from the Land of Israel], he said: What is meant by "He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted as a curse to him" (Prov. 27:14)? The verse refers, for example, to one who stayed at an inn where he was well served. The next day, the guest went out and sat in the marketplace, saying, "May He who is everywhere bless So-and-so [the host], who took such trouble to serve me." Upon hearing such praise, the authorities said: [His business must be thriving], and they clapped a heavier tax on the innkeeper.[10]

101. R. Jeremiah ben Eleazar said: Only a part of man's praise may be said in his presence. But in his absence, all of it may be said. Thus, to Noah, God said, "Thee have I seen righteous before Me in this generation" (Gen. 7:1), but of Noah, it is said, "Noah was in his generations a man righteous and wholehearted" (Gen. 6:9).[11]

102. "And he said unto them: 'Why do ye such things? for I hear evil reports concerning you from all this people' " (1 Sam 2:23). R. Abbahu said: The Torah teaches you right conduct. When you hear a good thing about your fellow man, repeat it in the name of him who said it. When you hear an evil thing about him, say it in behalf of "somebody."[12]

103. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Do not try to appease your friend in the hour of his anger; nor comfort him while his dead is lying before him; nor question him in the hour of his vow.[13] And do not endeavor to see him in the hour of his disgrace.[14]

104. R. Yose said: I have never in my life disregarded the words of my colleagues. I know of myself that I am not a priest [who bestows blessing]. Nevertheless, should my colleagues say to me, "Go up on the dais [and pronounce the blessing among the priests]," I would go up.[15]

105. R. Akiva asked R. Nehunia the Elder: How have you managed to live such a long life? [Because Nehunia's attendants regarded his question as impertinent],[16] they began to beat R. Akiva, who clambered up and perched himself at the top of a date palm. R. Nehunia said to his attendants, "Let him be—he is a disciple of the wise." And to R. Akiva, he said, "Never in my life have I accepted gifts; I have been openhanded with my money; I have not insisted on my rights."[17]

106. Our masters taught: Three things are hard to take when excessive, but just right in limited measure: leaven, salt, and declining an invitation.[18]

107. If it is just as easy to be called good, there is no reason to act in such a way as to be dubbed perverse.[19]

---

1. Lev. R. 21:8.
2. P. Shab 1:3, 3b.
3. Avot 1:15.
4. ARN 13.
5. P. Er 5:1, 22a.
6. Avot 3:13.
7. ARNB 31.
8. B. Ber 58b.
9. The blessing prescribed for the sight of sixty myriads of Israel. Ibid.
10. B. Ar 16a.
11. B. Er 18b.
12. Midrash Sam. 7 (ed. Buber, p. 67).
13. He may extend its scope to such an extent that it will be impossible to release him from it.
14. Avot 4:18.
15. B. Shab 118b.
16. They thought R. Akiva begrudged R. Nehunia the length of his life.
17. B. Meg 28a.
18. B. Ber 34a.
19. B. Ber 30a; BK 81b.

108. [The best solution is]: one party derives a benefit, and the other party sustains no loss.[1]

109. One may be compelled not to act in the manner of Sodom.[2]

110. When the Holy One said to Moses, "Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh" (Exod. 3:10), Moses replied, "Master of the universe, I cannot go [without Jethro's permission], because Jethro received me and opened his home to me, so that I am like a son to him. When one man so opens his door to another, the other owes his very life to him."

So, too, you find of Elijah [who did not supplicate that his own parents be brought back to life]. But when he went to the widow in Zarephath whose son died, he began to supplicate and say, "Hast Thou also brought evil upon the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son?" Thus, for the sake of his hostess, he risked his very life [by provoking God]. Clearly, when one man opens his door to another, the other owes greater consideration to him than to his father and mother. Therefore, Moses said to the Holy One, "Jethro has received me and showed me consideration. I cannot go without his permission."[3]

111. "And Moses sent them . . . to the war" (Num. 31:6). The Holy One had spoken to Moses: "Avenge the children of Israel of the Midianites" (Num. 31:2)—you are to do it yourself. Yet he sent others to do it. But because he spent many years in Midian, he said, "It is not right for me to cause distress to one who has been good to me."[4]

112. Rava asked Rabbah bar Mari: What is the source in Scripture for the proverb "Don't throw a stone into the well you drank from"? Rabbah bar Mari replied: The verse "Thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian, because thou wast a stranger in his land" (Deut. 23:8).[5]

113. If a man shares his food with his fellow, be it no more than bread and salt, or a salad leaf to dip [in brine], the fellow who is offered such meager sustenance, though he may have a hundred meals every day like the meals of Solomon in the time of his glory, should express his gratitude right to his benefactor's face.[6]

114. "Whoso rewardeth evil for good, evil shall not depart from his house" (Prov. 17:13). R. Yohanan said: The verse implies that if your neighbor has served you lentils, you should serve him meat. Why? Because he entertained you first.

R. Simeon bar Abba said that this does not exhaust the verse's implication. Not only "whoso rewardeth evil for good," but also he who rewards evil for evil—[in both cases] "evil shall not depart from his house."[7]

115. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: How do we know that a man is not to change his lodging? Because Scripture says of Abraham, "He went . . . unto the place where his tent had been at the beginning" (Gen. 13:3).[8]

116. "Neither will we drink of the water of [our own] well" (Num. 20:17). Should not Scripture have said, "The water of [Edom's] wells"? However, the Torah offers a lesson in proper conduct. When a man goes to a country that is not his, even if he has with him all he needs, he should not eat what is in his hand. Rather, what he has should remain untouched, and he should buy from a shopkeeper, so as to let the shopkeeper make a profit. This is what Moses said: Yes, we do have the well with us, and we do eat manna. But do not suppose that we will be a burden upon you. For you will make a profit from us.[9]

117. "And they said unto him: 'Where is Sarah thy wife?' " (Gen. 18:9). The sages taught in the name of R. Yose: Why are the letters alef, yod, and vav in the word elayv ("unto him") dotted? To indicate that elayv may also be read ayv [ayyo] "where is he?" [Hence, even as the angels asked Abraham, "Where is Sarah?" they also asked Sarah, "Where is Abraham?"] Thus, the Torah offers a lesson in proper conduct, namely, that a guest should make inquiry about both the hostess and the host.[10]

118. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: He who gives a piece of bread to a young child should inform the child's mother.[11]

119. R. Hama son of Hanina said: He who gives a gift to his friend need not tell him of it, in keeping with "Moses knew not that the skin of his face sent forth beams, since He had spoken with him" (Exod. 34:29).

However, the sages said in the name of Rav: He who gives a gift to his friend should let him know of it, in keeping with "That ye may know that I the Lord have consecrated you" (Exod. 31:13).[12]

120. When a man asks [God's] mercy for another—even though he himself requires the same thing—his own need will be responded to first.[13]

121. R. Jacob son of Jacob's daughter said: He on whose account his fellow man is punished will not be allowed to enter the precincts of the Holy One.[14]

---

1. B. BK 20b.
2. But to treat one another fairly. B. ER 49a.
3. Exod. R. 4:2.
4. Num. R. 22:4.
5. B. BK 92b; Num. R. 22:4.
6. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 89 (JPS, p. 240).
7. He construes the verse as meaning: "evil instead of the good at his disposal." Gen. R. 38:3.
8. B. Ar 16b.
9. Num. R. 19:15.
10. B. BM 87a.
11. B. Shab 10b.
12. Ibid.
13. B. BK 92a.
14. B. Shab 149b.

122. R. Hanan said: He who invokes the judgment of Heaven upon his fellow man will be punished first. Thus, after reporting, "Sarai said unto Abram: 'My wrong be upon thee . . . the Lord judge between thee and me" (Gen. 16:5), Scripture goes on to tell us, "Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her" (Gen. 23:2). When [does he who invokes God's judgment get punished first]? When there is a judge in the Land [to turn to, so that one need have no recourse to the Judge in heaven].

R. Isaac said: Greater is the woe of him who cried [for God's intervention] than the woe of him against whom it is invoked.[1]

123. Rava said: When a man is willing to let his rights pass without insisting on them, all of his transgressions are passed over, as is said, "That pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by transgression" (Mic. 7:18). Whose iniquity does God pardon? That of the man who is willing to let pass the transgression committed against him.

R. Isaac said: Whoever offends his fellow man, even if only with words, should endeavor to reconcile him. R. Hisda added: [If he does not succeed], he should endeavor to pacify him before three groups of people [whom he should successively invite to be present].

R. Yose bar Hanina said: He who seeks pardon of his fellow man need do so no more than three times, for it is said, "Pray (ana) forgive, I pray thee (na) . . . and now forgive, I pray thee (na)" (Gen. 50:17).[2] And if his fellow man is dead, he should bring ten men, have them stand by the grave, and say, "I have sinned against the Lord, the God of Israel, and against So-and-so, whom I have hurt."

Once, when R. Abba had a grievance against R. Jeremiah, R. Jeremiah went and sat down at R. Abba's door [waiting for him to come out so that he might ask to be forgiven]. Just then, a maidservant of R. Abba's came out and emptied dirty water into the dungheap. Some drops of that water fell upon R. Jeremiah's head, at which he remarked, "They have used me as a dungheap," and in his own behalf he prayed, "May He raise up the needy one out of the dungheap" (1 Sam. 2:8). When R. Abba heard what had happened, he came out, but R. Jeremiah turned his face aside and started walking away. R. Abba called to him, "No need for you to beg to be forgiven—now it is up to me to remove [the grievance] from your heart."[3]

124. Matters between you and Him who is everywhere may be forgiven you. Matters between you and your fellow man will not be forgiven until you conciliate him.[4]

125. Valeria the Proselyte put the following question to Rabban Gamaliel: In your Torah, it is written, "Who shows no favor" (Deut. 10:17); yet it is also written, "The Lord will show thee favor" (Num. 6:26). R. Yose the Priest undertook to answer her: I will tell you a parable to explain the apparent contradiction: A man lent maneh to his neighbor and fixed a time for it to be repaid in the presence of the king, the borrower swearing by the king's life that he would do so. When the time came and he did not repay the debt, he went to appease the king. The king said, "The wrong done to me is forgiven you. But go and make up with the one who lent you the maneh." So it is with regard to the two verses: the first deals with transgressions between a man and his fellow; the second with transgressions between a man and Him who is everywhere.[5]

126. It happened that a certain heathen came before Shammai and said to him, "Take me as a proselyte, but on condition that you teach me the entire Torah, all of it, while I stand on one foot." Shammai instantly drove him away with a builder's measuring rod he happened to have in his hand. When the heathen came before Hillel, Hillel agreed to make him a proselyte, saying "What you don't like, don't do to your neighbor—this is the entire [substance of] Torah, all of it; the rest is commentary. Go and study it."[6]

Theft, Robbery, and Bloodshed

127. R. Yose said: Let the property of your fellow man be as precious to you as your own.[7]

128. There are four types of men: he who says, "Mine is mine, and yours is yours"—the average man; some say, this is the type of Sodom. He who says, "Mine is yours, and yours is mine"—the ignorant man [the am ha-aretz]. He who says, "Mine[8] is yours, and yours is yours"—the pious man. And he who says, "Yours is mine, and mine is mine"—the wicked man.[9]

129. He who sets his eyes on what is not his—what he desires is not given him, and what he possesses is taken away from him.[10]

130. R. Yohanan said: When a man robs his fellow even the value of a perutah,[11] it is as though he had taken his life away from him, as is said, "So are the ways of everyone that is greedy of gain, which taketh away the life of the owners thereof" (Prov. 1:19).[12]

131. "And God said unto Noah: 'The end of all flesh is come before Me' " (Gen. 6:13). R. Yohanan said: Pause

---

1. B. BK 93a.
2. The word na, repeated three times, is taken to suggest the number of times one is to ask to be forgiven.
3. B. Yoma 87a and En Yaakov, ad loc.; Meg 28a.
4. Sif Lev., ed. Weiss, p. 83a–b.
5. B. RH 17b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. B. Shab 31a.
7. Avot 2:12.
8. "Mine" meaning that which was awarded to me in a lawsuit; I prefer that you keep it, since I do not wish to benefit from anything concerning whose ownership there is even a scintilla of doubt. Under similar circumstances, the wicked man reverses matters to suit himself (see Liebermann, TkF 7: 973, n. 16).
9. Avot 5:10.
10. B. Sot 9a.
11. A coin of little value.
12. B. BK 119a.

and consider how powerful is the effect of robbery, for the generation of the flood transgressed all laws, yet the decree of their punishment was sealed only after they reached out for what did not belong to them, as is said, "The earth is filled with robbery through them; and behold, I will destroy them with the earth" (Gen. 6:13). It is also written, "Robbery is risen unto a rod of wickedness," etc. (Ezek. 7:11), which, according to R. Eleazar, means that robbery stood itself upright like a rod, presented itself before the Holy One, and said to Him: Master of the universe, "None of them should remain, nor of their multitude," etc. (ibid.).[1]

132. Samuel said: Even if a man misappropriates a beam and builds it into a palace, he must demolish the entire palace, all of it, and return the beam to its owners.[2]

133. R. Abba said: Grave indeed is the difficulty with food that has been misappropriated and eaten, for even the wholly righteous are unable to return it, as Abraham said, "Save only that which the young men have eaten" (Gen. 14:24).[3]

134. R. Levi said: Misappropriation of things profane is worse than misappropriation of things holy.[4]

135. We have been taught that R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: He who steals a seah of wheat, grinds it, kneads it into dough, bakes it, and even sets aside a portion as hallah—what blessing could he possibly utter? Surely he may not utter a blessing, for he would be blaspheming, as is said, "The robber who utters a blessing blasphemeth the Lord" (Ps. 10:3).[5]

136. "And you shall take that which is yours . . . fruit of a goodly tree" (Lev. 23:40)—that which belongs to you, not that which was misappropriated.

R. Levi said: A man who uses a lulav cluster got by robbery—to whom may he be likened? To a highwayman who sat at a crossroads, robbing all who came and went. Once, a royal legate passed by on his way to collect the tax of that province, and the highwayman confronted him, overpowered him, and took away all he had. Sometime later, the highwayman was captured and cast into prison. When the king's legate heard this, he went to the highwayman and said to him, "Give me back all that you robbed me of, and I will plead in your behalf before the king." The highwayman answered, "Of all that I seized and took away from you, I have nothing left, except this rug under me, which belongs to you." The legate said to him, "Give it to me, and I shall plead in your behalf before the king." The highwayman said, "Take it."

The next day, the highwayman was taken before the king for judgment. When the king asked him, "Have you anyone to plead for you?" the highwayman replied, "Such-and-such a legate will plead for me." The king sent for the legate and asked him, "Do you know anything in favor of this man?" The legate answered, "I do indeed! When you sent me to collect the tax of that province, this man confronted me and overpowered me, taking away all that I had. This very rug, which belongs to me, is witness against him." Then all the people cried out, "Woe to this one, whose advocate has turned accuser!" Likewise, when, in order to gain merit, a man takes a lulav cluster that was got by robbery, the lulav cluster cries out before the Holy One, "I was got by robbery! I was got by violence!" And the ministering angels say, "Woe to this one, whose advocate has turned accuser."[6]

137. Whenever a man whose hands are soiled by robbery calls to the Holy One, He does not answer.[7]

138. Mar Zutra the Pious once had a silver cup stolen from him at an inn. When he saw one disciple wash his hands and wipe them on another disciple's garments, he said, "That is the one—since he has no consideration for his fellow's property." The disciple was put in fetters, and he confessed.[8]

139. There is the story of a ruler who used to put to death receivers of stolen property but let thieves go. Everyone criticized him for not acting rationally. So what did he do? He had it proclaimed throughout the province, "All people to the arena!" Next, what did he do? He brought weasels and placed before them portions of food. The weasels took the portions and carried them to their holes.

The following day, he again had it proclaimed, "All people to the arena!" Again he brought weasels and placed before them portions of food, but this time he had stopped up the holes, so that when the weasels took their food to the holes and found them stopped up, they returned the portions to where they had been. Thus they demonstrated that, but for receivers, there would be no thievery.[9]

140. A breach in a fence should not be made in front of an honest person, all the less so in front of a thief.[10]

141. A breach invites the thief.[11]

142–43. Not the mouse is the thief, but the hole. Nevertheless, if there were no mouse, how would the hole get filled with stolen goods?[12]

144. Ben Bag Bag said: Do not enter [stealthily] into your neighbor's courtyard to take what belongs to you, lest you appear to him to be a thief. But smash his teeth in as you tell him, "I am taking what belongs to me!"[13]

---

1. B. Sanh 108a.
2. B. Ta 16a.
3. B. Hul 89a.
4. B. BB 88b.
5. B. BK 94a.
6. Lev. R. 30:6.
7. Exod. R. 22:3.
8. B. BM 24a.
9. Lev. R. 6:2.
10. Tanhuma, Va-yishlah, §5.
11. B. Suk 26a.
12. B. Git 45a; B. Ar 30a.
13. B. BK 27b.

145. R. Adda son of R. Ivia asked R. Ashi: What is the difference between a gazlan ("robber") and a hamsan ("violent man")? R. Ashi answered: A hamsan pays for what he takes by violence; a gazlan does not pay.[1]

146. We have been taught: "Thou shalt not steal" (Exod. 20:13)—not even [in make-believe] to tease your neighbor. "Thou shalt not steal"—not even with the intention of repaying double.[2]

147. The disciples of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai asked him: Why is the Torah more severe with a thief[3] than with a robber?[4] Rabban Yohanan replied: A robber accords equal lack of deference to the slave [his victim] and to the Master, whereas a thief does not accord to the Master the deference he accords to the slave. For the thief acts, if one dare say such a thing, as though the Eye above[5] does not see and the Ear above does not hear, as is said, "Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say: 'Who seeth us? And who knoweth us?' " (Isa. 29:15).

In this regard, R. Meir, citing Rabban Gamaliel, told a parable: How may the conduct of the thief and the robber be illustrated? By the actions of two men who prepared a banquet in the city where they lived. One invited the people of the city but not the royal princes; the other invited neither the people of the city nor the royal princes. Whose punishment is greater? Clearly, the punishment of the one who invited the people of the city but did not invite the royal princes.[6]

148. Once, four hundred jars of wine belonging to R. Huna turned sour. The sages came to visit him and said, "Let the master examine his [past] actions." He asked them, "Am I suspect in your eyes?" They replied, "Is the Holy One suspect of imposing judgment without justice?" He said to them, "If anyone has heard something against me, let him speak up." They replied, "We have heard that the master does not give his tenant his [lawful share of] vine shoots."[7] R. Huna replied, "Does he leave any of them for me? He steals them all!" They said to him, "That is exactly what the proverb says: 'Even if you steal [what is your own] from a thief, you also are a bit of a thief!' " He said to them, "From now on, I pledge myself to give them to him." Some say that then and there the vinegar turned back into wine. Others say that the price of vinegar rose so high that it sold at the same price as wine.[8]

149. A brigand's partner is as bad as the brigand.[9]

150. R. Huna said: How do we know that stealing from a heathen is prohibited? From the verse "Thou mayest consume all the peoples that the Lord thy God shall give unto thee" (Deut. 7:16). Only in time [of war], when they are delivered into your hand [as enemies], is this permitted, but not in time [of peace], when they are not delivered into your hand [as enemies].[10]

151. Torah was given only to hallow God's great Name, as is said, "God said unto me: 'Thou art My servant, Israel, through whom I will be glorified' " (Isa. 49:3). [By your deeds, you will glorify Me among all men.] Hence, the sages said, a man should keep away from dishonesty in dealing, whether with Jew or Gentile; indeed, with anyone in the marketplace. Besides, he who steals from a Gentile will in the end steal from a Jew; he who cheats a Gentile will in the end cheat a Jew; he who swears [falsely] to a Gentile will in the end swear [falsely] to a Jew; he who acts deceitfully toward a Gentile will in the end act deceitfully toward a Jew; he who sheds the blood of a Gentile will in the end shed the blood of a Jew.

That the Torah was given only to hallow God's great Name [in all the world] is shown by the verse "I will work a sign among all the nations and tongues, and send from them survivors . . . to the distant coasts" (Isa. 66:19). And what then? What is declared at the end of the verse: these survivors "shall declare My glory among the nations."[11]

152. When a man cheats a heathen [by swearing a false oath], and the heathen dies before restitution is made, that man's sin cannot be expiated, since [in besmirching Israel's name] he is guilty of profaning God's Name.[12]

153. [He who walks before a dead man's bier, wearing a garment previously rent for another deceased person, cheats the dead]. Cheating the dead is worse than cheating the living, for he who cheats the living can make up with him by making restitution; while he who cheats the dead can never make up with him.[13]

154. In the time-to-come, the mouth and the belly will contend with each other, the mouth saying to the belly, "All that I misappropriated or took by violence, I put into you." But after three days, the belly will burst open and say to the mouth, "Here is all you have misappropriated and taken by violence."[14]

155. Among the inhabitants of large cities, there is likely to be cheating.[15]

---

1. B. BK 62a.
2. Knowing that your neighbor will not accept a gift from you, you resort to a subterfuge, knowing that the law requires you to pay back double the theft. B. BM 61b.
3. He is required to pay double for the animal he stole; and if he has slaughtered or sold it, four- or fivefold.
4. He is merely expected to repay or restore what he has taken.
5. Literally, "below," a euphemism for Heaven.
6. B. BK 79b.
7. The tenant is entitled to as great a share in the shoots cut during the vintage as in the grapes. BM 9:1.
8. B. Ber 5b.
9. P. Sanh 1:2, 19b.
10. B. BK 113b; cf. BK Soncino, ad loc.
11. TdE, ed. Friedmann, p. 140 (JPS, p. 347).
12. Tos BK 10:15 and variant (ed. Zuckermandel).
13. Sem 9:21/22.
14. Gen. R. 100:7.
15. B. Er 21b.

156. A thief about to break in calls on Heaven [for help].[1]

157. When a thief has nothing to steal, he regards his "virtue" as real.[2]

158. If he cannot be trusted in dealing with money, he cannot be trusted in swearing an oath.[3]

159. It once happened to some disciples of R. Akiva that, while journeying to Chezib, they were overtaken by brigands, who asked them, "Where are you going?" They replied, "To Acco."[4] But when they reached Chezib, they said goodbye. The brigands then asked them, "Whose disciples are you?" They replied, "The disciples of R. Akiva." Said the brigands, "Happy are R. Akiva and his disciples, for no evil man will ever get the better of them."

When R. Manasseh was once going to Be Toreta, thieves met him and asked him, "Where are you going?" He said, "To Pumbedita." But when he reached Be Toreta, he said goodbye. They exclaimed, "You must be a disciple of Judah the Teacher of Deceit."[5] He said to them, "Do you indeed know him [as such? For defaming R. Judah], may it be [God's] will that you be put under a ban." For twenty-two years, they went on stealing but met with no success. Finally, realizing the futility of their efforts, they came to ask that the ban be revoked. There was a weaver among them who did not come to have his ban revoked, and he was finally devoured by a lion.

Pause now and consider the difference between thieves of Babylonia and brigands of the Land of Israel.[6]

160. Rava expounded: What is meant by "In the dark they dig into houses, which they had marked for themselves in the daytime" (Job 24:16)? This verse shows that the Sodomites used to cast envious eyes upon men of wealth. In order to mark the exact place where the wealthy men stored their valuables, the Sodomites would deposit their precious scented oil (ostensibly for safekeeping) with the wealthy men, who would store this oil with their own valuables. Later, in the dark of night, these Sodomites would come and like dogs sniff out the oil's whereabouts, dig there, and haul away the wealthy men's valuables.

After R. Yose expounded the verse thus in Sepphoris, that very night there were three hundred burglaries in Sepphoris. The people of the city came and reproached him: "You have taught a method to thieves." He replied, "How was I to know that thieves would come [to hear me]?"[7]

161. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon once met a detective who was a thief catcher. R. Eleazar asked, "How can you recognize them? Are they not like wild beasts that prowl at night and hide during the day? Perhaps you sometimes arrest the innocent and let the gulity go free?" The detective answered, "What shall I do? It is the king's command." R. Eleazar: "Come, I will teach you what to do. At nine o'clock in the morning,[8] go into a tavern. Should you see a man dozing with a cup of wine in his hand, inquire about him. If he is a disciple of the wise, [you may assume that] he had risen very early in the morning to pursue his studies [and that is why he is dozing]; if he is a laborer, he too must have been up early to do his work. But if he is neither, he is a thief—arrest him." The report [of this conversation] was brought to the king's attention, and the decision was [as the proverb puts it]: "Let the reader of the message become the messenger."[9] R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon was accordingly sent for and was appointed to catch thieves. At that, R. Joshua ben Korhah sent word to him: "O Vinegar son of wine! How long will you deliver up the people of our God for slaughter!" R. Eleazar sent back: "I weed out thorns from the vineyard." R. Joshua replied, "Let the Owner of the vineyard come and Himself weed out its thorns."[10]

162. R. Giddel said in the name of Rav: If a man of Naresh [in Babylonia] kisses you, count your teeth. If a man of Nehar Pekod accompanies you, it is because of the fine garments he sees on you [which he will try to steal]. If a Pumbeditan escorts you, change your lodgings.[11]

163. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Jehozadak: In the upper chamber of Nitzah's house in Lydda, the sages voted and decided: with regard to all commands in Torah, if a man is told, "Transgress or you will be slain," he may transgress them so as not to be slain, except, however, when told to worship an idol, to commit incest, or to murder.[12]

164. Exile comes to the world because of idolatry, incest, and murder.[13]

165. If a company of people are told by heathens, "Give us one of you, that we may slay him, and if you do not, we will slay all of you," all should let themselves be slain rather than turn over to the heathens even one Jewish person. But if the heathens name the person wanted—as Sheba son of Bichri was named—the company should give him up rather than let all die. Thus Scripture says [of Sheba], "Then the woman came unto all the people in her wisdom," etc. (2 Sam. 20:22). She said to them, "Since Sheba will be slain [in any event, and if you do not sur-

---

1. En Yaakov on B. Ber 63b, missing in Talmud editions.
2. Or: With nothing to steal, the thief regards himself as law-abiding. B. Sanh 22a.
3. B. BM 5b.
4. Acco, located beyond Chezib, made the robbers believe they had ample time to rob R. Akiva's disciples.
5. R. Judah was his master.
6. The brigands of the Land of Israel paid tribute to R. Akiva, while the thieves of Babylonia insulted R. Manasseh. B. AZ 25b–26a.
7. B. Sanh 109a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
8. Literally, the fourth hour of the day.
9. You made the motion, now you can become chairman of the committee.
10. B. BM 83b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. He is likely to rob you. B. Hul 127a.
12. B. Sanh 74a.
13. Avot 5:9.

render him], you will be slain, give him up and do not let all of you be slain."[1]

166. Ulla the Conspirator[2] was summoned [on a charge] by the Roman government. He fled and reached the house of R. Joshua ben Levi in Lod. The government sent a detachment of troops after him, who surrounded the city and said to the inhabitants, "If you do not turn him over to us, we will destroy the city." R. Joshua ben Levi undertook to persuade Ulla [to give himself up], saying, "It is better that only you be put to death than that the community be put to death on account of you." Ulla let himself be persuaded, and R. Joshua turned him over to the Romans.

Now, the prophet Elijah, ever remembered on good occasions, used to appear to R. Joshua, but after R. Joshua had done this, Elijah no longer appeared to him. So R. Joshua ben Levi fasted for thirty days, and Elijah again appeared to him. R. Joshua asked, "Master, why did you cease to come?" Elijah answered, "Am I a companion of informers?" R. Joshua: "Did I not act in keeping with the Baraita [that reads: If a company of people are told by heathens, 'Give us one of you, that we may slay him, and if you do not, we will slay all of you,' all should let themselves be slain rather than turn over to the heathens even one Jewish person, but if the heathens name the person wanted, the company should give him up, rather than let all die]?"[3] "But is that a teaching for the pious?" Elijah retorted: "such an act should have been committed by others, not by you."[4]

167. A man came before Rava and said to him, "The ruler of my city ordered me, 'Go and slay So-and-so. If you do not, I will slay you.' " Rava replied, "Let yourself be slain rather than slay. What makes you think your blood is redder than his? Perhaps that man's blood is redder."[5]

168. R. Yohanan said: What is the meaning of "All faces are turned to paleness" (Jer. 30:6)? The words "all faces" refer to [the angels], God's household in heaven; and to [Israel], God's household on earth, when the Holy One says, "These [the Gentiles] are My handiwork, and those [Israel] are My handiwork—how can I destroy the Gentiles on account of Israel?"[6]

169. There is the story of two brothers, one of whom slew the other. What did their mother do? She took a cup, filled it with the blood of the one slain, and placed it in a turret. Day after day, as she entered the turret, she saw that the blood was seething. One day, when she entered and looked at the cup, she saw that the blood was still. In that instant she knew that her other son was slain, in keeping with the verse "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed" (Gen. 9:6).[7]

1. Tos Ter 7:20.
2. "Conspirator"—Gen. R. TA, p. 1184; BR: "son of Koshav."
3. Tos Ter 7:20.
4. P. Ter 8:4, 46b; Gen. R. 94:9.
5. B. Pes 25b.
6. B. Sanh 98b.
7. Deut. R. 2:25.

Wronging [Overreaching] and Deception

170. R. Hisda said: All gates may be locked, except the gates through which the prayers of those wronged pass.

R. Eleazar said: [All] evil, except for overreaching, is punished through an emissary.

R. Abbahu said: The curtain [of heaven][8] is never closed before three evils: overreaching, robbery, and idolatry.[9]

171. Our masters taught: "Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in meteyard, in weight, or in measure" (Lev. 19:35). "Meteyard" means land measurement, [and] it forbids measuring land for one person in summer and for another in winter.[10] "In weight" prohibits the steeping of weights in salt, and "in measure" teaches that one must not cause [a liquid] to foam.[11] Now, the matter may be argued a fortiori: if the Torah forbids a [false] mesurah, which is but one thirty-sixth of a log, how much more and more a hin, half a hin, a third of a hin, and a quarter of a hin; a log, half a log, or a quarter of a log.[12]

R. Judah said in the name of Rav: A man is forbidden to keep in his house a measuring vessel smaller or larger [than the standard measure], even if it is to be used as a chamber pot.[13]

172. Our masters taught: What is the proof that a measuring vessel may not be leveled where the practice is to heap it up, and that it may not be heaped up where the practice is to level it? The verse, "A perfect . . . measure" (Deut. 25:15). And what is the proof that if a man says, "I will level where the practice is to heap up, and reduce the price," or, "I will heap up where they level, and raise the price," we may not allow him? The verse, "A perfect and just measure thou shalt have" (ibid.).

Our masters taught: What is the proof that exact weight may not be given where the practice is to allow overweight, and that overweight may not be given where the practice is to give exact weight? The verse "A perfect weight" (Deut. 25:15). And what is the proof that when a man says, "I will give exact weight where the practice is to allow overweight, and reduce the price," or, "I will allow overweight where they give exact weight, and raise the price," we are not to allow him? The verse "A perfect and just weight thou shalt have."

R. Judah of Sura said: "Thou shalt possess nothing in thy house" (Deut. 25:14). Why not? "Because of [thy] diverse measures" (ibid.). "Thou shalt have nothing in thy

8. "Hiding, so to speak, human failings from the divine gaze" (Isidore Epstein, in Bm, Soncino, p. 351, n. 6).
9. B. BM 59a.
10. When brothers divide a landed legacy, one's portion must not be measured off in summer and another's in winter, because the measuring cord expands in winter and shrinks in summer. So Rashi.
11. The incrustation of salt adds to the weight; after the foam subsides, the measure is found to be short.
12. 1 hin = 12 log = 6.072 liters; 1 log = 0.506 liters (about 1 pint). JE 12:484.
13. Even if he does not intend to use it as a measure, others may do so by mistake. B. BM 61b; B. BB 89b.

bag" (Deut. 25:13). Why not? "Because of [thy] diverse weights" (ibid.). But if you keep "a perfect and just weight, thou shalt have [possessions]" (Deut. 25:15), if "a perfect and just measure, thou shalt have [wealth]."[1]

173. Our masters taught: A leveler may not be made wide at one end and narrow at the other.[2] One may not level with a single quick movement, for leveling in this manner causes loss to the seller and gain to the buyer. Nor may one level very slowly, because [this] is disadvantageous to the buyer and advantageous to the seller. Concerning all these [sharp practices of traders], Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai said: Woe to me if I speak [of them], and woe to me if I do not speak. If I speak of them, knaves might learn [them]; and if I do not speak, the knaves might say, "Disciples of the wise are ignorant of our tricks" [and would deceive us still more].

[The question was raised]: Did Rabban Yohanan finally speak [of these sharp practices] or not? R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said: He did speak [of them]. He based himself on the verse "For the ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them; but transgressors do stumble therein" (Hos. 14:10).[3]

174. Our masters taught: Abba Saul son of Batnit collected three hundred jugs of wine from the foam in the vessel after it was measured,[4] and his associates collected three hundred jugs of oil from what was left in the vessel after it was measured. They brought the [six hundred] jugs to the treasurers [of the Temple] in Jerusalem[5] and were told, "You are not required to give them up." When Abba Saul and his associates insisted, "We do not wish to retain these jugs," the Temple treasurers replied, "Since you are determined to be stringent with yourselves, sell them and use the money earned for public needs."[6]

175. Our masters taught: As for those who hoard produce, lend money on interest, diminish measures, and raise prices, Scripture quotes such people as "saying: 'When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell grain? And the Sabbath, that we may set forth corn? making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances of deceit' " (Amos 8:5). And what follows directly? "The Lord hath sworn by the pride of Jacob: Surely I will never forget any of their works" (Amos 8:7).[7]

176. Elijah [the prophet] said: Once a man who had knowledge of Scripture but no knowledge of Mishnah came and sat before me. He said, "Listen, O master, to what happened to me. I sold four kor of dates to a heathen, and measured them out half a kor by half a kor in a dimly lighted room. The heathen said to me, 'You and God in heaven know the measure you are giving me.' Now, [as a matter of fact] I had given him three seah of dates less [than he had paid for]. Later, I took the money [he paid me] and with it purchased a jar of oil, which I left on the very spot where I had turned over the dates to the heathen. But the jar split apart, and the oil went to waste." So I said to the man, "My son, blessed be He who is everywhere, in whose presence there is no show of favor! When Scripture says, 'Thou shalt not take advantage of thy neighbor, nor cheat him' [Lev. 19:13], it means that your neighbor [whether Jew or heathen] should be treated like your brother. Hence, you learn that cheating a heathen is still cheating."[8]

177. "Thy silver is become dross, thy wine mixed with water" (Isa. 1:22). When a man went to a silversmith [for currency], he was apt to hear him mutter to his apprentice, "Copper it for him." So, too, when a man went to buy a pint of wine from a wine dealer, he was apt to hear him mutter to his clerk, "Water it for him." Hence it is written, "Thy silver is become dross, thy wine mixed with water."[9]

178. "Thou shalt not put a stumbling block before the blind" (Lev. 19:14)—[not just the physically blind, but] one who is "blind" in a particular matter. Thus, suppose such a one came to you and asked, "Is the daughter of So-and-so fit to marry into a priestly family?" Do not say to him, "She is fit," if in fact she is disqualified. If a man seeks your counsel, do not give him counsel that is not right for him. Do not say to him, "Leave early in the morning," so that brigands will rob him. Do not say to him, "Leave at noon," so that the sun will strike him. Do not say to him, "Sell your field and buy a donkey," so that you may circumvent him and take the field away from him. If you protest, "But it is sensible counsel I am giving him," remember that the matter is turned over to a man's heart, for the verse ends by saying, "Thou shalt fear thy God. I am the Lord." Of any matter that is turned over to a man's heart, Scripture says, "Thou shalt fear thy God."[10]

179. A tale of a city that had no salt. In that city there was a band of muleteers, who said, "Let us go at once to such-and-such a place, fetch salt, and sell it before others have the chance." Now, the muleteers had a chief of the band, and when they said, "Let us go to such-and-such a place," he replied, "I have to plow early tomorrow morning. Wait until I have plowed, and then we will get going." They said, "Very well." But then what did the chief of the band do? He whispered to his wife, "Make sure of this code: if I say, 'Fetch me the yoke,' you are to give me the saddle; if I say, 'Fetch me the plow handle,' you are to give me the sack." [She obeyed him.] Then what did he

---

1. B. BB 89a.
2. When buying grain, the trader will hold the leveler at the wide end, so that its narrow end does not touch the surface of the vessel; as a result, the entire surface is not leveled, thus allowing him a heaping measure. When selling, he holds the leveler at its narrow end, and so diminishes the measure.
3. B. BB 89b.
4. The foam was allowed to run off into a vat.
5. Because they thought that they were required to give them up as property defrauded from their customers.
6. B. Betz 29a; Tos Betz 3:9.
7. B. BB 90b.
8. TdE, ed. Friedmann, pp. 74–75 (JPS, p. 207); Yalkut, Tzav, §504.
9. PRKM 15:8 (PRKS, p. 283).
10. Sif Lev., ed. Weiss, p. 88d; B. Kid 32a.

do? He put the sack on the mule and went away [that night], while his fellows slept until morning. When they got up in the morning and called him, the neighbors said, "Whom are you looking for? So-and-so has been gone since last night." The muleteers left the same morning, and on the road they met their chief returning. They asked, "Why have you done this to us?" He replied, "Don't you really know why? If we had all gone, salt would have immediately declined greatly in price. But now I am the only one to bring salt [for sale]. Before you get back, mine will be sold. And when you do get back, you too will sell at a good price." Hence it is said of such men, "They speak falsehood every one with his neighbor; with smooth lip, and with a double heart do they speak" (Ps. 12:3). And so it goes: if you will not call the yoke "saddle" and the plow handle "sack," you cannot make out.[1]

180. A story about R. Jonathan at a time when lentils were scarce [in his town]. He had a kinsman in a certain city, and he went down to him and said, "I am looking for lentils. Are there any to be had in the city?" His kinsman replied, "There are." R. Jonathan asked, "At what price?" His kinsman answered, "At such-and-such a price. Any time that you come here, I shall get them for you." After a while, R. Jonathan went to the city and to his kinsman's house, inquiring after him. His kinsman's wife said, "He is in the field." R. Jonathan waited for him, but since he did not appear, R. Jonathan asked one of the men of the city, "Are there lentils to be had here?" The man answered, "No, but there is wheat." R. Jonathan said, "It's lentils I'm looking for." The man replied, "Would you pay such-and-such a price?" and the man quoted a price higher than the one R. Jonathan's kinsman had given him. Nevertheless, R. Jonathan agreed to the price. When his kinsman came back from the field, R. Jonathan said to him, "Did you not tell me that lentils sold at such-and-such a price? Yet your townsmen charged me a price higher than what you quoted." His kinsman asked, "You didn't mention lentils to them, did you?" R. Jonathan answered, "I did." His kinsman commented, "Had you said to the men of the city, 'It's wheat I'm looking for,' they would have asked you, 'Would lentils do?' But since you told them, 'It's lentils I'm looking for,' they asked you, 'Would you like wheat?' " Hence it is said of such men, "They speak falsehood every one with his neighbor; with smooth lip, and with a double heart do they speak" (Ps. 12:3).

R. Hiyya of Sepphoris went to Sura to buy wheat. R. Jonathan said to him, "When you want wheat, say, 'I am looking for barley,' and when you want barley, say, 'I am looking for wheat,' so that the price will not be increased for you."[2]

181. Abbaye said: One who wishes to present a specimen of his signature at a court of law should not write it at the foot of a [blank] scroll, lest someone find it and write above it that the signer owes him money.

A customs collector once came before Abbaye and said to him, "Will the master let me have his signature, so that when the sages come by and show it to me over your authorization, I will allow them to pass without paying tax."[3] Abbaye wrote it down for him at the head of a blank scroll. As the customs collector kept pulling the scroll up so that a blank space would be left above Abbaye's signature, Abbaye said to him, "The sages have long ago anticipated you."[4]

182. There is the story of a man who came before Rava with a deed bearing the signatures of Rava and R. Aha bar Adda. Rava said to the man, "The signature is mine. But I never signed anything ahead of R. Aha bar Adda." The man was placed under arrest, and he confessed. Then Rava said to him, "I can understand how you forged my signature. But how did you forge the signature of R. Aha bar Adda, whose hand trembles?" The man: "I put my hand on a rope bridge [which vibrates]." According to some, the man stood on a waterskin.[5]

183. There are seven kinds of thieves—the foremost among them is he who steals the good opinion of people.[6]

184. Samuel said: It is forbidden to steal the good opinion of people—even the good opinion of a heathen.[7]

185. Just as there is wronging in business, so there is wronging in speech. A man should not ask, "How much is this article?" if he does not intend to buy it. If a person is a penitent, one is not to say to him, "Remember the way you used to act." If a person is the son of proselytes, one should not taunt him with "Remember the way your fathers acted," as is said, "You shall not wrong a proselyte or oppress him" (Exod. 22:20).[8]

186. Our masters taught: "Ye shall not therefore wrong one another" (Lev. 25:17) means wronging through speech. You say, "Wronging through speech," but does not Scripture here mean wronging in matters of money? No, in saying earlier, "If thou sell aught unto thy neighbor, or acquirest aught of thy neighbor, ye shall not wrong one another" (Lev. 25:14), Scripture has already dealt with wronging in matters of money. Then "Ye shall not therefore wrong each other" must refer to wronging through speech. For example: If a person is a penitent, one should not say to him, "Remember the way you used to act." If he is the son of proselytes, he should not be taunted with "Remember the way your fathers acted." If he is a proselyte and comes to study Torah, one should not say to him, "Shall the mouth that ate unclean and forbidden food, abominable and creeping things, come to study the Torah, which was uttered by the mouth of the Almighty?" If a person is

---

1. MTeh 12:1; Yalkut, Ps., §656.
2. MTeh 12:1; Yalkut, Ps., § 656.
3. "His possession of Abbaye's signature, he contended, would enable him to verify Abbaye's signature on any authorization that might be presented to him" (BB, Soncino, p. 726, n. 16).
4. B. BB 167a.
5. Ibid.
6. Mek, Mishpatim, Nezikin, 13.
7. B. Hul 94a.
8. B. BM 58b.

visited by suffering, afflicted with disease, or has just now had to bury his children, one should not speak to him as Job's companions spoke: "Is not thy fear [of God] thy confidence, and thy hope the integrity of thy ways? Remember, I pray thee, whoever perished, being innocent?" (Job. 4:6ff.). If ass drivers ask to buy grain from him, he should not say to them, "Go to So-and-so, who sells grain," knowing full well that So-and-so has never done any such thing. R. Judah said: One should also not feign interest in a purchase when he has no money, since this is a matter turned over to the heart, and of everything turned over to the heart, it is written, "And thou shalt fear thy God" (Lev. 25:17).

R. Yohanan said on the authority of R. Simeon ben Yohai: Wronging through speech is more heinous than wronging in money matters. For of the first, it is written, "Thou shalt fear thy God," whereas of the second, "Thou shalt fear thy God" is not written. R. Eleazar said: The first affects a victim's very person; the second only his money. R. Samuel bar Nahmani said: For the second, restoration is possible; but not for the first.[1]

187. We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: A man should not urge his friend to dine with him if he knows that his friend will not do so. Nor should he offer him any gifts if he knows that his friend will not accept them. He should not make believe that it is for his guest's sake that he is broaching casks of wine that in fact he intends to turn over to a shopkeeper to be sold—he must inform the guest what his true intentions are. And he should not say to his guest, "Anoint yourself with oil," when he knows that the oil jar is empty. If, however, it is done so that the guest [may appear especially honored in the presence of others], it is permitted.[2]

188. Our masters taught: There are two reasons why a man should not sell his neighbor shoes made of the hide of an animal that died of itself, representing them as made of the hide of an animal that had been slaughtered: first, because he is deceiving him, and secondly, because of the danger.[3] A man should not send his neighbor a cask of wine with oil floating on top. It once happened that a man sent his friend a cask of wine seemingly filled to the brim with oil. [Believing that the cask was full of oil], the friend invited some guests to share it with him. When he dipped into the cask and found that [below the surface] it had only wine, [he was so humiliated that] he hanged himself.[4]

189. Mar Zutra son of R. Nahman was once walking from Sirka to Be Mahoza while Rava and R. Safra were walking to Sirka, and they met on the way. Believing that the two had come to meet him, Mar Zutra asked, "Why did the sages take the trouble to come such a distance [to meet me]?" R. Safra replied, "We did not know that the master was coming; had we known it, we would have come an even greater distance." Later, Rava asked R. Safra, "Why did you tell him what really happened? Now you have embarrassed him." R. Safra: "But if I hadn't told him, we would have been deceiving him." [Rava:] "No, he would have deceived himself."[5]

Returning a Lost Article

190. Our masters taught: In former times, whoever found a lost article used to announce the find during each of the three festivals, and for another seven days following the last festival—three days to allow the owner of the article to go home, another three days to allow him to return to Jerusalem, and another day to announce his loss. After the destruction of the Temple—may it be speedily rebuilt in our own days!—it was enacted that the announcing should be done in synagogues and houses of study. But when oppressors grew in number, it was enacted that only one's neighbors and acquaintances should be informed, and that that sufficed.

Who is meant by "When oppressors grew in number"? People who declared that lost property belonged to the king.

Our masters taught: In Jerusalem, there was a Stone of Losses. He who lost an article went there, and he who found one did likewise. The finder stood up and announced the find, and its owner stood up and called out the identifying marks, and had the article restored to him.[6]

191. A man who finds Torah scrolls must read them at least once every thirty days—if he cannot read, he must roll them open and reroll them.[7] But he must not begin study of new matter in them,[8] nor may another person read them with him.[9] A man who finds a garment must give it a shaking at least once every thirty days, and spread it out [to be aired] to preserve it, but not to enhance his own status.[10] Silver and copper vessels may be used, so that they [do not tarnish but] remain fit—not, however, in such a manner as to wear them out. Gold and glassware may not be touched until Elijah comes.[11] If a man finds a sack, a basket, or any other object it is beneath his dignity to pick up, he need not pick it up.[12]

192. Our masters taught: When a man finds wooden vessels, he may make use of them to keep them from rotting; if copper vessels, he may use them for hot water but may

---

1. Ibid.
2. B. Hul 94a.
3. "As the animal may have died through the bite of a serpent, and the hide of the animal may have become thereby contaminated" (Hul, Soncino, p. 528, n. 4).
4. B. Hul 94a.
5. B. Hul 94b.
6. B. BM 28b.
7. If left unused, they may become moldy and moth-eaten.
8. The long poring over the scrolls, which would be required, might injure them.
9. Since each is likely to pull the scroll to himself, the scroll may be injured.
10. To show others that he owns fine clothing.
11. The finder may not use them at all, since they do not deteriorate from disuse.
12. B. BM 29b.

not put them directly over the fire, because that wears them out; if silver vessels, he may use them for cold water, but not for hot water, because hot water tarnishes them; trowels and spades may be used with matter that is soft, but not with hard matter, which injures them; gold and glassware he may not touch until Elijah comes. Moreover, what the sages ruled concerning use of lost property, they also ruled concerning personal use of what is deposited in trust.[1]

193. Our masters taught: "And thou mayest hide thyself" (Deut. 22:1).[2] There are times when you may hide yourself and there are times when you may not. When, for example, may you hide yourself? If you are a priest, and the animal has gone astray in a cemetery; or you are an old man, and it is beneath your dignity [to lead an animal home]; or if your own task is more valuable than your neighbor's. Under such circumstances, "thou mayest hide thyself."[3]

194. R. Yohanan said: When a poor man restores a lost article to its owner, the Holy One, blessed be He, daily proclaims his merit.[4]

195. Alexander of Macedon paid a visit to a king at the end of the world[5] who showed him much silver and gold. Alexander said, "I have not come to see your silver and gold—it is your legal customs and practices I have come to observe." As Alexander and the king were engaged in discourse, two men came before the king for judgment. One said, "My lord king, I bought a ruin from this man, and, while clearing it, I found a treasure; and so I said to him, 'Take your treasure. I bought a ruin—I did not buy a treasure.' " The other argued, "Just as you are afraid of the punishment for robbery, so am I afraid of it. The fact is, I sold you the ruin and everything in it—from the depths of the earth to the heights of heaven."

The king addressed one of them and asked him, "Have you a son?" He replied, "Yes." The king asked the other, "Have you a daughter?" He replied, "Yes." "Go, then," said the king, "wed the one to the other, and let the two make use of the treasure." Alexander showed his amazement at this verdict. The king asked, "Have I not judged well?" Alexander: "Yes, well." The king: "If such a case had come up before you in your country, how would you have handled it?" Alexander replied, "I would have chopped off the head of the one and the head of the other, and the treasure would have gone to the king's house." The king: "Does the sun shine for you?" Alexander: "Yes." "Do rains come down upon you?" Alexander: "Yes." The king: "There are small cattle in your country, are there not?" Alexander: "Yes." The king: "May the breath of life in such a man as you be blasted out! It is only for the sake of the small cattle that the sun still shines for you, that the rain still comes down upon you."[6]

196. Simeon ben Shetah was a trader in flax. So his disciples said, "Master, give up this trade. We will buy you a donkey, and you will not have to weary yourself so much." They went and purchased a donkey from an Ishmaelite, which turned out to have a pearl entangled in its neck. They came to their master and said, "From now on, you will not need to weary yourself." When he asked them, "Why not?" they told him, "We bought you a donkey from an Ishmaelite, which has a pearl entangled in its neck." He asked them, "Did its former owner know about the pearl?" They replied, "Of course not." So he said to them, "Go and return it."

They argued with the master: "Even those who say that cheating a Gentile is forbidden nevertheless admit that an article lost by the Gentile may be kept!"

"What do you think?" [replied Simeon]. "That Simeon ben Shetah is a barbarian? Simeon ben Shetah would rather hear 'Blessed be the God of the Jews' than gain any profit in this entire world."[7]

197. R. Samuel bar Sosrati went up to Rome at a time when the empress had lost her ornaments, and he found them. She had it proclaimed throughout the city: "He who returns them within thirty days will receive such-and-such a reward; if after thirty days, he will have his head cut off." R. Samuel did not return them within thirty days; but after the thirty days, he returned them. She asked him, "Were you not in the city?" He said "Yes," [I was here]." "Did you not hear the proclamation?" "Yes, [I heard it]." "Then why did you not return them within thirty days?" "So that you should not say I did it because of fear of you—I did it because of fear of Heaven." At that, she said to him, "Blessed be the God of the Jews."[8]

198. There is the story of a man who passed by the entrance to R. Hanina ben Dosa's house and [inadvertently] left behind some hens, which R. Hanina ben Dosa's wife found. R. Hanina said to her, "Do not eat any of their eggs." The chickens and the eggs kept multiplying, and distressed R. Hanina and his wife so much that he sold them and bought some goats with the proceeds. Then it happened that the man who lost the hens was passing by and said to his companion, "It was here I left my hens." R. Hanina overheard him and asked, "Do you have any mark [to identify them]?" The man said, "Yes." He mentioned the mark and was allowed to take the goats.[9]

199. It is related of R. Phinehas ben Yair that when he was living in a city in the south, two poor men came there to seek a livelihood. They had with them two seah of barley, which they deposited with him, but then they forgot about

---

1. B. BM 30a.
2. "The beginning of the verse reads, 'Thou shalt not see thy brother's ox or his sheep go astray.' In the exegesis that follows, it is assumed that the 'not' may or may not refer to 'and thou shalt hide thyself,' according to circumstances" (BM, Soncino, p. 186, n. 2).
3. B. BM 30a.
4. Paraphrase of B. Pes 113a.
5. Believed to have been Africa, where, according to authors of antiquity, people led ideal lives. The Aramaic Katzeia is taken to mean "end of the world." See Saul Lieberman's note in PRKM, p. 274.
6. P. BM 2:5, 8c; Tanhuma, Emor, §6.
7. P. BM 2:5, 8c.
8. Ibid.
9. B. Ta 25a.

it and went away. Year after year, R. Phinehas ben Yair sowed the barley, reaped it, and stored it in a granary. After a lapse of seven years, the two men returned and asked for their barley. R. Phinehas ben Yair recognized them and said to them, "First fetch camels and asses, and then come and take your stores [of barley]."[1]

200. A story of a pious man: A Roman noblewoman lost a box full of denars. The pious man found it and took it to her house. When he brought it, people said to her, "He has no idea what is in it—that is why he brought it back to you." She answered, "The box is all gold on the outside, and yet you say that he did not know what is in it!" She said to the pious man, "May your mother be mated to you."[2] They exclaimed, "He returns your lost article, and you curse him!" She replied, "If there were just one more of his kind among his people, we would not last in the world."[3]

Workmen and Slaves

201. We have been taught: "Thou shalt not abuse a hired servant that is poor and needy. . . . In the same day thou shalt give him his hire . . . ; for he . . . setteth his life upon it" (Deut. 24:14–15). Why did the hired man climb a ladder [to build a house] or hang [precariously] from a tree [to gather its fruit] and risk death—was it not for his wage?

In another comment "He . . . setteth his life upon it" is interpreted to mean that he who holds back the wage of a hired person is as though he were taking his life from him.[4]

202. "Thou shalt not abuse a hired servant." But has it not already been said, "Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbor, nor rob him" (Lev. 19:13)? The repetition teaches that he who withholds the wage of a hired servant transgresses five precepts negative and positive. [Three negative]: "Do not defraud." "Do not rob." "The wages of a hired servant shall not abide with thee all night" (Lev. 19:13). [Two positive]: "In the same day thou shalt give him his hire" (Deut. 24:15). "Neither shall the sun go down upon [what is due] him" (ibid.).[5]

203. "In the same day thou shalt give him his hire . . . ; for he . . . setteth his heart upon it" (Deut. 24:15). The verse may be understood by the parable of a man who was walking on a road with his donkey trailing behind him. When a sheaf of corn was sold to the man, he put it on his shoulder. The donkey, plodding on the road behind the sheaf, hoped that he would get to eat it. But what did the owner do to the donkey? When he reached home, he put the donkey in its stall but tied up the sheaf high above it. People said to him, "You cruel man—the donkey kept running all the way because of the sheaf, and in the end you did not put the sheaf within its reach!" So it is with the hired servant who toils and moils all day, hoping for his wages, and you put him out empty-handed![6]

204. There is the story of R. Yohanan ben Matia, who said to his son, "Go out and hire some workmen for us." The son went ahead and contracted to provide them with food. When he came back, his father said to him, "Even if you were to provide them with the kind of banquet that was Solomon's in the time [of his glory], you will not have fulfilled your duty to them [with such an unclear contract], for they are children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Now, before they begin to work, go out and say to them, 'I engage you on condition that you make no claim upon me [for food] other than for bread and pulse.' "[7]

205. One time R. Yose of Yodkart hired workmen for his field. He was delayed [and] did not bring them their food [when mealtime came]. So they said to his son, "We are hungry." Since they happened to be sitting under a fig tree, the son cried out, "Fig tree, O fig tree, bring forth your fruit, that my father's workmen may eat!" It brought forth its fruit, and they ate. In the meantime, the father came back and said to the workmen, "Bear no grievance against me. I was delayed until now, because I have been occupied with performing a religious duty." They replied, "May He who is everywhere satisfy you, even as your son satisfied us." R. Yose: "In what way?" They told him about the miracle.[8]

206. Some porters [accidentally] broke a cask of wine belonging to Rabbah bar Bar Hanah. So he seized their clothes. When they went and complained to Rav, he said to Rabbah, "Return their clothes." Rabbah: "Is that the law?" Rav: "Yes—'that thou mayest walk in the way of good men' " (Prov. 2:20). So Rabbah returned the clothes to the porters, who then said, "We are poor men. We worked hard all day. We are hungry and have no money [for food]." Rav then said to Rabbah, "Go and pay them their wage." Rabbah: "Is that the law." Rav: "Yes—'keep the path of the saintly' " (ibid.).[9]

207. [A Hebrew may not be sold as a lifelong slave, for God said:] "They are My slaves" (Lev. 25:42). My claim to owning them came first: "whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt" (ibid.), with the stipulation "that they should not be sold as slaves" (ibid.).[10]

---

1. Deut. R. 3:3; P. Dem 1:3, 22a.
2. So emended by Saul Lieberman. Isaac Katz suggests: "May your people be inferior to you." Ephraim Hurwitz emends ummatekha ("your people") to read ematekha ("your fear") and translates the passage: "May your fear of God be restricted to you." Literally, "May your people be given over to you." Leon Nemoy suggests: "May your people cast you out from their midst."MTeh, YJS 2:431, n. 3.
3. MTeh 12:1; Yalkut, Ps., §656.
4. B. BM 112a.
5. Sif Deut., §278.
6. Exod. R. 31:7; Tanhuma, Mishpatim, §10.
7. B. BM 83a.
8. B. Ta 24a.
9. B. BM 83a.
10. Sif Lev., ed. Weiss, p. 109d.

208. "And his master shall bore his ear through with an awl," etc. (Exod. 21:6). Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai used to expound this verse in a symbolic way. Why was the ear singled out from all the other parts of the body? Because the Holy One said, "The ear heard My voice on Mount Sinai when I proclaimed, 'For unto Me the children of Israel are servants; they are My servants' [Lev. 25:55], and not servants of servants. Yet this man has gone and acquired a master for himself. Let his ear be bored through!"

"His master . . . shall bring him unto the door, or unto the doorpost" (Exod. 21:6). R. Simeon Berabbi expounded this verse in a symbolic way. Why are the door and the doorpost singled out from all other parts of the house? Because the Holy One said, "The door and the doorpost were witnesses in Egypt when I passed over the lintel and the two doorposts, and proclaimed, 'For unto Me the children of Israel are servants; they are My servants,' and not servants of servants. Then I brought them forth from bondage to freedom, yet this man has gone and acquired a master for himself. Let his ear be bored through in the presence of door and doorpost!"[1]

209. R. Jacob ben Zavdi said: Why is a slave to go free if his master causes him the loss of a tooth or an eye? Because [Canaan, the forebear of slaves, was condemned on account of what] "he saw [with his eye] . . . and told [with his mouth]" (Gen. 9:22).[2]

210. "If thy brother be waxen poor with thee, and sell himself unto thee" (Lev. 25:39). Scripture describes him as "thy brother," implying that you must treat him in a brotherly way. You might suppose that he too should regard himself as your brother. Therefore Scripture goes on to describe him as "slave" (ibid.). How are these seemingly contradictory instructions to be reconciled? You must treat him in a brotherly way, but he must regard himself as being in servitude.

"Do not make him perform the work of a slave" (Lev. 25:39). Do not make him carry [your] personal things before you to the bathhouse, nor put on your shoes for you.[3]

211. "You must not lord it over him harshly" (Lev. 25:43). Do not say to him, "Warm this cup," when you do not need it; "Cool this cup for me," when you do not need it; "Keep hoeing under this vine until I come," if such hoeing is not necessary. Should you protest, "But the fact is, I do need it," the truth of what you say is turned over to the heart. With regard to any matter turned over to the heart, Scripture says, "Thou shalt fear thy God" (Lev. 25:43).[4]

212. Our masters taught: "Since he has fared well with thee" (Deut. 15:16)—"with thee" in food; "with thee" in drink. For you may not eat fine bread while he eats coarse bread. You may not drink aged wine while he drinks new wine. You may not sleep on soft bedding while he sleeps on straw. Hence the saying: When a man buys a Hebrew slave, it is as though he had bought himself a master.[5]

213. "He shall work with thee" (Lev. 25:40). You may not turn over his skill to another person. If, say, he has been a public bath attendant, a public barber, or a public baker he should not continue working in such a capacity. R. Yose differed: If his skill had been thus employed before [he sold himself into servitude], he may continue with the same work; but at the outset, his master may not introduce him to such work.

In any event, the sages say: The slave must cut his master's hair, wash his clothes, and bake his dough.

"Then shall he go out from being with thee" (Lev. 25:41) implies that he should not live in a village while you live in the city or live in the city while you live in a village.[6]

214. R. Yose's wife had a quarrel with her maidservant, and in the maidservant's presence R. Yose declared his wife in the wrong. When she asked him, "Why do you declare me wrong in the presence of my maidservant?" he replied, "Did not Job say, 'If I did despise the cause of my manservant, or of my maidservant, when they contended with me—what then shall I do when God riseth up?' " (Job 31:13).[7]

215. He who is half-slave and half-free must work one day for his master and one day for himself. Such had been the opinion of the school of Hillel. But the school of Shammai said: You have made matters right for the master but not for the slave. He cannot marry a [heathen] bondwoman, for he is already half-free; nor can he marry a freewoman, because he is still half-slave. Shall he remain unmarried? But has not the world been created only for fruition and increase: "He created it not to be a waste, He formed it to be inhabited" (Isa. 45:18)? And so for the sake of the world's well-being, the master is compelled to manumit the slave, who must execute a writ of indebtedness for half his value.

Hearing this argument, the school of Hillel retracted its opinion and ruled in accord with the school of Shammai.[8]

216. There is a story of Rabban Gamaliel, who [accidentally] put out an eye of his slave Tabi. He rejoiced over it greatly [as he had been eager to set Tabi free],[9] and when he met R. Joshua, he said to him, "Do you know that my slave Tabi has gone free?" R. Joshua asked

---

1. B. Kid 22b, and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. Since he was condemned through misuse of these organs, he goes free upon the loss of either. Gen. R. 36:5.
3. Sif Lev., ed. Weiss, p. 109b.
4. Ibid.
5. B. Kid 22a.
6. Sif Lev., ed. Weiss, p. 109b.
7. Gen. R. 48:3.
8. B. Pes 88a–b; B. BB 13a.
9. But he could not, because the verse "You are to make them an inheritance for your children after you, to hold for a possession" (Lev. 25:4) is understood as prohibiting the freeing of one's slaves.

him, "What happened?" Rabban Gamaliel replied, "I [accidentally] put out one of his eyes."[1]

217. The instant Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] left the bathhouse, he wrapped himself in his garments and sat down to attend to the needs of the people. His servant mixed a cup of wine for him. Because Rabbi was busy attending to people's needs, he had no opportunity to receive the cup from his servant, who dozed off and fell asleep. When Rabbi turned and looked at him, he said: Well did Solomon say, "Sweet is the sleep of a laboring man . . . but the satiety of the rich will not suffer him to sleep" (Eccles. 5:11)—including the likes of us, who are so busy attending to the needs of people that we are not even allowed to sleep.[2]

218. It is enough for a servant to be like his master.[3]

219. Whatever a slave acquires, his master acquires.[4]

220. Our masters told the story of a man who was engaged in trade and had to put up at inns. [Wherever he went], his slaves went with him. The man had a son in the Land of Israel who labored at the study of Torah. Presently, while the father was staying at an inn, the time of his death approached. So he said, "What shall I do? If I bequeath all my possessions to my son, he will derive no benefit from them, because this slave here will grab everything and take off." Now, what did the man do? He said to the slave, "Go call a scribe for me." Then he said to the scribe, "Write a will giving my son the privilege of choosing any one object he may wish." [Turning to the slave], he went on, "And all the rest is yours." The will was written. The slave rose, folded it up, and brought it to the Land of Israel. When the son heard that his father was dead, he went into mourning for him. After the period of mourning ended, he asked the slave, "Where is my father's money?" The slave: "You have nothing. He bequeathed everything to me. But for you he stipulated that you have the privilege of choosing any one object you may wish—that is the only thing you have." So the son said, "We will go to court tomorrow." In the meantime, the young son went to his teacher and said to him, "I am in great trouble." The teacher: "What happened?" The young son: "My father bequeathed all his money to his slave, and to me he left nothing except for any one object that I may choose. I do not know what to do." The teacher: "Your father conferred a great boon upon you. He was a clever man and knew exactly what he was doing. Tomorrow, when you go to court and the will is read stipulating that everything is the slave's except that you may pick out whatever you want, place your hand on the slave and say, 'This is what I want,' with the result that the slave and all his money will be yours." And the son did just that.[5]

221. There is the story of an old slave who [to make himself look younger] went and had his head and beard dyed [black]. He then came to Rava and said, "Buy me." Rava replied by quoting "I prefer to have poor people [not slaves] as servants in my household." The slave then approached R. Papa bar Samuel, who bought him. Once, when R. Papa said to the slave, "Haul up some water for me to drink," the slave [to avoid the hard work] had his head and beard whitened again, and said, "See, I am older than your father."[6] At that, R. Papa bar Samuel quoted against himself the verse "The righteous is delivered out of trouble, and another cometh in his stead" (Prov. 11:8).[7]

222. Ten measures of sleep came down to the world—slaves took nine, and the entire rest of the world took one.[8]

223. R. Nahman said: A slave is not worth the bread it takes to fill his belly. Rava bar R. Joseph commented: What R. Nahman said applies only to such as his slave Daro, who is given to hopping from winehouse to winehouse.[9]

224. Don't put your trust in slaves.[10]

225. The more slaves, the more thievery. The more female slaves, the more lechery.[11]

226. A slave delights in loose living.[12]

227. Wicked slaves first do mischief and then seek advice.[13]

228. Most slaves are arrogant. Most sons of good families are modest.[14]

229. He who calls his fellow man a slave should be placed under a ban.[15]

230. An associate scholar's [haver's] slave is like an associate scholar.[16]

231. Our masters taught: For deceased male or female slaves, no row [of comforters] should be formed, nor should the mourners' grace after meals be spoken, nor condolences offered.

When the bondwoman of R. Eliezer died, his disciples came in to condole with him. At the sight of them, he went up to an upper chamber. They went up after him.

---

1. Cf above, part 2, chap. 11, §81. B. BK 74b.
2. Eccles. R. 5:11, §1.
3. B. Ber 58b. Cf. Matthew 10:25.
4. B. Pes 88b.
5. Yalkut, Eccles., §968.
6. It is unseemly for an aged man like me to do menial service for a much younger master.
7. B. BM 60b.
8. B. Kid 49b.
9. B. BK 97a.
10. B. BM 86b.
11. Avot 2:7.
12. B. Git 13a.
13. B. BB 4a.
14. P. Kid 4:11, 66c.
15. B. Kid 28a.
16. B. AZ 39a.

He then went into the bath chamber, and they followed him there. He then went into the great dining hall,[1] and they followed him there. Finally, he said to them: I thought that lukewarm water would be enough to "scald" you, but apparently even boiling water cannot do so. Have I not taught you that no row of comforters is formed at the death of male or female slaves, nor is the mourners' grace after meals spoken, nor condolence offered. What then is said over them? Even as for the loss of an ox or an ass, a man is told, "May He who is everywhere replenish your loss," so, at the death of a male or female slave, he is told, "May He who is everywhere replenish your loss."

We have been taught that no funeral oration is spoken for male and female slaves. R. Yose said: If the slave was a virtuous man, we say, "Alas for a good and faithful man who worked hard for his living." R. Yose was asked, "If so, what have you left to be said about free men who are virtuous?"

When Tabi, Rabban Gamaliel's slave, died, he accepted condolences for him. His disciples asked him, "Master, did you not teach us that condolences are not accepted for slaves?" He replied, "My slave Tabi was not like other slaves—he was a virtuous man."[2]

Compassion for God's Creatures

232. "This is my God, and I will glorify Him (ve-anvehu)" (Exod. 15:2). Abba Saul construed the word ve-anvehu [as made up of ani ve-hu], "I am to be like Him." Hence, as He is gracious and compassionate, so you are to be gracious and compassionate.[3]

233. We have been taught that R. Gamaliel Berabbi quoted, "When He endoweth thee with compassion, He will have compassion upon thee" (Deut. 13:18), and then said: When a man has compassion on God's creatures, compassion is shown him from Heaven. But when a man has no compassion on God's creatures, no compassion is shown him from Heaven.[4]

234. Be filled with compassion for one another, and the Holy One will be filled with compassion for you.[5]

235. Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai used to say: Because of three sinful things, householders are turned over to the [Roman] government: because they lend money on interest, because they gather paid-up writs of indebtedness,[6] and because they publicly make pledges for charity which they do not pay. Besides, they manage to evade [the Roman government's] yoke and shift it and its taxes onto the helpless poor and needy. Of such householders, Scripture says, "Cursed be he that confirmeth not the words of this Torah by obeying them" (Deut. 27:26), a verse that refers to rapacious householders.[7]

236. R. Nathan bar Abba said in the name of Rav: Babylonia's rich men are sure to go down into Gehenna. Thus, when Shabbetai ben Merinus happened to be in Babylonia and asked its rich men for money to help set him up in business, they did not give it to him. [Then he asked] for mere sustenance, but they did not give him even that. So he said: These rich men must be descendants of the mixed multitude.[8] For Scripture says, "When He endoweth thee with compassion, He will have compassion upon thee and multiply thee as He swore to thy fathers" (Deut. 13:18), proving that he who has compassion on God's creatures is assuredly of our father Abraham's progeny, whereas he who has no compassion on God's creatures is assuredly not of our father Abraham's progeny.[9]

237. "But unto you that fear My Name shall the sun of righteousness shine" (Mal. 3:20). Once, when Abba Tahnah the Pious was entering his city on Sabbath eve at dusk, a bundle slung over his shoulder, he came upon a man afflicted with boils lying [helplessly] at a crossroads. The man said to him, "Master, do an act of kindness for me—carry me into the city." Abba Tahnah replied, "If I abandon my bundle, how shall I and my household support ourselves? But if I abandon a man afflicted with boils, I will forfeit my life!" What did he do? He let his inclination to good overpower his impulse to evil, [set down his bundle on the road], and carried the afflicted man into the city. Then he returned for his bundle and reentered the city with the last rays of the sun. Everybody was astonished[10] and exclaimed, "Is this really Abba Tahnah the Pious?" He too felt uneasy at heart and said to himself: Is it possible that I have desecrated the Sabbath? At that, the Holy One caused the sun to continue to shine [a while longer, delaying the onset of Sabbath].[11]

238. R. Mani taught: When the Holy One said to Saul, "Now go and smite Amalek" (1 Sam. 15:3), Saul said to himself: If at the death of a single person the Torah ordains, "Bring a heifer whose neck is to be broken,"[12] how many more and more such heifers would have to be brought for the death of so many! In any event, if a human being has sinned, what sin has an animal committed? And if grown-ups have sinned, what sin did the little ones commit? At once a divine voice came forth and said, "Be not overly righteous" (Eccles. 7:16). Subsequently, after Saul had said to Doeg, "Turn thou and fall upon the priests" (1

1. A mourner usually spent the period of mourning in a room downstairs. R. Eliezer's demonstrative going to the upper chamber, the bathing quarters, and the festive dining area were meant to show that he did not observe mourning for the bondwoman.
2. B. Ber 16b.
3. B. Shab 133b.
4. B. Shab 151b.
5. Gen. R. 33:3.
6. And try to collect on them a second time.
7. ARNB 31.
8. They were not Hebrews. See Exod. 32:38.
9. B. Betz 32b.
10. At seeing the pious man carrying his bundle when the Sabbath was about to begin.
11. Eccles. R. 9:7, §1.
12. See Deut. 21.

Sam. 22:18), another divine voice came forth and said to him, "Be not overly wicked" (Eccles. 7:17).[1]

239. "But Saul and the people had pity on Agag" (1 Sam. 15:9). R. Simeon ben Lakish said: He who shows pity when he should be harsh will in the end be harsh when he should show pity, as is said "And Nob, the city of priests, smote he with the edge of the sword" (1 Sam. 22:19). Nob should not have been treated like Amalek's progeny![2]

240. Scripture prohibits inflicting pain on dumb creatures.[3]

241. The sufferings of Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] came upon him because of an [uncompassionate] act and left him because of a [compassionate] act.

They came to him because of an [uncompassionate] act: once, a calf was being taken to be slaughtered. It broke away, hid its head under the skirts of Rabbi's robe, and lowed pitifully, as though pleading, "Save me." "Go," said Rabbi, "for this you were created."

At that, it was declared [in Heaven], "Since he showed no pity, let sufferings come upon his head."

And left him because of a [compassionate] act: one day, Rabbi's maidservant was sweeping the house. [Seeing] some weasel pups lying there, she was about to sweep them away. "Let them be," he said to her, "for it is written, 'And His compassion is over all His works' " (Ps. 145:9).

At that, it was said [in Heaven], "Since he is compassionate, let us be compassionate to him."[4]

242. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: A man may eat nothing until he has fed his animal, as is said, "And I will give grass in thy fields for thy cattle" (Deut. 11:15), and only after that, "Thou shalt eat and be satisfied" (ibid.).[5]

243. A man may not purchase an animal, tame or wild, or a fowl, unless he has prepared feed for it.[6]

244. A man was walking on a road with his donkey trailing behind him. When a sheaf of corn was sold to the man, he put it on his shoulder. The donkey, plodding on the road behind the sheaf, hoped that he would get to eat it. But what did the owner do to the donkey? When he reached home, he put the donkey in its stall and tied up the sheaf high above it. People said to him, "You cruel man—the donkey kept running all the way because of the sheaf, and in the end you did not put the sheaf within its reach!"[7]

245. R. Jonah lectured at the entrance to Rabbi's house: "The Righteous One is concerned with the cause of the wretched" (Prov. 29:7). The Holy One, concerned about the dog's sustenance, which is scanty,[8] makes the food he eats remain in his stomach for three days.

R. Hamnuna said: It follows from the above that it is the right thing to throw raw meat to a dog. How much? R. Mari said: As much as the size of his ear—and [to discourage his hanging around you] the stick right after.[9]

246. Our masters taught: There are three kinds of men whose life is no life: those who are [overly] compassionate, those who are [too] prone to anger, and those who are [too] fastidious. R. Joseph said: The three qualities are in me.[10]

247. R. Yohanan said: The words "All the days of one prone to be afflicted are evil" (Prov. 29:7) refer to one who is [overly] compassionate. "And he who is pleased with himself hath a continual feast" (ibid.) refer to one who is hardhearted.[11]

Charity

248. R. Hama son of R. Hanina said: "After the Lord your God shall ye walk" (Deut. 13:5). But is it possible for a man to walk right behind the Presence? Has it not already been said, "The Lord thy God is a devouring fire" (Deut. 4:24)? Yes, but what the verse means is that you are to follow the ways of the Holy One. He clothed the naked: "The Lord God made for Adam and for his wife garments of skin, and clothed them" (Gen. 3:21). So should you clothe the naked. The Holy One visited the sick: "The Lord appeared unto him in the terebinths of Mamre" (Gen. 18:1). So should you visit the sick. The Holy One buried the dead: "He buried [Moses] in the valley" (Deut. 34:6). So should you bury the dead. The Holy One comforted mourners: "And it came to pass after the death of Abraham that God bestowed blessing upon Isaac his son" (Gen. 25:11). So should you comfort mourners.[12]

249. R. Assi said: Charity equals in importance all the other precepts combined.[13]

250. R. Eleazar said: Greater is he who does charity than he who offers all the sacrifices, for it is said, "To do charity and justice is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice" (Prov. 21:3).[14]

251. R. Eleazar said: When the Temple was standing, a man gave his shekel and thereby procured expiation.

---

1. B. Yoma 22b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. Eccles. R. 7:16, §1.
3. B. Shab 128b.
4. B. BM 85a; Gen. R. 33:3.
5. B. Git 62a.
6. P. Yev 15:3, 14d.
7. Exod. R. 31:7; Tanhuma, Mishpatim, §10.
8. Many half-wild dogs roamed the streets of cities in the Middle East.
9. B. Shab 155b.
10. B. Pes 113b.
11. B. BB 145b.
12. B. Sot 14a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
13. B. BB 9a.
14. B. Suk 49b.

But now that the Temple no longer stands, if charity is given, well and good; but if not, the [heathen] nations of the world will come and take it by force.[1]

252. "And you offer your compassion to the hungry" (Isa. 58:10)—to feed the hungry of Jacob, if you merit it; if you do not merit it, to feed the fat ones of Esau.

While asleep on the night of New Year's Day, R. Simeon ben Yohai saw in a dream that his sister's sons were ordered to pay [a tax of] six hundred denars to the [Roman] government. [To protect them], he insisted that they become administrators of charity.[2] When they asked R. Simeon, "Whose money are we to spend?" he replied, "Spend your own money, and keep a record. At the end of the year we will figure out the amount you spent, and pay you." They did so. But at the year's end they were denounced as dealing in silk without paying customs. So a senior official of the [Roman] government came to them and said, "Either you make a purple cloak for the ruler or be fined six hundred denars." [Since they could do neither], the official arrested them and confined them in prison.

When R. Simeon ben Yohai heard what happened, he went to them and asked, "How much did you spend?" They replied, "Here is the record." He proceeded to read it and found that they had spent six hundred denars less six. So he said, "Give me six denars, and I will get you out of prison." They said, "Just look: that senior official demands six hundred denars from us, and this one says, 'Give me six denars, and I will get you out of prison!' " R. Simeon persisted, "Give me six denars, and have no fear." So they took six denars and placed them in R. Simeon's hand, who then went and gave a bribe to the senior official to say nothing to the ruler, and got them out of prison. After they came out, they said to him, "Did you actually know that we would be arrested?" He said to them, "As you live, on the night of New Year's Day I was made aware that you would be fined six hundred denars." They reproached him: "If you had told us, we would have given six more denars to charity." He replied, "If I had told you, you would not have believed me."[3]

253. "The Lord will be thy confidence [be-kislekha]" (Prov. 3:26). R. Abba [construing the word be-kislekha as portmanteau of be-kis, "in the purse," and lekha, "to you"] said: The verse means that if you give charity out of your purse, the Holy One will protect you [lekha] from tributes, fines, poll taxes, and levies on crops.[4]

254. We have been taught that R. Judah said: Great is charity, for it brings near Israel's deliverance, as is said, "Keep ye justice, and practice charity, then My deliverance will be near to come" (Isa. 56:1).[5]

255. Our masters taught: It is related of King Monobaz[6] that during years of scarcity he spent all his own treasures and the treasures of his fathers on charity. His brothers and the other members of his family joined together in reproaching him: "Your fathers stored away treasures, adding to the treasures of their fathers, and you squander them!" He replied, "My fathers stored away for the world below, while I am storing away for the world above. My fathers stored away in a place where the hand of others can prevail, while I have stored away in a place where the hand of others cannot prevail. My fathers stored away something that produces no fruit, while I have stored away something that does produce fruit. My fathers stored away treasures of money, while I have stored away treasures of souls. My fathers stored away for others, while I have stored away for myself. My fathers stored away for this world, while I have stored away for the world-to-come."[7]

256. The sages said in the name of R. Eleazar: What is the meaning of "And he put on charity as a coat of mail" (Isa. 59:17)? It tells us that, just as in a coat of mail each and every scale joins the other to form one large piece of armor, so every small coin given to charity combines with the rest to form a large sum. Hence, R. Hanina said: The same lesson may be learned from "All of our acts of charity [together] are as a resplendent[8] garment" (Isa. 64:5). Just as in a garment each and every thread unites with the others to form a whole garment, so every small coin given to charity unites with the rest to form a large sum.[9]

257. R. Dostai son of R. Yannai preached: Pause and consider that the way of the Holy One is not like the way of flesh and blood. How does flesh and blood act? If a man brings a substantial present to the king, it may or may not be accepted; and even if it is accepted, it remains doubtful whether the man will be admitted into the king's presence. Not so with the Holy One. A man who gives but a small coin to a beggar is deemed worthy of being admitted to behold the Presence, as is written, "I shall behold Thy face through charity, and when I awake, shall be satisfied with thy likeness" (Ps. 17:15).

R. Eleazar used to give a small coin to a poor man and then recite the Tefillah, because, he said, it is written, "I, through charity, shall behold Thy face."[10]

258. "As for me, I shall behold Thy Presence through charity." Pause and consider how great is the power of charity! Merely because of the one small coin a man gives to the poor, he gets the right to behold the face of the Presence. In the usage of the world, however, a Roman noblewoman wishing to see the emperor and wait upon

---

1. B. BB 9a.
2. He hoped that the merit thus gained would relieve them of the tax.
3. Yalkut, Be-har, §665.
4. P. Pe 1:1, 15b.
5. B. BB 10a.
6. King of Adiabene (first century C.E.) who embraced Judaism. See Josephus Antiquities 20:2–4.
7. B. BB 11a.
8. The word iddim ("polluted") may be read adayim ("resplendence" or "resplendent"), as here. Moshe Alshekh, ad loc., takes it in this sense.
9. B. BB 9b.
10. B. BB 10a.

him must make a wreath befitting her status, and only then, because of the wreath with which she enters to crown the emperor, is she permitted to behold the emperor's face. But on account of the one small coin the man gives to a poor man, he is accorded the right to behold the face of the Presence.

Another comment: What made David single out the power of charity? To prove that even wicked men who had earned no merit other than their having given alms are privileged by this deed alone to have the glory of the Presence revealed to them.[1]

259. R. Akiva gave the following exposition, at times in the name of R. Ammi, and at other times in the name of R. Assi: What is meant by "Thus saith the Lord: Though they be in full strength and likewise many, even so shall they be sheared—that one shall cross" (Nah. 1:12)? When a man sees that his livelihood is barely sufficient, he should nevertheless give charity out of it, and all the more so if it is plentiful. What is meant by the words "Even so shall they be sheared—that one shall cross"? The sages in the school of R. Ishmael taught: Whoever shears off part of his possessions and dispenses it as charity is delivered from the punishment of Gehenna. A parable of two ewes, one shorn and the other unshorn, crossing a body of water: the shorn one gets across; the unshorn one does not.[2]

"And though I have afflicted thee" (Nah. 1:12). Mar Zutra said: Even a poor man who himself subsists on charity should give charity. "I will afflict thee no more" (Nah. 1:12). R. Joseph taught: [If he does that], he will never again experience the trials of poverty.[3]

260. R. Joshua ben Levi said: He who is in the habit of giving charity merits having sons who are masters of wisdom, masters of wealth, and masters of Aggadah.[4]

261. R. Joshua taught: More than what a householder does for the poor man, the poor man does for the householder, as is said, "The man's name whom I helped today is Boaz" (Ruth 2:19). Ruth said not, "Who helped me," but, "Whom I helped."[5]

262. We have been taught that R. Meir said: Should a disputant attempt to argue, "If your God loves the poor, why does He not maintain them?" say to him, "So that through the poor we may be saved from the punishment of Gehenna." This very question was actually put by the tyrant Rufus to R. Akiva: "If your God loves the poor, why does He not maintain them?" When R. Akiva replied, "So that we may be saved through them from the punishment of Gehenna," Rufus countered, "On the contrary, it is this which condemns you to Gehenna. I will illuminate the matter by the parable of a king of flesh and blood who became angry with his slave, put him in prison, and ordered that he be given neither food nor drink. A certain man went [to the prison] and gave him food and drink. When the king hears what the man did, would he not be angry with him? And you, after all, are no more than God's slaves, as is written, 'For unto Me the children of Israel are slaves' " (Lev. 25:55). R. Akiva replied, "I will illustrate the matter by another parable, the one of a king of flesh and blood who became angry with his son, put him in prison, and ordered that he be given neither food nor drink. Then a certain man went [to the prison] and gave him food and drink. When the king hears what the man did, would he not send him a present? [Remember that in another verse we are not called slaves]—we are called sons, as is written, 'Sons are ye to the Lord your God' " (Deut. 14:1). Rufus: "You are called both sons and slaves. When you obey the will of Him who is everywhere, you are called sons, but when you do not obey the will of Him who is everywhere, you are called slaves. At the present time, you do not obey the will of Him who is everywhere." R. Akiva replied, "Scripture says, 'Is it not to share thy bread with the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out to thy house?' [Isa. 58:7]. When is one to bring the poor who are cast out into one's house? At the present time [when we are cast into exile]. Of such a time, we are told 'to share thy bread with the hungry.' "[6]

263. "He will take hold of My strength; he will make peace with Me" (Isa. 27:5). R. Judah son of R. Simeon said: The poor man sits and complains,[7] saying, "How am I different from So-and-so? Yet he sits in his own house, while I sit here; he sleeps in his own house on his own bed, while I sleep on the bare ground." So you come forward and give him something. Then, as you live, I will deem it as though you had made peace between him and Me.[8]

264. We have been taught that R. Eleazar son of R. Yose said: All acts of charity and loving-kindness that Israel performs in this world bring great peace and effective advocates between Israel and their Father in heaven. On the other hand, "for lack of charity and compassion, I have taken away from them, saith the Lord, My [advocates of] peace" (Jer. 16:5).[9]

265. "He who [at once] expects hand for hand is a bad man who will not go unpunished" (Prov. 11:21). R. Phinehas said: The verse spoke of a man who does a charitable act and expects the reward for it at once. Such a man, said R. Simeon, is like one who says [to God], "Here is the sack, the sela coin, and the seah measure. Get up at once and measure it out."[10]

266. R. Judah used to say: Ten strong things have been created in the world. The [rock of the] mountain is hard,

---

1. MTeh 17:14.
2. Her unshorn wool absorbs so much water that its weight pulls her under and drowns her.
3. B. Git 7b.
4. B. BB 9b.
5. Lev. R. 34:9.
6. B. BB 10a.
7. The poor man questions Providence.
8. Lev. R. 34:16; Yalkut, Isa., §496.
9. B. BB 10a.
10. Reward for charity is not a buying-and-selling transaction in the marketplace; it is an act of divine justice performed in God's own time. P. Sanh 10:1, 27d.

but iron cleaves it. Iron is hard, but fire softens it. Fire is powerful, but water quenches it. Water is heavy, but clouds bear it. Clouds are thick, but wind scatters them. Wind is strong, but a body resists it. The body is strong, but fear crushes it. Fear is powerful but wine banishes it. Wine is strong, but sleep works it off. Death is stronger than all, yet charity delivers from death, as is written, "Charity delivereth from death" (Prov. 10:2).[1]

267. We have been taught the following incident concerning Benjamin the Righteous, who was supervisor of the charity fund. One day, during a year of scarcity, a woman came to him and said, "Master, provide sustenance for me." He replied, "By the Temple worship, there is no money left in the charity fund." She said, "Master, if you do not provide for me, a woman and her seven children will perish." So he provided for her out of his own pocket. Sometime afterward, he became so ill that he was on the point of death. Then the ministering angels said to the Holy One, "Master of the universe, You have said that he who saves the life of one soul in Israel is considered as if he had saved the entire world. Shall Benjamin the Righteous, who saved the lives of a woman and her seven children, die after so few years of life?" His sentence of death was immediately torn up.

The sages taught that twenty-two years were added to his life.[2]

268. There is a story of a certain pious man who was in the habit of giving charity. Once, while traveling on a ship, a storm arose and the ship sank into the sea. R. Akiva, who saw what happened, came before the court to testify on behalf of the pious man's wife, so that she might be declared free to remarry. Before the time came for R. Akiva to stand up, the pious man entered and stationed himself before him. R. Akiva asked, "Are you not the one who was drowned at sea?" The pious man: "Yes, I am." R. Akiva: "And who brought you up from the sea?" The pious man: "The charity I dispensed—it brought me up from the sea." R. Akiva: "How do you know that?" The pious man: "When I went down to the nethermost depths, I heard a mighty roaring among the waves, one wave calling out to another, 'We must rush to bring this man up from the sea, because he dispensed charity all his days.' " At this, R. Akiva began to say, "Blessed be God, the God of Israel, who has chosen the words of Torah and the sayings of the sages, for the words of Torah and the sayings of the sages endure forever and ever and ever, as it says, 'Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days' [Eccles. 11:1]. And it is also written, 'Charity delivereth from death' " (Prov. 10:2).[3]

269. R. Akiva had a daughter. When astrologers told him, "On the day she is to enter the bridal chamber, a snake will bite her, and she will die," he was extremely distressed about this prediction. On the day [of her marriage], she happened to be holding a long ornamental pin, which she stuck into the opening of a wall. By chance, the pin penetrated the eye of a snake [coiled behind the wall] and remained stuck there. The next morning, when she took out the pin, the dead snake was pulled out with it. Her father asked, "Did you do anything unusual?" She replied, "Last evening a poor man came to the door. Everybody was busy with the banquet, and no one heard him. So I took the gift you had given me and gave it to the poor man." "You have acted in a meritorious manner," he said to her. And then R. Akiva went out and lectured: "Charity delivereth from death" (Prov. 10:2)—not [merely] from an unnatural death, but from death, whatever the cause.[4]

270. R. Hanina had two disciples who went out to chop wood. When an astrologer saw them, he said, "These two will go out and not come back." As they went forth, an old man encountered them and said, "Give me alms—it is three days since I tasted anything." They had only one loaf of bread, but they broke off half of it and gave it to the old man. After he ate, he prayed in their behalf and then said to them, "Even as you have preserved my life this day, so may your life be preserved this day." The two disciples came back as safely as they had gone out. Some men who happened to hear what the astrologer had said asked him, "Did you not say, 'These two will go out and not come back'? We have here," they continued, "a liar, whose astrology is a lie." Nevertheless, they went off, made a search, and found a dead snake, half of it in one bundle of wood and the other half in another bundle.[5] They asked the disciples, "What good deed did you do today?" The disciples told them what had happened. The astrologer said, "What am I to do if the God of the Jews is willing to be seduced by half a loaf?"[6]

271. [One day] Samuel and Avlat, who happened to be sitting together, saw some people going to a meadow. Avlat said to Samuel, "That man is going but will not come back, for a snake will bite him and he will die." Samuel replied, "If he is a Jew, he will go and return." They were still seated there when the man who had gone returned. Avlat arose, removed the man's pack from his back, and found in it a snake cut in two. Samuel asked the man, "What unusual thing did you do?" He replied, "Every day we pool our bread and eat it. But today one of us had no bread, and he was too embarrassed [to ask for some]. So I decided: I shall undertake to [collect the bread and] put it in the basket. When I got to him, I pretended to take bread from him, so that he would not be embarrassed." Samuel said to the man, "You have done a meritorious deed." Then Samuel went out and expounded the words "Charity delivereth from death" (Prov. 10:2)—not merely from unnatural death, but from death, whatever the cause.[7]

---

1. B. BB 10a.
2. B. BB 11a.
3. ARN 3.
4. B. Shab 156b.
5. The snake was cut in two.
6. P. Shab 6:9, 8d.
7. B. Shab 156b.

272. "Abraham was old, well advanced in years" (Gen. 24:1). R. Meir happened to go to Mamla, where he saw that all the townspeople had black hair.[1] So he asked, "Are you perhaps of the family of Eli, who were told, 'All the increase of thy house shall die young men' (1 Sam. 2:33)?" They replied, "Master, pray for us." He said, "Go and busy yourselves with charity, and you will attain old age."

What is the proof? "The hoary head is a crown of glory" (Prov. 16:31). Where is a hoary head found? "It is found in the way of charity" (ibid.). From whom may one learn that this is so? From Abraham, of whom Scripture asserts [that he instructed his children] "to keep the way of the Lord, to practice charity, and do justice" (Gen. 18:19). And therefore he attained old age—"Abraham was old, well advanced in years."[2]

273. R. Eleazar of Bartota said: Give Him of that which is really His, for you and what is yours are His. Thus, we find David saying, "Since all things come from Thee, we have given Thee of Thine" (1 Chron. 29:14).[3]

274. It is related that, during a year of scarcity, when a certain pious man gave a denar to a poor man on the eve of New Year's Day, his wife scolded him. So he went and spent the night in the cemetery, where he overheard two spirits conversing with each other. One said to her companion, "My dear, come and let us roam about the world, and learn from behind the [heavenly] curtain what suffering is to come to the world." Her companion replied, "My dear, I cannot roam, buried as I am in a matting of reeds.[4] But you go, and whatever you hear, come back and tell me." So the one went off, roamed about, and returned. When her companion asked, "My dear, what have you heard from behind the [heavenly] curtain?" she replied, "I heard that whoever sows before the first rainfall will have his crop smitten by hail." So the [pious] man went and sowed before the second rainfall, with the result that everyone else's crop was smitten, but his was not.

The next year, he again went and spent the night in the cemetery, where he again overheard the two spirits conversing with each other. One said to her companion, "Come and let us roam about the world, and learn from behind the [heavenly] curtain what suffering is to come to the world." Her companion replied, "My dear, have I not already told you that I cannot roam because I am buried in a matting of reeds? But you go, and whatever you learn, come back and tell me." So the one went off, roamed about the world, and returned. When her companion asked, "My dear, what have you learned from behind the [heavenly] curtain?" she replied, "I learned that whoever sows before the second rainfall will have his crop smitten with blight." So the [pious] man went and sowed before the first rainfall, with the result that everyone else's crop was blighted, but his was not.

The man's wife asked, "How is it that last year everyone else's crop was smitten and yours was not, and this year everyone else's crop is blighted and yours is not?" So he related to her all these happenings.

The story goes that, a few days later, a quarrel broke out between the wife of that pious man and the mother of the young woman [buried in the cemetery]. The wife of the pious man said to the other, "Come, and I will show you that your daughter is buried in a matting of reeds." The next year, the [pious] man again went and spent the night in the cemetery, where he overheard the same two spirits conversing with each other. When the one said, "My dear, come and let us roam about the world, and learn from behind the [heavenly] curtain what suffering is to come to the world," her companion replied, "My dear, leave me alone. Our conversation is already bruited among the living."[5]

275. There is the story of how R. Eliezer, R. Joshua, and R. Akiva went to a suburb of Antioch to make a collection for [the support of] the sages. In that suburb there was one, Abba Yudan by name, who used to give charity with much goodwill, but by that time he had become impoverished. At the sight of our masters, his face turned the color of saffron, and he went home. His wife asked him, "Why is your face sickly?" He replied, "Our masters are here, and I do not know what to do." His wife, who was even more pious than he, said to him, "We have only one field left. Go, sell half of it, and give them [the proceeds]." He went and did so. At that, our masters prayed in his behalf and then said to him, "Abba Yudan, may He who is everywhere make up what you lack." After a while, he went out to plow the half-field that remained his. As he plowed, the ground opened up underneath him, so that his heifer dropped into the hole and its leg was broken. When he went down to bring it up, the Holy One provided light for his eyes, so that he noticed a buried treasure under his heifer. He said, "It was for my sake that my heifer's leg broke."

When our masters came back to the same place, they inquired after him, saying, "How is Abba Yudan doing?" People told them, "Abba Yudan—who can have the privilege of actually seeing his distinguished visage? He is Abba Yudan the possessor of servants, Abba Yudan possessor of goats, Abba Yudan possessor of donkeys, Abba Yudan possessor of camels, Abba Yudan possessor of oxen!" When Abba Yudan heard [of the masters' arrival], he went out to meet them. They asked him, "How is Abba Yudan doing?" He replied, "Your prayer has produced fruit, and fruit from fruit." They said, "As you live, even though others gave more than you did, we wrote you down at the head [of the list]." Then they took him and seated him with themselves, applying to him the verse "A man's gift maketh room for him, and bringeth him before great men" (Prov. 18:16).[6]

276. The story is told of a man who practiced charity so ardently that he sold his house and all he had, and spent

---

1. None was old enough to have it turn gray.
2. Gen. R. 59:1.
3. Avot 3:7.
4. And ashamed to show myself in such poor garb.
5. B. Ber 18b.
6. P. Hor 5:4, 48a; Lev. R. 5:4; Yalkut, Re'eh, §884.

the proceeds on charity. Once, on Hoshana Rabbah[1] his wife gave him ten small coins[2] and said to him, "Go to the market and buy something for your children." No sooner did he leave for the market than the collectors for charity happened to meet him and said, "Here comes the lord of charity! Contribute your share to this charity, for we want to buy a wedding dress for a certain orphan girl." He took the ten coins and gave them to the collectors. Ashamed to go home, he went to the synagogue, where he saw some of the etrogim that the children throw about on Hoshana Rabbah. So he took some, filled his sack with them, and set out on a voyage upon the Great [Mediterranean] Sea, until he reached the king's capital city. It so happened that when he arrived there, the king had a pain in his bowels and was told in a dream, "Eat of the etrogim that the Jews use during their prayers on Hoshana Rabbah, and you will be healed." So they searched all the ships and all the city, but found none. Finally, they came upon that man sitting on his sack and asked him, "Have you anything [for sale] in your sack?" He replied, "I am a poor man and have nothing to sell." But they examined his sack and, finding some etrogim, asked, "Where are these from?" He told them that they were some of those that the Jews use during their prayers on Hoshana Rabbah. So they picked up the sack and brought it to the king, who ate some of the etrogim and was cured. Then they emptied the sack and filled it with denars.[3]

277. There is the story of Bar Mayan, a customs collector, who died on the same day a certain pious man died. All the inhabitants of the city came and formed the funeral procession following the bier of the pious man, while immediately behind, only the customs collector's kinsmen followed his bier. It so happened that foes attacked both processions, and the mourners abandoned both biers and fled, except for one disciple who remained at his master's bier. After a while, when the inhabitants of the city returned to bury the pious man, they mistook the bier of the customs collector for his. Even though the disciple cried out in protest, they paid no attention to him. Thus it came about that only the customs collector's kinsmen buried the pious man.

The disciple kept grieving: "What sin has caused that pious man to be buried in such disgrace, and what merit caused that wicked man to be buried with such great honor?" His pious master appeared to him in a dream and said, "My son, do not grieve. On one occasion I heard disparaging remarks about disciples of the wise and did not protest, and that is why I was punished. As for the customs collector, on one occasion he prepared a banquet for the governor of the city; when the governor of the city did not appear, he distributed the food to the city's poor, and that is why he merited being buried with such honor. But come, and I will show you the honor that is mine in the Garden of Eden, and the punishment that is his in Gehenna." The disciple saw the pious man walking about in gardens and orchards planted by springs of water, and saw Bar Mayan's tongue slavering after the edge of a river in an effort to get to the water, which it could not reach.[4]

278. It is related of R. Tarfon that, although he was very wealthy he did not give many gifts to the poor. Once, R. Akiva met him and said to him, "Master, would you like me to purchase one or two hamlets for you?" He replied, "Yes," and forthwith handed R. Akiva four thousand gold denars. R. Akiva took the money and distributed it among poor disciples of the wise. Later on, R. Tarfon met him and asked, "Where are the hamlets you purchased for me?" R. Akiva took him by the hand and led him to the house of study where he brought over a child holding the book of Psalms in his hand and made him read in it until he came to the verse "He hath scattered abroad; he hath given to the needy; his righteousness endureth forever" (Ps. 112:9). Then R. Akiva said, "This is the hamlet I bought for you." At that, R. Tarfon stood up, kissed him, and said to him, "You are my teacher and my guide—my teacher in wisdom, my guide in proper conduct." And he gave him additional money to distribute.[5]

279. On one occasion, when the sages needed contributions to charity, they sent out R. Akiva and one of the sages with him. As the two were about to enter the house of Bar Buhin,[6] they heard a child's voice asking his father, "What shall we get you for today's meal?" The father replied, "Endives—not today's but yesterday's, because, being wilted, they sell at a low price."

So the sages decided to let Bar Buhin be, and went on. After everyone had contributed, the sages came back to Bar Buhin's house. When he asked them, "Why did you not come to me first, as has been your practice?" they replied, "We did come, and this is what we heard." He said, "What there is between me and the child, you know, but you do not know what there is between me and my Creator. Nevertheless, go and tell my wife that she is to give you a measure of denars." When they went and told her, she asked them, "What did he say to you—a full measure or a skimpy measure?" They replied, "He merely said, 'A measure.' " At this, she responded, "I will give you a full measure. If he said, 'A full measure,' I would have done just what he said. But since he did not say [a full measure], I will deduct the surplus from my marriage settlement." When her husband heard what she had done, he doubled her marriage settlement.[7]

280. When a poor man goes to a householder and says, "Give me something to eat," if the householder gives him something to eat, well and good; if not, "the rich and the poor meet together—but the maker of both is the Lord" (Prov. 22:2). He who made the householder rich will make him poor; He who made the poor man poor will make him rich.[8]

---

1. The seventh day of Tabernacles.
2. Enough to buy a loaf of bread or a litra of meat.
3. Lev. R. 37:2.
4. P. Hag 2:2, 77d; Rashi on B. Sanh 44b.
5. Ka 2.
6. So in Esther R. 2:3. In P. Pes: "Ben Mevi Yayin" ("Son of a Wine Buyer").
7. P. Pes 4:9, 31b–c.
8. B. Tem 16a.

281. "The rich and the poor meet together." The rich man may say to the poor man, "Why don't you go out and work at a job? Look at those thighs! Look at those shanks! Look what a belly! Look at that brawn!" The Holy One will then say to the rich man, "Is it not enough for you that you gave him nothing of yours! Must you also cast a grudging eye on what I gave him?"[1]

282. "Rob not the impoverished because he is impoverished" (Prov. 22:22). Our masters said: What is Scripture talking about? If he is impoverished, how can he be robbed? Scripture must be speaking here of gifts to the poor that one is obliged by Torah to give, namely, gleanings, forgotten sheaves, corners of the field, and the poor man's tithe.[2] The Holy One thus admonishes that one is not to rob the poor of the gifts due them. "Because he is impoverished"—sufficient for him is his poverty. It is not enough for the rich man that he lives in comfort while the poor man is in distress; must he also rob the poor of what the Holy One has allotted to him?[3]

283. "He that hath an evil eye hasteneth after riches, and knoweth not that want shall come upon him" (Prov. 28:22). The story is told of a certain man who was scrupulous about paying his tithes. He had a field that yielded a thousand measures, from which he would pay a hundred measures in tithes; from the remainder, he provided for himself and the members of his household. When he was about to die, he called his son and said to him, "My son, give heed to this field, which produces so-and-so many measures, and from which I have been paying so-and-so many measures in tithes. From this field, I sustained myself all my life."

The first year the son sowed the field, it produced a thousand measures, from which he gave a hundred measures in tithes. The second year, however, the evil eye entered into him, and he reduced his tithes by ten. At that, the field in turn produced a hundred measures less. The same thing happened the third, fourth, fifth, [and subsequent] years, until finally the field produced only [one hundred measures], the amount of the original tithe. When his kinsmen observed what had happened, they put on white [festive] undergarments and wrapped themselves in white [festive] outergarments, and went to his house. He asked, "What! Have you come to gloat over me?" They replied, "God's mercy, no! We came only to rejoice with you. In the past, you were the owner and the Holy One was the priest. Now you have become the priest,[4] and the Holy One is the owner."[5]

284. R. Hiyya said to his wife, "When a poor man comes, hurry to offer him bread, so that others may hurry to offer [bread] to your children." She asked, "Are you cursing them by wishing them to be poor?" R. Hiyya replied, "The verse 'For in return (bi-gelal) for this thing" (Deut. 15:10)—so it is taught in the school of R. Ishmael—means "a wheel that keeps turning (galgal) around and around in the world."[6]

285. R. Joshua ben Korhah said: Anyone who shuts his eye from the obligation of charity is like one who worships idols.[7]

286. "And it came to pass in the days when judges were judged that there was a famine in the Land. And a certain man of Bethlehem . . . went" (Ruth 1:1). Woe to the generation whose judges must be judged. Elimelech was one of the notables of his province and one of the leaders of his generation. But when the years of famine came, he said, "Now all of Israel will come knocking at my door, one with a large basket and another with a small basket [begging for food]." What did he do? He got up and ran away from them.[8]

287. Take care that the doors of your house are not shut when you sit down to eat and drink.[9]

288. It is related that a certain [widow] lived in the vicinity of a landowner, and when her two sons went into his field to glean, he refused them permission. Their mother kept saying, "When my sons return from the field, perhaps I will find something to eat in their hands"; at the same time, the sons were saying, "When shall we return to our mother? Perhaps she has gotten her hands on something to eat." In the end, she got nothing to eat from them, and they got no food with her. So they put their heads between their mother's knees, and all three died the same day. Thereupon the Holy One said to such landowners, "You exact from them nothing less than their lives; as surely as you live, I will exact your lives from you." For it is stated, "Rob not the weak, because he is weak, neither crush the poor in the gate; for the Lord will plead their cause, and despoil of life those that despoil them" (Prov. 22:22).[10]

289. It is related of Nahum of Gamzo[11] that he was blind in both eyes, stumped in both hands, and crippled in both legs; his entire body was covered with boils, and the legs of his bed stood in four basins of water to prevent ants

---

1. Lev. R. 34:7.
2. Lev. 19:9–10; Deut. 24:19 and 14:28ff.
3. Num. R. 5:2.
4. The point is that the son, who at the end gets only one hundred measures from the field, is getting from it only the amount of the original tithe. And since this amount is what the priest got, the relatives sarcastically designate him a "priest." See Num. 5:10 and Rashi, ad loc.
5. Exod. R. 31:17; Yalkut, Prov., §962.
6. The poor become rich, and the rich become poor.
7. B. Ket 68a.
8. B. Ket 68a. In the source, the idea that not helping a needy person and subversion lead to the worship of idols is described as "belial" [beli-yaal], which means "one who casts off [God's] yoke." The man of means should know that what he has came from God, yet he refuses to share what has been entrusted to him.
9. Ruth R. 1:4; Yalkut, Ruth, §598.
10. ARN 38.
11. Gimzo is mentioned in 2 Chron. 28:18 as the name of a place. Here it is a surname or epithet, the combination of gam (too) and zo ("this")—allegedly derived from Nahum's customary remark when misfortune overtook him: "This, too, is for good."

from crawling all over him. Once, when his bed was in a house about to collapse, his disciples proposed to remove his bed first and then clear the furniture out of the house. But he said to them, "My children, remove the furniture first and then my bed, for you may be sure that, so long as I am in the house, it will not collapse." So they cleared out the furniture first and then removed his bed, and in the next moment the house collapsed. His disciples asked, "Master, since you are so perfectly righteous, why has all this [affliction] come upon you?" He replied, "My children, I invoked it upon myself. Once, I was journeying to my father-in-law's house and had with me three heavily laden asses, one with food, another with drink, and the third with all kinds of delicacies. A poor man appeared on the road and stopped in front of me, saying, 'Master, give me something to sustain me.' I replied, 'Wait until I unload the ass.' I had barely managed to unload the ass when the man's soul departed. I then threw myself over him and cried out, 'Let these eyes of mine, which had no pity upon your eyes, be blinded; let these hands of mine, which had no pity upon your hands, be stumped; let these legs of mine, which had no pity upon your legs, be crippled!' Nor could my conscience rest until I added, 'Let my whole body be covered with boils.' " His pupils exclaimed, "Woe unto us that we see you in such a state!" Nahum replied, "Woe indeed, but unto me if you had not seen me in such a state!"[1]

290. "It is for Saul, and for his bloody house, because he put to death the Gibeonites" (1 Sam. 21:1). But where [in Scripture] do we find that Saul put to death the Gibeonites? [He did not.] However, because he put to the sword Nob, the city of priests, who provided the Gibeonites with water and sustenance, Scripture deems it for him as though he had actually put them to death.[2]

291. We have been taught that Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai asked his disciples: What is meant by the verse, "Charity exalted the nation, but loving-kindness is a sin for [other] peoples" (Prov. 14:34)? R. Eliezer spoke up and said: "Charity exalteth the nation," that is, Israel, concerning which it is said, "Who is like Thy people, like Israel, a nation one in the earth" (2 Sam. 7:23); "but loving-kindness is a sin for [other] peoples"—even all the acts of charity and loving-kindness that [heathen] peoples of the world perform are deemed a sin for them, because they perform such acts only to enhance their greatness. R. Joshua spoke up and said: "Charity exalteth the nation," that is, Israel; "but loving-kindness is a sin for [other] peoples"—even all the acts of charity and loving-kindness that [heathen] peoples of the world perform are deemed a sin for them, because they perform such acts only to boast of them. Rabban Gamaliel said: We still have to hear the interpretation of the Modiite. R. Eleazar the Modiite said: "Charity exalteth the nation," that is, Israel; "but loving-kindness is a sin for [other] peoples"—even acts of charity and loving-kindness that [heathen] peoples of the world perform are deemed a sin for them, because they perform such acts only to taunt and reproach us [for our failings].[3] R. Nehunia ben ha-Kanah spoke up and read the verse "Charity exalteth the nation, for it is deemed loving-kindness for Israel, but sin for the [heathen] peoples." At that, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai said to his disciples: I find the interpretation of R. Nehunia ben ha-Kanah more appealing than mine or yours, because he associates the words "charity" and "loving-kindness" in the verse with Israel, and the word "sin" with the [heathen] peoples of the world.

We have been taught that Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai interpreted the verse as meaning: Even as a sin offering makes expiation for Israel, so an act of charity [and loving-kindness] makes expiation for [heathen] peoples of the world.[4]

The Ways of Charity

292. Among those asked to give charity are four types: he who wishes to give but does not wish others to give—he is grudging toward others; he who wishes others to give but is himself unwilling to give—he is grudging of his own; he who willingly gives and wishes others to give—the pious man; he who does not give and wishes others not to give—the wicked man.[5]

293. "Happy is he that considereth the poor" (Ps. 41:2): Consider carefully how to benefit him. When R. Jonah saw a man of good family who had lost his money and was ashamed to accept charity, he would go and say to him, "I have heard that an inheritance has come your way in a city across the sea. So here is an article of some value. [Sell it, and use the proceeds.] When you are more affluent, you will repay me." As soon as the man took it, R. Jonah would say, "It's yours as a gift."[6]

294. R. Isaac said: He who gives a small coin to a poor man receives six blessings, and he who speaks to him words of cheer receives eleven blessings.[7]

295. "If thou draw out thy soul to the hungry" (Isa. 58:10). This means, said R. Levi, if you have nothing to give him, comfort him with words. Say to him, "My soul goes out to you, because I have nothing else to give you."[8]

296. When R. Yannai saw a certain man giving a coin to a poor man in front of everyone, he said: It would have been better not to have given it to him than to have given it and put him to shame.[9]

---

1. B. Ta 21a.
2. B. BK 119a.
3. As Nebuzzaradan did when he released Jeremiah from his fetters. See Jer. 40:1–4.
4. B. BB 10b.
5. Avot 5:16.
6. Lev. R. 34:1; P. Pe 8:8, 21b.
7. B. BB 9b.
8. Lev. R. 34:15.
9. B. Hag 5b; Eccles. R. 12:14, §1.

297. Which kind of charity saves a man from [an unnatural] death? Charity given without knowing to whom it is given, and received without knowing from whom it is received.[1]

298. R. Eliezer said: A man who gives charity in secret is greater than Moses our teacher. For Moses our teacher, according to Scripture, admitted, "I was afraid of the Anger and the Wrath" (Deut. 9:19); but of one who gives charity in secret, Scripture declares, "A gift in secret subdues Anger" (Prov. 21:14).[2]

299. In Mar Ukba's neighborhood there was a poor man into whose door socket Mar Ukba used to place [secretly] four zuz every day. Once the poor man said, "I will go and see who does this kindness for me." It so happened that on that day Mar Ukba stayed late at the house of study, and his wife accompanied him [on his way home]. As soon as the poor man saw the two bending down over the door, he went out after them. They fled from him and entered a furnace from which the fire had just been swept. Mar Ukba's feet were scorched [but not his wife's], and so she said to him, "Place your feet on mine." As he was upset [because a miracle was wrought for her and not for him], she said to him, "I am usually at home and my benefactions to the poor are direct." But why did the two flee into a furnace? Because the sages said: It is better that a man throw himself into a fiery furnace than publicly put his neighbor to shame.[3]

300. Abba the Cupper used to receive daily greetings from the academy on high. What was the special merit of Abba the Cupper? When he let blood, he had a discreet place outside [his office] where the client would put in a few coins. Whoever had money would put it there; but he who had none would sit before Abba the Cupper without feeling embarrassed. Whenever a disciple of the wise came to consult him, he would accept no fee from him, and after the disciple stood up to leave, Abba would give him a few coins and say to him, "Go and get yourself well."

One day, Abbaye sent two disciples of the wise to Abba the Cupper in order to test him. They came to his house, and he had them sit down, gave them food and drink, and in the evening spread woolen mattresses for them [to sleep on]. In the morning, the two disciples of the wise rolled up the mattresses and brought them to the marketplace. When Abba the Cupper came to the marketplace and found the two, they said to him, "Sir, will you estimate how much they are worth?" He replied, "So-and-so much." The two: "Surely they are worth more?" Abba: "This is what I paid for some like them." Then they said to him, "They are yours—we took them away from you."

Then they asked him, "Please tell us what you supposed we were up to?" He replied, "I said to myself: Perhaps you needed money to redeem captives and were too embarrassed to say so to me." The two: "Now, sir, take back what is yours." Abba: "From the moment I missed them, I put them out of my mind by considering them assigned to charity."[4]

301. R. Isaac said: What is the meaning of the verse "He that pursueth charity and compassion, findeth life, charity, and honor" (Prov. 21:21)? That because a man pursues charity, he will find charity? No. Rather, the verse teaches you that when a man pursues every opportunity to give charity, the Holy One will provide him with money to use for it. R. Nahman bar Isaac added: The Holy One will provide for him persons who are fit recipients of charity, so that he may be rewarded for assisting them."[5]

302. Rabbah said: What is the meaning of the verse "[Forgive not their iniquity . . .]. Let them be made to stumble before Thee, in the time of Thine anger deal Thou with them" (Jer. 18:23)? Jeremiah said to the Holy One: Master of the universe, even when the [people of Anathoth] restrain their evil impulse and seek to give charity to impress You, cause them to stumble through men who are not fit recipients, so that they may receive no reward for assisting them.[6]

303. R. Eleazar said: He who gives his bread to one who has no understanding [of Torah] will be assailed by suffering.[7]

304. We have been taught that when a poor man says, "Provide me with clothes," he should be investigated. When he says, "Feed me," he should not be investigated.[8]

305. During years of scarcity, Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] opened storehouses of victuals, proclaiming: Let those who are masters of Scripture, masters of Mishnah, masters of Gemara, masters of Halakhah, or masters of Aggadah enter. But those who are ignorant may not. Jonathan ben Amram pushed his way up, entered, and said to him, "Master, give me food." [Not recognizing him], Rabbi asked him, "My son, have you studied Scripture?" He replied, "No." "Have you studied Mishnah?" "No." "If not, how can I give you food?" Jonathan: "Then provide me with food as a dog is provided, provide me as a raven is provided."[9] So he gave him some food. After he went away, Rabbi's conscience troubled him, and he said: Woe is me that I have given bread to a man without learning! R. Simeon bar Rabbi ventured to say to him: Perhaps it was your disciple Jonathan ben Amram, who all his life refused to derive any benefit from the honor paid to Torah.

---

1. B. BB 10a.
2. B. BB 9b.
3. B. Ket 67b.
4. B. Ta 21b–22a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
5. B. BB 9b.
6. Ibid.
7. B. Sanh 92a.
8. But should be fed immediately—he might starve to death during the investigation. B. BB 9a.
9. Jonathan takes the verse "He giveth to the beast his food, to the young ravens which cry" (Ps. 147:9) to mean: "As God feeds these, so you feed me."

Upon inquiry, it was found to be so. At that, Rabbi said, "Let everyone enter."[1]

306. R. Abba used to wrap money in his scholar's turban, sling it on his back [so as not to see who took the money], and, disregarding the possibility of imposters among them, make himself available to the poor.

On every Sabbath eve, R. Hanina used to send regularly four zuz to a certain poor man. One day, he sent that sum through his wife. She came back and told him, "He does not need it." R. Hanina asked her, "What did you see?" "I heard that he was asked, 'Will you dine off a cloth of silver or one of gold?' " At this, R. Hanina remarked: Of such, R. Eleazar said, "Come, let us be grateful to imposters. But for them, we would have been sinning every day, for, according to Scripture, 'If [the genuinely poor man] cry unto the Lord against thee, it will be sin in thee' " (Deut. 15:9).[2]

307. R. Yohanan and Resh Lakish went down to bathe in the public baths of Tiberias. When a poor man met them and said to them, "Earn merit by giving me something," they replied, "After we come out, we shall earn merit through you." When they did come out, they found him dead. So they said, "Since we did not earn merit by attending to him in his life, let us attend to him in his death." As they were washing his corpse, they found a bag containing six hundred denars suspended from his neck. So [relieved of the feelings of guilt] they said, "Blessed be He who has chosen the sages and even their [hasty] words. Did not R. Abbahu state in the name of R. Eliezer, 'We ought to be grateful to imposters, since but for imposters among the poor, if anyone begged alms from a person and that person refused, he would immediately be punished.'?"[3]

308. Our masters taught: "Sufficient for his need" (Deut. 15:8) implies that you are enjoined to maintain him, but you are not enjoined to make him rich; "in that which he wanteth" (ibid.) includes even a horse to ride on and a slave to run before him.

It is related about Hillel the Elder that, for a certain poor man who was of a good family, he bought a horse to ride on and a slave to run before him. When on one occasion he could not find a slave to run before the man, he himself ran before him a distance of three mil.[4]

309. A poor man came [for sustenance] before R. Nehemiah, who asked, "What do your usual meals consist of?" He answered, "Fat meat and aged wine [from wealthy benefactors]." R. Nehemiah: "Will you join me and make do with a dish of lentils?" The poor man made do with lentils at R. Nehemiah's table, and then died. R. Nehemiah said, "Alas for this man: Nehemiah killed him!"

On the contrary, he should have said, "Alas for Nehemiah: he killed this man!"

On the other hand, [the man himself was to blame]—he should not have coddled himself to such an extent.[5]

310. A poor man once came [for maintenance] before Rava, who asked, "What do your usual meals consist of?" "Fat chicken and aged wine." Rava: "Do you not consider the burden of [such fare on] the community?" The poor man: "Do I eat what's theirs? I eat [the food] of the Holy One. For we are taught: 'The eyes of all wait for Thee, and Thou givest each one food in his season' [Ps. 145:15]—not 'in their season' but 'in his season.' Hence, the Holy One provides food for every person in accordance with his own habits." Just then Rava's sister, who had not seen him for thirteen years, arrived and brought him a fat chicken and aged wine. "What a remarkable coincidence!" Rava exclaimed, and then said to the poor man, "I defer to your request—come and eat."[6]

311. Mar Ukba had in his neighborhood a poor man to whom he regularly sent four hundred zuz on the eve of every Day of Atonement. Once he sent them through his son. The son came back and said, "He does not need it." Mar Ukba: "What have you seen [that makes you think so]?" The son: "I saw that [at his dinner] he was served aged wine." Mar Ukba: "So he is that delicate?" And he doubled the amount and sent it back to the poor man.

When Mar Ukba was about to die he requested, "Bring me my charity accounts." Finding there a balance of seven thousand denars, he exclaimed, "The provisions are scanty and the road long," and there and then distributed half of his wealth [to the poor].

But how could he do such a thing? Had not R. Ilai stated, "In Usha, it was ordained that if a man wishes to spend liberally on charity, he may spend no more than one-fifth of his means"? Yes, but this ordinance applies only to a living person, who might have to fall back on his own means if reduced to poverty, but there is no need to fear such a thing after death.[7]

312. Our masters taught: There is a story that every day the people of Upper Galilee bought a pound of meat for a poor member of a good family in the north.[8]

313. This is what R. Tanhum son of R. Hiyya used to do: if he was instructed [by his wife] to buy one pound of meat, he would buy two pounds, one for his household and one for the poor; or two bunches of vegetables, one for his household and one for the poor.[9]

314. On one occasion, Hillel the Elder had a meal prepared for a certain man. In the meantime, a poor man came by, stood at his doorway, and said, "I am to marry today, and I have no provisions whatsoever." At that, Hillel's wife took the entire meal and [without telling her

---

1. B. BB 8a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. B. Ket 67b–68a.
3. Lev. R. 34:10; P. Pe 5:5, 21b.
4. B. Ket 67b.
5. Ibid.
6. Ibid.
7. Ibid.
8. Ibid.
9. Lev. R. 34:5; Eccles. R. 7:14, §2.

husband] gave it to the poor man. Then she kneaded fresh dough, cooked another pot of stew, and came and set it before Hillel and his guest [who were waiting to eat]. Hillel asked, "My dear, why did you not bring it sooner?" She told him what happened. He said, "My dear, the truth is, I did not mean to judge you on the scale of guilt, but rather on the scale of merit, because everything you have done, you have always done for the sake of Heaven."[1]

315. We have been taught that R. Simeon said: For four purposes the Torah ordered peah [the corner crop, the poor man's portion of the harvest] to be left at the end of one's field: [as a precaution] against robbing the poor, against wasting [the time of] the poor, against suspicion, and against cheaters. [As a precaution] against robbing the poor: lest the owner, spotting a free moment [when the poor are not present], say to his own poor kinsman, "Right here [in the middle of the field] is peah for you." Against wasting [the time of] the poor: so that the poor should not have to sit and be on the lookout for the time when the owner will leave peah [in the corner of his field]. Against suspicion: So that passersby should not say, "A curse upon the man who left no peah in his field." And as a precaution against cheaters [who might leave no portion at all for the poor].[2]

316. "Thou shalt surely open [thy hand to thy brother, to thy poor]" (Deut. 15:8). From these words it would follow that charity is to be given only to the poor of your city. What is the proof that it is also to be given to the poor of another city? The word "surely," implying: wherever the poor may be.

"Giving[3] thou shalt give"[4] (Deut. 15:10)—the repetition of the verb seems to imply a large sum. What is the proof that the verse also implies a small sum? From the same repetition, implying: giving whatever the gift may be.

"Furnishing thou shalt furnish him liberally" (Deut. 15:14) seems to imply that only if the house has been blessed by a slave's presence[5] is he to be furnished with a gift. What is the proof that he is to be so furnished even if the house has not been blessed because of him? The same repetition implies furnishing under all circumstances.

"Lending thou shalt lend to him" (Deut. 15:8) seems to imply that only if the poor man has nothing and yet does not wish to be maintained at your expense, Scripture says, "Give him by way of a loan." What is the proof that even if the poor has some means, but does not wish to maintain himself [at his own expense], you are to lend to him? From the same repetition, implying: under all circumstances.[6]

317. Our masters taught: If a man has no means and does not wish to be maintained [at public expense], his necessities are first to be given to him as a loan and immediately thereafter presented to him as a gift. Such is the opinion of R. Meir. But R. Simeon asserted: If he has the means but does not wish to maintain himself [at his own expense], there is no need to deal with him. If he has no means but does not wish to be maintained [at public expense], he is to be told, "Bring a pledge, and you will receive a loan on it," so that his spirits will be raised.[7]

318. If a man has fifty zuz and trades with them, he may not take of the [gleanings, forgotten sheaves, corners of fields, or poor man's tithe]. He who has no need to take such gifts but nevertheless takes them will not depart this world before he becomes dependent on his fellow men. Whereas he who needs to accept [charity] but does not do so will not die in his old age before becoming able to support others out of what he has. Of such a man, it is written, "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose trust the Lord is" (Jer. 17:7). And if one is neither lame, nor blind, nor halt, but pretends to be like one of them, he will not die in his old age before he actually becomes one of them, as is said, "He that searcheth for evil, it shall come unto him" (Prov. 11:27).[8]

319. Our masters taught: He who pretends that he is blind or makes believe that his belly is distended [from hunger] or that he is humpbacked will not depart this world until he falls victim to such a condition. He who receives charity even though he does not need it will not depart this world until he comes to real need of it.[9]

320. If a beggar [on his own] goes from door to door, there is no need to respond to him.

A certain poor man who used to go from door to door appeared before R. Papa, who refused him [money]. So R. Samma son of R. Yeva said to R. Papa, "If you, sir, will not respond to him, and no one else will respond to him, is he to die of hunger?"

"But, [R. Papa replied], we have been taught, 'If a poor man goes from door to door, there is no need to respond to him'!"

R. Samma said, "There is no need to respond to him with a large gift, but one should respond to him with a small gift."[10]

321. R. Joseph taught: "If thou lend money to any of My people" (Exod. 22:24) implies that, as between one

---

1. DER 6.
2. B. Shab 23a–b.
3. The doubling of the verb, translated in JV by "surely," is understood as making the command emphatic. But the rabbinic commentator takes such doubling to require different kinds of giving and, subsequently, to require "furnishing liberally" and "lending" under varying circumstances.
4. The reference is to money lent before the Year of Release (sabbatical year).
5. A contingency that seems to be implied in the verse's conclusion: "As the Lord thy God blessed thee, thou shalt give unto him."
6. B. BM 31b.
7. Being addressed thus, he will be induced to take a loan even though he has nothing of value to pledge. B. Ket 67b.
8. Pe 8:9; P. Pe 8:5, 21b.
9. B. Ket 68a.
10. B. BB 9a.

"of My people" and a heathen, the one "of My people" has precedence. "Even to the poor" (ibid.) implies that, between a poor man and a rich man, the poor man has precedence. "With thee" (ibid.) implies that, between the poor who are your kin and the poor of your city, the poor who are your kin have precedence, and between the poor of your city and the poor of another city, the poor of your city have precedence.[1]

322. For the sake of peace, the poor of the heathens should not be prevented from gathering gleanings, forgotten sheaves, and corners of the field.

Our masters taught: For the sake of peace, the poor of the heathens should be supported as we support the poor of Israel, the sick of the heathens should be visited as we visit the sick of Israel, and the dead of the heathens should be buried as we bury the dead of Israel.[2]

Collectors for Charity

323. The verse "They who provide charity for the many are like the stars forever and ever" (Dan 12:3) refers to collectors for charity.[3]

324. R. Eleazar said: He who causes others to do good is greater than he who himself does good, for it is said, "He who causes the giving of charity confers peace" (Isa. 32:17).[4]

325. R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah bar Abbahu: Even on Sabbath eve one may insist upon receiving a pledge[5] in lieu of a contribution to charity.

Rava coerced R. Nathan bar Ammi and got him to give four hundred zuz to charity.[6]

326. Collectors for charity may accept small contributions from women, but not large ones.

Once, when Ravina happened to be in the city of Mahoza, the women of Mahoza came and brought him gold chains and bracelets, which he accepted from them [as charity]. When Rabbah Tosfaah said to him, "But we have been taught that collectors for charity may accept only small contributions from women, and not large ones," he replied, "Such things are considered small contributions by the people of Mahoza."[7]

327. Our masters taught: A fund for charity must be collected jointly by two persons and distributed by three. It is collected by two, because any office of authority over the community must be held by two persons. The fund must be distributed by three persons, as is the rule with lawsuits involving money [which must be tried by a court of three].[8]

328. Our masters taught: Collectors for charity are not allowed to separate from each other [when collecting] though one may collect at the gate while another collects at a shop [in the same courtyard.].

So, too, if one of them finds money in the street, he may not put it in his purse[9] but only in the charity bag, and then take it out when he comes home.

So, too, if one of the collectors has a debtor repay him a maneh in the marketplace, he may not put it in his purse but only in the charity bag, and then take it out when he comes home.

Our masters taught: If collectors have money left but no poor people to distribute it to, they may change the small coins[10] into large ones with other persons, but not with their own money. Stewards of the soup kitchen [who have food left over but] no poor to distribute it to may sell the food to others but not to themselves.[11]

Money collected for charity must be counted not two coins at a time, but one at a time.[12]

329. Abbaye said: At first my master [Rabbah] used to keep two purses, one for the poor of the city and one for the poor from elsewhere. But when he heard what Samuel had said to R. Tahalifa bar Avdimi—namely, "Make one purse only, and stipulate [with the townspeople that it is to be used for both kinds of poor]"—he too kept only one purse and made such a stipulation.

R. Ashi said: I do not need to make such a stipulation, since whoever comes to give charity leaves the matter to my judgment, so that I may give it to whom I wish.[13]

330. Our masters taught: The collectors for charity are not required to provide an account of the moneys given them for charity, nor the treasurers of the Sanctuary for moneys given them for sacred purposes. Even though there is no proof for this rule, there is an intimation in the verse "Moreover they reckoned not with the men, into whose hands they delivered the money . . .; for they dealt faithfully" (2 Kings 12:16).

R. Eleazar said: Even if a man has in his house a steward whom he can trust, he should still keep the money in bags and count [the amount he gives the steward] as is said, "They would put the money into bags and count it. . . . Then they would deliver the money that was weighed out" (2 Kings 12:11–12).[14]

---

1. B. BM 71a.
2. B. Git 61a.
3. B. BB 8b.
4. B. BB 9a.
5. When the one approached may plead that he is too busy with preparations for the Sabbath.
6. Ordinarily, charity is voluntary. B. BB 8b.
7. They were prosperous. B. BK 119a.
8. B. BB 8b.
9. So that people should not suspect him of appropriating money that belongs to the poor.
10. Small coins are apt to tarnish.
11. So that people will not think they gave small portions to the poor in order to dispose of what is left for their own purposes.
12. Lest people say that the collectors take two coins and count only one. B. BB 8b.
13. B. BB 8b–9a.
14. B. BB 9a.

331. R. Yose said: May my portion be with those who collect charity, and not with those who distribute it.[1]

332. All whose forebears are held to have been eligible to be public officers and collectors for charity are permitted to marry into the priesthood without having their ancestry investigated.[2]

Bringing Up Orphans and Redeeming Captives

333. "He who does charity at all times" (Ps. 106:3) is he, said R. Samuel bar Nahmani, who brings up an orphaned boy or girl in his house and marries him or her off.[3]

334. He who brings up an orphan in his house, Scripture deems it for him as though he had begot him.[4]

335. Our masters taught: If an orphaned boy and an orphaned girl apply for maintenance, the orphaned girl is to be maintained first, and then the orphaned boy, because a man can go begging from door to door, but a woman cannot.

If an orphaned boy and an orphaned girl both apply for marriage grants, the orphaned girl is to be helped to marry first, and then the orphaned boy, because the shame of a woman [without a husband] is greater than the shame of a man [without a wife].[5]

336. Our masters taught: If an orphan applies for assistance to marry, a house must be rented for him and a bed laid out for him, as well as all the household effects he would need, and then he is to be wed to his bride, as is said, "Sufficient for his need whatever he needed" (Deut. 15:8).[6]

337. The sages said in the name of Rav: Better to be under Ishmael than under Edom; under Edom and not under Parsee priests; under Parsee priests and not under a disciple of the wise; under a disciple of the wise and not under an orphan or a widow.[7]

338. Orphans [who are minors] are not subject to the law of atonement.[8]

Orphans who are minors cannot legally renounce [their possessions].[9]

339. Samuel's father was entrusted with some money belonging to orphans. When he died, Samuel was not with his father, and the orphans dubbed Samuel "Son of the Orphans' Money Eater." So he went to the cemetery to locate his father, whom he asked, "Where is the orphans' money?" The father replied, "You will find it in the rack of millstones. The money on the upper and lower millstones is ours; that on the middle one is the orphans'." Samuel: "Why did you put the orphans' money on the middle millstone?" He replied, "So that if thieves got at it [from the top], ours would be stolen; and if the earth eroded it [from below], ours would be eroded."[10]

340. Our masters taught: Four pittances never contain any sign auspicious of blessing: the wage of Torah scribes, the wage of interpreters [in the academy], the profits from orphans' money [kept in trust], and the profits from trade with countries across the sea.[11]

341. R. Anan said in the name of Samuel: Orphans' money may be lent out on interest. R. Nahman differed sharply: Just because they are orphans, am I to stuff their purses with forbidden money? Orphans who live on what is not really theirs might as well follow the parents who left them![12]

342. Whenever collectors for charity caught sight of R. Eleazar of Bartota, they would hide themselves from him, because he was in the habit of giving them all he had. One day, as he was going to the marketplace to buy a wedding outfit for his daughter, the collectors for charity caught sight of him and were about to hide themselves from him. But he ran after them, saying, "I adjure you, tell me for what purpose you are collecting?" They replied, "For the wedding outfit of an orphaned boy and an orphaned girl." R. Eleazar: "By the [Temple] worship, these two have precedence over my own daughter," and he took all he had in his hand and gave it to them. One zuz, however, remained with him. With it, he bought some wheat, which he carried up and deposited in the granary. When his wife returned home, she asked her daughter, "What did your father bring you?" She replied, "All that he brought, he carried up into the granary." When the wife went up to open the door of the granary, she found that it was so full of wheat that the grains were forced into the door sockets, and consequently, because of the overflow of wheat, the door could not be opened. The daughter then went to the house of study and said to her father, "Come and see what your Friend has done for you!" At that, he said to her, "By the [Temple] worship, the wheat shall be sacred property, and your share in it shall be the same as that of any other poor person in Israel."[13]

343. Ifra Hormiz, King Shapur's mother, sent a purse of denars to R. Joseph, instructing him that the money be used for a most important precept. R. Joseph tried to figure out what she meant by "a most important precept." Abbaye

---

1. The temptation to practice favoritism is too great. B. Shab 118b.
2. B. Ket 50a.
3. B. Ket 50a.
4. B. Sanh 19b.
5. B. Ket 67a–b.
6. B. Ket 67b.
7. A disciple of the wise is quick to punish an affront, but God is quick to punish an affront to an orphan or a widow. B. Shab 11a.
8. A sum of money given in lieu of the life of the owner for manslaughter committed by his beast.
9. B. BK 40a; B. BM 22b; B. Pes 50b.
10. B. Ber 18b.
11. Which involve grave risks. B. Pes 50b.
12. B. BM 70a.
13. B. Ta 24a and En Yaakov, ad loc.

said to him: Since R. Samuel bar Judah taught, "Money for charity is not to be levied from orphans, even for the redemption of captives," we may assume that the redemption of captives is "a most important precept."[1]

344. Rava asked Rabbah bar Mari: What is the proof for our masters' statement that redeeming captives is a most important precept? Rabbah answered: From the verse "Such as are for death, for death; and such as are for the sword, for the sword; and such as are for the famine, for the famine; and such as are for captivity, for captivity" (Jer. 15:2). And R. Yohanan added: Each successive punishment in this verse is more severe than the one that precedes it.[2]

Deeds of Loving-kindness

345. R. Simlai expounded: Torah—there is a deed of loving-kindness at its beginning and a deed of loving-kindness at its end. Loving-kindness at its beginning: "the Lord God made for Adam and his wife garments of skins and clothed them" (Gen. 3:21). Loving-kindness at its end: "and he buried [Moses] in the valley" (Deut. 34:6).[3]

346. Once, as R. Yohanan was walking out of Jerusalem, R. Joshua followed him, and, upon seeing the Temple in ruins, he said: Woe unto us that this place is in ruins, the place where atonement was made for Israel's iniquities! R. Yohanan: My son, do not grieve—we have another means of atonement which is as effective. What is it? It is deeds of loving-kindness, concerning which Scripture says, "I desire loving-kindness and not sacrifice" (Hos. 6:6).[4]

347. R. Haggai said in the name of R. Isaac: Everyone is in need of loving-kindness. Even Abraham, for whose sake loving-kindness went around the entire world—even he had need of loving-kindness, as may be inferred by his servant Eliezer's plea, "Show loving-kindness unto thy master Abraham" (Gen. 24:13), meaning: "You have shown him loving-kindness at my journey's beginning, now show it at its end."[5]

348. R. Judah said: When a man denies the obligation to loving-kindness, it is as though he had denied the Root [of Being].[6]

349. A man says to his friend, "Lend me a kav of wheat," and the friend replies, "I have none." Or he asks for the loan of a kav of barley, and the friend replies, "I have none." Or he asks for a kav of dates, and the friend replies, "I have none." Or a woman says to her friend, "Lend me a sieve," and the friend replies, "I have none." Or she says, "Lend me a sifter," and the friend says, "I have none." What does the Holy One do? He causes leprosy to affect the friend's house, and as the household effects are taken out,[7] people seeing them say, "Did not that person say, 'I have none'? See how much wheat is here, how much barley, how many dates are here! The house is rightly cursed with the curses [of want its owner professed]."[8]

350. R. Eleazar said: Loving-kindness is greater than charity, for it is said, "Sow for yourselves according to charity, but reap according to your loving-kindness" (Hos. 10:12). When a man sows, it is in doubt whether he will or will not eat the harvest; but when a man reaps, he will surely eat it.

R. Eleazar said further: The reward for charity depends entirely upon the measure of loving-kindness in the act, as is said, "Sow for yourselves according to your charity, but reap according to your loving-kindness."[9]

351. Our masters taught: Loving-kindness is greater than charity in three ways. Charity is done with one's money, while loving-kindness may be done with one's money or with one's person. Charity is given only to the poor, while loving-kindness may be given both to the poor and to the rich. Charity is given only to the living, while loving-kindness may be shown to both the living and the dead.

R. Eleazar said further: He who executes charity and justice is as though he had filled the entire world, all of it, with loving-kindness, as is said, "When one loveth charity and justice, the earth is full of the loving-kindness of the Lord" (Ps. 33:5). Should you suppose that one may achieve this easily,[10] Scripture says, "How rare is Thy loving-kindness, O God" (Ps. 36:8). Should you suppose that difficulty in executing charity and justice is also true of one who fears Heaven, Scripture says, "But the loving-kindness of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting with those who fear Him" (Ps. 103:17).[11]

352. "I sleep, but my heart waketh" (Song 5:2). The congregation of Israel said to the Holy One: "I sleep" in neglect of ritual precepts, but "my heart waketh" for the practice of loving-kindness.[12]

353. The sages said in the name of R. Simeon ben Lakish: He who brings up a vicious dog in his house keeps loving-kindness away from his house, as is said, "A dog (lammos)—loving-kindness is kept from his fellow man" (Job 6:14).[13] For in Greek, the word lammos, usually translated "to him that is ready to faint," means "dog." R. Nahman bar Isaac said: Such a man also casts off the fear of Heaven from himself, for the verse concludes: "And he forsaketh the fear of the Almighty" (ibid.).

---

1. B. BB 8a–b.
2. Ibid.
3. B. Sot 14a.
4. ARN 4; ARNB 8.
5. Gen. R. 60:2.
6. Eccles. R. 7:1, §4.
7. When one suspects "leprosy" in the fabric of a house, "the priest shall command that they empty the house" (Lev. 14:36).
8. Lev. R. 17:2.
9. B. Suk 49b.
10. Literally, "whoever comes to jump can jump."
11. B. Suk 49b.
12. Song R. 5:2, §1.
13. The poor being fearful to approach.

A story is told of a [pregnant] woman who went into a house to do some baking. A dog barked at her, and the embryo within her moved [violently]. The householder sought to reassure her: "Do not be afraid—the dog's teeth have been extracted, and his nails are gone." But she replied, "Keep your favors—throw them to the thorns. The embryo has already been uprooted from its place."[1]

354. R. Abba said in the name of R. Simeon ben Lakish: He who lends money [to a poor man] is greater than he who gives charity; and he who throws money into a common purse [to form a partnership with a poor man] is greater than either.[2]

355. "If thy brother be waxen poor, and his means fail with thee; then thou shalt uphold him" (Lev. 25:35). Don't allow him to fall into utter poverty. The injunction may be explained by analogy with a load on a donkey: as long as he is standing up, one may grab him [to keep from falling] and keep him standing upright. Once he has fallen, five men cannot make him stand up again.[3]

356. What is the proof that if you have already upheld the poor man even four or five times, you should go on upholding him? The statement "Then thou shalt uphold him."[4]

357. The story is told of a pious man whose wife was virtuous. He lost his possessions and became a hired man. One day, as he was plowing in the field, Elijah, ever remembered on good occasions, disguised himself as an Arab, met him, and said to him, "You have six good years [coming to you]—when do you wish them, now or at the end of your days?" The pious man replied, "You must be a sorcerer. I have nothing to give you. Leave me in peace." But Elijah returned three times [with the same question]. Finally, the third time, the pious man said, "I will go and consult my wife." He went to his wife and told her, "Someone came to me and pestered me three times, saying to me, 'You have six good years—when do you wish them, now or at the end of your days?' " Then he asked her, "And what do you say?" She replied, "Go, tell him, 'Bring them now.' " So the pious man went back and said to Elijah, "Go, bring them now." Elijah replied, "Go to your house, and before you reach the gate of your courtyard you will find blessing spread upon your home." It so happened that his children were just then sitting and sifting dirt through their fingers. Suddenly they found enough money to sustain them for six years, so they called to their mother. Even before the pious man reached the gate, his wife came out to meet him and gave him the good tidings. He immediately thanked the Holy One, for he was greatly relieved.

What did his virtuous wife do? She said to him, "As things stand, the Holy One has already twined our lives with the thread of mercy in that He has given us sustenance to last for six years, so let us engage in deeds of loving-kindness during these years—perhaps the Holy One will continue to give us more out of His ample bounty." And this is what she did: each and every day, whatever she gave [to the poor], she told her youngest son, "Record every item we dispense," and he did so.

At the end of six years Elijah, ever remembered on good occasions, came back and said to the pious man, "The time has come to take away what I gave you." The pious man replied, "When I took it, I took it only with my wife's advice. Now that I am to return it, I will return it only with my wife's advice." He went to her and said, "The old man has come back to take away what is his." The wife replied, "Go tell him, 'If you find human beings more reliable than we are, give them what you left in trust with us.' "

When the Holy One considered their words and the acts of charity they had performed, He gave them boon after boon to fulfill what is said: "The work of charity shall convey peace" (Isa. 32:17).[5]

358. Our masters taught: He who loves his neighbors, befriends his kinsmen, marries his sister's daughter,[6] and lends a sela to a poor man in his need—of such a one, Scripture says, "When thou seest the naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh. . . . Then thou shalt call, and the Lord will answer; thou shalt cry, and He will say: 'Here I am' " (Isa. 58:7 and 58:9).[7]

359. "That thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh." These words apply to the divorced wife of R. Yose the Galilean [from whom he did not hide].

R. Yose the Galilean had an evil wife, who used to humiliate him in the presence of his disciples and distressed him greatly. When his disciples said to him, "Master, divorce this woman, for she does not treat you with proper respect," he replied, "The marriage settlement I would have to pay her is more than I can afford, so I cannot divorce her." One time, he and R. Eleazar ben Azariah were sitting and studying, and when they finished, R. Yose asked R. Eleazar, "Will the master deign to come with me to my home?" R. Eleazar said, 'Yes." As they entered, R. Yose's wife lowered her face [rudely ignoring the guest]. When R. Yose noticed a pot standing on the stove and asked her, "Is there anything cooking in the pot?" she replied, "There is only hash in it." Upon uncovering the pot, however, he found it full of plump chicks. R. Eleazar ben Azariah was thus made aware that R. Yose's wife was not at peace with her husband. So, as they sat together eating, he observed, "Master, did she not say it was hash? Yet we found chicks in the pot." R. Yose: "The chicks are here because of a miracle." When they finished eating and drinking, R. Eleazar said to R. Yose, "Master, divorce this woman, for she does not treat you with proper respect."

---

1. B. Shab 63a–b.
2. B. Shab 63b.
3. Sif Lev., ed. Weiss, p. 109b.
4. The statement refers to the future. Ibid.
5. Yalkut, Ruth, §607.
6. The man's affection for his sister is likely to extend to her daughter.
7. B. Yev 62b–63a.

R. Yose replied, "The marriage settlement I would have to pay is more than I can afford, so I cannot divorce her." R. Eleazar: "I will give her the marriage settlement due her." So R. Yose divorced her and was wed to another woman, a much better one.

The divorced wife's sins brought it about that she married the town watchman [a man below her station]. After some time, the watchman was visited with many afflictions: he lost his means and became blind, and his wife had to hold him by the hand and lead him around all the neighborhoods of the town [to beg for alms]. When she reached R. Yose the Galilean's neighborhood, she stopped and turned back. Since her husband was very familiar with all sections of the town, he said to her, "Why don't you lead me to R. Yose the Galilean's neighborhood? He, I heard, gives much to charity." She replied, "I am his divorced wife, and I cannot bring myself to face him." Once, after making the rounds of the entire town and being given nothing, they reached the neighborhood of R. Yose the Galilean, and again she stopped. When her husband [the town watchman] realized why she stopped, he began to beat her, and the noise they made exposed them to shame in the marketplace. Just then, R. Yose happened to look out and, seeing them exposed to public shame in this way, asked the husband, "Why are you beating her?" He replied, "Because every day she causes me the loss of my maintenance from this neighborhood." Upon hearing this, R. Yose took charge of them, settled them in a house he owned, and provided their maintenance for the rest of their lives.

Nevertheless, her voice used to be heard at night as she continued to say, "Was not the pain inflicted on the outside of my body easier to bear than the pain [of humiliation] within my body?"[1]

360. R. Hama bar Hanina said: He who does a favor to someone who does not appreciate it is like one who casts a small stone into a heap of stones [as an offering] to Mercury, as is said, "As a small stone in the heap [of Mercury],[2] so is he that giveth honor to a fool" (Prov. 26:8).[3]

Hospitality to Wayfarers

361. Yose ben Yohanan of Jerusalem said: Let your house be opened wide, and let the poor be members of your household.

Let your house be opened wide—what does this mean? It means that a man's house should be opened wide to the north, to the south, to the east, and to the west, like Job, who provided his houses with four doors. And why did Job provide four doors for his house? In order that the poor should not be put to the distress of having to go around the entire house: he who came from the north could enter directly [through the north door], he who came from the south could enter directly [through the south door], and likewise from the other directions.

And let the poor be members of your household—this does not mean that they should actually become members of your household, but that the poor should be able to talk freely about what they had to eat and drink in your house, just as the poor talked freely about what they had eaten and drunk in Job's house. When one poor man met another, he would ask, "Where are you coming from?" "From Job's house." Or, "Where are you going?" "To Job's house."

When the great calamity befell Job, he pleaded with the Holy One, "Master of the universe, did I not feed the hungry, give drink to the thirsty, and clothe the naked?" The Holy One answered Job, "Job, you have not yet reached half the measure [of hospitality] extended by Abraham. You sat in your house waiting for guests to come to you. To him who was accustomed to eat wheat bread, you gave wheat bread; to him who was accustomed to eat meat, you gave meat; and to him who was accustomed to drink wine, you gave wine. But Abraham did not act thus. He went out, getting about in the world. When he met prospective guests, he brought them to his home. Even to him who was not accustomed to eat wheat bread, he gave wheat bread; to him who was not accustomed to eat meat, he gave meat; and to him who was not accustomed to drink wine, he gave wine. Not only that, but he got busy and built spacious mansions along the highways, and stocked them with food and drink, so that whoever entered ate, drank, and blessed Heaven. Therefore, unusual satisfaction was given to Abraham, and whatever any person requested was to be found in his house.[4]

362. Shammai said: Receive all men with a cheerful countenance. What does this mean? It means that if a man presents the most precious gifts in the world to his fellow, but with a sullen and downcast countenance, Scripture regards that man as though he presented nothing at all to his fellow. On the other hand, he who receives his fellow with a cheerful countenance, even if he gives him nothing—Scripture accounts it to him as though he had presented his fellow with the most precious gifts in the world.[5]

363. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Receiving wayfarers is greater than welcoming the Presence, for Abraham [wishing to attend to the three wayfarers] pleaded with God, "My Lord, if now I have found favor in Thine eyes, pass not away from thy servant [while I attend to my guests]."[6]

364. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yose ben Kisma: The mouthful of food [given to wayfarers] is of great importance, since failure to give it alienated two families from Israel, as is written, "An Ammonite or a Moabite

---

1. P. Ket 11:3, 34b; Gen. R. 17:3; Lev. R. 34:14.
2. JV: "As a small stone in a heap of stones." But margemah ("a heap of stones"), found only here, has been variously rendered. The Vulgate follows the rabbinic interpretation, namely, that a shrine of Mercury is referred to.
3. En Yaakov on B. Hul 133b.
4. Avot 1:5; ARN 7.
5. Avot 1:15; ARN 13.
6. B. Shab 127a.

shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord . . . because they met you not with bread and with water" (Deut. 23:4–5). On his own, R. Yohanan said: Not practicing hospitality alienates those who are near, and practicing hospitality brings near those who are alienated, causes [God's] eyes to be averted from the wicked, and makes the Presence rest even on the prophets of Baal. And an unwitting failure to practice it is deemed to be deliberate.[1]

365. R. Nathan said: From Gareb[2] to Shiloh is only a distance of three mil, so that the smoke of the woodpile [on the altar] and the smoke of what was offered to Micah's image intermingled. The ministering angels wished to thrust Micah away from there, but the Holy One said, "Let him be—his bread is available to wayfarers."[3]

366. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel used to say: There was a widespread practice in Jerusalem: if a man entrusted [the preparation of] a banquet to another who spoiled it, the other had to compensate the host for the humiliation to himself and to his guests.

There was another widespread practice in Jerusalem: [at the beginning of a meal], a napkin was draped over the entrance to the house. So long as the napkin remained in place, guests entered. When the napkin was removed, no more guests [were permitted to] enter.[4]

367. When R. Huna had a meal, he would open the doors of his house and say, "Let whoever is in need come and eat."[5]

368. It once happened that while R. Yannai was on a journey, he saw a man who looked particularly distinguished. R. Yannai asked him, "Will you, sir, deign to visit our home?" The man said, "Yes." So R. Yannai brought the man into his house and gave him food and drink. Then R. Yannai tested him in his knowledge of Scripture, and found none; in his knowledge of Mishnah, and found none; in his knowledge of Aggadah, and found none; in his knowledge of Talmud, and found none. Finally, when R. Yannai said to him, "Take [the cup of wine] and say grace," the guest said evasively, "Yannai should be saying grace in his own house." Then R. Yannai asked him, "Can you repeat what I am about to say to you?" The guest: "Yes." R. Yannai: "Then say, 'A dog has eaten Yannai's bread.' " The guest immediately stood up, took hold of R. Yannai, and said to him, "My inheritance is in your possession, and you keep it from me!" R. Yannai: "What inheritance of yours is in my possession?" The guest: "Once I passed a schoolhouse and heard the voices of young children saying, 'The Torah that Moses commanded the children of Israel is the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob' [Deut. 33:4]—not 'the congregation of Yannai,' but 'the congregation of Jacob.' " R. Yannai: "How have you merited to dine at my table?" The guest: "Never in my life, after hearing evil spoken, have I brought it back to the person spoken of. Nor have I seen two people quarreling without making peace between them." R. Yannai: "You—whose conduct is so extraordinary—I presumed to call 'dog'!"[6]

369. It is unbecoming for a host to eat before his guest. It is unbecoming for a guest to bring another guest. More unbecoming than the two mentioned is the guest who puts his host to great trouble.[7]

370. Guests may not give food set before them to the son or daughter of the host until they receive the host's permission.

R. Eliezer ben Jacob said: Because of disregarding such counsel, three persons perished in Israel. The story is told that, in a time of scarcity, a man invited three guests but had only three eggs to place before them. When the host's child entered and stood before the guests, one of them took his portion and gave it to the child, and so did the second guest, and the third. When the child's father came in and saw one egg stuffed in his mouth and two held in his hands, he lifted the child to his own height and threw him down to the ground so hard that he killed him. When the child's mother saw this, she went up to the roof, threw herself down to her death. Finally, the child's father went up to the roof, and he, too, threw himself down to his death.[8]

371. Do whatever the host says, except "Get out!"[9]

372. A story is told of Simeon ben Antipatros, with whom many guests used to come and stay. When he pressed them to eat and drink, they vowed by the Torah that they would neither eat nor drink, but later they did both eat and drink. When the time came for them to depart, he used to have them flogged. Simeon's actions came to the notice of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai and of the sages, who were angered by it and said, "Who will go and tell him how we feel about what he is doing?" R. Joshua replied, "I will go and see what he does."

R. Joshua went, found Simeon at the entrance of his house, and greeted him, "Peace be upon you, master." Simeon replied, "Peace be upon you, master and teacher." R. Joshua: "I need lodging." Simeon replied, "Lodge here in peace." They sat down and occupied themselves until evening with the study of Torah. In the morning, R. Joshua said, "Master, I want to go to the bathhouse." Simeon: "As you wish." After he came back, they ate and drank. Still, R. Joshua was afraid that he would be beaten until he was humpbacked, so he said, "Who will escort me [on my way]?" Simeon: "I will." R. Joshua thought to himself:

---

1. B. Sanh 103b.
2. See Judg. 17. Both Gareb and Shiloh were in the highlands of Ephraim, in the center of the Land of Israel.
3. B. Sanh 103b.
4. B. BB 93b.
5. B. Ta 20b.
6. Lev. R. 9:3.
7. DEZ 8.
8. B. Hul 94a; DER 9.
9. By getting out, you deprive the host of giving you hospitality and thus cause him to sin. B. Pes 86b; DER 6.

What am I to tell the sages who sent me [since I have not been beaten]? He then turned to look back. Simeon asked him, "Master, why did you turn to look behind you?" R. Joshua: "I have something to ask you. Why did you flog the other guests who stayed with you, and did not flog me?" Simeon: "Master, you are a great sage, and you have good manners. I urged the other guests who stayed with me to eat, but they vowed by the Torah [not to eat] and then broke their vow. And this is what I heard from the mouth of the sages: 'Whoever vows by the Torah and breaks his vow is to be given forty lashes.' " R. Joshua: "May Heaven bless you for what you have done. By your life, and by the life of your head! Whoever behaves in this manner—give him forty lashes on your own account and [another] forty on account of the sages who sent me." R. Joshua then returned and reported to the sages what he had witnessed while he was with Simeon ben Antipatros.[1]

373. Ben Zoma used to say: What does a grateful guest say? "How much trouble the host has gone to for my sake! How much meat he set before me! How much wine he set before me! How many delicate breads he set before me! And all the trouble he went to, he went to only for my sake!" But what does an ungrateful guest say? "What trouble did my host really go to? I ate but one piece of bread, ate but one slice of meat, drank but one cup of wine. All the trouble my host went to, he went to only for the sake of [feeding] his wife and children."[2]

374. In the world's use, when a man receives a guest, the first day he feeds him fatted fowl, the second day ordinary meat, the third day fish, the next day cheese, the following day pulse. Thus, he gives him less and less, until in the end he feeds him greens.[3]

375. R. Ze'era said: Suppose a man has a client [a dependent]. The first time the client comes to visit him, he seats him on a couch; the second time the client comes to visit, he seats him on a chair; the third time, he seats him on a bench; but the fourth time, he says of him, "How this fellow forces himself upon me, and how he burdens me!"[4]

376. [When Abraham asked Sarah to make cakes, he first said], "Of flour" (Gen. 18:6), [then added], "Of fine flour." From Abraham's instructions to his wife, R. Isaac said, one may infer that a woman is more apt to begrudge guests than a man.[5]

377. It is said of R. Phinehas ben Yair: Never in his life did he say grace over a piece of bread not his own.[6]

Once, when Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] heard of the arrival of R. Phinehas, he went out to meet him and asked him, "Will you please dine with me?" "Certainly," R. Phinehas answered. R. Judah's face at once brightened with joy. Seeing that, R. Phinehas said, "Do you suppose that I am forbidden by vow from deriving any benefit from an Israelite? [No, indeed.] The people of Israel are holy. But there are some who desire [to benefit others] and have not the means, while others have the means but not the desire, and it is written, 'Never dine with a niggardly man, never fancy his dainties' " (Prov. 23:6).[7]

378. R. Joshua ben Levi said: The cup of blessing for the grace after meals should be given only to one who is of a generous disposition. "He that hath a bountiful eye shall bless, for he giveth of his bread to the poor" (Prov. 22:9)—read not yevorakh, "shall be blessed," but yevarekh, "shall recite the blessing."

R. Joshua ben Levi also said: Where is the proof that even birds recognize those of niggardly spirit? The verse "For in vain is the net spread in the eyes of any bird" (Prov. 1:17).

R. Joshua ben Levi also said: Whoever accepts hospitality from men of niggardly spirit transgresses a prohibition: "Never dine with a niggardly man, never fancy his dainties" (Prov. 23:6). R. Nahman ben Isaac said: He thus transgresses two prohibitions: "Never dine" and "Never fancy."

R. Joshua ben Levi also said: [The necessity for] the heifer whose neck is to be broken arises only on account of the niggardly in spirit, as it is said, "The elders shall speak and say, 'Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it' " (Deut. 21:7). But can it enter our mind that the elders of the High Court might be shedders of blood? No, the meaning of the elders' words is: it is not that the man found dead had come to us for help and we dismissed him without food; we did not see him, and therefore we let him go on without escort.[8]

379. R. Joshua ben Levi also said: Because of the four paces that one Pharaoh had Abraham escorted, as is said, "Pharaoh put men in charge of him and they escorted him"[9] (Gen. 12:20), another Pharaoh [was allowed to] enslave the latter's descendants for four hundred years.

Rav Judah said in the name of Rav: He who accompanies his neighbor for even four cubits in the city will come to no harm [when he himself is on a journey].

Our masters taught: A teacher [should accompany] his pupil as far as the city limit; one associate scholar [should accompany] another as far as the Sabbath limit;[10] a disciple [should accompany] his master an indefinite distance. But exactly how far is that? R. Sheshet said: Up to a parasang, if the master is not a distinguished scholar; if the master is a distinguished scholar, three parasangs.[11]

380. We have been taught that R. Meir used to say: A person may be compelled to escort [a traveler], because

1. DER 6.
2. B. Ber 58a.
3. PRK, ed. Buber, p. 195b; MTeh 23:3.
4. MTeh 4:3.
5. B. BM 87a.
6. That is, he never accepted an invitation.
7. B. Hul 7b.
8. B. Sot 38b.
9. "Escorting" is deemed to cover a minimum of four cubits or four paces.
10. Two thousand cubits.
11. B. Sot 46b and En Yaakov, ad loc.

the reward for such escorting is limitless, as is said, "And the watchers saw a man come forth out of the city, and they said unto him: 'Show us, we pray thee, the entrance into the city, and we will deal kindly with thee' " (Judg. 1:24); and in the next verse, "And he showed them the entrance into the city" (Judg. 1:25). What kindness did they do for him? Although they slew the entire city by the edge of the sword, they let that man and his family go.

"And the man went into the land of the Hittites, and built a city, and called the name thereof Luz" (Judg. 1:26). The sages taught: It is the city of Luz in which the purple dye is made; it is the city of Luz against which Sennacherib marched without disturbing it, against which Nebuchadnezzar marched without destroying it, and through which the angel of death has no permission to pass. And so, when the old men in it become tired of life, they go outside the wall and die [there]. Now, may not the matter be argued a fortiori? If this Canaanite, who walked not a step and uttered not a word, caused deliverance for himself and his progeny unto the end of all generations, how much more and more he who provides escort with his own two feet.

How did the Canaanite show them [the way]? He curved his mouth [in that direction] for them, according to Hezekiah. He pointed [the way] for them with his finger, according to R. Yohanan. Because this Canaanite pointed with his finger, as we have been taught in keeping with R. Yohanan's opinion, he caused deliverance for himself and his progeny unto the end of all generations.[1]

381. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Meir: Whoever does not escort others or allow himself to be escorted is as though he had shed blood, for had the people of Jericho escorted Elisha, he would not have stirred up bears against the children.[2]

382. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: If Jonathan had provided David with two loaves of bread, Nob the city of priests would not have been put to the sword, Doeg the Edomite would not have been expelled [from the world-to-come], and Saul and his three sons would not have been slain.[3]

Saving an Endangered Life

383. "Thou shalt not stand by the blood of thy neighbor" (Lev. 19:16). What is the proof that he who sees his fellow drowning in a river or being dragged by a wild beast or being attacked by brigands must save him? The verse "Thou shalt not stand by the blood of thy neighbor."

Where is the proof that when a man sees his fellow pursued by someone who intends to kill him, he must save him even at the cost of the pursuer's life? The verse "Thou shalt not stand by the blood of thy neighbor."[4]

384. "Why boasteth thou thyself of evil, O mighty man?" (Ps. 52:3). David asked Doeg: Is this really might, for him who sees his fellow at the edge of a pit to push him into it? Or seeing his fellow on top of a roof, to push him off? Is this might? When can a man truly be called a "mighty man"? When his fellow is about to fall into a pit, and he seizes his hand so that he does not fall in. Or when he sees his fellow fallen into a pit, and he lifts him out of it.[5]

385. The reason Adam was created alone in the world is to teach you that whoever destroys a single soul, Scripture imputes it to him as though he had destroyed the entire world; and whoever keeps alive a single soul, Scripture imputes it to him as though he had preserved the entire world.[6]

386. In civil suits, a man may pay money and effect expiation.[7] But in capital cases, he is held responsible for the blood of him [who was wrongfully condemned] and for the blood of the posterity that would have been his until the end of time. Thus we find that Cain, who slew his brother, was told, "The bloods of thy brother cry out unto Me" (Gen. 4:10). Not "the blood of thy brother," but "the bloods of thy brother": his blood and the blood of the posterity [that would have been his].[8]

387. A man sees a child struggling in the river and says, "As soon as I remove my tefillin, I will save him." And even as he is removing them, the child's life gives out. Or he sees a woman drowning in the river and says, "It is improper for me to look at her while I rescue her." Each of these is a foolish pietist.[9]

388. When two are on a journey [far from an inhabited area], and one has a pitcher of water, if both drink, both will die; if only one of them drinks, he will get to a human settlement. Ben Petura preached: It is better that both drink and both die, rather than that one should behold his companion's death. But then R. Akiva came and taught: "That thy brother may live with thee" (Lev. 25:36)—[with thee] implies that your life takes precedence over the life of your companion.[10]

389. If a woman is in hard labor, the child in her womb may be cut up and brought out member by member, because the mother's survival has priority over the child's survival. But if the greater part of the child has already emerged, it may not be touched, since one life may not be sacrificed to preserve another.[11]

---

1. B. Sot 46b.
2. The words "[Elisha] went up" (2 Kings 2:23) are taken to mean that he went up unescorted. The escorts would not have allowed the children to abuse Elisha. B. Sot 46b.
3. B. Sanh 104a.
4. B. Sanh 73a.
5. MTeh 52:6.
6. B. Sanh 37a; P. Sanh 4:12, 22b.
7. If he causes financial loss through false testimony.
8. B. Sanh 37a.
9. B. Sot 21b; P. Sot 3:4, 19a.
10. B. BM 62a.
11. In the latter case, the child is regarded as already born; and his life is as sacred as his mother's. Oh 7:6.

390. "And the priest shall command that they empty the house, before the priest go in to see the plague, that all that is in the house be not made unclean" (Lev. 14:36). R. Meir said: But which [of his goods] can become unclean? If you say, "His articles of wood, of cloth, or of metal," these may be immersed, and they become clean. What is it, then, that the Torah seeks to spare? His earthenware vessels—his jar and his pot.[1] If the Torah thus seeks to spare a man's possessions that are of least worth, how much more and more by far possessions that he prizes; if his material possessions, how much more and more by far his sons and daughters; and if what belongs to the wicked, how much more and more by far what belongs to the righteous.[2]

391. Our masters taught: One must remove debris [even] on the Sabbath in order to save a life, and the more eagerly one sets to work at it, the more praiseworthy; and one need not obtain permission first from the court. How so? If a man realizes that a child has fallen into the sea, he may cast a net and bring him up. If a man realizes that a child has fallen into a pit, he may break up a segment [of the wall around the pit] and bring the child up. If a man realizes that a door has [sprung shut and] locked in a child, he may break the door and free the child. One may extinguish and isolate a conflagration on the Sabbath.[3]

392. Water may be heated on the Sabbath for a sick person, even by Israel's notables.[4]

393. We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: The Sabbath may be desecrated for a one-day-old infant who is alive, because the Torah said: Desecrate for his sake one Sabbath, so that he may keep many Sabbaths. But for David, king of Israel—dead—the Sabbath may not be desecrated: once a man is dead, he is free from the obligation to observe precepts. Thus, R. Yohanan interpreted "Among the dead I am free" (Ps. 88:6) to mean that once a man is dead, he is free from obligation to observe precepts.[5]

394. This question was asked of R. Tanhum of Nevi: What is the law concerning extinguishing a lamp for a sick man on the Sabbath? He replied: A lamp is called a lamp, and man's soul is also called a lamp.[6] It is right that a man's lamp be extinguished for the sake of the Holy One's lamp [a man's soul].[7]

395. R. Ishmael, R. Akiva, and R. Eleazar ben Azariah were once on a journey, with Levi the Net Maker and R. Ishmael son of R. Eleazar ben Azariah walking behind, when this question was asked of them: How do we know that danger to human life supersedes the laws of the Sabbath? R. Ishmael spoke up and quoted: "If a thief be found breaking in, and be smitten so that he dieth, there shall be no bloodguiltiness for the householder" (Exod. 22:1). Now, it is doubtful whether this thief had come to take money or had come to take life, and even though bloodshed pollutes the land and causes the Presence to depart from Israel, yet the householder is allowed to save himself at the cost of the thief's life—how much more and more by far may danger to human life supersede the laws of the Sabbath!

R. Akiva spoke up and said: "If a man come presumptuously upon his neighbor . . . thou shalt take him from My altar, that he may die" (Exod. 21:14). Now if, because of this man—against whom it is unknown whether the charge of murder has substance or not—the service in the Temple, [which is important enough to] supersede the Sabbath, is interrupted, how much more and more by far should the saving of human life supersede the laws of the Sabbath!

R. Eleazar ben Azariah spoke up and said: If circumcision, which involves only one of the two hundred and forty-eight parts of the human body, supersedes the Sabbath,[8] how much more and more by far does the saving of the whole body supersede the Sabbath!

R. Yose the Galilean, quoting "Only ye shall keep My Sabbaths" (Exod. 31:13), said: One might assume that this applies under all circumstances; therefore the test begins with "only," intimating exceptions.

R. Jonathan ben Joseph, quoting "For it is holy unto you" (Exod. 31:14), said: The Sabbath is committed into your hands, not you into its hand.[9]

R. Simeon ben Menasya said: "And the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath" (Exod. 31:16), by which the Torah implied, "Profane for a man's sake one Sabbath, so that he may keep many Sabbaths."

R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: If I had been there, I should have quoted—and my verse is more apt than theirs—"He shall live by them" (Lev. 18:5)—he shall not die because of them.[10]

Visiting the Sick

396. We have been taught: There is no measure for visiting the sick. What is meant by "There is no measure for visiting the sick"? R. Joseph thought it meant: "There is no measure for the reward given for it." But is there a definite measure of reward for any precept? Have we not been taught: "Be heedful of a light precept as of a weighty one, for you know not what is given as reward for any precept" (Avot 2:1)? Rather, said Abbaye, it means that a great person should visit a humble one. Rava said: Even a hundred times a day.

---

1. These cannot be made clean by immersion. See Lev. 15:12.
2. Neg 12:5.
3. B. Yoma 84a.
4. B. Yoma 84b.
5. B. Shab 151b.
6. "The soul of man is the lamp of the Lord" (Prov. 20:27).
7. B. Shab 30a–b.
8. The circumcision must take place on the eighth day, even if that day falls on the Sabbath, thus suspending the laws of the Sabbath, which prohibit any operation, as well as preparations leading to it.
9. Cf. Mark 2:27.
10. B. Yoma 85a; Mek, Ki Tissa, Shabbata, 1; Yalkut, Mishpatim, §367.

R. Aha bar Hanina said: He who visits a sick man takes away one-sixtieth of his illness. So Abbaye said to Rava: If that is the case, let sixty persons come in and thus make the man rise up [well from his sickbed]. Rava replied: The sixtieth part spoken of here is analogous to the tenth part in the school of Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], where the fraction is taken not from the original amount but from the remainder.[1] And besides, each visitor must be of the same age group as the sick man.[2]

397. R. Huna said: When a person visits the sick, the sick man's illness is diminished by one-sixtieth. At this, R. Huna was challenged: If so, let sixty persons visit the sick man, and he immediately will be able to go down with them into the marketplace. R. Huna replied: [It would work] only if each of the sixty loved him as a man loves himself. In any event, they will afford him some relief.[3]

398. R. Helbo fell ill, and even though R. Kahana went out and announced that R. Helbo was ill, no one came to see him. So R. Kahana said to the sages: Did it not once happen that one of R. Akiva's disciples fell ill, and since the sages did not go to visit him, R. Akiva himself went; and because R. Akiva swept and sprinkled the ground before him, the disciple recovered and said, "Master, you have brought me back to life"? Afterward, R. Akiva went out and preached: He who does not visit the sick is as one who sheds blood.

When R. Dimi came [from the Land of Israel], he said: He who visits the sick causes him to live; and he who does not visit the sick causes him to die.[4]

399. R. Anan said in the name of Rav: How do we know that the Presence sustains a sick man? From the verse: "The Lord will sustain him upon his sickbed" (Ps. 41:4).

R. Avin said in the name of Rav: How do we know that the Presence abides over a sick man's bed? From the verse "The Lord over his sickbed will sustain him."

He who visits the sick should sit neither on the bed nor on a chair nor on a bench, but must wrap himself in his robe and sit on the ground, because the Presence abides over a sick man's bed.[5]

400. Our masters taught: He who visits the sick on a Sabbath should say, "It is the Sabbath, when one may not cry out, but recovery will come soon." R. Meir said: One should say, "The Sabbath can have compassion." R. Judah said: "May He who is everywhere have compassion on you and on the sick of Israel." R. Yose said: "May He who is everywhere have compassion on you among [all] the sick of Israel." When Shebna of Jerusalem entered [a sick man's chamber], he would say, "Peace"; and when he left, he would say, "It is the Sabbath, when one may not cry out, but recovery will come soon, for His compassions are abundant. So enjoy the Sabbath in peace."[6]

401. R. Yose bar Parta said in the name of R. Eliezer: One should not visit those ill with sickness of bowels or sickness of eyes, or those who suffer from headaches.[7]

402. Samuel said: A sick person should be visited only after the fever has left him.[8]

403. Whenever Rava fell ill, he would ask on the first day that his sickness not be made known, lest his future be hurt.[9] After that, he would say [to his servants]: Go out to the marketplace and announce, "Rava has fallen ill." [Upon hearing the announcement], my enemies will rejoice, despite being told, "Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth . . . lest the Lord see it and it displeases Him, and He turn away His wrath from him" (Prov. 24:17–18) [so that I will recover]. And they who love me, [hearing of my illness], will entreat mercy on my behalf.[10]

Burying the Dead and Comforting the Mourners

404. "Act in steadfast loyalty to me; . . . carry me out of Egypt, and bury me" (Gen. 47:29–30). Is there such a thing as loyalty that is not steadfast? No, but what Jacob said to Joseph was: If after my death you act in loyalty toward me, that will be "steadfast loyalty."

[Why did Jacob speak thus? He spoke in refutation of] the cynical proverb "When your friend's son dies, give your friend sympathy; when your friend himself dies—be on your way!"[11]

405. Our masters taught: He who closes [the eyes of a dying man] at the point of death is a murderer, as may be understood by analogy with a lamp that is flickering out; if one presses one's finger upon it, the lamp goes out at once.

We have been taught that R. Simeon ben Gamaliel said: He who wishes the eyes of a dead man to close should blow wine into his nostrils, apply oil between his eyelids, or take hold of his two big toes, and the eyes will close of themselves.[12]

406. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: What is the proof that he who keeps his dead unburied overnight transgresses a negative precept? The verse "His body shall not remain overnight. . . . Thou shalt surely bury him the same day" (Deut. 21:23).

If the relative keeps the body overnight to honor the

---

1. So there would always be a portion of the man's illness remaining.
2. B. Ned 39b.
3. Lev. R. 34:1.
4. B. Ned 39b–40a.
5. B. Ned 40a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. B. Shab 12a.
7. For whom visits are burdensome. B. Ned 41a.
8. Ibid.
9. Through people's idle talk.
10. B. Ned 40a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
11. The friend being dead, there is no one to repay the trouble you may go to for his sake. Gen. R. 96:5.
12. B. Shab 152b.

deceased—to have his death made known in nearby towns, to bring professional women mourners[1] for him, or to procure for him a coffin and shrouds—he violates no precept, for all he does [that brings about delay of burial] is done for the honor of the deceased.[2]

407. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon ben Yohai: Where in the Torah is burial of the dead alluded to as a precept? In the verse "Bury, thou shalt bury him" (Deut. 21:23).

King Shapur[3] asked R. Hama: From where in the Torah is the obligation to bury the dead derived? R. Hama remained silent, saying nothing in reply. Upon hearing about this incident, R. Aha bar Jacob commented, "The world is given over into the hands of fools! R. Hama should have cited, 'Bury . . . him.' "

[King Shapur might have responded]: Perhaps the words imply that the body must be placed in a coffin?

R. Hama should have quoted the entire verse: "Bury, thou shalt bury him" [where the repetition of the verb indicates burial in the ground].

[Since burying may also refer to a body's being placed in a coffin, King Shapur would have maintained that R. Hama's] inference even from the entire verse was unwarranted.

Should R. Hama have said that the righteous [such as the patriarchs] were buried?

[King Shapur might have retorted]: Merely a matter of general custom.

But the Holy One buried Moses.

He did so merely in order not to depart from the general custom.

R. Hama should have cited "They shall not be buried, neither shall men lament for them" (Jer. 16:6).

[King Shapur would have retorted]: Such a citation indicates that in this instance there was to be a departure from the general custom.[4]

408. When a man finds an unidentified body, he should attend to its needs and bury it in the place where it was found. R. Akiva said: This is how my ministry to the sages began. Once, while walking on a road, I found a slain man. I carried him a distance of four mil to a burial place, where I interred him. When I came to R. Eliezer and R. Joshua, I told them what had happened. They said to me, "Every step you took is deemed against you as though you had shed blood." Then I said to myself, reasoning from the minor to the major: If I incurred sin when I thought to do good, how much more sin would I have incurred had I not thought to do good!

Henceforth, I did not budge from ministering to the sages.[5]

409. Our masters taught: One may interrupt the study of Torah to attend a funeral procession.

It is said of R. Judah bar Ilai that he used to interrupt the study of Torah to attend a funeral procession, but only when there were not enough people in the procession. When there are enough, study may not be interrupted. And how many are enough? R. Samuel bar Ini said in the name of Rav: Twelve thousand men and six thousand trumpeters. Ulla said: As many as, say, would form a continuous line from the city gate to the grave. However, R. Sheshet—according to some, R. Yohanan—said: Torah's interruption requires as many to be present as there were when it was given: since the Torah was given in the presence of sixty myriads, so it can be interrupted only if sixty myriads are present.

When may study be interrupted by the presence of sixty myriads? At the funeral of one who read Scripture and recited Mishnah. But at the funeral of one who taught Scripture and Mishnah, there is no limit.[6]

410. Our masters taught: The words "And they did honor him at his death" (2 Chron. 32:33) refer to Hezekiah, king of Judah, before whom thirty-six thousand [warriors] marched with shoulders bare.[7] Such is the opinion of R. Judah. But R. Nehemiah said to him: Was not the same done for Ahab [who was an evildoer]? What did happen was that a Torah scroll was placed on Hezekiah's bier, and the people declared: This one fulfilled all that is written in that scroll.[8]

411. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: A man who sees a corpse [on the way to burial] and does not accompany it shows no concern for the assertion "He that mocketh the poor blasphemeth his Maker" (Prov. 17:5). And if he accompanies it, what is his reward? To him apply the words "He that is gracious unto the poor lendeth unto the Lord" (Prov. 19:7) and "He that is gracious unto the needy honoreth Him" (Prov. 14:31).[9]

412. Our masters taught: A man who transports bones from one place to another should not put them in a saddlebag, place the bag on his donkey's back, and then sit on it, because this is a disrespectful way of treating them. But if he is afraid of heathens or robbers, he may do so. And the rule laid down for bones applies also to a Torah scroll.[10]

---

1. See Jer. 9:16.
2. B. Sanh 46b–47a.
3. Shapur II, king of Persia, 309–380, transferred the royal residence to Ctesiphon, and there came in contact with Jewish sages" (Sanh, Soncino, p. 307, n. 6). Like other magi, he was opposed to burial of corpses in the ground, and he sought to demolish Jewish arguments that burial in the ground should take place. First, he pointed out that burial should include placing the corpse in a casket. When the example of the patriarchs was cited, he dismissed the practice as being no more than a custom—not a prescription. When it was pointed out that God buried Moses, Shapur still insisted that God simply did not wish to depart from the prevailing custom.
4. The ancient Persians regarded burial as a desecration of the earth. Hence King Shapur's question. B. Sanh 46b.
5. P. Naz 7:1, 56a; Sem 4.
6. B. Ket 17a.
7. For an explanation of the number of warriors and the baring of shoulders, see above, part 1, chap. 6, §167.
8. B. BK 16b–17a.
9. B. Ber 18a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
10. Ibid. and En Yaakov, ad loc.

413. R. Aha bar Hanina said: A wicked man should not be buried next to a righteous one; and just as a wicked man should not be buried next to a righteous one, so is a grossly wicked man not to be buried next to one mildly wicked.[1]

414. We have been taught: A man should not walk about in a cemetery with tefillin on his head, nor read from a Torah scroll held on his arm. If he does, he shows no concern for the assertion "He that mocketh the poor[2] blasphemeth his Maker" (Prov. 17:5).[3]

415. Once, while R. Hiyya and R. Jonathan were walking about in a cemetery, the fringes of R. Jonathan's cloak were trailing on the ground. R. Hiyya said to him, "Lift it up, so that the dead should not say, 'Tomorrow they will be coming to join us, yet now they treat us with contempt.' "[4] R. Jonathan replied, "But do they know such things? Is it not written, 'But the dead know not anything' (Eccles. 9:5)?" R. Hiyya: "If you have read the verse once, you have not repeated it; if you have repeated it, you have not gone over it a third time; if you have gone over it a third time, you have not had it explained to you properly. 'For the living know that they shall die' (ibid.)—these are the righteous, who in their death are called living. 'But the dead know not anything'—Such dead are the wicked, who even during their lives are called dead."[5]

416. R. Isaac said: If one makes invidious remarks about the dead, it is like making remarks about a stone. Some say the reason is that they do not know; others say that they know but do not care. But is that so? Has not R. Papa told of a certain man who made derogatory remarks about Samuel while following his bier, and a log fell from the roof and cracked that man's skull? A disciple of the wise [such as Samuel] is different, because the Holy One demands the deference due him.[6]

417. There was a certain magus who used to rummage among graves.[7] When he came to the burial cave of R. Tobi bar Mattenah, R. Tobi grabbed hold of his beard. Abbaye[8] came by and said to Tobi, "Pray, let go of him." A year later, the magus came back, and the dead man again seized hold of his beard. Abbaye came by again [to rescue the magus], but this time the dead man would not let go, so they had to bring scissors and cut off the magus's beard.[9]

418. At one time, providing decent burial was more burdensome for the kin of the deceased than even his death, so they would leave the body and run away, until Rabban Gamaliel [II] came and prescribed a simple style for himself—he was carried out in inexpensive linen shrouds. Thereafter, all the people followed his practice by carrying out their dead in inexpensive linen shrouds.

R. Papa added: And now it is the practice to take out the dead even in a shroud of rough cloth worth no more than a zuz.[10]

419. Whoever heaps elaborate shrouds upon the dead transgresses the injunction against wanton destruction. So R. Meir.

R. Eleazar bar Zadok said: "Such a one disgraces the deceased."

Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: "He invites more worms to feed on the deceased."[11]

420. R. Yannai said to his children: My sons, bury me not in white shrouds nor in black shrouds—not in white, lest, lacking merit, I look like a bridegroom among mourners; nor in black, lest, having merit, I look like a mourner among bridegrooms. But bury me in bath attendants' drab-colored cloth that comes from a city across the sea.[12]

421. When R. Yohanan was about to depart from the world, he said to those who were to attend to his burial: Bury me in dun-colored shrouds, neither white nor black, so that if I stand among the righteous, I will not be ashamed, and if I stand among the wicked, I will not be humiliated.

When R. Josiah was about to depart from the world, he asked those who were standing about him, "Call my disciples." When they came, he said to them, "Bury me in [freshly] ironed white shrouds." When they asked him, "Are you better than your master [R. Yohanan]?" he replied, "[It is to show that] I am not ashamed of my deeds when I greet my Creator."[13]

422. Our masters taught: Formerly, the faces of the rich were left uncovered, while the faces of the poor, which during years of drought had turned dark, were covered; understandably, the poor felt humiliated. In deference to their feelings, it was instituted that everybody's face should be covered.

Formerly, the rich were carried out for burial on a state bed, and the poor on a plain bier; understandably, the poor felt humiliated. In deference to their feelings, it was instituted that all should be taken out on a plain bier.

Formerly, a perfuming pan was placed under those

---

1. B. Sanh 47a.
2. The dead are "poor" in that they are incapable of performing precepts.
3. B. Ber 18a.
4. Since the dead are not obligated to observe precepts, dragging the fringes on the ground—tangible evidence of such observance—is both contempt and insult.
5. Unlike the righteous, who prepare for death, the wicked make no such preparations. Hence, says R. Hiyya, the verse R. Jonathan cited did not indicate that the dead were unaware of what was happening around them. B. Ber 18a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
6. B. Ber 19a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
7. Persian fire-worshipers considered it sinful to defile the earth by burying dead bodies in it. They would accordingly exhume bodies and expose them to the birds.
8. He was apparently a friend of the magus.
9. B. BB 58a.
10. B. Ket 8b.
11. Sem 9 (ed. Zlotnick, p. 72).
12. B. Shab 114a.
13. P. Kil 9:4, 32b; Gen. R. 96:5; Tanhuma, Va-yehi, §3; Tanhuma B, Va-yehi, §6.

who died of disease of the bowels; understandably, the living sufferers from such disease felt humiliated.[1] In deference to their feelings, it was instituted that such a pan should be set under all who died.[2]

423. R. Judah said: Formerly, in Judea, no fewer than seven halts and sit-downs were provided in escorting the dead. It was done thus: [After the escort had rested on the ground], the announcer called out, "Stand up, dear friends, stand up!" And after they had walked for some distance, he again called out, "Sit down, dear friends, sit down!"[3]

424. Our masters taught: Formerly, the mourners used to stand still, while all the people passed in front of them. But there were two families in Jerusalem who contended with each other, each insisting: "We shall pass first." So the masters laid down the rule that the people should remain standing, and the mourners pass in front of them.[4]

425. Our masters taught: Formerly, [victuals] to the house of mourning were conveyed for the rich in silver and gold baskets, and for the poor in baskets of peeled willow shoots, which caused the poor to feel humiliated. In deference to their feelings, it was instituted that victuals for poor and rich alike should be conveyed in baskets of peeled willow shoots.

Formerly, beverages in a rich man's house of mourning were served in white glass vessels, and in a poor man's house of mourning in colored glass, which caused the poor to feel humiliated. In deference to their feelings, it was instituted that beverages for poor and rich alike should be served in colored glass.[5]

426. We have been taught: The sages instituted that ten cups of wine be drunk in the house of a mourner: three before the meal, in order to open the small bowels; three during the meal, in order to dissolve the food in the bowels; and four after the meal—one corresponding to "Who feedeth,"[6] one corresponding to "The blessing for the Land," one corresponding to "Who rebuildeth Jerusalem," and one corresponding to "Who is good and doeth good." Then they added another four cups: one in honor of the town officers, one in honor of the town leaders, one in honor of the Temple, and one in honor of Rabban Gamaliel. But when people began to drink so much that they became intoxicated, the practice of drinking the original number of ten cups was restored.[7]

427. A story is told of one of Kevul's[8] notables who was about to have his son wed. On the fourth day of the week,[9] he invited guests. While they were eating and drinking, he said to his son, "Go up to the upper chamber and get us some good wine out of such-and-such a cask." When the son got there, a serpent bit him, and he died. The father waited for him to come down, but when he did not, the father said: I will go up and see what's happened to my son. He went up and found that a serpent had bitten his son and that he was dead, lying among the wine casks. What did the father do? [Not wishing to dampen the merry mood of his guests], he waited until they had finished their meal. Then, as they were about to say the grace after meals, he spoke out: "Masters, you are not here to say in my son's honor the bridegroom's grace after meals, but rather to say the mourners' grace after meals. You are not here to escort my son to his bridal chamber—come, then, and escort him to his grave." Presently, R. Zakkai of Cabul [lamenting the son's death] concluded his discourse with "If laughter is mingled [with grief], then I say, 'What does mirth accomplish?' " (Eccles. 2:2).[10]

428. "Once, when Jacob was cooking a stew, Esau came in from the open, famished" (Gen. 25:29). On that day Abraham our father died, and our father Jacob made a stew of lentils to comfort Isaac his father. Why lentils? In the west [the Land of Israel], it was said in the name of Rabbah bar Mari: Even as the lentil has, so to speak, no mouth [no cleft], so a mourner has no mouth [he is mute]. According to others: Even as a lentil is round, so mourning comes round in turn to all who enter the world.[11]

429. The sages said in the name of Bar Kappara: When one sheds tears [at the death of] a virtuous man, the Holy One counts them and places them in His treasure house.[12]

430. R. Judah said: Even the poorest man in Israel should provide [for his wife's funeral] not less than two flutes and at least one professional female mourner.[13]

431. During the week of a festival, women may wail but not clap their hands [in a gesture of grief]. However, R. Ishmael said: Those who are next to the bier may clap their hands [in a gesture of grief]. On New Moons, Hanukkah, and Purim, they may both wail and clap their hands. But on none of these days may they chant a dirge.

What is meant by a wail? That all the women wail together. What is meant by a dirge? That one chants [a line] of a dirge, and the others respond [by repeating it].

What did the women say [as they lamented]? According to Rava, the women of Shekanzib[14] used to say:

---

1. To suffer during one's lifetime was bad enough; to be singled out at death was too much.
2. B. MK 27a–b.
3. B. BB 100b.
4. B. Sanh 19a.
5. B. MK 27a.
6. "Who feedeth" is the first blessing in the grace after meals; the blessing "for the Land" is the second; "Who rebuildeth Jerusalem" is the third; and "Who is good and doeth good" is the fourth. See Hertz, APB, pp. 966–74.
7. B. Ket 8b; Sem 14.
8. A city in western Galilee near Acco.
9. The day virgins are wed. See Ket 1:1.
10. JV: "I said of laughter: 'It is mad'; and of mirth: 'What doth it accomplish'?" But meholal ("mad") can also mean "mingled [with grief]." Lev. R. 20:3; Eccles. R. 2:2, §4.
11. B. BB 16b.
12. B. Shab 105b.
13. B. Ket 46b.
14. Not far from Mahoza, where Rava lived.

Alas for him who is departing,
Alas for the loss [that is ours].
O mountains, enfold yourselves [in clouds]
And cover yourselves [in mourning].
For he is descended from princes, son of great men.
O Sheol, provide a stole of Milesian wool
For this offspring of great men, whose own capacity to provide has ended.[1]

432. We have been taught: Even as the deceased are requited, so are eulogizers [who do not tell the truth] and they who echo [the falsehoods spoken by] them.[2]

433. In Jerusalem they used to walk in front of the bier reciting the things a deceased person had done, while in Judea they used to recite behind the bier the things he had done. For in Jerusalem they recited in front of the bier only the things he had actually done, while behind the bier they recited the things he had done as well as the things he had not done. However, in Judea they recited in front of the bier the things he had done as well as things he had not done, but those who followed the bier did not respond to all things recited, limiting themselves to only things he had done.[3]

434. Our masters taught: They who are engaged in eulogizing may, as long as the body is still before them, step aside one by one to recite the Shema. When the body is no longer before them, they may sit down to recite it, while the mourner sits in silence. When they stand up to recite the Tefillah, the mourner should stand up to resign himself to God's judgment as he says, "Master of the universes, I have sinned greatly before You, and You did not requite me even a thousandth part. May it be Your will, O Lord our God, that in compassion You heal the breaches we have suffered and the breaches suffered by Your entire people Israel."

Abbaye said: A man should not speak thus, for we have been taught in the name of R. Yose that a man should not provide an opening for Satan [to make accusations].[4]

435. R. Simeon ben Eleazar said: Do not try to comfort your friend while the body of his deceased lies before him.[5]

436. It happened that a child of R. Hiyya bar Abba, the teacher of Resh Lakish's son, died. The first day [of R. Hiyya's mourning], Resh Lakish did not go to him. The next day, Resh Lakish took along Judah bar Nahmani, his interpreter,[6] and said to him, "Rise and say something [appropriate] to the death of the child." Judah began his discourse with the verse "When the Lord saw that He was spurned, He [moved] in anger against a man's sons and daughters" (Deut. 32:19).[7] When there is a generation in which fathers spurn the Holy One, He moves in anger against their sons and daughters, so that they die young. Did Judah, invited to comfort R. Hiyya, mean to add to his grief [by speaking] thus? On the contrary—he meant: "You [R. Hiyya] are so important as to be punished [by the loss of your child] for the shortcomings of your generation."

Then Resh Lakish said to Judah, "Rise and say something suitable to the praise of the Holy One." Judah began his discourse by saying, "O God, who is great in the abundance of His greatness, mighty and strong in the multitude of awesome deeds, who with His word revives the dead, who does great things that are unsearchable and wondrous works without number. Blessed are You, O Lord, who revives the dead."

Then Resh Lakish said to Judah, "Rise and say something appropriate to the mourners." Judah began his discourse by saying, "Our brethren, worn out and crushed by this bereavement, set your hearts to consider this: your experience is one that abides forever; it is a path trodden ever since the six days of creation. Many have drunk [this cup of sorrow]; many will drink. Like the drinking of the former, so will be the drinking of the latter. Our brethren, may the Lord of consolations comfort you. Blessed be He who comforts the mourners."

Then Resh Lakish said to Judah, "Rise and say something appropriate to those who comfort mourners." Judah began his discourse by saying, "Our brethren, bestowers of loving-kindnesses, children of bestowers of loving-kindnesses, who hold fast to the covenant of Abraham our father, our brethren, may the Lord of requital give you your reward. Blessed are You, O Lord, who gives the reward due."

Resh Lakish then said to Judah, "Rise and say something capable of consoling all of Israel." Judah began his discourse by saying, "Lord of universes, redeem and save, deliver and rescue Your people Israel from pestilence and from the sword, from plundering and from the blast, from mildew and from all kinds of calamities stirring up to overwhelm the world. Even before we call, may You answer. Blessed are You who stays the plague."[8]

437. When R. Samuel bar Judah's daughter died, the sages said to Ulla: Let us go in and console him. But he answered them: What have I to do with the Babylonian's manner of consolation, which is almost blasphemy? For they say, "What can one do [against God]?" which implies that, were it possible to do anything, they would have done it. He therefore went alone to R. Samuel and said to him: [Scripture says], "And the Lord said unto me: 'Be not at enmity with Moab, neither contend with them in battle' " (Deut. 2:9). Now, there is the question: Would it have entered Moses' mind to wage war against Moab without God's express permission [so that God had to say explicitly, "Do not contend with Moab"]? No, but reasoning a fortiori,

---

1. B. MK 28b.
2. B. Ber 62a.
3. Sem 3 (ed. Zlotnick, p. 38).
4. B. Ber 19a.
5. Avot 4:18.
6. The one who expanded to the public the master's occasionally brief or cryptic utterances spoken in a low voice.
7. JV: "And the Lord saw, and spurned, because of the provoking of His sons and daughters."
8. B. Ket 8b.

Moses said, "Concerning the Midianites, who came only to assist the Moabites, the Torah has commanded 'Vex the Midianites and smite them' [Num. 25:17]). Therefore, all the more should the Moabites themselves be vexed." But the Holy One said to Moses, "The idea that entered your mind is not what entered Mine. There are two good doves I must bring forth from these two nations: Ruth the Moabite and Naamah the Ammonite."[1] Now, may not the matter be argued a fortiori? If, for the sake of two good doves [who were to descend from Moab and Ammon], the Holy One showed pity to these two great nations, so that they were not destroyed, does it not follow all the more that if my master [R. Hiyya's] daughter had been fit and worthy to have goodly issue, [she would not have died] but would have remained alive?[2]

438. "Weep not for the dead, neither bemoan him" (Jer. 23:10). "Weep not for the dead" in excess, "neither bemoan him" beyond measure. What does this mean? Three days of weeping, seven for lamenting, and thirty days [for refraining] from wearing pressed clothes and from trimming the hair. "From then on," says the Holy One, "you are not expected to be more compassionate to him than I."[3]

439. When R. Hanina's daughter died and he did not weep for her, his wife asked: Was it a mere hen you carried out of your house? He replied: Do you want me to suffer two evils—not only bereavement but also blindness from incessant weeping?[4]

440. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: When a man indulges in excessive grief for his dead, he will soon find himself weeping for another dead.

In R. Huna's neighborhood, there was a woman who had seven sons. When one of them died, she wept excessively. R. Huna sent word to her: "Don't do this," but she paid no attention to him. He sent word again: "If you listen, well and good; if not, you may find yourself preparing shrouds for your remaining sons." When all of them died, she kept on weeping. Finally, he sent word to her: "Prepare shrouds for yourself," and she, too, died.[5]

441. Rav said: Only after twelve months does one begin to forget the dead.[6]

442. Our masters taught: There are three things God reluctantly thought of, but even if He had not thought of them, they had to be thought of: that a corpse should smell foul,[7] that the dead should be put out of mind, and that produce should rot.[8]

443. R. Meir said: He who finds his fellow mourning after twelve months and speaks words of consolation to him—whom does he resemble? A physician who finds a man whose broken leg had mended and says to him, "Come with me. I will break your leg again and heal it, and you will see how excellent are my medicaments."[9]

1. Solomon's wife, through whom the royal house of Judah descended.
2. B. BK 38a–b.
3. B. MK 27b.
4. B. Shab 151b.
5. B. MK 27b.
6. B. Ber 58b.
7. But for that, the kin might keep it and never be consoled.
8. But for that, speculators might hold on to it to raise prices. B. Pes 54b.
9. B. MK 21b.

CHAPTER FOUR

TRAITS AND ATTITUDES

Peace and Strife

1. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: The world endures on account of three things: on account of justice, truth, and peace.[1]

2. R. Simeon ben Halafta said: The Holy One found no vessel that could contain Israel's blessing except peace, as is said, "In the Lord's wish to give enduring strength to His people, the Lord blessed His people with peace" (Ps. 29:18).[2]

3. "And the Land shall yield her produce" (Lev. 26:4). You might say, "Well, we've got food, we've got drink." Still, if there is no peace, there is nothing at all, for Scripture goes on to say, "And I will give peace in the Land" (Ps. 26:6), which indicates that peace equals all else. Indeed, we say [in the morning Tefillah], "When He made peace, He created everything."

R. Levi said: Peace is precious, for the blessings [following the Shema and the blessing at the end of the Tefillah] conclude with peace.[3] Then, too, the priests' blessing ends with "The Lord give thee peace" (Num. 6:26), by way of saying that none of the blessings avail at all unless peace is with them.

R. Eleazar ha-Kappar said: Great is peace, for even when Israel worship idols but are together in one band, the measure of justice does not touch them, as is said, "Ephraim is banded to idols, let him alone" (Hos. 4:17). But when they are divided, what is said of them? "Their heart is divided—let them now bear their guilt" (Hos. 10:2).

Hezekiah said: Great is peace, for Scripture says of all the other journeys, "They journeyed" and "They encamped"—that is to say, they set out in strife and encamped in strife. But when they came to Sinai, they encamped as a single encampment: "Israel, there he encamped before the mount" (Exod. 19:2). Then the Holy One said: Since they have learned to hate strife and love peace, so that they are now encamped as a single encampment, the time has come for Me to give them My Torah.

R. Eliezer said: Great is peace, for the prophets have implanted in the mouths of people nought but peace.

Bar Kappara said: Great is peace, for even those on high require peace, as is said, "He maketh peace among those of His on high" (Job 25:2). Now, the matter may be argued a fortiori: if those on high—among whom there is no hatred, no enmity, no jealousy, no rivalry, no grudging eye—require peace, all the more and more so do human beings, among whom there are such [evil] traits.

R. Joshua said: Great is peace, for the Holy One Himself is called Peace, as is said, "And he called it 'the Lord is peace' " (Judg. 6:24).

R. Joshua ben Levi said: Great is peace; peace is to the world as leaven is to dough.

Great is peace, for even the dead require peace, as when God said to Abram, "Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace" (Gen. 15:15).

R. Ishmael said: Great is peace, for we find that the Holy One allowed His Name, which is written [in the Torah] in sanctity, to be erased by water in order to bring peace between husband and wife.[4]

Great is peace. For the sake of peace, the Holy One changed words a person uttered, as when the angel quoted Sarah as having said, "Shall I of a surety bear a child, who am old?"[5] (Gen. 18:13).[6]

4. R. Ilai said in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: For the sake of peace, one is allowed to change something that has been said, as when the brothers said to Joseph, "Thy father did command. . . . So shall ye say to Joseph: Forgive, I pray thee now" (Gen. 50:16–17).[7]

R. Simeon ben Gamaliel observed: See how much ink was spilled, how many pens broken, how many hides cured, how many children spanked—[all] to learn in the Torah something that had never been said. Consider then how great is the power of peace![8]

5. Hezekiah said: Great is peace, for of all other precepts it is written, "If thou meet thine enemy's ox . . . going astray" (Exod. 23:4), "If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee" (Exod. 23:5), "If a bird's nest chance to be before thee" (Deut. 22:6). These mean: If a precept is at hand, you are required to perform it; but if it is not, you are not required to perform it. Of peace, however, what is said? "Seek peace, and pursue it" (Ps. 34:15), meaning: Seek it where you are and pursue it elsewhere.[9]

6. Hillel said: Be of the disciples of Aaron, loving peace, pursuing peace, loving mankind, and bringing them near to Torah.

---

1. Avot 1:2.
2. Uk 3:12.
3. See Hertz, APB, pp. 372 and 154.
4. The passage concerning a woman suspected of infidelity (Num. 5:11–21) is written in ink on a tablet. In the course of the ordeal administered to the woman, it is required that the words of the passage be washed off by water, thus blotting out, so to speak, the Names of God mentioned in it.
5. Actually she said: "my lord being old" (Gen. 18:12).
6. Sif Lev., ed. Weiss, p. 111a; Sif Num., §42; Tanhuma B, Tzav, §10; Lev. R. 9:9; Num. R. 11:7; Deut. R. 5:12; Per Sha; Yalkut, Naso, §711.
7. Jacob gave no such command.
8. B. Yev 65b; Tanhuma B, Tzav, §10.
9. Lev. R. 9:9; P. Pe 1:1, 15d; Per Sha.

Loving peace. What does this mean? It means that a man should love [to foster] peace in Israel between man and man, just as Aaron loved [to foster] peace in Israel between man and man, as is stated, "The law of truth was in his mouth, and unrighteousness was not found in his lips; he walked with Me in peace and uprightness, and did turn away from iniquity" (Mal. 2:6). R. Meir said: What is meant by "and did turn many away from iniquity"? Whenever Aaron walked along the road and met a wicked man, he would greet him warmly. On the following day, when that man was about to commit a transgression, he would say to himself: Woe is me! After doing this, how can I lift my eyes and look Aaron in the face? I would be ashamed before him, since he greeted me so warmly. Consequently, that man will hold himself back from transgression.

Similarly, when two men had quarreled with each other, Aaron would go and sit with one of them and say, "My son, see what your companion is doing! He beats his breast and rends his clothes as he moans, 'Woe is me! How can I lift my eyes and look my companion in the face? I am shamed before him, since it is I who offended him.' " Aaron would sit with him until he had removed all rancor from his heart. Then Aaron would go and sit with the other man and say likewise, "My son, see what your companion is doing! He beats his breast and rends his clothes as he moans, 'Woe is me! How can I lift my eyes and look my companion in the face? I am ashamed before him, since it was I who offended him.' " Aaron would sit with him also until he had removed all rancor from his heart. Later, when the two met, they would embrace and kiss each other. Therefore it is stated, "They wept for Aaron thirty days, even all the House of Israel" (Num. 20:29).[1]

7. Although the school of Shammai and the school of Hillel were in disagreement—what the one forbade, the other permitted—nevertheless, the school of Shammai did not refrain from marrying women [of the families] of the school of Hillel, nor did the school of Hillel refrain from marrying those of the school of Shammai. This should teach you that they showed love and friendship toward one another, thus putting into practice the injunction "Love ye truth, but also peace" (Zech. 8:19).[2]

8. "Do not break up into clusters" (Deut. 14:1).[3] Do not form many [small] clusters, but all of you stay as one cluster.

"Do not break up into clusters." Do not divide in dissent against one another, lest you bring about a "baldness" within your number, as Korah did. He divided Israel, making them into many small clusters, and thus brought about a korhah, a "baldness," in Israel.[4]

9. "Ye . . . are alive every one of you this day" (Deut. 4:4). When are you described as "alive"? As [on this day], when "every one of you" is joined together in one cluster.

["When His cluster is one, He will establish it upon the Land" (Amos 9:6).][5] In the way of the world, when a man picks up a cluster of reeds, can he possibly break them all at one time? But if he picks up the reeds one by one, even a child can break them. Thus you find that Israel cannot be redeemed until they are one cluster: "In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the House of Israel, and they shall come together in a cluster out of the land of the north" (Jer. 3:18).[6]

10. Why was "That it was good" not said on the second day of creation? R. Hanina explained: Because on the second day separation [that is to say, disunion] was brought into being, as indicated in "Let [the firmament] separate water from water" (Gen. 1:6). In this regard, R. Tavyome noted: If there is no mention "that it was good," about an act of separation that is conducive to the world's improvement and well-being, all the less so should these words occur in describing acts of separation that lead to the world's disarray.[7]

11. Any controversy that is carried on for Heaven's sake will in the end be of lasting worth, but any that is not carried on for Heaven's sake will in the end not be of lasting worth. What controversy was for Heaven's sake? The controversy between Hillel and Shammai. What was not for Heaven's sake? The controversy caused by Korah and his entire company.[8]

12. We have been taught that R. Nehemiah said: On account of hatred without rightful cause, strife grows abundant in a man's household.[9]

13. Why was the First Temple destroyed? Because of three evils in it: idolatry, sexual immorality, and bloodshed. But why was the Second Temple destroyed, seeing that, during the time it stood, people occupied themselves with Torah, observance of precepts, and the practice of charity? Because, during the time it stood, hatred without rightful cause prevailed. This should teach you that hatred without rightful cause is deemed as grave as all the three sins of idolatry, sexual immorality, and bloodshed together.[10]

14. "He hangeth the earth on restraint (belimah)"[11] (Job 26:7). R. Ilai said: The world endures only on account of him who restrains (bolem) himself during strife.[12]

---

1. Avot 1:14; ARN, Soncino, 13.
2. B. Yev 14b.
3. In JV, titgodedu is translated "do not cut yourselves." But the verb may also be a form of aguddah ("cluster").
4. Sif Deut., §96; Yalkut, Re'eh, §891.
5. JV: "And hath founded His vault upon the earth." But aguddato ("His vault") also means "His cluster"; and eretz ("earth") also means "the Land of Israel."
6. Tanhuma B, Nitzavim, §4; Yalkut, Nitzavim, §40.
7. Gen. R. 4:6.
8. Avot 5:17.
9. B. Shab 32b.
10. B. Yoma 9b.
11. The word belimah means "nothing," as in JV, but it can also mean "restraint."
12. B. Hul 89a.

15. A house in which there is dissension will be destroyed in the end.[1]

16. There were two men who were incited by Satan, so that every Sabbath eve, as the sun was about to set, they fell to quarreling. R. Meir happened to visit them, and for three Sabbaths he stopped them from quarreling, until peace was made between them. Then R. Meir heard Satan wailing: Woe! R. Meir has put me out of my home.[2]

17. Pause and consider how grievous a thing is strife, for the Holy One exterminates the memory of all who help foment it, as is said, "A fire came forth from the Lord, and devoured the two hundred and fifty men" (Num. 16:35).[3]

18. In the time-to-come, when the wicked are condemned to Gehenna, they will complain about the Holy One, saying: Behold, we looked forward to our deliverance by the Holy One. The Holy One will reply: In the world in which you existed, were you not masters of strife, slander, and all kinds of evil? "Behold, all of you kindled a fire, girded yourselves with firebrands" (Isa. 50:11). Therefore, "be gone in the flame of your fire, and among the brands that ye have kindled" (ibid.). And should you ask, "Is it of My hand ye have this?" (ibid.)—no, you did it to yourselves. What you get is of your own doing. Therefore "ye shall lie down in sorrow" (ibid.).[4]

19. Two gladiators cannot sleep on the same board.[5]

20. No good thing can come from a quarrel.[6]

21. Though there be seven pits before the man of peace, [he will not fall into any of them]; but the evildoer will fall even if there is only one pit.[7]

22. R. Huna said: Strife is like an opening made in a dam, which widens as the water presses through it.[8]

Charitable Judgment and Suspicion

23. Hillel said: Judge not your fellow man until you have been in his place.[9]

24. Joshua ben Perahiah said: When you judge anyone, tip the scale in his favor.[10]

25. Our masters taught: He who judges his fellow man on the scale of merit is himself judged favorably.

There is a story of a man who went down from Upper Galilee and hired himself out to a householder in the south for three years. On the eve of the Day of Atonement, the hired man said to the householder, "Give me my wages, so that I may go and maintain my wife and children." The householder: "I have no money." The man: "Give me produce." "I have none." "Give me land." "I have none." "Give me cattle." "I have none." "Give me pillows and bedding." "I have none." So the man tied up his belongings, slung them over his back, and went home in despair. After the holiday, the householder took the wages due the hired man, together with the loads of three asses, a load of food, a load of drink, and a load of delicacies, and went to the hired man's house. After they had eaten and drunk, the householder gave him his wages, and said to him, "When you told me, 'Give me my wages,' and I answered 'I have no money,' what did you suspect me of?"

"I thought perhaps you came upon some merchandise at a low price and purchased it with the money owed me."

"And when you told me, 'Give me cattle,' and I answered, 'I have no cattle,' what did you suspect me of?"

"I thought that they may have been hired out to others."

"And when you said to me, 'Give me land,' and I replied, 'I have no land,' what did you suspect me of?"

"I thought your land was rented out to others."

"And when I told you, 'I have no produce,' what did you suspect me of?"

"I thought perhaps they were not yet tithed."

"And when I told you, 'I have no pillows or bedding,' what did you suspect me of?"

"I thought perhaps you had devoted all your property to Heaven."

The householder exclaimed, "By the Temple service! It was just so. I vowed away all my property because of my son Hyrcanus, who would not occupy himself with Torah, but when I went to my companions in the south, they absolved me of all my vows. And as for you—as you judged me on the scale of merit, so may He who is everywhere judge you on the scale of merit."[11]

26. Our masters taught: There is the story of a certain pious man[12] who ransomed an Israelite maiden from captivity and at the inn had her sleep at his feet. The next day, he went down into a ritual bath, immersed himself, and then taught Mishnah to his disciples, whom he asked, "When I had her sleep at my feet, what did you suspect me of?"

"We thought that perhaps there is a disciple among us whose piety has not been proven to our master."[13]

"When I went down and immersed myself, what did you suspect me of?"

"We thought that, perhaps, because of the fatigue of the journey, the master had had a nocturnal emission."

"By the Temple service," the pious man exclaimed, "it was just so! And as for you—as you judged me on the

---

1. DEZ 9.
2. B. Git 52a.
3. Num. R. 18:4.
4. Eccles. R. 3:9, §1.
5. Since their task is to fight each other. Gen. R. 75:4.
6. Exod. R. 30:17.
7. B. Sanh 7a.
8. Ibid.
9. Avot 2:5.
10. Avot 1:6.
11. According to one tradition, the householder was R. Eliezer ben Hyrcanus and the hired man was Akiva. So She'eltot, as quoted by Adin Steinsaltz, Shab, ad loc. B. Shab 127b.
12. R. Judah ben Bava or R. Judah bar Ilai. So Rashi.
13. So the master kept the girl with himself to protect her.

scale of merit, so may He who is everywhere judge you on the scale of merit."[1]

27. Our masters taught: Once the disciples of the wise needed help in a certain matter from a noblewoman of Rome in whose house all the notables of the city used to gather. When the disciples asked, "Who will go to her?" R. Joshua replied, "I will go." So he and his disciples went. As he came within four cubits of the door of her house, he removed his tefillin. Then he went in, shutting the door in their faces. After he came out, he went down to a ritual bath, immersed himself, and then taught Mishnah to his disciples, whom he asked, "When I removed my tefillin, what did you suspect me of?"

"We thought that our master believes 'sacred objects should not be brought into a place of uncleanness.' "

"When I shut the door in your faces, what did you suspect me of?"

"We thought that perhaps he has to discuss with her a matter that concerns the government."

"When I went down to the ritual bath and immersed myself, what did you suspect me of?"

"We thought that perhaps some saliva had sprayed from the woman's mouth upon the master's garments."

"By the Temple service," he exclaimed, "it is just so! And as for you—just as you judged me on the scale of merit, so may He who is everywhere judge you on the scale of merit."[2]

28. "Eli said unto her: 'How long wilt thou be drunken?' . . . And Hannah answered and said: '[Thou art] not my lord' " (1 Sam. 1:14–15). According to Ulla—some say, according to R. Yose son of R. Hanina—Hannah replied: In this matter [of drunkenness], you are not my lord [my superior], nor does the holy spirit rest on you, for you suspect me in this matter.

Some say that this is how Hannah replied: You are not a lord; neither the Presence nor the holy spirit is with you. For you have taken a harsh and not a lenient view of my conduct. Do you not know that "I am a woman of sorrowful spirit" (1 Sam. 1:15)?

"I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink" (1 Sam. 1:15). From these words we may infer, said R. Eleazar, that a man who is wrongfully suspected should make his innocence known.

"Then Eli answered and said: Go in peace" (1 Sam. 1:17). From this we learn, said R. Eleazar, that he who wrongfully suspects his fellow man must placate him. More: he must bestow a blessing upon him, for Eli ended by saying, "The God of Israel grant thy petition" (ibid.)[3]

29. Resh Lakish said: He who is suspicious of innocent people will be smitten in his body. Thus, when Moses said, "But, behold, they will not believe me" (Exod. 4:1), the Holy One, to whom it was known that they would believe this, said to Moses: They are believers, children of believers. It is you who will end up not believing.

And where is the proof that Moses was smitten? The verse "And the Lord said furthermore unto him: 'Put now thy hand into thy bosom.' And he put his hand into his bosom; and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous, as white as snow" (Exod. 4:6).[4]

30. R. Reuben ben Itztrobilei said: A person does not incur suspicion unless he has done [what he is suspected of]; or if he did not do all of it, he did part of it; or if he did not do part of it, he yearned in his heart to do it; or if he did not yearn in his heart to do it, he saw others do it and enjoyed [the sight of it].[5]

31. R. Yose said: May my portion be with him who is suspected of something he is innocent of.[6]

Reproof, Flattery, and Hypocrisy

32. We have been taught that Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch] said: What is the right way a man should choose for himself? He should love reproofs. As long as there are reproofs in the world, peace of mind comes to the world, good and blessing come to the world, and evil departs from the world, as is said, "But to them that are eager to be reproved, there shall come delight, and the blessing of good shall come upon them" (Prov. 24:25).

R. Samuel bar Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: He who reproves his neighbor for Heaven's sake is deemed worthy of being in the Holy One's own portion, for it is said, "He that reproves a man is to be right behind Me" (Prov. 28:23). More: a thread of favor is to be twined about him, as is said, "He shall find more favor than he that flattereth with his tongue" (ibid.).[7]

33. R. Yose bar Hanina said: Reproof leads to love, as is said, "Reprove a wise man, and he will love thee" (Prov. 9:8). Such is the opinion of R. Yose bar Hanina, who on another occasion said: All love that has no reproof with it is not true love.

Resh Lakish said: Reproof leads to peace. Such is the opinion of the sage, who on another occasion said: All peace that has no reproof with it is not peace.[8]

34. How do we know that when a man observes something unseemly in his neighbor, he should reprove him? From the verse "Thou shalt surely reprove thy neighbor" (Lev. 19:17). How do we know that if he reproved him and his neighbor refused to accept the reproof, he is to reprove him again? From the words "thou shalt surely reprove," meaning: under all circumstances. Should you suppose this obligation holds even if the neighbor's face changes color,[9] the verse goes on: "But thou shalt bear no sin because of him" (ibid.).[10]

1. B. Shab 127b.
2. Ibid.
3. B. Ber 31b.
4. B. Shab 97a.
5. B. MK 18b.
6. Ibid.
7. B. Tam 28a.
8. Gen. R. 54:3.
9. Because he is publicly humiliated.
10. B. Ar 16b.

35. Rava said: "Thou shalt surely reprove" (Lev. 19:17)—reprove even a hundred times. I might suppose that only the master must reprove his disciple. But how do I know that a disciple must reprove his master? From Scripture's saying, "Thou shalt surely reprove"—under all circumstances.[1]

36. How far is reproof to go? Rav said: Until the reprover is beaten. Samuel said: Until he is cursed. R. Yohanan said: Until he is reprimanded.[2]

37. R. Zera said to R. Simon: Sir, reprove the people of the exilarch's house. R. Simon replied: They will not be willing to accept any reproof. R. Zera: Even if they are unwilling, you, sir, should nevertheless reprove them.[3]

38. He who can restrain the members of his household [from committing a sin], but does not, will be seized as a pledge [so to speak] for his household. If [he can restrain] the people of his city, he will be seized as a pledge for the people of his city. If [he can restrain] the whole world—all of it—he will be seized as a pledge for the whole world, all of it.[4]

39. R. Hanina said: What is signified by the verse "The Lord will enter into judgment with the elders of His people, and the princes thereof" (Isa. 3:14)? Granted, the princes did sin, but how have the elders sinned? What the verse really means is that "[He will punish] the elders because they did not restrain the princes."[5]

40. R. Eleazar ben Azariah's heifer used to go out [on the Sabbath] with a thong between its horns,[6] contrary to the wishes of the sages.

R. Eleazar ben Azariah's heifer—but did he have only one heifer? Recall what Rav has said: "Year after year, the tithe of R. Eleazar ben Azariah's flock numbered twelve thousand calves." In reply, other sages taught: This particular heifer was not his—it belonged to a woman neighbor. But because he did not protest to his neighbor, the heifer was spoken of as his.[7]

41. R. Aha son of R. Hanina said: Never did a promise of good go forth from the mouth of the Holy One that He later reversed to evil, except in the following instance, where it is written, "And the Lord said unto him: 'Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof' " (Ezek. 9:4). The Holy One said to Gabriel: Go and set a mark of ink on the foreheads of the righteous, so that the destroying angels may have no power over them; and a mark of blood on the foreheads of the wicked, so that the destroying angels may have power over them. The measure of justice protested before the Holy One: "Lord of the universe, how are these different from those?" God: "Those are completely righteous men, while these are completely wicked." "Master of the universe," the measure of justice continued, "those had the opportunity to protest, but did not." God: "It was clear and manifest to Me that if they had protested, they would not have been heeded." The measure of justice: "Master of the universe, this, to be sure, was clear to You. But was it clear to them?" Then God said to the executioners, "Slay utterly the old man, the young man and the maiden, and little children and women; but come not near any man upon whom is the mark." And—reversing the earlier promise—God said, "Begin at My Sanctuary [mikdashi]." "Then they began at the elders that were before the house" (Ezek. 9:6). Read not, taught R. Joseph, mikdashi "My Sanctuary," but mekuddashai, "my sanctified ones," meaning: those people who fulfilled the Torah, all of it, from alef to tav[8] [but did not protest against wrongdoing].[9]

42. R. Hanina said: Jerusalem was destroyed only because its inhabitants did not reprove one another, as is said, "Her princes are become like harts that find no pasture" (Lam. 1:6). Like harts, each of whose head is beside the tail of the one before it, so did Israel of that generation keep their faces looking toward the ground and not reprove one another.[10]

43. "Hear, and your soul shall live" (Isa. 55:3). How beloved are Israel, that God draws them to Himself with kind words! He says to them: When a man falls from a roof and his entire body is bruised, the physician comes to him and applies a compress to his head, another to his arms, still another to his legs, and to all [other] parts of his body, so that all of him is covered with compresses. I do not act thus. There are two hundred and forty-eight parts in a human body, and the ear is only one of them; even though the entire body is soiled with transgressions, still, as long as the ear is willing to hear [Me], the entire body is infused with life.[11]

44. Love him who reproves you, and hate him who praises you.[12]

45. We have been taught that R. Tarfon said: I wonder if there is anyone in this generation capable of giving reproof. For if anyone says to another, "Take the chip from between your teeth," the other retorts, "Take the beam from between your eyes."[13] R. Eleazar ben Azariah said: I wonder whether there is anyone in this generation capable of accepting reproof. R. Akiva said: I wonder whether

---

1. B. BM 31a.
2. B. Ar 16b.
3. B. Shab 55a.
4. B. Shab 54b.
5. B. Shab 54b–55a.
6. The thong, used to restrain an animal, would indicate that this heifer was being made to work, contrary to the command that animals, like humans, were to rest on the Sabbath.
7. B. Shab 54b.
8. The first and last letters of the Hebrew alphabet.
9. B. Shab 55a.
10. B. Shab 119b; Lam. R. 1:6, §33.
11. Exod. R. 27:9.
12. ARN 29.
13. Cf. Matthew 7:4 and Luke 6:41.

there is anyone in this generation who knows how to give reproof [without humiliating the one reproved].

R. Yohanan ben Nuri said: I call heaven and earth to witness that many times R. Akiva was punished on account of me, because I used to bring charges against him before Rabban Gamaliel. Nevertheless, R. Akiva's love for me grew, in keeping with the verse "Reprove a man of sense, and he will love thee" (Prov. 9:8).[1]

46. Abbaye said: When a disciple of the wise is beloved by the people of his city, it is not because he is superior in learning, but because he does not reprove them in matters that concern Heaven.[2]

47. "Remove the chaff from yourselves, then remove it from others" (Zeph. 2:1).[3] Resh Lakish said: Adorn yourself; and after that, adorn others.[4]

48. R. Nathan said: Reproach not your neighbor for a blemish that is yours.[5]

49. R. Ilai said in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: Just as it is commendable to say something that will be heeded, so it is commendable not to say something that will not be heeded. R. Abba said: Indeed, it is an obligation not to, in keeping with the verse "Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee" (Prov. 9:8).[6]

50. R. Eleazar said: A man given to flattery brings wrath upon the world, for Scripture says, "They whose hearts are given to flattery bring on wrath" (Job 36:13). Moreover, his prayer is not heeded: "They cannot cry for help, for He bindeth them" (ibid.).

R. Eleazar said further: When a man is given to flattery, even embryos in their mother's womb curse him.

R. Eleazar said still further: He who is given to flattery will fall into Gehenna.[7]

51. R. Eleazar said: He who flatters his fellow man will in the end fall into his power. If he does not fall into his power, he will fall into the power of his son, and if not into the power of his son, then into the power of his son's son, as is said, "Then the prophet Jeremiah said unto the prophet Hananiah . . . : 'Amen! The Lord do so! The Lord perform the words which thou hast prophesied' " (Jer. 28:5–6). And it is further written, "And when [Jeremiah] was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he laid hold of Jeremiah the Prophet . . . and brought him to the princes" (Jer. 37:13–14).[8]

52. R. Eleazar said: A community given to flattery is as loathed as a menstruating woman.[9]

53. R. Eleazar said further: A community given to flattery is banished in the end.[10]

54. A company of flatterers is unable to receive the Presence, for it is said, "The flatterer cannot come into His presence" (Job 13:16).[11]

55. R. Judah bar Maarava—according to some, R. Simeon ben Pazzi—expounded: One may flatter the wicked in this world, for it is said [of the world-to-come], "The vile person shall no more be called liberal, nor the churl said to be noble" (Isa. 32:5). From which it follows that, in this world, such flattery is permitted. R. Simeon ben Lakish drew the same inference from the verse in which Jacob said to Esau, "Forasmuch as I have seen thy face, as one seeth the face of God" (Gen. 33:10). R. Simeon ben Lakish's interpretation of the verse is not like that of R. Levi's. For R. Levi said: What parable explains Jacob's flattery of Esau? The one of a man who invited his friend to dine with him. When the guest perceived that the host planned to murder him, he said, "This dish tastes like the dish I had in the royal palace." So he knows the king, said the host to himself, and, seized with fear, he did not try to go through with his murderous scheme.[12]

56. R. Simeon ben Halafta said: Ever since the day the grip of flattery prevailed, judicial decrees have become so twisted and human conduct so corrupt that no man can say to another, "My conduct is better than yours."[13]

57. King Yannai said to his wife: Do not fear the Pharisees, nor those who are not Pharisees, but fear the hypocrites who make believe they are Pharisees—their deeds are like the deeds of Zimri, but they expect reward like Phinehas.[14]

58. Hypocrites should be exposed to prevent the profanation of the Name.[15]

59. Rabban Gamaliel used to proclaim: No disciple whose inner self does not live up to his [acceptable] exterior[16] may enter the house of study.[17]

---

1. B. Ar 16b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. B. Ket 105b.
3. JV: "Gather yourselves together, yea, gather." But hitkosheshu ("gather yourselves") is here, as suggested by Rashbam, associated with the noun kash ("chaff").
4. Resh Lakish seems to regard hitkosheshu ve-koshu (variously interpreted) as a dialectical variation of hitkeshetu ve-koshetu (so Leon Nemoy).
5. B. BM 59b.
6. B. Yev 65b.
7. B. Sot 41b.
8. B. Sot 41b–42a and En Yaakov, ad loc.
9. B. Sot 42a.
10. Ibid.
11. Ibid.
12. B. Sot 41b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
13. Ibid.
14. Zimri copulated in public, and Phinehas slew him and his partner. Phinehas's reward was "the covenant of an everlasting priesthood." See Num. 25:6–15. B. Sot 22b.
15. B. Yoma 86b.
16. Literally, whose inside is not as his outside.
17. B. Ber 28a.

60. Ben Azzai used to say: It is easier to rule the entire world, all of it, than to sit and teach in the presence of men who cloak themselves [hypocritically] in sages' robes.[1]

61. When the swine crouches, he displays his cloven hooves as if to say, "Look how kosher I am!"[2]

Slander and Disclosing Another's Secret

62. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yose ben Zimra: He who speaks slander is as though he denied the existence of the Lord: "With our tongue will we prevail; our lips are our own; who is Lord over us?" (Ps. 12:5).[3]

63. The company of those who speak slander cannot greet the Presence.[4]

64. R. Hisda said in the name of Mar Ukba: When a man speaks slander, the Holy One says, "I and he cannot live together in the world." So Scripture: "He who slanders his neighbor in secret . . . him I cannot endure" (Ps. 101:5). Read not oto, "him," but itto, "with him [I cannot live]."[5]

65. R. Mana said: He who speaks slander causes the Presence to depart from the earth below to heaven above: you may see for yourself [that this is so]. Consider what David said: "My soul is among lions; I do lie down among them that are aflame; even the sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword" (Ps. 57:5). What follows directly? "Be Thou exalted, O God, above the heavens" (Ps. 57:6). For David said: Master of the universe, what can the Presence do on the earth below? Remove the Presence to the firmament.[6]

66. Behold, how vicious is slander! It is more vicious than murder, unchastity, and idolatry put together. In Scripture, each of these three transgressions is termed "great," but slander is spoken of in the plural as "great things." Thus, Cain said of murder, "My punishment is more great than I can bear" (Gen. 4:13); Joseph exclaimed of unchastity, "How then can I do this great wickedness?" (Gen. 39:9); Moses said of idolatry, "Oh, this people have sinned a great sin" (Exod. 32:31). But of slander it is written, "The Lord shall cut off all flattering lips, the tongue that speaketh great things" (Ps. 12:4), to tell you that slander is more vicious than the other three transgressions.[7]

67. A man is punished for four things in this world, but the principal punishment is meted out in the world-to-come. They are: idolatry, unchastity, bloodshed, [and slander], but the punishment for slander equals the other three put together.[8]

68. Resh Lakish said: He who speaks slander so enlarges his iniquities that they reach up to heaven, as is said, "They have set their mouth against the heavens when their tongue walketh through the earth" (Ps. 73:9).[9]

69. R. Hisda said in the name of Mar Ukba: He who speaks slander deserves death by stoning.[10]

70. R. Sheshet said in the name of R. Eleazar ben Azariah: He who speaks slander, he who accepts slander, and he who gives false testimony against his transgression deserve to be cast to the dogs, for the words "Ye shall cast it to the dogs" (Exod. 22:30) are followed directly by "Thou shalt not take up (tissa) a false report" (Exod. 23:1), which may be read, "Thou shalt not spread (tassi) [a false report]."[11]

71. He who speaks slander has no portion in the world-to-come.[12]

72. R. Hisda said in the name of Mar Ukba: Of him who speaks slander, the Holy One says to the prince of Gehenna: I, at him from above, and you, at him from below, shall together condemn him.[13]

73. The punishment of him who maligns the young woman he wed as not being a virgin is greater than if he had seduced her or raped her.[14] Thus we find that the decree of death against our forebears in the wilderness was sealed only after the spies had maligned the Land, as is said, "By speaking thus, they tried Me as greatly as the ten other times together [when they did not heed Me]; surely they shall not see the Land which I swore unto their fathers" (Num. 14:22–23).[15]

74. "The men who spread calumnies about the Land died of pestilence [in keeping with the Lord's measure for measure]" (Num. 14:37). They died an unnatural death, said R. Simeon ben Lakish.

[Unnatural in what way?] According to R. Hanina bar Papa, R. Shela of Kefar Temarta expounded the verse as hinting that the tongue of each spy grew so unnaturally long that it reached down to his navel, and worms crawled out of his tongue and entered into his navel, and out of his navel back into his tongue.

According to R. Nahman bar Isaac, the spies choked in a spasm of croup.[16]

---

1. ARN 25.
2. Gen. R. 65:1; Lev. R. 13:5.
3. B. Ar 15b.
4. B. Sot 42a.
5. B. Sot 5a.
6. Deut. R. 5:10.
7. MTeh 52:2; B. Ar 15b.
8. P. Pe 1:1, 15d.
9. B. Ar 15b.
10. Ibid.
11. B. Pes 118a.
12. PRE 53.
13. B. Ar 15b.
14. The penalty for such maligning is one hundred sela, while for rape or seduction it is only fifty sela (see Deut. 22:29 and Exod. 22:16).
15. B. Ar 15a.
16. B. Sot 35b.

75. R. Eleazar ben Perata said: Pause and consider the spies, and you will understand how pernicious is the effect of calumny. If such befell the spies, who spoke calumny only of trees and stones, how much more and more will befall him who speaks calumny of his neighbor![1]

76. R. Hanina said: Plagues of leprosy come only on account of speaking calumny. For, as the sages said, you can see for yourself that such plagues come on account of calumny. Even the righteous Miriam, who spoke calumny of her brother Moses—plagues clung to her, as a sign [and a warning] to all given to speaking calumny. Hence, "remember what the Lord thy God did unto Miriam" (Deut. 24:9).

Now, the matter may be reasoned a fortiori: if Miriam—who made certain not to speak to Moses directly, did so for Moses' own benefit [so he would take back his life and have more children], and spoke for the glory of Him who is everywhere and for the increase of the population of the world—was punished thus, how much more and more will he who speaks publicly in disparagement of his neighbor be punished![2]

77. Resh Lakish said: The verse "This shall be the law concerning the metzora [leper]" (Lev. 14:2) means: "This shall be the law concerning motzi shem ra [him sho speaks calumny]."[3]

78. "Thinkest thou to kill me, as thou didst kill the Egyptian? And Moses . . . said: 'Surely the thing is known' " (Exod. 2:14). For Moses had been meditating in his heart: How have Israel sinned, that they should be enslaved more than any other nation?" But upon hearing [one of the quarreling men say right out what he, Moses, had done], he said to himself: "Now the thing is known," now I know why the Israelites are enslaved. Talebearing is rife among them. How can they ever be worthy of deliverance?[4]

79. R. Judah said in the name of Rav: When David told Mephibosheth "Thou and Ziba divide the land" (2 Sam. 19:30), a divine voice came forth and said to him: Rehoboam and Jeroboam will divide the kingdom.

R. Judah went on to say in the name of Rav: Had David not heeded the calumny [against Mephibosheth], the kingdom of the house of David would not have been divided, Israel [in the north] would not have served idols, and we would not have been banished from our Land.[5]

80. "A slanderer shall not be established in the earth" (Ps. 140:12). R. Levi said: In the time-to-come, the Holy One will take the [heathen] nations of the world, cast them down into Gehenna, and ask them: Why did you despoil My children with fines? They will reply: Because out of their own ranks came men of evil tongue with tall tales about their neighbors' possessions. Then the Holy One will take both the heathen nations and the slanderers, and cast them down into Gehenna.[6]

81. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon used to apprehend thieves. So R. Joshua ben Korhah sent word to him: "O Vinegar son of wine! How long will you deliver up the people of our God for slaughter?" R. Eleazar sent word back: "I weed out thorns from the vineyard." R. Joshua replied, "Let the Owner of the vineyard come and Himself weed out the thorns."[7]

82. Mar Ukba[8] sent a message to R. Eleazar, saying, "Certain men are acting against me, but I am able to deliver them into the hands of the government. What shall I do?" R. Eleazar scribbled his answer on the same message: "I said, 'I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue; I will keep a curb upon my mouth, while the wicked is before me' " (Ps. 39:2), meaning: Even though the wicked is before me, I will still keep a curb on my mouth. Mar Ukba sent another message to R. Eleazar: They are troubling me very much, and I can put up with them no longer." R. Eleazar replied [with the quotation]: "Resign thyself unto the Lord, and wait patiently [hit'holel] for Him" (Ps. 37:7); [that is to say]: Wait for the Lord, and He will utterly prostrate them [halalim] before you. In spite of them, go to the house of study morning and evening, and there will soon be an end to them.

R. Eleazar had hardly spoken these words when Geniva[9] was placed in chains for execution.[10]

83. In considering the verse "Death and life are in the hand of the tongue" (Prov. 18:21), R. Hama son of R. Hanina asked: Is it conceivable for the tongue to have a hand? No, but what the verse means is that the tongue can be as murderous as the hand. One might have thought that, just as the hand can kill only what is near it, so the tongue could kill only what is near it; therefore Scripture says, "Their tongue is an arrow shot out" (Jer. 9:7). One might assume that, just as an arrow kills only up to a distance of forty or at most fifty cubits, so the tongue could kill only up to a distance of forty at most fifty cubits; therefore Scripture states, "They have set their mouths against the heavens, while their tongues range over the earth" (Ps. 73:9).[11]

84. "Sharp arrows of the mighty are like coals of broom" (Ps. 120:4). Why does the text liken the evil tongue to an arrow rather than to any other weapon? Because all other weapons strike at close quarters, while the arrow strikes from afar. Likewise the evil tongue—something said in Rome can kill in Syria. Nor is the evil tongue likened to any coals, but only to coals of broom, for all other coals,

---

1. B. Ar 15b and En Yaakov, ad loc.
2. Deut. R. 6:8; Sif Deut., §275.
3. B. Ar 15b.
4. Exod. R. 1:30.
5. B. Shab 56b.
6. Gen. R. 20:1.
7. B. BM 83b.
8. Mar Ukba II the Exilarch had great influence in the government.
9. He was one of Mar Ukba's chief antagonists.
10. B. Git 7a.
11. B. Ar 15b.

when extinguished without, are also extinguished within; but the coals of broom, even when extinguished without, continue to burn within. So it is with the victim of slander—even though you go and endeavor to appease him, and he acts appeased, yet he continues to burn within.[1]

85. R. Samuel bar Nahman said: Why is the evil tongue called a thrice-slaying tongue? Because it slays three persons: the person speaking, the person spoken to, and the person spoken of. And the proof? Doeg, who spoke evil; Saul, to whom it was spoken; and Nob, the city of priests, of whom it was spoken.[2]

86. The tongue is like an arrow. Why? Because if a man takes his sword in hand to slay his fellow, who then pleads with him and begs for mercy, the would-be slayer can change his mind and return the sword to its sheath. But once the would-be slayer has shot and let fly an arrow, it cannot be brought back even if he wants to do so.[3]

87. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yose ben Zimra: What is meant by the verse "What more can be given unto thee, what more can be done [for protection] against thee, thou deceitful tongue?" (Ps. 120:3)? The Holy One said to the tongue: All other parts of a man's body stand erect, but you lie prone. Most other parts of a man's body are outside; you are within. Not only that, but I encompassed you with two walls, one of bone [the teeth] and one of flesh [the cheeks]. "What more can be given unto thee, and what more can be done [for protection] against thee, thou deceitful tongue?"[4]

88. R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Yose ben Zimra: Man has two hundred and forty-eight parts, some prone, some erect. The tongue is placed between the two cheeks, with a water channel [of saliva] passing under it, besides being guarded by several other enfoldings [such as teeth and lips]. Yet pause and consider what searing burns[5] it inflicts! How many more and more such burns would the tongue inflict if it were standing erect![6]

89. How vicious is the evil tongue! A parable of a man smitten on both legs, who greatly disturbed a principality. People said: If he were whole, how much more and more would he disturb! So, too, the tongue. Though cut to small size and placed within the mouth, yet it disturbs the world greatly. To what may the tongue be compared? To a dog: though it is chained and confined, and placed in the innermost of three chambers, yet all people fear it when it barks. If it were outside [unchained], what would it do! So the evil tongue. It is placed within, beyond the opening of the mouth; within, beyond the lips. Yet it smites without cease. If the tongue were outside, how much more and more would it smite!

Hence the Holy One said [to man]: I can save you from all troubles that come upon you. But when it concerns the evil tongue, you must make yourself all but invisible, and you will suffer no injury.[7]

90. Resh Lakish said: [In defense of himself, the serpent could have pleaded]: Does the serpent bite without a whispered command from on high?" (Eccles. 10:11).[8] [Instead of defending himself, he could respond with a question]: "And what advantage does he get who uses his tongue for evil?" (ibid.). Hence, in the time-to-come, when all beasts gather together, go to the serpent, and say, "The lion ramps and devours. The wolf rends and consumes. What enjoyment do you get [from poisoning creatures]?" The serpent will reply, "Well, what advantage does he get who uses his tongue for evil?"[9]

91. R. Samuel son of R. Nahman said: If a serpent is asked, "Why are you found among fences?" it is likely he will answer, "Because I made a breach in the fence of the world." If asked, "Why do you slither along with your tongue darting in the dust?" the serpent is likely to answer, "Because the tongue brought me to this state." If asked, "Why is it that, when other animals bite, their [single] bite does not kill, but when you bite, you kill? What benefit do you derive from that?" the serpent is likely to answer, " 'Does the serpent bite unless there is a whispered command?' [Eccles. 10:11]. If I were not told from heaven, 'Bite!' I would not bite." If asked, "And why, though you bite one limb, do all other limbs feel the poison at once?" the serpent is likely to reply, "Are you asking me? Ask the man of evil tongue who dwells in Rome and slays in Syria, or who dwells in Syria and slays in Rome."[10]

92. "They of my people who live together[11] turn to the sword, smite therefore upon the thigh" (Ezek. 21:17). R. Eleazar said: The verse refers to men who eat and drink with one another, yet stab one another with the swords of their tongues.[12]

93. R. Ishmael taught: "Do not go as a peddler among the people" (Lev. 19:16) refers to peddling by the evil tongue.

R. Nehemiah taught: Do not be like the peddler, who transports the words of one to the other and the words of the other to the one.[13]

94. What constitutes evil speech? Rabbah said: As when one says, There is fire burning in [the oven of] So-and-so's house. Abbaye asked: But what harm dooes he do? He merely provides information. Nevertheless, [said Rab-

---

1. Gen. R. 98:19; P. Pe 1:1, 16a.
2. B. Ar 15b; P. Pe 1:1, 16a; Deut. R. 5:10.
3. MTeh 120:4.
4. B. Ar 15b.
5. Cf. James 3:6.
6. Lev. R. 16:4.
7. Yalkut, Ki Tetze, §933.
8. JV: "If the serpent bite before it is charmed, then the charmer hath no advantage."
9. B. Ar 15b.
10. P. Pe 1:1, 16a; Tanhuma B, Hukkat, §8; Lev. R. 26:2.
11. The word megurei ("thrust down") in JV is in this comment taken as a form of gur ("live together").
12. B. Yoma 9b.
13. P. Pe 1:1, 16a.

bah], such information may be uttered with the intent to slander, as though he were saying: Where else would such a fire be burning except in the house of So-and-so, who has plenty of meat and fish?[1]

95. When R. Yohanan was asked, "What is evil speech?" he replied, "What is uttered explicitly as well as what is only hinted at."

Thus, when dealers in flax had a gathering to allot to each a portion of a royal levy, one of them, whose name was Ben Hovetz, did not come. So when the question was asked, What shall we eat today? one person answered: Hovetz, "soft cheese." At that, the others [reminded of their absent colleague] said: Ben Hovetz should be made to come.

Here, said R. Yohanan, we have an instance of evil speech uttered obliquely.

[Another example]: When the council of Sepphoris held a meeting [for a similar purpose], one of them, whose name was Yohanan, did not come. One of the council asked another: Should we not visit the learned Yohanan today [since he must be ill]? Instantly, all said: Yohanan should be made to come.

Here, said R. Simeon ben Lakish, we have an instance of evil speech disguised as piety.[2]

96. A folded deed was once brought before Rabbi [Judah I, the Patriarch], who remarked, "There is no date on this deed." R. Simeon Berabbi said to Rabbi, "It might be hidden between its folds." On ripping the seams [which held together the deed's folds], Rabbi saw the date. Then he turned around [and] looked at R. Simeon with displeasure.[3] R. Simeon: "I did not write it. R. Judah the Tailor wrote it." Rabbi: "Keep away from such slander!"[4]

Once again, when he was sitting in Rabbi's presence, R. Simeon finished a section of the book of Psalms. Rabbi said, "How accurate this writing is!" R. Simeon: "I did not write it. Judah the Tailor wrote it." Rabbi: "Keep away from such slander!"

In the first instance, one can well understand Rabbi's reproof [since] there was slander; but what slander was there in this instance?

The kind of slander spoken of by R. Dimi. For R. Dimi brother of R. Safra taught: A man should never speak in praise of his friend, because out of praise of him he may [bit by bit] come to dispraise him.[5]

97. "They . . . said: 'We came unto the Land . . . and surely it floweth with milk and honey. . . . Howbeit the people . . . are fierce' " (Num. 13:27–28). This is the way of those who deal in slander—they open with good things and end with evil ones.[6]

98. R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Meir: A slanderous report that does not contain an element of truth in the beginning will not stand up in the end.[7]

99. Even if a word [of slander] is not entirely effective, it will always be partly effective.[8]

100. R. Amram said in the name of Rav: No man escapes—not even for one day—[committing] three transgressions: unchaste thought, insistence on God's immediate response to prayer, and slander. Slander, you say? Yes, at the very least, the fine dust [the overtones] of slander.

R. Judah said in the name of Rav: Most people are guilty of some cheating, a few of unchastity, but all of slander. Slander, you say? Well, at least the fine dust [the overtones] of slander.[9]

101. Rabbah said: Whatever is said in the presence of the person concerned is not considered slander. Abbaye countered: All the more so—it is impudence as well as slander. Rabbah replied: I hold with R. Yose, who asserted, "I never said anything about a person that would make me look back to see if that person were standing behind me."

Rabbah bar R. Huna stated: Repeating what a man said against himself in the presence of three others is not slander. Why not? Because your friend has a friend, and your friend's friend has a friend.[10]

102. R. Menasya grandson of R. Menasya said in the name of R. Menasya the Elder: What is the proof that when a man says something to his friend, the latter may not repeat it unless the man says, "You may go and say it"? The verse "The Lord spoke to him out of the Tent of Meeting, that he was to say (le'mor)[11] . . ." (Lev. 1:1).[12]

103. What is the proof that [after a trial is over] and one of the judges leaves [the court], he may not say, "I was for acquittal, but my colleagues were determined to convict. So what could I do, since they were the majority?" Of such a leak, Scripture asserts, "He who revealeth that which is to remain secret is a talebearer" (Prov. 11:13).[13]

104. Our masters taught: The man gathering was Zelophehad. Thus it is said, "And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man gathering sticks of wood upon the Sabbath day . . . and they stoned him with stones, and he died" (Num. 15:32 and 15:36); while elsewhere the daughters of Zelophehad said, "Our father died in the wilderness" (Num. 27:3). Just as in this instance Zelophehad is meant, so, too, Zelophehad [is meant] earlier. Such was R. Akiva's opinion. But R. Judah ben

---

1. B. Ar 15b.
2. P. Pe 1:1, 16a.
3. Because it should not have been so difficult to come upon the date.
4. Why charge R. Judah the Tailor with the error?
5. B. BB 164b.
6. Tanhuma B, Shelah, §17.
7. B. Sot 35a.
8. Gen. R. 56:4; Yalkut, Va-yera, §101.
9. B. BB 164b–165a.
10. So what was said will inevitably come to be known. B. Ar 15b–16a.
11. Usually translated "saying."
12. B. Yoma 4b.
13. B. Sanh 29a.

Betera said to him, "Akiva, in either case you will have to justify yourself: if you are right, then you have revealed the identity of a man whom the Torah shielded; and if you are wrong, you are casting a stigma upon a righteous man."

Similarly, you read, "And the anger of the Lord was kindled against them; and he departed" (Num. 12:9). The verse teaches that Aaron, too, became leprous. Such was R. Akiva's opinion. But R. Judah ben Betera said to him, "Akiva, in either case you will have to justify yourself for saying such a thing: if you are right, even though the Torah shielded him, you have disclosed what happened to Aaron; and if wrong, you are casting a stigma upon a righteous man."[1]

105. A story is told of a disciple about whom it was reported that, after twenty-two years, he disclosed a matter stated in the house of study [as a secret]. So R. Ammi expelled him from the house of study, saying, "This one discloses secrets."[2]

106. Ignorant men [amme ha-aretz] should not be told what is secret.[3]

Truth and Falsehood, Vows and Oaths

107. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said: The world endures because of three things: justice, truth, and peace.[4]

108. R. Hanina said: The Holy One's seal is truth.[5]

109. R. Samuel ben Nahmani said: We find that the Holy One created everything in His world; only the stuff of falsehood He did not create, only the measure of falsehood He did not fashion. Mortals conceived false words out of their own hearts, as is said, "Conceiving and uttering from their own hearts words of falsehood" (Isa. 59:13).[6]

110. A company of liars cannot receive the Presence.[7]

111. R. Eleazar said: He who dissembles in his speech is as one who worships idols, for Jacob [disguised as Esau] said of himself, "I will be in his eyes as one who makes a mockery of him" (Gen. 27:12), and with regard to idols it is said, "They are a delusion, a work of mockery" (Jer. 10:15).[8]

112. Rava said: Jerusalem was destroyed only because men of integrity were no longer found there, as is said, "Roam the streets of Jerusalem, search its squares, look about and take note: You will not find a man—not a one—who acts justly, who seeks integrity, that I may pardon her" (Jer. 5:1).[9]

1. B. Shab 96b–97a.
2. B. Sanh 31a.
3. B. Pes 49b.
4. Avot 1:18.
5. B. Shab 55a.
6. PR 24:3 (YJS 1:509).
7. B. Sot 42a.
8. B. Sanh 92a.
9. B. Shab 119b.

